AGENTS WANTED Gentlemen or Ladies. $100 a month and expenses. We start you. New plan. No experience. You work at home or travel. Everybody buys. Business men, families, physicians, stores. Over 97,000 sold. 9,000,000 to be sold. Patrons delighted. A lady in Pa. made $44.50 in 12 days, besides attending to her household duties. Mr. Steele writes: "Will make $2500 this yearsure. Sold last 3 doz. in 11 days. Ship 5 doz. more quick." Mr. Tassell sold 339 Quakers in 87 days in Canada. Agents all making money. Ladies very successful. Failure impossible. We are responsible. Capital $100,000.00. Largest Manufrs of Bath Cabinets in the world. Write today for book on home treatment, testimonials, agents' terms, etc., free. M. R. WORLD MFG. CO., Cincinnati, O.

SEND FOR A BICYCLE
High Grade '98 Models, $14 to $40.
GREAT CLEARING SALE of '97 and '96 models, best makes, $9.75 to $18. Sent on approval without a cent payment. Free use of wheel to our agents. Write for our new plan "How to Earn a Bicycle" and make money. SPECIAL THIS WEEK—40 high grade '97 models [slightly shopworn], $10.75 each. "Wanderings Awheel," a souvenir book of art, FREE for stamp while they last.
MEAD CYCLE CO., 279 Ave. P,, Chicago.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 164 West Van Buren Street, B- 30, Chicago, Ill.

$18.00 Carriages for	$9.00
$12.00	"	"	$6.00
$5.00	"	"	$2.50

THIS MAY INTEREST YOU.
If you have lame back, cannot retain urine and feel poorly generally, you have kidney trouble. Some get well and others die. If you would get well our pamphlet will help you. It is free. Write THE TAYLOR CHEMICAL CO., 128 East Ninth Street, Dept. F, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD
by Anna A. Gordon, Miss Willard's private secretary for over 20 years. The only book authorized and endorsed by the W. C. T. U. Over 1,000,000 copies will be sold.
The Greatest Seller of the Century.
Write for outfit. Best terms. Circular free. Act quick. Don't miss this. J. S. ZIEGLER & CO., 325 Dearborn St., Chicago

Trial Package Free.
If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO., 2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

EUROPEAN TOURS.
16th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by Dr. & Mrs. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

FOR SALE VERY CHEAP, fine Magic Lantern outfit, with complete attachments for Gas or Oil or Ether light, with Temperance Slides. Address BOX 194, MADISON, OHIO.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines. Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal.

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader,

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and co-worker,

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on sale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single pictures, each, -	$ .50
3, to one address, - -	1.00
12, or more, to one address, per dozen, - -	3.00

A beautiful picture of "REST COTTAGE," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the

W. T. P. A., The Temple,

or by

MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treas., 539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

WANTED RELIABLE MEN in every locality, local or traveling, to introduce a new discovery and keep our show cards tacked up on trees, fences and bridges throughout town and country; steady employment; commission or oalary; $65.00 PER MONTH AND EXPENSES not to exceed $2.50 per day; money deposited in any bank at start if desired. Write for particulars.
THE GLOBE MEDICAL ELECTRIC CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

CANCER
I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume....

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

which will be in the hands of the reading public at an early date, will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is hoped that this prompt announcement will prevent any unauthentic edition from being placed on the market. Each copy will bear the Official Stamp of the W. C. T. U. on the title page.

OFFICIAL · PUBLISHING · HOUSE · OF · THE · W.C.T.U.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple....Chicago.

Authentic Memorial Volume

....ENTITLED....

The Beautiful Life of

Frances E. Willard

WE take pleasure in announcing that CANVASSING OUTFITS ARE NOW READY. We have spared no pains or expense in making this by far the greatest selling book of the century.

It contains 416 pages; size 8 x 10 inches; Cloth, $2.00; Half Morocco, $2.75; Full Morocco (Presentation Edition), $3.75.

The Book is written by Anna A. Gordon with introduction by Lady Henry Somerset.

The book contains tributes by Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Dwight L. Moody, Bishop Vincent, Rabbi Hirsch, Dean Farrar, Archbishop Ireland and other eminent men and women of Europe and America.

Illustrated with 32 FULL-PAGE HALFTONE PHOTOGRAPHS of Miss Willard, Miss Gordon, Lady Henry Somerset, their residences, (exterior and interior), grouped photograph of the World's and National W. C. T. U. officers, etc., etc.

Now Is the Time to Help a Good Cause.

The W. T. P. A. have placed this book in our hands for distribution in the United States, England, Canada, Australia, etc., but agencies can be secured through any reliable subscription book house. Send 50 cents for outfit at once and thus head off all competition. Address,

Monarch Book Company, Dept. H,

46 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Beautiful Life

...OF...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

OFFICIAL EDITION AUTHORIZED BY THE W. C. T. U.

The Greatest Selling Book of the Century

We have the honor of announcing that the authorities of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Miss Willard's private secretary and literary executor, MISS ANNA A. GORDON, have united with the great reformer's friends to place in the hands of the public the only authentic story of this beautiful and heroic life. Miss Willard's place in the history of reform and philanthropy will make this book a home book for America. Every agent ought to find a subscriber at each fireside. The demand for the book will be equal to the number of friends of the cause of temperance and the admirers of her life.

For God and Home and Native Land

this book is written, and will be a rich memorial of her life, magnificently illustrated; it will contain estimates of her character from the pens of the greatest thinkers, orators and reformers in Europe and America.

You will realize the great importance of our statement when we announce further that there is no other authorized memorial volume. This work is prepared by ANNA A. GORDON, who was for twenty-one years the secretary of FRANCES E. WILLARD, and she has put into literary form her vast collection of reminiscences and impressions of the beautiful life of Miss Willard.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET, of world-wide fame, has added the tribute of her friendship in an introduction. Character studies and loving tributes are added by such authors as..

Dean Farrar,
Canon Wilberforce,
Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Pres. W. C. T. U.,
Dr. Edward Everett Hale,
Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus,
Dr. N. D. Hillis,
Archbishop Ireland, Dr. Lyman Abbott,
Joseph Cook,
Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward,
Theodore L. Cuyler,
Mrs. Mary A. Livermore,
Dr. C. H. Parkhurst,
Bishop Vincent, Bishop Potter,
Dr. Frank M. Bristol,
President Henry Wade Rogers,
Mrs. Matilda B. Carse,
Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith,
Dwight L. Moody,
Miss Clara Barton and others.

OFFICIAL · PUBLISHING · HOUSE · OF · THE · W.C.T.U.

All Prospectuses and complete books will have this Official Stamp on the title page.

. . . This is an Opportunity to . . .

Sell the Greatest Book Ever Published

And we trust you will grasp the chance to make money without delay. It is safe to predict a sale of several hundred thousand copies, as all W. C. T. U. members and all those interested in the cause will want a copy. The prospectus is nearly ready, and all orders will receive prompt attention. Complete outfit sent prepaid for 50 cts.

P. W. ZIEGLER & CO.

215 LOCUST ST. PHILADELPHIA, PA.
324 DEARBORN ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

Agents Wanted. Liberal Terms. Address the House Nearest You.

Easter Cards and Booklets

BOOKLETS.

Below you will find a large assortment of Easter Booklets, all new and beautiful designs and most fitting for this blessed season.

50 CENTS EACH.

Seven Violets for Easter Week. Daybreak.

40 CENTS EACH.

Joyous Easter Bells. Easter Bells.

25 CENTS EACH.

An Easter Vision. An Easter Pean.
Easter Light. Easter Glory.
Joy Cometh in the Morning.

20 CENTS EACH.

Vacant Cross and Empty Tomb.
Our Saviour Lives.
The Bells of Easter-tide.
Death's Conqueror.
Easter Greeting.
Peaceful Easter.

12 CENTS EACH.

Sweet Easter Chimes. Easter Prayer.
Jesus Lives. Risen Christ.
Peace Abundant. A Crown of Life.
The Dawn of Easter. Easter Melody.
My Saviour Lives. Joyful Easter.
A Happy Easter.

10 CENTS EACH.

Day of Easter Hope. Easter Comfort.
Happy Easter-tide. Easter Gratitude.

CARDS.

A complete stock in exquisite designs and coloring from 1 cent up to 30 cents each. Also in packages of 6 cards for 25 cents; 8 cards for 25 cents; 10 cards for 25 cents.

These prices are Net Cash. Please order at once to make sure of prompt attention.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n,

1110 The Temple, Chicago.

Memorial of Frances E. Willard.

NO OTHER American woman has done so much for the uplifting of humanity as did Frances E. Willard. And no other American woman's work has come so close to the hearts of sympathetic humanity the wide world over as did that of Frances E. Willard. Honored while living, her memory is cherished in a universal love now that she has passed away, falling a martyr at the post of self-assigned duty. A nation mourns—a world grieves. In every American household are hearts wrung with sorrow because of the untimely death of this noble apostle of purity. The most fitting memorial of such a life is a book in which those who have known her and loved her, those who have worked with her, those who have been helped by her, those who have admired her, those who love the noblest womanhood, may read of her beautiful life, and reading take courage to aid in furthering the cause of purity for which she gave her life. The preparation of such a volume the officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union have authorized. It will be called

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

Authorship.

The preparation of the biographical part of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" has been entrusted by the executive officers of the National W. C. T. U. to Miss Anna A. Gordon, who was designated in Miss Willard's will as her literary executor, and who for twenty-one years was Miss Willard's private secretary. In the preparation of the biography Miss Gordon will have the literary counsel of Drs. N. D. Hillis and F. W. Gunsaulus, two of Chicago's greatest divines and authors. No other living person was on such intimate terms and knows the character and undercurrents of Miss Willard's life as well as does Miss Gordon. No other person can write so closely to the real life and portray so accurately the great, loving, throbbing heart of the departed. Any other writer might produce a beautifully carved statue, but cold in its beauty; Miss Gordon will reproduce the living, real self of Miss Willard, warm with the glow of love's tribute. This will be the only book that has ever been published that contains an accurate portrayal of the life and character of the world's greatest, and grandest, and noblest woman of the century.

Other Features.

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" will be indeed a memorial volume of the great apostle of temperance and purity. In addition to the incomparable life history prepared by Anna A. Gordon, the volume will contain a wealth of memorial articles offered by eminent men and women who were associated directly and indirectly with Miss Willard in her great work. The introduction of the volume will be by

LADY HENRY SOMERSET,

Miss Willard's bosom friend and co-worker. Other writers will contribute special articles on, for instance, Miss Willard as Temperance Worker, as W. C. T. U. Member, as Educator, as Author, as Reformer, as Speaker, as Leader, as Friend, etc. Among those who will thus contribute are such eminent persons as the following:

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Pres. W. C. T. U., Archbishop Farrar, Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, Dr. N. D. Hillis, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Archbishop Ireland, Joseph Cook, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, Bishop Potter, Bishop Vincent, President Henry Wade Rogers, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, Dwight L. Moody, Theodore L. Cuyler, Clara Barton, and other persons distinguished in the realm of philanthropy, temperance and reform.

Purpose of Book.

The publishing of this volume carries with it a two-fold purpose: First, to give those who admired Miss Willard, those who are interested in the promotion of temperance, in church work, in philanthropy, in reform, in bettering humanity, in civilization, a memorial volume of this inspiring woman, in which her character, her life, her work, and the world's estimate of her, may be accurately portrayed and set forth. Secondly, to add moral stimulus to the cause in whose service she died; and, incidentally, to give financial aid to that cause. The book is published by authority of the official publishing house of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and thus the profits will go towards the furtherance of the grandest reform work of the century, for which Miss Willard lived and died. The wider the circulation of this book, the greater will be the good accomplished. The chivalry and generosity of the American people, and good people everywhere, both because of the book and because of the objects for which it is published, will buy this book, and "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" will have a larger sale than any other book published since the days of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." But to accomplish this we must have volunteers to aid in the distribution of the book in every W. C. T. U., in every community, in every hamlet, village, town and city. The territory must be thoroughly canvassed, for everywhere people will buy this book. The purpose is lofty; the work of distributing is noble—it is grand. Reader, will you volunteer?

Introduction by...
LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Memorial Articles by Leading Men and Women.

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

By ANNA A. GORDON,

Private Secretary to Miss Willard 21 Years.

This book is published by authority and under the supervision of the official publishing house of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. IT WILL BE THE ONLY AUTHENTIC, ENDORSED BOOK. It will be the only reliable book. It will be the only meritorious book. It will be the only true and good book. IT WILL BE THE ONLY BOOK TO SELL—THE ONLY BOOK TO BUY. See that the official stamp of the publishing house of the W. C. T. U. is in every book and every canvassing prospectus. This stamp is shown in the lower right-hand corner of this page. Without this stamp the book is not the right one.

This grand volume will be sold exclusively by subscription. In no other way can the attention of the people everywhere be brought to the book, and insure for it the greatest possible circulation. As authorized distributers we want a representative at once in every community in the United States and Canadian provinces to help in circulating this book. We can give profitable employment at once to 50,000 salespeople.

What an Agency Means.

An agency for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" means two things: First, it will aid a noble cause. Secondly, it is the greatest opportunity of a lifetime to make money. While the greater part of the net profits on the book will go to the temperance cause, all who engage in the sale of the book have been provided for that they may have liberal pay for their work. Hundreds of copies will be sold in every village and town. Orders will be taken readily. Previous experience in book-selling is not required to sell this book. Large lists of orders can be taken each day. A few hours each day devoted to showing this book to friends and acquaintances will yield an income of from $4 to $10 a day and in many places much more; while experienced salespeople will be able to double and treble these figures. If you can spare any time to this work, send for canvassing outfit and full particulars at once and get started. Strike now. Don't delay an hour or you may be too late.

Opportunities.

The intelligence of our people is such that averaging one community with another seventy of every hundred families are so intelligent that they will be interested in "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" and will buy it when it is brought to their attention. This means seven orders out of every ten persons canvassed. Your community may be above this average. If every family in the nation could be canvassed with this book, over 8,000,000 copies would be sold, and the proceeds which would go to the temperance cause would be so great as to place the W. C. T. U. on a financial basis that would forever endure. Then think what a tremendous sum would be distributed among salespeople! Millions upon millions! Canvass your community and you will have done what you could to further the work, besides make money for yourself. This is a grand opportunity. No capital required, no risk to run, no expenses, and yet your profits will be greater than those of the merchant who invests large sums of money and takes big risks.

Terms.

We pay the largest and most liberal commissions and help our representatives in every possible way to successfully conduct the business. We allow three per cent. discount for cash with order. When the amount of the order is $35 or more, and the agent remits in full with the order, we pay freight (not express) on the books. On books shipped to Canada we arrange to pay the duty. To honest agents who need credit on the books to conduct the business, we can arrange to give 30 days' time, that they may deliver the books and make collections for them before paying us. In this way, everyone, no matter how he may be situated, can engage successfully in the sale of this great book.

Canvassing Outfit.

This consists of a sample book of upwards of a hundred pages of the complete book, showing nature of contents, kind of type, many of the beautiful illustrations, quality of paper, styles of binding, size of complete book, and contains guarantee to subscribers and blank pages on which to record orders. With the prospectus we send our best instructions for successful work, special instructions for selling this book, and necessary blanks. Our instructions are so complete that anyone can succeed. The complete outfit will be sent for 50 cents. This may be deducted in remitting for the first ten books sold. We are not permitted to send outfits free, hence do not lose time and possibly the chance to represent this book by writing for free outfit. Order to-day—this very hour, and be ahead of agents who will soon swarm the country with cheap, trashy books thrown together with scissors and paste by unscrupulous concerns offering unauthorized, unreliable books of the proceeds of which not one cent will go to the W. C. T. U.

Territory.

In order to help you in securing orders readily and rapidly we will not restrict you to any particular territory, but will let you take orders among your friends and acquaintances wherever they may be. You can select such fields as you will be able to handle to the best advantage. We want you to do well, to make many sales, to make money, and to do good.

We want a member in every local W. C. T. U. to volunteer at once to canvass every member of her Union with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." It will pay her, and it will help the organization.

We want a member of every Church and of every Church Society to volunteer to canvass every family belonging to her Church with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want a member of every Temperance Lodge to volunteer to canvass every member of the Lodge with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want a member of every Benevolent Organization, of every Humane Organization to volunteer to canvass every member with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want a Capable Person in every Township, Village, and Town to volunteer to canvass everybody he can reach with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want every Man and Woman in the United States and Canada, who has had any experience in the sale of books, to devote themselves for a time to the sale of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." It will pay. Drop all else.

Size and Prices.

The book will be a royal octavo in form, about 16x10 inches when open, will contain between 400 and 500 pages beautifully and profusely illustrated, and will sell for $2.00 in Cloth, $2.75 in Half Morocco, and $3.75 in Full Morocco.

All Prospectuses and Complete Books will have this official stamp on the title page.

The first thing to do is to send your order for canvassing outfit. Send it to-day, this very hour. There is a rush for outfits on this book. Your order will be filled from the first edition of outfits. In this way not an hour will be lost unnecessarily. Address, THE DOMINION COMPANY, Authorized Distributers, Dept. 5, 352-354-356 Dearborn Street, Chicago, U. S. A. (Mention this paper.)

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Volume XXIV.—No. 12. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, March 24, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

MRS. LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS.

Honor to Miss Willard

THE loving remembrances of our departed leader are practically numberless. Those enumerated below added to those already named in other issues of THE UNION SIGNAL do not, by any means, represent all that have been received. Many asked to have their tributes returned to be used elsewhere if we could not print them at once, others failed to give their names, and many reports of meetings and resolutions can not now be sifted out of the mass of material received at the National Headquarters at this office and by Miss Gordon. We give a final enumeration below, to which we are obliged to resort, as no short quotation could do justice to the wonderful meetings that have been held and the tributes of love that have been given:

TRIBUTES.

From each of the state presidents; Mrs. Zerelda Wallace, Cataract, Ind.; Mother Stewart, Springfield, O.; Mrs. Judge Thompson, Hillsboro, O.; Capt. C. H. Grant, New York city; Mrs. May Wright Sewall, Indianapolis, Ind.; Dr. Louise C. Purington, Boston, Mass.; Joseph L. Walker, Dundee, Ill.; Rev. and Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. John Pearsons, Evanston, Ill.; Hon. Elijah A. Morse, Canton, Mass.; Hon. John D. Long, Navy Department, Washington; Mrs. Harriette D. Walker; Mrs. Annie M. Lile, Southport, Lancashire; Samuel T. Carter, New York City; George T. Angell, Boston, Mass.; Kate Lunden, Flemington, N. J.; Mrs. Mary E. Cheney, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. A. M. Street, Summerville, Ga., Elizabeth P. Nicholl, Providence, R. I.; Savoy, Ill., Myra H. Wisegarver, president, Gertrude Smalley, secretary; Mrs. L. R. Sherwood, Western Washington; Central Union, Rock Island, Ill., Mesdames Hamilton, Marquis, Stewart; Sarah P. Morrison, Indianapolis, Ind.; Frances E. Townsley, Vassar, Mich.; Miss E. W. Greenwood, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Annie E. Harper, Fayette, Miss.; Henrietta L. Monroe, Xenia, O.; Mary B. Ingham, Cleveland, O.; Adelaide Stuart Delano, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. E. A. Russell, Minneapolis, Minn.; Sarah Howe Morris, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. K. Leyson Brown, Watertown, Mass.; Mrs. Anna McCurdy, Minneapolis, Minn.; Milford Union, O., Elizabeth Hommeya, cor. sec.; Rhena E. Mosher, Northeast Pa.; Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.; Piqua union, O., Martha E. Weddell, Louise F. Hedges; Sixteenth District W. C. T. U., Illinois, Mesdames James, Orr, Squires; Amanda T. Whitson, Indianapolis, Ind.; Dennisville, N. J., Mesdames Flick, Fidler, Wells, Bushnell; Mrs. F. L. West, Crowley, La.; Wallace L. Eggleston, Grand Junction, Col.; Mrs. L. B. Curry, East Liverpool, O.; W. G. Wright, traveling salesman, Nevada; Mrs. Laura Snow Bouck, Silverton, Wash.; Ira D. Clark, Hillside, Sutherland, S. D.; W. S. Clark, Alma, Prince Edward Island; A Minnesota co-worker; Mrs. E. S. Willard, Haddonfield, N. J. (an aged shut-in white-ribboner); Mrs. David Bliss, Fredonia, N. Y.; F. M. Bradley, vice-president National Temperance Society; the Countess di Brazza, Italy; Mary Seymour Howell, Albany, N. Y.; Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, Evanston, Ill.; M. J. Parmelee, Charlevoix, Mich.; Mrs. M. H. M. Blair, Washington, Ia.; Mrs. L. J. Pierson, Philadelphia, Pa.; Frances E. Willard union, M. L. Carleton, secretary; Center Moriches, Long Island, Mrs. Frances Edwards, president; Mrs. S. M. Perkins, Cleveland, O.; Col. J. H. Davidson, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Agnes Snyder, Kingston, O.; Mrs. E. W. Samuels, Mount Carmel, Pa.; Miss Isabella A. Kennier, Grand Forks, N. D.; Ira D. Crouse, Detroit, Mich.; Amelia H. Goodrich, Epworth, Ia.; Rebecca J. Trego, Cleveland, O.; Mrs. Lizzie H. Harsha, Hillsboro, O.; Avon, Ill., Mrs. E. J. Winchell; New Jersey W. C. T. U. executive meeting, Isabella H. Demarest, corresponding secretary; The Montgomery county executive, Sara L. Oberholtzer; Cork W. C. T. U., Mesdames Murphy, Copeman; Rev. W. K. Brown, D. D., Cincinnati; Mrs. Mildred A. Dorsey, Newport, Ark.; Mrs. Martha A. Irwin, president Allegheny county, Pa.; Mrs. J. N. Dawson, president sixth district, Michigan; Mary A. Browne, Eureka Springs, Ark.; Mrs. Joseph Pitte, Iola, Kan.; Esther T. Housh, Boston, Mass.; Julia A. Parish, Bay City, Mich.; Spartansburg union, S. C., Mrs. C. F. Wofford, president; Mrs. E. N. Law, Ludington, Mich.; Maud B. Booth, New York City; Anna H. Shaw, Philadelphia; Mrs. H. C. McCabe, Delaware, O.; The New Century Club, Kansas City, Mo.; Royal Templars of Temperance, Mrs. M. E. Grling, select councilor, G. Gunderson, recording secretary, Chicago; Jessie Forsyth, international superintendent Juvenile Good Templars, Boston, Mass.; A. W. Howard, Chicago, Ill.; Vandelia Varnum, Franklinville, N. Y.; Mrs. M. E. Peloubet, Mechlanburg, N. Y.; Samuel Todd, Englewood, Ill.; H. P. Adams, Eastport, Me.; Suffolk District Lodge, I. O. G. T., Boston, Mass.; Nettie Barker Fernald, West New Brighton, S. I.; the Department of Illinois Woman's Relief Corps, Jennie Bross, president; Dr. I. N. Rubinkam, University Congregational church, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. C. R. Macartny, University Park, Col.; Rev. J. M. Coon, Chicago, Ill.; Prof. A. A. Hopkins, Hornellsville, N. Y.; Rev. Jesse W. Brosks, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. A. J. Fish, Van Wert, O.; Mrs. F. F. Chamberlin, St. Louis, Mo.; Irish Woman's Temperance Union, Ireland, Jane M. Richardson, president, Mary Thompson, vice-president, Helena F. Hanna, secretary; Mary H. Hunt, Boston, Mass.; Marion B. Baxter, North Harvey, Ill.; Emma A. Cranmer, Aberdeen, S. D.; Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Detroit, Mich.; Miss Belle H. Mix, Danville, Ia.; Meta E. B. Thorne and Mrs. M. E. B. Thompson, Minneapolis, Minn.; Rev. W. K. Brown, D. D., Cincinnati, O.; Fremont, Wash., Mesdames Whitfield, Morie, Davis, Stroud; Mrs. Wm. C. Sibley, Augusta, Ga.

TRIBUTES IN VERSE.

Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, Frances Holden Fowler, Fannie B. Damon, Joseph Cover, Emma B. Johnston, Rebecca Perly Reed, Aurilla Furber, Abbie A. Wyman, Chas. W. Pearson, A. M.; Mary O. Page, F. E. Washburn, Ruth Crissey Cornell, L. L. Lossiter, Lillian Mae Albertson, Effie Cromer Nelson, B. S.; Julia A. Chase, Rev. C. R. Waters, Linnie Hawley Drake, Ettie S. Pierce, Alonzo Brown, Elizabeth Merrill, Mary Redick Bailey, Jennie S. Knappen, Mrs. S. A. Lawding, Cora Monroe, Lu B. Cake, Mrs. V. Morgan, David B. Metcalf, L. J. Wheeler, Mary E. Ruter, Vesta C. Turner, T. C. Williams, A. C. Blaisdell, John Cullen, D.D.; Ellie Walton Russell, Wellesley Bradshaw, Edith Thompson, Antoinette Hawley, Mrs. H. D. Weaver, Rev. Wm. Underwood, Irene B. Hawley, J. Augusta Holmes, C. B. Dike, Naomi S. Chichester, Mary B. Wingate, Mrs. M. A. Nicholl, Susan E. Gammons, Mary J. Tracy, H. N. Johnson, Ellen Phelps, Dr. Lyman W. Denton, T. Berry Smith, B. W. Burleigh, Jessie R. Loveless, Mrs. M. M. Anderson, Olyette Ellis, Mary A. Leavitt, Walter B. Maxwell, Wallace Union, Frances E. Harger, Mrs. M. A. Nicholl, Ella Gilbert Ives, Prof. Amos R. Wells, Mrs. M. P. A. Crozier, Mrs. Laura A. Randall, Mrs. Louisa A'hmuty Nash, Mrs. S. S. Burlingame, Mrs. E. W. Screven, Mrs. E. H. Kitchen, Mrs. M. E. Landa, Mrs. A. S. N. Barnes.

MEMORIAL MEETINGS.

Diagonal, Ia.; Cynthiana, Ind.; Juvenile L. T. L., Benton, Mo.; Willard Y's and Epworth League, Benton, Mo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Philadelphia Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; The First Y, Philadelphia, Pa.; West Philadelphia, Pa.; La Fayette, Ind. (one of the largest meetings ever held in the city); Washington, D. C.; Middlesex Co. Conv., Watertown, Mass.; Dowagiac, Mich.; Coalgate Union, Ind. Ter., Mrs. A. J. John, secretary; Havre de Grace, Md.; Westminster, Md.; Plattsville, Wis., Mesdames Nehls, Marshall; Detroit, Mich.; Paris, Ontario; Harriman, Tenn.; Asheville, N. C.; Woonsocket, S. D.; Nashville, Tenn. (3,000 people in attendance. Judge E. H. East presided, Rev. Sam P. Jones and Rev. D. C. Kelley, LL.D., paid tributes); Sandusky, O.; Steubenville, O.; Muskogee, Ind. Ter.; Y's of Woman's College, Baltimore; Baltimore Unions, at Mount Vernon Place M. E. church; Harvey Union, Harvey, Ill.; Van Buren Union, Van Buren, Ark.; Fountain Green, Md.; Decatur, Ill.; Cleveland, O. (Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins presided. The speakers were the Crusaders and the presidents of the ten unions); Gordon Union, Toronto, Canada; Hillsboro, O. (The G. A. R., Woman's Relief Corps, Sons of Veterans, Ladies' Aid and W. C. T. U. joined in the service. The Crusaders sat in reserved seats. Mother Thompson could not attend, and Mrs. McSurely, wife of the Crusade pastor, presided. Extracts from Miss Willard's letters to Mother Thompson were read, and Mrs. L. H. Harsha delivered an address); W. C. T. U. of Ohio; Chattanooga, Tenn.; W. C. T. U. of Louisiana; Fredonia, N. Y.; Summerside, Prince Edward Island; Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; Piedmont, W. Va.; Trenton, Woodbury and scores of other towns in New Jersey; Atlantic Highlands, N. J. (All the Protestant churches united); North Harvey, Ill.; Chrisman, Ill.; Virginia, Ill.; Yorkville, Ill.; Hammond, Ill.; Palestine, Ill.; Moline, Ill.; Minonk, Ill.; Kankakee, Ill.; Sanitarium Chapel, Battle Creek, Mich. (Tribute by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry); Van Wert, O.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Sharon, Mass.; Yorkshire, England; Hachelaga Co. Union, Montreal, Canada; the L. T. L. of New York, at home of Mrs. Wm. E. Dodge; Lexington, Ky.; Halifax, Nova Scotia (On the platform were the colored minister of the African Methodist church, the Episcopal bishop of Nova Scotia, the mayor of the city, the principal of the university and representatives of the temperance organizations, the legislature and the government.)

RESOLUTIONS BY THE W. C. T. U.

East Liverpool, O., Mesdames Curry, Hawkins, Howard; Cumberland, Md.; Plano, Ill., Mesdames Latham, Henning, Applegate; Fountain Green, Md., Miss Dean; Board of Managers, National Temperance Hospital, Mesdames Brown, Thatcher; Mary Dibble Union, Green River, Wyo., Mesdames Jones, Wheat, Dibble, Richards, Haynes, Togle; Decatur, Ill., Miss Crissey, Mesdames Beadles, Crary; Franklin, La., Mrs. Milling; Kendalls, Wis., Mesdames Dunning, Prosser, Heitsch; Aberdeen, Miss., Julia E. Love; Beattyville, Ky., Mesdames Lyon, Harris, Williams; Hamilton, Texas, Mesdames Paulin, Jones, Miss Boynton; Central Union, Cincinnati, O., Mrs. Skinner; Muscogee, I. T.; Stephen, Minn. (signed by the entire union); Tioga county, Pa., Mesdames Stockwell, Soley, Hudson; Francesville Union, Ind., Mrs. Lillie Kellogg, secretary; Attica, N. Y.; Topeka, Kans.; Aurora, Ill.; New Jersey W. C. T. U.; Creston, Ia.; Hope Union, Buffalo, N. Y.; Red Wing, Minn.; Toronto, Can., Mrs. A. M. Bascom, Miss Lottie E. Wiggins; Executive of the Provincial Union, Prince Edward Island; New Brunswick W. C. T. U., Mrs. Diadama McLeod, president; Emma R. Atkinson, corresponding secretary; Derby Branch of the B. W. T. A., Mary Shuttleworth Boden, president; Nassau Union, Bahama Islands; Montreal Union, Canada; Halifax and Dartmouth Unions, Nova Scotia; St. George, N. B. The Executive of the British Women's Temperance Association; Pioneer W. C. T. U., Mesdames Spears, England, Hill; Sheridan, N. Y., Mesdames Ogden, Sweet.

RESOLUTIONS OF OTHER SOCIETIES.

Scottish Temperance League, Glasgow; Woman's Home Missionary Society, New York; National Society of New England Women; Council of Women of Ottawa, Can.; Ladies' Health Protective Association, of New York; the Ministerial Association, of Denver, Col., Rev. T. McCartney; Epworth League Convention, Millersburg, Ill., J. G. Evans, J. W. Roberts, Nellie Stevens; Good Templars, Stratford District Lodge, I. O. G. T., New Hampshire, Frank I. Knox, H. E. Wilson, A. J. Goodwin; Juvenile Temple, Golden Star, I. O. G. T., Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Woman's Club, Bakersfield, Cal., Mesdames Conley, Brown, McLeod; Chicago Spiritualists' Mass Meeting (United States and Canada associations), Frances B. Woodbury; professors and students of the Illinois State Normal University, and citizens of Normal, Ill. (They pledged to use influence against intoxicants as a beverage, to strive to promote purity, and adopted a petition to the president of Yale University); Arché Club, Chicago, Margaret E. Root, secretary; Pontoosuc Lodge, I. O. G. T., Pontoosuc, Ill., Foster Walker, secretary; Albany county Lodge, I. O. G. T., New York, Sarah E. Cramer, secretary; St. Monica's Catholic Women's Temperance Society, Sida Conner, secretary; Catholic Total Abstinence Union, Chicago; Illinois Woman's Press Association; the Jackson Sanitarium, Danville, N. Y.; Delano Settlement, Evanston, Ill.; Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mexico; Ingelow Society, Lima, N. Y.; Council of Jewish Women; Missouri Equal Suffrage Association; National Association of Colored Women; L. T. L., of New Jersey; Wolfboro, N. H., Isabel F. V. Young; The Northwestern Branch of the W. F. M. Society, Mesdames Ridgaway, Crandon, Hobbs.

A unique resolution adopted by the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, of Buffalo, N. Y.:

Whilst we cannot too much deplore the loss of our defenders on the Maine, we should not neglect to mourn the death of Frances E. Willard, who has saved men enough to equip the entire fleet of a great nation, and protected so many American homes from the only enemy that could have wrecked them. Her life work entitles her to be revered by a grateful nation as one of the greatest benefactors, not only of America, but of mankind. Father Mathew and Frances Willard will continue to inspire their hosts of followers who must carry to victory the great moral warfare for sobriety, purity and home.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

An unusually large number of the hospital board gathered, March 7, in the pleasant parlors at 1619 Diversey avenue, to attend the first quarterly board meeting of the year. An agreeable surprise awaited us. At the hour for lunch our National secretary, Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, came bringing with her for a short time our acting National president, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, whose pleasant words of cheer and confidence made us feel more than ever that no pains on our part would be spared to help her carry the heavy mantle of care which has so suddenly fallen upon her. Let us hope and pray that she may have an upholding strength given her to enable her to rise to the emergency of the hour.

As to the general outlook of our institution, many indications point to an "uplift" in our horizon; reports for the quarter were gratifying. Letters of good will and promised support were read, one especially from an old lady from Pennsylvania, seventy-seven years old, and "earning her daily bread and butter as well as fuel and clothing." She says, "I wear the white ribbon, and all my life have been what it represents, and I rejoice over the workers, though I was born too early in the century to do much. I only do my little and do it as well as I can, believing that the Father cares for me and will help me do all He wants me to do." She not only gathers in the children to a "huckleberry picnic," but she tells them "UNION SIGNAL stories" while they wait, and in her beautiful letter (written at rest times from her weaving) she sends out cheering words to her sisters in other paths who may be bravely trying to keep up hope and strength for what "God gives them to do."

Will not our friends help us carry out in every possible way the thought of Miss Willard when she planted the seed of total abstinence from alcoholic medicines, out of which has grown our National Temperance Hospital? Among her very last days of work here she wrote a plea for this branch of our work, filling the hospital column of THE UNION SIGNAL, January 14. A letter full of suggestions came under same date, from which I give you her own words. She says: "Believe me, dearie, I have tried to do the best I could under the circumstances and shall always be glad to help." Thus shall the Lord build up His kingdom upon earth, when we, too, "shall always be glad to help."

Yours, ever for the work,
(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.
1610 Grace St., Chicago.

P. S.—Please send all money for the Hospital direct to Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St., Chicago; also all orders relative to photos. Photos on sale by W. T. P. A. at Temple. Three to one address, $1; twelve or more to one address for $3.00 per dozen.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 12. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, March 24, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

HONOR TO MISS WILLARD 2
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 2
NOTES AND COMMENTS 3
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Frances E. Willard. By Kate Brownlee Sherwood 4
Poem, Our Leader. By Sarah K. Bolton 4
The Question of the Rose Tree. By Frances Bennett Callaway 4
Sabbath Defense. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph. D. . . 4
Lachryma Christi. By George Milton Hammell 4
Anna Adams Gordon. By Katharine Lente Stevenson . 5
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Rev. Hugh Price Hughes Defended 6
Mrs. Barney in Egypt 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Rhyme and Reason 7
Jimmie's Lesson on Narcotics. By B. F. C 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Lillian M. N. Stevens 8
Extracts From Tributes to Miss Willard 8
Notable Services 9
Letters Received by Miss Slack 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Y's at Work 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Tasmanian Notes 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Missouri—Minnesota—Louisiana 10-12
Obituary 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 12
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 12
To the Board of Superintendents—Announcements—A Call to the Loyal Temperance Legion—Notice 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14
Notice 14
CONVENTION CORNER 14
Announcement 14
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

RED-LETTER DAYS.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE DAY—APRIL 3.

To be observed by public services in the interests of the American Sabbath.

TEACHERS' DAY—APRIL 21.

The birthday of Froebel.

BY the passage of the Irish local self-government bill by the British parliament municipal suffrage is extended to the women of Ireland; that is, unmarried women and widows may vote for all officers except members of parliament. The municipal franchise was conferred upon English spinsters and widows in 1869, upon those of Scotland in 1881, and now after an experience of twenty-nine years another forward step is taken. This action of the British lawmakers proves that they are abundantly satisfied with the results of woman suffrage so far as they have tried it.

TEXAS Union No. 2 (colored) is organized, thanks to the untiring efforts of Mrs. Thurman, who has been ably aided by the efforts and coöperation of the officers of No. 1 union. Ten departments of work have been adopted. This new state union sent a floral offering to Miss Willard's funeral services in Evanston, and is giving itself to the work with devotion and zeal. There are now five state unions among the colored women of the South—in Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas and Texas. Of these, all but Georgia have been organized by Mrs. Thurman within the past two years.

WE are glad to welcome to this country Pundita Ramabai, of India, who, during her first visit some ten years ago, endeared herself to the hearts of American white-ribboners. It will be remembered that she came at that time to interest the Christian people of this land in her proposed school for the child widows of India. Upon her return the school was established and is rapidly growing in power for good. The Pundita, upon her arrival in Boston, was much startled by the news of Miss Willard's death. She had been looking forward with much pleasure to seeing her again and is deeply grieved at the irreparable loss of one whom she loved as a sister.

THE logic of events is evidently too much for the genial and scholarly editor of The Interior. From various utterances which have appeared of late in the columns of that spicy journal we are pleased to note that it is opening its heart to the "new woman." If not exactly in the vanguard of the procession on this question it is certainly not in the rear. In a recent issue it thus comments: "The most refreshing reading we get these days is the United Presbyterian's commendations of Mrs. Peake, their evangelist. We have considered ourselves conservative on the woman question—but the woman in the pulpit we first endure, then pity, then embrace. . . . The apparition of Mrs. Peake on the platforms of the United Presbyterians is an angelic visitation; and we commend both the vision and the message to those ecclesiastical spirits in prison, who deserve to have the gospel of the 'woman's kingdom' preached to them."

"THREE hundred sailors gave up their lives in the Maine disaster, accident or no accident, and the country went into spasms of excitement because of the sacrifice. Every year in Chicago four thousand persons give up their lives because of the contaminated water supply, and there is no question as to accident or no accident. We know all about it. Why not declare war on those persons who are trying to maintain this slaughter of innocents by opposing the intercepting and purifying sewers?" The question, asked by a Chicago newspaper, is apropos. We suggest that the American public also consider this one: Every year in the United States one hundred thousand persons give up their lives because of the supply of intoxicating drinks—to say nothing of all the miseries entailed and the thousands of other lives that are wrecked by it—and there is no question as to accident. Why not declare war on those persons who maintain this slaughter by opposing the only remedy for such wholesale destruction—the prohibition of the liquor traffic?

AS the watchman from the towers of one of the enemy's strongholds sees us: "Activity in the direction of temperance agitation is more pronounced than ever." And while the liquor leaders urge their forces to be up and doing and to "meet argument with better argument," they know full well that the cause of prohibition has nothing to lose but everything to gain by agitation.

APROPOS of Lenten self-denial the Illinois Audubon society pertinently suggests that all women make a sacrifice which will find favor with both God and man by purchasing no bird or plumage trimmed Easter bonnets. The purpose is to secure the coöperation of enough women of the state to make the church pews on Easter Sunday represent flower gardens rather than sections of an ornithological collection. The Audubon society of Illinois is less than a year old, but its work, while quietly carried on, has been effective, the milliners confessing that the crusade for the protection of birds is already felt in their trade. This humane work is in line with one of the W. C. T. U. departments, therefore all white-ribboners should, by precept and example, lend a hand.

WITH reference to the newspaper discussion which is now going on as to the personality of the "founder of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," the General Officers of the National have repeatedly affirmed that no one of their number has ever claimed for Miss Willard the office of founder, nor, so far as we are aware, has such a claim ever been made by herself or her friends. The W. C. T. U. was founded by no one individual. The thought of putting into permanent form the results of the Crusade seemed to have taken simultaneous lodgment in many minds, as the signatures upon the Chautauqua Call bear witness. Miss Willard was not among the number signing that call, but she was present at the organizing convention held in Cleveland, and took so prominent a part in the deliberations of that body that she was made the corresponding secretary of the newly formed society, and, five years later, was elected its president. While not the founder she was unquestionably the maker of the union in the largest sense of that term. She took the W. C. T. U. when it was a mere handful and made it the splendidly equipped and organized body it is to-day. To her larger thought and clearer vision must be attributed the deepening and widening of its channels of usefulness, while the thought and plan of the World's W. C. T. U. originated wholly in her own mind, the assertion of which fact may have led to the misunderstanding concerning the founding of the National society.

Contributed.

Frances E. Willard.

BY KATE BROWNLEE SHERWOOD.

[Read before the Woman's International Press Association, Washington, D. C., February 19.]

NO flag is lowered on the mast,
No chair is draped in council halls,
No dirges shiver in the blast,
No shadow o'er the nation falls.

Yet there she lies, the saintliest soul,
That walked the land in human guise,
And he who lists may hear the roll
Of chariot mounting to the skies.

In wider realm than human ken
Has love, or faith, to understand,
She has been lifted over men
To stir the spirit of the land.

Her school of prophets yet shall speak
The words that overturn the wrong;
The wisdom of the world is weak,
But love in weakness yet is strong.

She lived for truth and lived for right,
For larger liberty of life;
She lived within the dawning sight
Of peace triumphant over strife.

Her voice was heard from shore to shore,
And stricken souls took heart again;
She lived the oil of joy to pour
On wounded hearts that mourned in vain.

Wherever virtue is esteemed,
Nay, even in ignoble life;
Wherever holy dreams are dreamed,
Wherever there is noble strife;

Wherever there are homes to guard,
Wherever there is human need;
Wherever there are struggles hard,
Against the might of lust and greed;

Wherever there are thorns to wear,
Wherever there are scourge and rod;
Wherever there is cross to bear,
Her life shall lead us up to God.

Nay, drop no flag upon the mast,
Nay, drape no chair in council hall;
The blaring band and trumpet blast
Would mar the holiness of all.

Hail and farewell! Yet, not farewell!
For whether here or whether there,
Thy spirit forces marshal well
And heaven has all thy work in care.

Our Leader.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

WHITE-ROBED and beautiful our leader lies,
The flower of womanhood;
Her pure, white life translated to the skies;
As great as she was good.

Hushed is the voice that held our hearts in thrall,
Our gentlest, truest, best;
Our fearless guide, with boundless love for all,
Sleeps in her well-earned rest.

The prayers of nations round her saintly head
Were heard that winter night;
"How beautiful to be with God," she said,
And passed beyond our sight.

We loved her with a love outreaching time;
Unselfish, cheerful, strong,
She lived on heights to which we rarely climb,
In battling with the wrong.

She dared to lead though she might walk alone—
Our tolerant high priest;
A noble woman fit to grace a throne,
Yet sister to the least.

She never censured; never failed to stand
For right, and faith and truth;
She lived "For God, and Home, and Native Land,"
Through her unending youth.

O precious memory of a blessed life!
A life that cannot die;
Lord, let her spirit lead us in the strife!
Dear, brave, great-heart, good-by!

Cleveland, O.

The Question of the Rose Tree.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

HOW can a poor, dumb thing like me understand the ways of life—so deep, so strange, so full of mystery? I was a brave, young rose tree, full of leaves, and every leaf was lifting me up toward heaven; full of buds, and every bud was a promise and a rejoicing, when the gardener cut me down to the earth. If I could only know the reason why!

Gathering up all my strength and courage I sent up new shoots more full of life than ever. Every leaf trembled with hope in the sunny air, and one bud pushing apart with warm, impatient joy, the close, green calyx was almost a rose, and then there came a night of frost more cruel than the gardener's knife, and once more cut me down. The pain, the bitterness, the disappointment, how strange it was! If I could only know the reason why!

Still the warm sap pulsing through my veins pushed forth new buds only to meet sullen days with black, wintry skies, and biting winds and lashing sleet and hail. Buried in deep drifts of snow, my frozen limbs no longer felt the pulsing of warm, vigorous life; the very earth from whose bosom my life was drawn, was frozen around me. Everywhere was darkness and stillness—the waiting for death. How strange it was! If I could only know the reason why!

I waited patiently a long, weary while, until through the chill and the gloom there came ringing out of the east one morning a voice of great joy, crying: "The shadow of death is rolled away! Our Lord is risen! In His life we live!"

At these mighty words I felt a delicious stir of gladness in my locked-up heart, and out of this gladness I began to repeat over and over my confession of faith: "I steadfastly believe the Lord made me to be a rose."

A soft brightness shone around me and I became conscious of the south wind rocking me gently. Then harmonies innumerable and raptures of fine music might have been heard swelling after the blue-bird's note. This was the sap stirring through the blades of grass. With piercing joy, secret hopes long hidden under brown withered thorns now burst with crimson life into fresh buds and tasted the delicious air and blessed rain of springtime.

As the days go by, I dream of what He has in His thoughts for me. There are to be brave companies of green, mantling leaves, and these leaves are to be given voices to speak of joy and love; there are soft, white petals and golden circles of stamens and delicate perfumes, and honey-bees shining in glittering, gauzy wings, with butterflies and all glad creatures of the garden. There is a dream, too, of the pure, young maid who will touch her cheek to mine, of the lover who will press me to his lips, and of all the delights of summer time.

And these dreams, are they not the breath of the Lord's dear thoughts for me borne on the scented air and glowing sunshine into my inmost heart? He is making me into a rose in His own way—in His own time—for His own purpose. Some day I shall know perfectly the reason why.

Washington, D. C.

Sabbath Defense.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH. D.

[April Theme in the Topic-a-Month Course of Reform Studies.]

FIRST WEEK.—Seven reasons why the Sabbath should be observed and preserved as a day of freedom for worship and from work, save works of necessity and mercy. 1. Because the law of the Sabbath is the law of Eden, where the Sabbath was made for man as the crowning work of creation, the germ of all things spiritual. 2. Because the law of the Sabbath is a part of the Decalogue, the world's universal constitution. 3. Because it is also the law of Christ, who taught its observance by precept and practice—first the Jewish Sabbath, then the new Lord's Day. 4. Because the observance of the Lord's Day is the law of apostolic example. 5. Because it is the law of the church. 6. Because it is the law of the state. 7. Because it is also a law of nature, scientifically proven. As in the case of temperance, so in that of the Sabbath, we believe the need of the hour is to reinforce conscience, to show in this case that it is not only a Christian doctrine but a certainty of science that the best health and the longest life cannot be attained without Sabbath rest.

SECOND WEEK.—1. Educated men, Christian, un-Christian and anti-Christian, are now generally agreed that man's body and mind, to say nothing here of the soul, need, and so have a right to, a weekly rest day. 2. It is also generally agreed that in order to accomplish its purpose in this age of interlocking activities the rest day should be the same for the whole community. 3. It is also further agreed that the day must be legally protected against greed, since the "liberty of rest for each demands a law of rest for all." 4. It is also generally agreed, that in forbidding Sunday work no safe and equitable exceptions can be made except for works of necessity and mercy and private labor by those who really observe another day.

THIRD WEEK.—1. The Lord's Day. 2. The Rest Day. 3. The Home Day. 4. The Weekly Independence Day.

FOURTH WEEK.—Question Box.

Send to New York Sabbath Committee Bible House, N. Y., for its report for 1897, containing latest reports of the progress of the "Sunday Rest Movement" in Europe; also Dr. Atterbury's recent address on Sunday laws. The Reform Bureau will send to all applicants, free of charge save postage, the following leaflets: "Plan of Work for Sabbath Defense" (revised in 1897), "Unfamiliar Reasons for the Rest Day," "Arguments of Good Men of all Creeds Against Sunday Saloons," "To What Extent are Christians Responsible for Sabbath-breaking," "Liberty," "Capital Documents No. 1," also a leaflet on Sabbath closing of postoffices.

SOMETHING TO DO.—Organize in each young people's society a Lord's Day committee, and unite all such committees in the locality, with pastors also, officers of W. C. T. U., Y. M. C. A. and kindred bodies, in a Union Sabbath Defense committee, a "Plan of Work" for which is named above. A celluloid badge will be sent free, with the literature named, to the chairman of each Lord's Day committee on application. Vote a petition to Congress for a Sabbath law in the national capital.

Lachryma Christi.

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

THE tears of Christ! The tears of Christ! We know that in the shadow of Lazarus' tomb, and on slopes of Olivet, Jesus wept. One stands in silent awe in the presence of a sympathy that vents itself in tears, whose salt is not the agony of one's own guilt—but the sorrow and the sin of others' lives. Jesus was "Resurrection and Life," and knew the glory that He had before the worlds were, and the glory that lay beyond the hills of the cross. He came from the New Jerusalem and was on the sure way back to its streets and shining palaces. He knew the temples of God, and the altars where angels worship, the holy halls where prophets and holy priests gather in the light of the presence of God, and, as He gazed out over Jerusalem, He wept at vision of her shame and thought of her crime. For Jerusalem had stoned the prophets, and Jerusalem would cast himself out upon her Hill of the Skull. He wept when He saw the city; He weeps when He sees the city to-day—whether Rome in her ruin, Venice in her decay, Constantinople in her lust, London in her wealth, New York in her colossal energy, Boston in her culture, Chicago in her superlative aggressiveness. But, as He gazes on the cities of Italy He sheds bitterest tears of sorrow, I think, at sight of their environing vineyards, the water of whose grapes, pressed in full vats, is rotted and poisoned by fermenting for the feast-cup of evil; sheds bitter tears, I may fancy, at thought of drunkenness, of the wild waste of life, the reckless ruin of heart and blight of hand; at thought of genius perverted, and home-life wrecked, the cell of the priest shadowed, maiden life marred by touch of lips on poisoned glass, and youth degraded; but sheds bitterest tears at thought that men give to the waters of the vat the sacred name, "Lachryma Christi," the tear of Christ.

On the door of a saloon on Fifth street and Eggleston avenue, this city, is a list of "Italian wines," and there, in that shameful company is the name, "Lachryma Christi," the tear of Christ! Was there not some other name than that for wine? The tears of Christ! Do men ever think when raising a glass of it to blasphemous lips that they profane the name? The tears of Christ were meant for warning, for new call to blessed life. They meant the sympathy of God with men, and men crush grapes and distill their juices into maddening liquid and call the drink, "the tears of Christ!" It is blasphemy so vicious and startling that one can not but wonder that the church has not pleaded with the vinters and distillers to withdraw that sacred name.

Until yesterday I had not known that wine bore a name so sacred. The winter sun shone full upon the list, and almost before I had felt all the shock I was borne far away. Does the saloon-keeper know the meaning of those words, "Lachryma Christi"? Does the drinker know, as he comes to the bar and asks for a glass of "Lachryma Christi"—the tears of Christ? Does all that shadowed region know that once, and again, among the hills of Palestine, there was One who wept, then swept the tears from off the faces of Martha and Mary? One who wept over Jerusalem, then passed through her streets bearing a cross, and rose again that tears might be wiped from off all faces forevermore? Surely did men know that they would not bottle wine and label it Tears of Christ! (I give the words as they appear on the saloon-keeper's door. Correctly, they should be Lachrymae Christi.)

Cincinnati, O.

Anna Adams Gordon.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

NO life story of Frances Willard could be complete which did not include the story of Anna Gordon as a potent factor in that life. She was a part of Miss Willard's very self, as few daughters are parts of their mothers. Her love for our great leader seemed a composite of all loves; it was the love of a mother for her child and of a child for her mother; of a husband for his wife and of a wife for her husband; of a lover, friend, companion and counsellor. There was in it even an element of that worshipful adoration with which "the eyes of a servant look unto the hands of her mistress," combined with the wise, watchful care with which a strong friend guards and protects a loved one.

More truly than any other love I have ever known, was it absolutely free from the faintest shadow of personal jealousy. Other friends came into that many-sided life; her interests were world-wide and many great natures were attracted to her winsome personality, but this early love never wavered, never knew doubt or the shadow of turning, never put the thought of self before the interests of her friend. "I hope it will not seem irreverent," said Miss Gordon to me only last summer, "but I took as my motto long ago, 'I love them that love her,' and no one can love her too well to please me." Is it any wonder that so great a nature should have found close kinship with the greatest woman of the century, or, indeed, of the ages?

Miss Willard had many pet terms with which she was wont to designate Anna Gordon. She was "Little Opportune," an "Organized Providence," "My Guide, Philosopher and Friend," and those who knew the two lives felt that, in each case, the description was an apt one. What Anna Gordon was to Frances Willard eternity alone can show. She touched her life, not alone through the channel of its deep affections, but through the manifold, broad channels of Miss Willard's work for humanity. Not one of the great leader's plans and purposes was ever withheld from her friend, and while her fertile brain originated the seed-thought, to Anna Gordon was given the privilege of preparing the soil in which that thought might come to its perfect maturity. Frances Willard was the genius, but Anna Gordon made the environment in which that genius came to its fullest development. Her capacity for detail has always been marvelous, and through all the twenty-one years in which she was Miss Willard's constant companion, whether in traveling or at Rest Cottage, at home or abroad, it was upon her that the detail work came. She planned the trips; she cared for the finances; she sheltered and protected from petty cares and from routine work; she made it possible for that mighty intellect to give itself without reserve, without restraint or hindrance to the work to which she was called. An "Organized Providence" she certainly has been, and a necessary complement of Miss Willard's inmost nature and outward life.

The story of the beginnings of their acquaintance has been often told, and white-ribboners have before their mind's eye a very distinct picture of the trim little form that came timidly down the aisle of the old Berkeley Temple in Boston in response to Miss Willard's call for some one to play the organ. That act was typical of Anna Gordon's nature. To see a duty has been with her always a synonym for its performance, and hers is a clearer insight to discover duty than is granted to many. From that service as organist during the time Miss Willard conducted the women's meetings in connection with the great Moody revival in Boston, the friendship was an unbroken one. A few months after the Moody meetings closed, she went to Rest Cottage and became Miss Willard's private secretary. In addition to all that is conveyed in that term, she has carried on a large and varied work of her own. As World's superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion work, she has planned much and wisely for the children whom she so loves. Willard Fountain, which stands at the entrance of Willard Hall, in Chicago, is the embodiment of her own thought and work. The money for its erection was raised in a most unique way—by having the children sign total abstinence pledges on red, white and blue cards, which were used to decorate the W. C. T. U. rooms at the Columbian Exposition. She is also assistant secretary of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and as such her wise counsels are known in all lands where the gospel of the white ribbon has been carried.

She was Miss Willard's constant companion during the last weeks of her life, and though the blow of our great leader's death comes with crushing weight upon us all, it is she, after all, who is most sorely smitten. Those who were with them in those weary days say that one of the cries most often upon the loved lips was, "Oh, Nannie, Nannie, what is it?" Never before had she uttered that cry in vain; never before had she come to a place where the help so gladly, so lavishly given for the space of twenty-one years could reach no further; but even in that hour Anna Gordon went down into the dark valley with the beloved one, and from the moment that the beautiful eyes closed in death until she was laid in Rosehill, she was hardly away for an hour at a time from her whom she loved with a love which would have counted the pouring out of her own heart's blood as nothing, if she could but have spared the loved one a pang.

ANNA A. GORDON.

By the terms of Miss Willard's will, Miss Gordon was made, in conjunction with Lady Henry Somerset, her literary executor. The General Officers of the National Union have formally requested that a biography of their great leader be immediately prepared. Miss Gordon is no novice at literary work. If her time had not been so fully occupied she would have won for herself ere this an enviable reputation as a writer. As it is, she has given to the world many choice bits of prose and poetry, while to the work of the W. C. T. U. she has contributed "Questions Answered," a manual of L. T. L. work, "Marching Songs for Young Crusaders," Nos. 1, 2 and 3, "The White Ribbon Birthday Book" and "White Ribbon Hymnal." Her style is terse and strong, a true index of her well systematized nature. Miss Willard used to say no one ever crowded so much into the small space of ten words as did Anna Gordon in her frequent telegrams.

Altogether, a strong, well-poised, gentle and lovable woman is the subject of this sketch. She must have made for herself a noble place in the world's work even if she had never been associated with the great woman to whom she so gladly ministered. But the "divinity that shapes our ends" ordained for her a mission that an angel might well envy, and so long as the name of Frances Willard lives in the minds of men and upon the pages of history—which will be forever—so long will the name of Anna Gordon be linked with hers, and as a new Damon and Pythias, or, better still, a new David and Jonathan, they will take their place among the immortal few who have proven that earthly friendship may be a flower of heaven's own planting and that the greatest privilege which can come to a mortal life is that of loving, faithful ministry.

Chicago, Ill.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

SINCE the last "echoes" were written Willard Hall has sheltered the precious dust of Frances Willard. Thousands walked through this room who never trod the sacred place before. The air was laden with the rich perfume of rarest flowers, and with a still subtler aroma—that distilled from a life given to the highest and best. The alabaster box is broken, and what this woman hath done shall be told for a memorial of her. That day, near the entrance to Willard Hall, a poor besotted man was weeping and saying, "If I had listened to her voice I would not be as I am to-day, and there are thousands who say the same."

I was standing not far from the casket, and two mothers were pouring into my ear their sorrow—asking me to pray for their boys—when I noticed a man earnestly watching me. Stepping up to him with extended hand, I learned he was in Willard Hall for the first time. "I am a reporter and came in to gather items for the press." After talking of the beautiful room, the impressiveness of the occasion, and the life of her whose face and form thousands were enduring so much in order to look upon for the last time, I asked, "Are you a Christian, my brother?" "I am not." "But you certainly feel the need of the Saviour, who made her life so pure and true?" "I never did until to-day." He asked for my card, saying, "I am coming here again, pray for me."

. . . . . .

Friday, February 25, all seats and standing room in the auditorium were taken, and every seat upon the platform was occupied by white-ribbon leaders, brought to this great center because of what had come to pass in these last days. Mrs. Lucy Thurman read the Scripture and led in noontide prayer. Then Mrs. Carse presented Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president New York W. C. T. U.; Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, president Dominion of Canada; Mrs. Emilie Martin, of New York, National superintendent of purity in art and literature. Of the Temple Trustees there were present, Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, New York; Mrs. M. H. Dunham, president Iowa W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill.; Mrs. Mary C. Upham, Marshfield, Wis.; Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Elmhurst, Ill.; Mrs. Caroline M. Woodward, David City, Neb. Each responded to introduction in words from hearts made tender by the great sorrow casting its shadow upon all.

. . . . . .

A voice from Ceylon reached Willard Hall, and every ear was open to hear the message from this far-off field. When Dr. Lucile Leslie, who is in charge of the Lady Havilock Hospital for women and children, the Government Dispensary for women and children, the female department of Ceylon Medical College, besides holding several other important positions, said, "you will see I have little time at my disposal, but I will do what I can to help the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union for Christ's sake," a volume of prayer went up for the work and the workers in Ceylon.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes Defended.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In two issues of your valuable paper I have observed criticisms made upon the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M. A. I do not take up the pen in his defense, for he is an antagonist not easily vanquished, but always perfectly well able to give a good account of himself. The persons who have made these attacks seem to be in entire ignorance of the fact that Europe and even England has not made the progress in temperance legislative sentiment or thought, that has been made in this country, Canada and Australia. One can well understand the Manitoba correspondents expressing themselves as they did in the issue of February 17, looking at Price Hughes' letter from their standpoint. They would display the same horror should they cross the boundary line and hear church officials use some words in conversation (to them meaningless) but the use of which in Canada or England would result in their expulsion from membership in the church. In this country a liquor dealer cannot be a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, though a Methodist seminary will sometimes elect a notorious brewer as one of its trustees, and a Methodist President does have wine served at the White House, and even worse things are reported.

Though your correspondents do not (perhaps) question that Mr. Hughes is a strong temperance man, but why in that connection they should quote, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," I for the life of me cannot understand. The most eloquent, rousing temperance address I ever listened to, was given by Mr. Hughes in Exeter Hall in denunciation of the Licensing Bill, and those who have heard "the grand old man" of the temperance cause, the Rev. Charles Garrett, do not need to be informed that no more loyal advocate of prohibition lives.

All through the letter under consideration the writers seem to wander from the question. They quote Gladstone, Cardinal Manning, Judge Davis, Chief Justice Coleridge—the statements of each and all, showing the curse of "drunkenness." Price Hughes would quote them also when speaking of the same vice. But the contention is whether liquor dealers should be excluded from the Wesleyan church. [The question was whether they should be excluded from office in the church.—THE EDITORS.] Of course, one must remember that there are thousands upon thousands of liquor dealers in England who do not keep a saloon. There are grocery and other stores that possess outdoor licenses. Whether it is right or wrong has nothing to do with the argument—they exist. In my opinion, and I think I have often read the same in the Methodist Times, Mr. Gladstone committed a terrible blunder when he made such a thing possible. Now these grocers (many of them) who sell liquor are just as honest, conscientious, upright, as your correspondents, or the thousands of Christian tradesmen who on this continent trade in other questionable commodities, tobacco for example. Moreover, if it would be expedient to apply Wesley's rule against them let that be applied also which refers "to the putting on of gold and costly apparel," and the "laying up treasure on earth." But Wesley permits the sale of spirituous liquors in certain cases—therefore he was not a strict prohibitionist as Brother and Sister McClung aver.

Personally, I have never voted any other ticket but the Prohibition. I glory in the fact of being an honorary member of the W. C. T. U. Miss Willard has been for twenty years one of my heroines in real life—but yet I am coming to think that monopoly and greed will have to be classed with the liquor traffic as evils that are blasting the lives of the poor laborer.

The "times of refreshing" do not come because in fighting evils we have overlooked conditions, and by neglect, alienated the sympathy of the masses. But do not let us attack our brothers because they differ with us as to plans and methods and modes of procedure. "In essentials, unity, and in all things, charity." The West London Mission, with its able, eloquent, earnest, indefatigable leader and his noble band of workers, is doing a work, the power and influence of which is felt to the ends of the earth. It ill becomes those who are thousands of miles away from the scene of action, to charge "inconsistency." If our own skirts were clear, we could, with more grace, write open letters to the workers over the seas, laboring under different conditions. But with our Yale saloons, and our college debauches, and our meaningless "resolutions of cordial sympathy with all wisely directed efforts," etc., "and the alliance of our political parties with the saloon," our rebuke of others who stand more squarely in principle and practice, than we do, produces but an empty sound.

The power to place the vote on election day is ours, and when the Christian church on this continent so pleases, the liquor traffic can be wiped out in one day.

Sincerely,
J. EDWARD FARROW,
Another Methodist Minister.
Wilmington, Vt., Feb. 21, 1898.

Mrs. Barney in Egypt.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The past week our union and the lovers of the W. C. T. U. cause have had a great treat in the visit of Mrs. J. K. Barney. She arrived in Cairo on the evening of January 17th and on the following afternoon she met with our union and a number of other ladies who came to hear her, and gave a helpful talk from a few verses of the twentieth chapter of John's Gospel. She also talked very plainly to us about the duty of wearing the white ribbon and wearing it where it can be seen.

On Wednesday evening she gave a lecture in English in our church and on Friday evening another talk, through an interpreter to a large audience of Arabic speaking people—mostly young men. Both these lectures were well received and especially was there a good deal of enthusiasm shown at the latter meeting. At the close of both these meetings there was an opportunity given for taking the pledge when about one hundred young men—Protestants, Copts and Mohammedans—came forward and signed the pledge.

Two prominent young Mohammedan men who were not present at the meeting came the next day to consult with Mrs. Barney and to get official information concerning the evils of alcohol, to insert in a book they are writing on "The Relation of Drunkenness to the Law."

At the close of the Friday night meeting it was announced that Mr. Ira D. Sankey was in the house and that he would sing for us. He came forward and said that he would sing, "Throw Out the Life Line," but he wanted first to explain the origin of the hymn which of course he turned into a temperance speech and this, as well as the hymn, was translated into Arabic.

Besides these public meetings, Mrs. Barney gave talks to the Bible women, the girls in the boarding school, the three branch schools in the city and visited some of the people in their houses. She also gave a talk to the English-speaking little ones in our Sabbath school. They were much interested in her talk about the "Wordless book" or the little book with its colored blank pages.

She also visited, with one of our missionary ladies, the government prison and the convict prison and had an interview with one of the superintendents and gathered a good deal of information concerning the convicts.

On Monday morning she left Cairo for a visit to the Holy Land. We feel very thankful for the help and encouragement she was able to give us and our prayer is that her visit here may be a blessing to many in this dark land. May the Lord bless her labors wherever she goes.

Yours for Egypt and the cause of temperance the world round, ELIZABETH GIFFEN,
Secretary W. C. T. U.
American Mission, Cairo, Egypt.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

I will not let thee go, except thou bless me. O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt.—Gen. 32:26; Matt. 15:28.

"HOW my heart goes to you in the shadow of our great bereavement, for I know how the burden of the Temple will fall upon you; I was present at the National Convention in Buffalo, and I know it all; I have been moved to admiration many times at the heroic deeds of our great leader, but the stand she took for the Temple surpassed them all; it was the crowning act of her life. How bravely she started out on her great mission. Her faith was something sublime, but the frail body could no longer do the bidding of that great active brain, and so they bore her back to the Temple to make her last appeal, and her mute lips, resting in Willard Hall, have spoken with a matchless eloquence to the heart of white-ribboners, and a nobler and a holier purpose will come into their lives as they read the story. The House Beautiful must be redeemed and stand as a monument to the noble, self-sacrificing life of Frances E. Willard."

The above extract is taken from a letter among hundreds of others of like import which I have received; it was written by Mrs. C. S. Moors, Marlboro, N. H., president of Cheshire county W. C. T. U. (Allow me to add here how grateful I am for the beautiful and comforting letters I have received, but it is impossible for me to reply to them all.) I am sure all white-ribboners will heartily second Mrs. Moors' decision that the Temple must become our beloved leader's monument.

✠

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, state president of New York, in her recent visit to Chicago to attend the last sad rites to our beloved Chieftain, said: "People are saying now that Miss Willard is gone, the W. C. T. U. will lose its force and possibly disintegrate. Nothing will show to the world more conclusively the unity of the organization than uniting to make the Temple a memorial to our late beloved president." I am happy to say Mrs. Burt has returned to New York determined to urge her women to do their utmost to pay for the Temple. Mrs. Annie W. Clark, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U. writes: "Let us assure you of the loyalty of the Ohio union to the Temple which the death of our leader has intensified. I have received many letters since the sad event, all pledging anew never to give up until the Temple is in the hands of the W. C. T. U." Mrs. Rebecca B. Chambers, president of the W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania, also pledges her earnest support. All the large states are now in line to make the Temple a monument to Miss Willard.

✠

The Temple Trustees have contracted with a noted art firm of Chicago to get up a superb life-size picture of Miss Willard, in life tints, to be sold for the benefit of the Temple. It is now being painted by an eminent artist, and will be a perfect reproduction of the painting. It will be sold at a very low figure, so that none will be so poor they cannot purchase it.

✠

Money is again flowing freely Templeward, mostly in small sums; any amount of $2 postal orders are coming in, which shows our women are at work sending out the fifty cent subscription card to their friends. If all our women truly desire to change the name of the Temple to Willard Temple they can quickly accomplish it by getting four friends to fill four of the fifty cent subscription cards that have been sent out. Remember the 400,000 cards already out will bring in $200,000, and we only require $225,000 in cash over and above what we have already subscribed to give us the ownership of the entire $600,000 worth of Temple stock.

All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send a two cent stamp to her either for a subscription card, Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago. Or if you prefer you can send to Miss Cornelia Dow, Portland, Me.

Our Children.

Rhyme and Reason.

IF I drink beer, it makes me queer;
If I choose ale, it makes me pale;
If I sip wine, my joys decline;
If I sup gin, it leads to sin;
If I take rum, sad sorrows come.
Try what I will, from vat or still,
It gives me pain, and turns my brain;
Therefore I'll join the Templar Band,
And, with God's help, I'll firmly stand.

Jimmie's Lesson on Narcotics.

BY B. F. C.

ONE day, just before she was ready to dismiss school, Miss Schofield, that's our teacher, stood up by her desk and looked just as solemn, and said: "Boys, I am very, very sorry to see that there are a number of you who are learning to smoke cigarets." My, how my face began to burn, for I had some in my pockets that minute that I was going to learn on just as soon as I got home. Some that I traded my jack-knife and a marble for, and if I didn't use them it would be just as bad as to throw away my jack-knife and marble.

But Miss Schofield kep' right on all the while I was thinking about it, and she said she thought if we knew more about such things we would never want to smoke or chew or use tobacco in any way; and she said there was other things, too, that maybe would be interesting to learn about. And she said, too, that maybe we would like to form ourselves into a club. I guess she meant a kind of party or sociable; we was to come to her house every Saturday night, and we would have somethin' to talk about instead of playin'.

She wanted to know how many of us knew what narcotics was, and there wasn't anybody but Hugh Bryan, who is always goin' around with a book under his arm; so she asked him to tell us all he knowed on the subject, an' then we would be ready to find out all we could about it.

He got up and said that the dictionary said that narcotics was some kind of a medicine that would make folks not feel when anything hurt 'em (I don't remember just how he said it), But if they took too much it would kill 'em. and he said folks most always mean tobacco and opium when they talk about it, an' he thought 'at tea and coffee was narcotics too. He said quite a lot more, and when he got through Miss Schofield looked at the clock and saw that it was five minutes past four, so she said for us to find out everything we could, and come to her house at seven o'clock Saturday evening, and then we went home.

When I got home I put my cigarets into a box out to the barn. That's where I keep quite a number of my things 'at I don't want pa and ma to know about; and Nellie always finds everything I have if I keep it in my room, and then she'll tell pa and ma. She did about the candy 'at they got so mad about. That was when I sold my geography to Ned Freeman for ten cents, 'cause I set with Harry, an' he said I could study with him in his book. I went and got some candy, and thought what a good time I was going to have; but Nell, she found it under my washstand. I had put it there on purpose 'cause I thought she wouldn't find it 'fore I'd eat it up, but she did, and then, O my! I had to take it. Pa gave Ned ten cents and got the geography back, and he gave me a licking that I ain't forgot yet.

Well, I put the cigarets in a box and hid it under the edge of the haymow, an' then, if Miss Schofield asked if I had smoked any, I could tell her I hadn't.

When we were eating supper, I asked pa if chewing tobacco an' smokin' cigars ever killed anybody, an' he thought the teacher had been findin' fault with him, and he said tobacco hadn't never done him no hurt, and he'd thank folks to mind their own business. But when I told him all about it, he said, "Well, I dunno but that's alright, fur terbaccer ain't so good fur little kids, like you, with delercate constertutions. Now, some folks need terbaccer, and others don't. You don't never need to learn to chew and smoke, fur your constertution ain't like mine."

I tried to find out somethin' to tell about when our club met, but I didn't get hold of nothin'. One night pa says: "I read suthin' fer ye, sonny, in the paper, to-day. There was a man runnin' with a pipe in his mouth, an' he fell down an' the end of his pipe went down in his throat an' killed him. Ain't them narcotics on the sistem?" I didn't think Miss Schofield meant that, so I didn't try to remember it. But I kep' thinkin' 'bout tobacco's bein' so awful poison, an' what an awful pity it was for pa to buy so much, and then be tellin' ma how hard times was every time she asked for ten cents to buy somethin' down to the store. Some way I got so I didn't feel like going to look at my cigarets more'n once a day, an' begun to think that, mebby, I wouldn't smoke 'em at all, but I didn't know.

When Saturday night came, I couldn't hardly wait for it to come half-past six, for ma said I could start then. But it did come, an' when I got as far as Ned Freeman's, I waited for him to finish gettin' ready, for I never was to Miss Schofield's, and I kind of hated to go alone. When we got there, there wasn't more'n two or three there, an' Miss Schofield was just splendid, an' showed us pictures an' some of the curiosities she bought when she was in Mexico.

When they all come, we sang somethin' 'bout never usin' tobacco, an' then the teacher asked who knew when tobacco was first used. Ned said the Injuns used it when Columbus first discovered 'em. An' he said they used to whip folks, in some countries, the first time they smoked, an' the next time they cut off their noses, an' then, if they did it again, they would kill 'em. Ned said that he knew all about it, because his cousin 'it goes to Loyal Legion, told 'im.

When he got through, Miss Schofield asked Grace Day if her uncle told her how tobacco was grown. Grace said a lot I can't remember, but anyway, it's awful hard work to take care of it, an' there is horrid green worms 'at crawls over the leaves.

Then Hugh told about the poison in the tobacco. How if a drop of it was put on a cat's tongue, it would kill it in a second. He told, too, about opium and hasheesh, I think they was the ones, an' what awful dreams folks had if they used them.

After he got through talking, Miss Schofield asked quite a lot of questions, an' said she was real glad we had learned so much. But she said no one had said anything about the effect of narcotics on the mind; that when a person used it, it made slaves of them. She says: "Grace, in telling us how tobacco was grown, told us how much work it made, and that was the reason why so many slaves were brought to this country—to help in such work. But narcotics subject people to a more degrading slavery, even, than that which caused the great War of the Rebellion. They destroy soul and body. Of course, you all remember General Grant's sufferings from the effect of excessive use of tobacco. We can not be too careful in keeping ourselves from such injurious habits, and in keeping our influence working for the right. How many of my pupils are willing to pledge themselves against the use of narcotics?"

All the girls raised their hands and some of the boys. I didn't, for I thought, maybe, when I got as big as pa I'd wish I hadn't.

"Girls, remember tea and coffee are narcotics, and don't make any pledges which you can not keep." Miss Schofield waited a little bit. Some of the girls looked as though they wished they had thought about it before, and I guess it will be pretty hard for 'em to keep their promise, for I heard 'em tell Nell, one day, that they just got up in the morning in time to swallow some bread and coffee and hurry to school, an' I do believe Miss Schofield heard 'em too. But they didn't back out.

Miss Schofield looked so sorry at us boys and I felt so 'shamed to be on the wrong side, for I knew I was wrong, an' I thought I would give anything if I could do it all over again. But she commenced to ask what we would talk about next time. I couldn't wait to listen for I had some work to do. I slipped out of the room just as quick as I could and ran home, to get those cigarets and bury them in the barnyard. So now, I won't ever smoke them. No, I won't ever smoke any at all.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have had numerous inquiries about the "Crutch and Kindness League," that we talked about in our Cozy Corner last December. Several of my boys and girls have expressed a desire to correspond with one of the little crippled children, so I will give you the address again. Write to Mr. John Kirk, Ragged School Union, 37 Norfolk St., Strand, W. C., London, England; give him your age and state whether you wish to correspond with a boy or girl, being careful to add your full address. You can bring new interests into the lives of these little friends and broaden your own sympathies by so doing.

Lovingly yours, AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like very much to join the Cozy Corner. I am ten years old. I have three brothers and one sister. I do not go to school because I am crippled. I was in the Children's Hospital at Louisville last summer for a month, being treated for a broken hip. I belong to the L. T. L. at Wilmore, although it is more than one hundred miles from here. I went to school there last year, and have never had my name taken off. I take music lessons and enjoy it very much. I have read THE UNION SIGNAL for several years, but have had it for my own for a year and a half.

Your niece, CORA GREEN.

English, Ky.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a boy ten years old and would like to join the Cozy Corner. I like to read the Children's page. I have a white rat and a kitten. We have a Band of Mercy and I am president of it. My mamma is state superintendent of mercy and takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and my papa is a prohibitionist.

Sutton, N. H. C. LESLIE HARDY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—My mother belongs to the W. C. T. U. and she takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and I love to read the Children's page. I have a pony and cart, and I take my little sister to school. I have to go two and one-half miles to school. I am ten years old and in the third reader. This is my first letter to the Cozy Corner. Yours truly, Magnolia, Minn. ARTHUR BULLIS.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl fourteen years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I saw the nice little letters in the Cozy Corner and thought I would write one. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. Three of my brothers, one of my sisters and myself belong to the L. T. L. and Humane Society. There are seven churches and no saloons here.

Very sincerely,

Maryville, Tenn. MAMIE PARHAM.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little temperance girl eight years old. I belong to the L. T. L. and the Junior Endeavor Society. My mamma is president of the W. C. T. U. and takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the Children's page very much. My brother belongs to the Y, and my papa is a temperance man too, and we're just working against the saloons.

MILDRED F. EAGER.

Cumberland Gap, Tenn.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

10.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of 8 letters.
My 3, 2, 4, is something a child likes.
My 6, 3, 4 is an insect.
My 5, 1, 8 is a name of a month.
My 7, 6, 4 is a pest.
My whole is a person we all love.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MARCH 17.

9. Puritan.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON. MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Lillian M. N. Stevens.

"AS sweet and wholesome as her own piney woods" was Miss Willard's descriptive phrase of the woman who succeeds her to the responsibility of leadership in the National W. C. T. U. As strong as her granite rock, as steadfast as her ocean waves and as easily moved by humanity's needs as her pine tree tops, she might have added. Rarely have we seen a character in which the traits of sweetness and strength, steadfastness and pliability are so blended as in the subject of this sketch. A less gentle nature could never have won for herself such a place in the hearts of our white-ribbon women, nor could a less steadfast one ever have been chosen as the closest adviser of Frances Willard.

Mrs. Stevens was born in Dover, Me., and her home has always been within the borders of the old Pine Tree state. Like so many of our leaders, her first public work was in the schoolroom as teacher, but she early left that sphere, and at the age of twenty-one married Mr. M. Stevens, of Stroudwater, a charming little suburb of Portland. Her husband is in full accord with her principles and life work, and is one of the most genial of hosts to the multitude of her co-laborers who are entertained in their charmingly hospitable New England home. Her only child, Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, is a young woman of great promise, an ardent white-ribboner and one of the state superintendents in the Maine W. C. T. U. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Olive Hanson, who is also, with her husband, a member of Mrs. Stevens' home, is likewise devoted to the interests of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is a woman who brings things to pass with unfailing certainty. The old home, which has been for more than a century in the Stevens family, resounds constantly to the music of children's voices, for, although Mrs. Stevens is prominently connected with the child-saving institutions of her state, she believes most ardently that an institution can never be a substitute for a home, and while she urges her Maine women to open their doors to God's homeless little ones, she herself sets them a most practical example. Within the last fifteen years nineteen children have at different times had a home with her, two of whom are at present in her household.

Mrs. Stevens first met Miss Willard at Old Orchard, Maine, in the summer of 1875, and there aided in the organization of the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of which she was elected treasurer. She held that position for three years and then passed, by the process of natural selection, to the position of president. To the latter office she has been elected for the twenty-first time, and in all those years but one ballot has ever been cast for another candidate. Under her wise guidance, the Maine W. C. T. U. has come into a position of honor, throughout the entire state. Its membership in proportion to the population is very large, one white-ribboner to every one hundred and sixty-three and a fraction of the population, and in no other state have we seen greater reverence for the organization exhibited among all classes.

For many years Mrs. Stevens has been reckoned as General Neal Dow's chief coadjutor, and in the latter years of his life, especially, he leaned upon her as his trusted friend and adviser. When in Portland, it was her custom to visit him two or three times a week, and since his death she is recognized throughout the entire state as the leader of the prohibition forces. Indeed, in the well-fought battle of 1884, which placed prohibition in the state constitution, Mrs. Stevens won for herself a fame as organizer and agitator hardly second to Neal Dow himself. She visited every county and nearly all the large towns, holding meetings constantly and throwing the whole force of her strong personality into the battle which resulted in such signal victory.

Some of the triumphs of the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union under her leadership have been, the school suffrage law, the raising of the age of protection to sixteen years, a strong scientific temperance instruction law, which is well enforced, and the constitutional amendment to which we have already referred.

In addition to her distinctive temperance work, Mrs. Stevens is well known in the other reform and philanthropic enterprises of the state. She was one of the chief promoters of the Industrial School for Girls, and it was through her efforts largely that a woman superintendent was appointed for this school. She was Maine's choice for the Board of Lady Managers in the World's Columbian Exposition, and served in that Board on most important committees. She was for six years treasurer of the National Council of Women, and has filled many other positions of responsibility and honor. But the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is her first and chief love, and to its interests she has devoted herself with lavish generosity for twenty-four years.

In her own state she has the profound respect of all its citizens. This was especially manifested when a year ago an effort was made to pay for the state W. C. T. U. headquarters. Men gave liberally who had no especial interest in the work or the principles of the white ribbon, but who declared themselves as glad to have such an opportunity to show their appreciation of Mrs. Stevens as a philanthropist and a woman. Her work for the Armenians has already been recorded in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. Those who were sent to Maine found in her not only a benefactor but a warm personal friend, and she is held in almost adoration by those who know her work for this long suffering people. Last summer Mrs. Stevens visited the B. W. T. A. Council as the special guest of Miss Agnes Slack. She was shown great honor during her stay, not by Lady Henry Somerset alone, who counts her a valued and trusted friend, but by all who came in contact with her. She was an especial guest with Miss Slack at the Lord Mayor's on the Queen's birthday, and a reception was tendered her by the National Temperance Alliance at which she told the story of prohibition in Maine.

Her present work for the Maine W. C. T. U. is for the enforcement of the prohibitory law, and for the purifying of the state judiciary. The courage of Mrs. Stevens was never more clearly apparent than in this latter work, for she has not hesitated to strike a blow at one long held in official esteem, assured that it is in the interest of purity and morality.

Mrs. Stevens is a woman of radical principles, but conservative in action when conservatism may be trusted to accomplish more than radicalism. She has always stood side by side with Miss Willard in her most advanced steps from the days of the suffrage agitation until now, and yet so wise and tactful is she in the presentation of advanced thought that she antagonizes very few. She is a woman of strong affections, a devoted friend and a wise counsellor. No surer indices can be given of her character than the fact that animals always love her, as she loves them, and that people in all stations of life turn to her involuntarily for advice. Perhaps she holds more secrets of a personal nature than any other one woman in her state, but a secret in her hands is absolutely safe, and her counsel is as wise as it is kindly.

The deep springs of her nature all set toward God and righteousness. She is a woman of profound religious convictions and deep spirituality. Perhaps she may say less on these subjects than some do, but those who know her life best know how truly Christ is her Master and Lord, and how every day and hour of her life are given to humanity for His service and "In His Name."

Extracts From Tributes to Miss Willard.

EACH of these three speakers had his own angle of vision. It is interesting to have the pedagogical element emphasized as well as the mother and the political spirit. After all, as we see it, these three are closely connected and a perception of their relations is what is needed to convert the world to the white-ribbon estimate of true womanhood.

We are equally impressed by Miss Willard's wisdom when in her chosen work she saw that the task was not primarily to save an army of drunkards, but to give a wider and deeper significance to the lives of the women of the country. When we turn to her early life as a teacher, we are impressed by the weight of the question, "What would she have shown us had she remained in that field?" So many of our "new" ideas were so clear in her mind thirty years ago, that her life as told in "Glimpses of Fifty Years" deserves to be ranked with pedagogical classics. The chapter found there upon "Self-Government" affords me the opportunity of speaking of her life this afternoon.—From an Address by Frank A. Manny, Supervising Principal Indianapolis schools, before the Indianapolis branch of the Collegiate alumnæ.

When our daughter, Tama, died a few years ago, Miss Willard wrote Mrs. Bain saying, "Dear sister Anna, how much richer are you than I. Here I sit alone without a child to die while you are mother to an angel."

She wrote "Nineteen Beautiful Years." She lived fifty-nine beautiful years, and her life is one of the sweetest lessons ever written in the book of humanity. Never was there a greater tribute of tears to any woman, and on her grave will fall, through the years to come, as sweet flowers of gratitude as ever fell on mortal tomb.—From Address at Memorial Services at Lexington, Ky., February 27.

Miss Willard saw, as no one else had seen, that "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female." Paul had declared it from a mountain top of inspiration where he stood for an hour of clear vision, but the age in which he lived lowered, by its fixed customs, his everyday, practical counsels. Miss Willard saw it with a sunlit vision which gave such certitude that she did not fear to proclaim the truth anywhere, everywhere. No opposition brought doubt, hesitation or irritating combat; she held and proclaimed it in the calm light of a boundless faith. Yet, marvelous to relate, when the church of her ancestry, of her earliest devotion and womanly love, refused her what she knew Christ Jesus had given, she, with a splendid charity, neither left its communion nor abated her love for its better aims. On the altars of that church she had, more than any other one person, kindled the fires which are to consume the liquor traffic. Through her, more than through any other one voice, the highest tribunal of the church had drawn the line of cleavage between the uses of liquor as a beverage and things not expedient—a deep line which placed liquors and their uses clearly and forever on the side of sin.

Taking her place at the forefront of the battle, side by side with women who knelt and prayed on the floors of saloons, she held out her right hand of cheer to the men who were seeking legal prohibition until many hopeful hearts thought they saw the day dawn of the rescue of homes and native land from the foul curse. She lived to see the political party which owed to her so much, on grounds of expediency take out of their platform the plank on which with faultless prevision she saw their success depended; a plank dearer to her heart than life itself. Yet so matchlessly great was her soul that she uttered no word of reproach nor drew back one inch the right hand of comradeship. She saw the leaders in the church hedging and the masses praying one way and voting another, but to those who would desert the church, she said, No. Where does history give us another eye so gifted with visions of the truth united to a soul so brave and yet so transcendently magnanimous? —From an Address delivered at the Nashville, Tenn., Memorial Services, by Rev. D. C. Kelley, LL.D.

Notable Services.

CATHOLIC, Protestant, Unitarian, Universalist, Church of England, Wesleyan, Jew, Gentile—all creeds and faiths have united to pay tribute to our departed Leader. It is satisfying and encouraging to note how accurate an analysis of her character, and correct an estimate of her work these men are able to make, and how thoroughly well, at least a part of the world, understood the aim of her life and the methods by which she proposed to reach the goal.

Father Keane, a Catholic priest of Minneapolis, Minn., and many others of that church, have held services in her honor and have spoken burning words of her worth. Among other things Father Keane said:

It was the impulses of her moral nature, her passion for moral beauty, that is for virtue, her embracing love of human kind, her tireless zeal, her unique persistence in teaching, inculcating and forwarding temperance, purity and goodness in every line, that best showed how highly Heaven had answered her, and how rightly and how immeasurably she claims the respect and the gratitude of us all. Her mind and heart had no rest day or night from planning, prompting and encouraging incentives, ways and means for getting everybody to be good. She lived a life not only without offence that any one could charge, but radiant with signs of Christian graces. And not only did she live a Christian life, but she taught it. She instructed multitudes, multitudes, multitudes and generations in the most essential doctrines of faith.

The Methodist Times, London, of February 24, reported that at St. James Hall the Saturday evening previous, a great audience crammed the building, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes (perhaps the foremost man in the Wesleyan church) spoke of our departed leader as a decided and pronounced Methodist, and as occupying among women in America the unique position which Mr. Gladstone occupies among men in England, and that whether they agreed with her opinions or not, they unanimously realized that she stood head and shoulders above every one else. Rev. Hughes attributed this to her exceptional ability and to her very strong and attractive personality. He spoke of her interest in the temperance reform and in everything that promoted the well-being of her sex and her race, and of the impression she had made in England and of her hearty welcome there. "I should like," he said, "as far as in me lies, to convey to the millions of our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic an expression of deep condolence at their immense loss, which is also ours." At the close of his remarks the vast audience arose and stood in silent sympathy while the band played the "Dead March," which was announced as "our united tribute to the great and Christian memory of Frances Willard."

A deeply impressive service was held in St. John's Church, Westminster, February 23, addressed by Canon Wilberforce. The Methodist Times says of this meeting:

Long before five o'clock, the time arranged for the commencement of the service, large numbers had gathered about the doors of the church, which was quickly filled. Among those present were Lady Henry Somerset, who appeared to be deeply affected; Mrs. S. E. Willard, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, Mrs. H. Price Hughes, many of the West London Sisters, Mr. Rae, of the National Temperance League, Mr. Charles Wakeley, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, and representatives of the British Women's Temperance Association, the Total Abstinence Union, the Church of England Temperance Society and many other temperance societies.

Canon Wilberforce said there should be nothing like despondency in the services, but rather the thought of immortality and a clear and definite consecration to the work for which she gave herself. After a review of her life, he offered a touching and beautiful prayer that they all might be kept strong to do the work which Miss Willard had left.

A memorial service was also held at Wesley's Chapel on Sunday night. The Dead March was played, and Rev. J. T. Wardle Stafford, of Birmingham, spoke at length on Miss Willard's life and labors. He said her philanthropy was the child of her Christianity.

She was a sincere and earnest Christian, a woman whose sympathies were transfigured by a glowing and passionate love for the Saviour. It was because she was a Christian that she became a temperance reformer; it was because she was a Christian that she saw the temperance movement in its true light. A destructive policy is only half a policy, and Miss Willard's was not merely destructive, it was constructive. Her "do-everything policy" was a great scheme of philanthropy of which temperance was but a branch. Her name will stand for many generations as a symbol for all that is pure and chivalrous and Christlike, and all nations will unite to bless her memory.

How much the words of these ministers emphasize what has always been claimed by our organization, that our work was not only founded in prayer but that it must abide in prayer if it succeeds; that its power is of God and must be Christlike, that at last the good may triumph.

Letters Received by Miss Slack.

Miss Willard set a very noble example of self-denying labor on behalf of a great cause, and she showed how grand a work may be achieved by every singlehearted toiler inspired by the love of God and man.

Yours faithfully,
(DEAN) F. W. FARRAR.

Miss Willard's sudden death is a great shock, and it must be a grief to everyone who cares for the progress of good in the world.

We shall feel it here almost as much as will our American friends, for of late years we had been familiarized with her splendid work, and were able, to some extent, to appreciate it.

The losses by death of our best friends within a very limited period have of late been little less than appalling.

It seems strange that they should have been called away, just when the common enemy, against which they fought so nobly, is apparently stronger than ever. Nevertheless their labors and those of their colleagues have laid a sure and certain foundation for ultimate triumph, and, whether the remaining conflict be long or short, the remembrance of what they have been and done, will be an abiding comfort and encouragement.

With sincere sympathy to all those who loved and honored Miss Willard for her work, and for her own sake, I am yours very truly,
(SIR) WILFRID LAWSON.

I feel that all I can say is Fiat voluntas Tua—our Father never makes a mistake. She is wanted in another sphere, and we must simply "Bless Him for all His servants departed this life, in His faith and fear."

I am sincerely yours,
(CANON) BASIL WILBERFORCE.

Letters were also received by Miss Slack from the president of the British Wesleyan Methodist conference, the Wesleyan Conference Temperance Committee, the National B. W. T. A., the Sisters of West London Mission, the Manchester Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Hochelaga Co. (Quebec) W. C. T. U., and an enormous number of letters from individuals in England, the U. S. A. and Canada.

A SHORT time before her illness Miss Willard desired us to say that in her recommendation in her annual address to the labor and capital department, to obtain from Germany the learned pamphlets of scientific men, she had no thought of undervaluing the excellent literature published by Mrs. Grubb for the W. C. T. U. department of work among foreigners. These tracts are, many of them, written by Germans for Germans, and are admirably suited for the needs of temperance work in this country. Professor Stern's "Why Germans should be Prohibitionists," Pastor Ewald's "Duties of Citizenship," Pastor Lauritzen's "What is Prohibition?" written specially for this department, can not be too highly commended. Indeed, in the department of labor and capital what could be better than "Intemperance an Enemy to Labor," by the Catholic priest, Rev. T. J. Conaly? This leaflet Mrs. Grubb has had translated into German, as well as that entitled, "Relation of Intemperance to Labor."

ONE of the evidences of love and honor in which Miss Willard was held was the long distances her friends came at great expense to attend her funeral. While many traveled farther, perhaps, no tribute was more marked than that given by Hon. Samuel D. Hastings, of Green Bay, Wis. He is over eighty years of age and came two hundred miles to show his respect as an old-time friend of the Willard family for fifty years, as well as to represent the International Supreme Lodge of Good Templars. Since the death of Neal Dow, Mr. Hastings probably ranks as the one having served the longest term of devotion to the prohibition cause. He was the only member of the executive committee of National Prohibition party who was present.

MISS SLACK cabled round the world, asking March 20 to be observed as Willard Memorial Day. She has had the latest picture of Miss Willard included in the cover containing her address at the World's Convention, which increases the price to fourteen cents, post free. In her letter Miss Slack says of this address, "I think it the most perfect speech she ever gave." March 20 Miss Slack will give an address on Miss Willard's life, in Victoria Hall, London.

Young Woman's Branch.

Y's at Work.

MASSACHUSETTS.

THIS is Massachusetts' first report for 1898. We are looking the year steadily and courageously in the face, realizing that there is great work to be done here, but strong in the strength which God gives, to do it. Why should we fear when God has so wondrously blessed us and so marvelously answered our prayers? We feel that our beloved general secretary has been brought back to us from the very gate of heaven in answer to our earnest petitions, and we do so rejoice and have such confidence that because God has let her again lead us, we are to know one of the best years in our history.

Our state work, the Willard Y settlement, although only established in November, is in a flourishing condition. All of the furnishings have been pledged, all the apartments are filled with bright, happy girls, the social classes have been started with excellent teachers and a good attendance, considering the short time they have been organized; L. T. L's have been formed, mothers' meetings instituted, and three receptions given to the young women of the neighborhood. The rent, one hundred dollars per month, has come in so far, and we have faith to believe will continue to do so, for God Himself called this work into being, and He will give us the means with which to carry it on. Thus early we are beginning to see what a great need of young women it meets, and what a help it will be to them. Also, there has been many an opportunity, which would have come in no other way, when speaking of the Settlement work to say a few words for the Y, and thus add members to our ranks.

Not what we hope to do next year, but what has been accomplished we'll recount for the encouragement of others. From Pittsfield, the extreme western part of the state, comes the word: "Our Y has never been in such a flourishing condition." This Y has found parlor meetings once a month to be a good way of bringing in new members and keeping up the interest. Their next one will be "A Due Tea." Write to Mrs. C. M. Bryant, 35 Forest Place, Pittsfield, if you want to know how to get one up yourself.

Two unions have recently come into the state, composed of very young members, but they are exceedingly earnest and wide-awake, promising to develop into Y's of whom we shall be proud. One of them is made up largely of L. T. L. graduates.

Birthday parties have been very popular among our Y's this winter as a way of increasing funds. The invitations, with little bags attached, sent by the Lynn Y, bore some original verses in regard to their ice water fountains, which very practical and blessed work they carry on every summer and for which the funds were being raised. The following is one of the verses usually written on the invitations:

"We ask a small favor, pray don't think us bold:
Drop therein a penny for every year old.
If the years of your age you care not to tell,
A dollar, or more, will answer as well.
If another engagement should keep you away,
The bag, with your pennies, our grief will allay."

We are greatly pleased over the large White Shield Society just organized under the auspices of the Springfield Y. They have an enthusiastic and much loved leader, and will take up the study of physiology and the course of reading laid down in "The New Crusade." Already the girls are beginning to see what it is going to do for them. White Shield Clubs have also been formed in New Bedford and Attleboro. The latter union last year maintained their reading-room for girls, in connection with their hall and side rooms, at an expense of $770.30; $212 of this was raised by subscriptions, and the rest was earned by entertainments and sales of homemade food; 4,806 young women made use of their reading-room during the year. They distributed 900 bouquets of flowers, and did much other good work.

"A Belated Picnic" has proved to be a form of entertainment and social among some of our unions, very attractive and amusing and a good way to draw in members. We will send a full description to any one desiring. The last report of the Brocton Y is very encouraging. They meet every week, the first meeting each month being a prayer and praise meeting. They carry on many lines of practical work. At their meetings and socials, which are very interesting, they often have original papers and poems. They describe a "Longfellow Guessing Bee," which some other union may like to try: "Each one was provided with a dainty card, and extracts were read from twelve of Longfellow's poems, and as they were read, each one was supposed to write upon the card the names of the poems. The one guessing the greatest number correctly was allowed to select as a reward her favorite poem, which was read entire by one of the members."

The plan of the "Broken Tens" has been suggested to all the unions as a good scheme for increasing the membership. It is brought about in this way: Appoint a committee to divide the entire membership into groups of four or five or six, to be called "Broken Tens." The chairman of each shall call her ten together and each ten shall try to be the first to make its number complete. It is also the duty of the members of a ten to call on those of their number who are absent from the meetings, and thus help to keep up the attendance.

Two outline programs for each month have also been sent the unions. The State Minutes; Pasting Bee (Railroad Work); Experience Meeting; George Washington Party, a reception to new members; Memorial Meeting for Miss Willard, and a Temperance Talking Party, in celebration of Gen. Neal Dow's birthday, have so far been used and White Shield Work; the Willard Y Settlement; Flower Mission (May Party); THE UNION SIGNAL and Our Message; a debate, "Resolved, That the Y. W. C. T. U. is a Disturber of the Peace," with a Department Drill, and Narcotics, also considering a White-Ribbon "Bike" Club, will be suggested for the next three months.

Since the death of our beloved leader, Miss Willard, the Boston Y has been impressed with the solemn duty which is now ours, to take up our sainted one's work where she left it and try to raise the money for the Temple. At their last meeting they voted to raise one hundred dollars for the Temple and fifty-four dollars was pledged at that meeting. We hope and expect that the other unions will also realize their great privilege and opportunity.

MARGARET TYLER,
Ass't Y Sec.

LOUISIANA.

THE Y's of Crowley recently gave their first social at the residence of W. W. Duson. This union was organized last year by Mrs. Tomlinson, and encouraged by the district president, Mrs. Pharr, they have gone to work. The program was pleasing and instructive, and consisted of music, vocal and instrumental, and an address by the Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker. An interesting feature was the flower contest, in which all took part, and Miss May Knickerbocker was the successful contestant. Light refreshments were served, and the treasury materially benefited by the mite-box collection. The temperance pledge was circulated, and twenty-five signatures obtained.

The Y's at Baldwin gave a successful entertainment, and they feel much encouraged by the fund received. The program was excellent, and well received. Refreshments and a social hour followed. The young ladies overcame numerous obstacles in preparing this entertainment, and they merit much commendation for its success.

(MRS.) L. G. BALDWIN,
State Reporter.

Baldwin, La.

World's W. C. T. U.

Tasmanian Notes.

OUR little colony has begun the new year in the throes of trouble, through large bush fires which have devastated homes, robbed smiling gardens of their beauty, and left many families penniless. In the south and west several small townships have been almost demolished, and beautiful orchards, the sole revenue of the owners, have been completely destroyed. Precious lives have been lost and others have received lifelong injuries. The tales of suffering and distress are indeed pitiful. One bright spot in this dark cloud has been the bravery, the unselfishness of neighbor to neighbor, of citizen to citizen, that has been evidenced. It is good to witness the brotherhood of man coming to the fore at such times, and we can not but long that it should be the common attitude of man to man, and that for each other's good there was the constant readiness to sacrifice self.

At the annual distribution of prizes in connection with the state schools, Mrs. Blair, our Colonial president, had the pleasure of awarding those donated by the local union to pupils who gave the most correct answers to questions on temperance subjects. Mrs. Blair was gratified to find that most of the scholars displayed an intelligent comprehension of this portion of their studies. This proves that the enforcement of scientific temperance instruction in our schools is already bearing the fruit of knowledge, which will in turn yield abstinence from that which is harmful and degrading.

A successful L. T. L. entertainment, at which Mrs. Blair presided, has been held at Richmond. The chief item of interest was a recitation contest, the piece chosen being parts of a speech by Sir B. W. Richardson. Action songs were well rendered by the Legioners, and the whole proceedings manifested careful training and patient labors. The year's report was most satisfactory and encouraging.

Last December a successful open air temperance meeting was held in Hobart. Previous to its beginning a Salvation Army band paraded the streets with the object of arousing interest. The result was favorable, as the attendance was good, and few of the audience left until the meeting was over. The speakers were Messrs. Lodge and Kirke. The former is a veteran worker in the temperance cause, and has for the last twenty-nine years gratuitously edited The People's Friend, the only temperance paper published in the Colony.

(MRS.) JESSIE S. ROOKE,
Colonial Correspondent.

Ingleside, Burnie, Emu Bay, Tasmania.

News from the Field.

Missouri.

FROM reports Altamont is one of the very best unions in the state. They held three contests inside of three weeks, the last one being a class of married folks. There were six women and three men in the class, one of the men being seventy-six years of age. As this contest was held on Washington's birthday souvenir hatchets were presented, over 200 being marked by their leader, Mrs. Edith Clark, who is doing all she can to make the temperance cause a success. Professor Housel is of great help to this union. R. Foster Stone and J. C. Folsom have been holding good meetings in Gallatin, Jameson, Kirksville and LaBelle.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls has been in Arkansas for her health, but she does not forget her home folks as her letters to the Counselor show. She states that the anti-cigaret bill in Congress has received more petitions than any other measure, and Missouri has sent in a greater number of petitions than any other state.

The seventh district has been doing some good work, and the unions have lately received much benefit from the visits of their president, Mrs. Nellie G. Robbins. Eighth district is trying to double their membership this year. Thirteenth district expects to be banner in Sunday-school work. Walker union observed Crusade Day by having Rev. Lindsey, of Eldorado Spring, address the young people. Their L. T. L. sent five dollars towards the Temple. Tenth district is alive and doing grand work in Sabbath-school observance, gospel meetings and press work.

The twenty-first district is much encouraged; the unions at Warsaw, Lincoln, Fairfield and Clinton doing splendid work, and the others in the district marching in the procession to victory.

Poplar Bluff is very proud of its L. T. L. of over seventy-five members. The union is making great preparations for the next state convention this fall.

Bands of Mercy are being organized all over the state, and the children are very much interested.

The state superintendents of all departments seem to be alive to the work, and doing their best to get workers in the local unions appointed.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

Twenty-third district has been wonderfully revived by the visits of Mrs. Nelle Burger. She organized a union at Miller with forty-two members.

Miss Lillian Wood visited the McFall, Lock Spring and Jameson unions last week with the view of organizing L. T. L's.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter will be in the fourth district for six weeks, commencing April 12.

It is thought that the Martinsville union will carry off the honors in mothers' meetings this year. Their superintendent, Mrs. Saunders, is indeed a worker. Their press superintendent is very faithful. She is Mrs. Anna McMahon, and while they have no papers in their town, she sends each week notices of their meetings to the county seat papers.

The Coffey union is holding the fort amidst difficulties, under the careful management of Mesdames Gerta Sutton and Daisy Crossan.

The New Hope union is one of the most hopeful unions in the state, although the members all live in the country, and the president, Mrs. E. R. Riffey, receives her mail at Amity; the secretary, Mrs. Carrie Anderson, at Orchid, and the treasurer, Mrs. Anna Grimes, at Oak.

Miss Sallie Scaff, of Darlington union, is very much interested in the work, even offering to pay hotel bills out of her salary if a speaker could be sent there.

Maysville union gave a nice parlor social on the 18th of February which increased the great interest in temperance work of that city.

An executive committee of the state W. C. T. U. will hold their midyear session at Springfield the third week in April. The state superintendents are also invited to attend.

Austin W. C. T. U. held a children's contest, January 28. The Warrensburg and Bethany unions are sending THE UNION SIGNAL to the pastors of their cities. Bethany union think they have the best local superintendent on scientific temperance instruction, and also narcotics, in Mrs. Hale, who is assistant principal in the high school, and sees that the work is done; also they are glad to have the valuable assistance of the Gospel Call, a paper published by Rev. Alderman, in the interest of the Christian church, in educating the people against tobacco. We know it would do the heart of Mrs. Ingalls good if she could read how he scores the men who use the weed.

Jameson and Bethany held memorial services for Miss Willard, February 28. Before the call of the National officers was announced, the president of the fourth district, Mrs. Lura Hyden Boleyn, had sent a call to the various unions that they observe Sunday, March 6, which some have done, while others postponed their services until the 20th. Impressive memorial services were held at Kirkwood on February 24, the day and hour of Miss Willard's funeral.

We do not want to say too much about Bethany, but must tell that of the four delegates from Missouri at the National E. S. A. convention at Washington, three were from Bethany.

ALICE BLACKBURN,
State Reporter, Bethany.

The Great Test
Of a pure soap is—will it shrink wool? If so, there's something injurious in it. For toilet—for bath—for washing dainty articles, use a soap so pure that it won't shrink wool. That's

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD
WOOL SOAP
IT SWIMS.

Minnesota.

ONLY a few short hours before Miss Willard's translation, Minnesota's president emeritus, Mrs. Harriet A. Hobart, passed from earth to heaven. Although for the past few years Mrs. Hobart had been laid aside from active work in the state, yet the impress of her long years of labor remains, and hundreds of hearts mourned her loss. The state officers and others of the W. C. T. U. were present at her funeral, held in the M. E. church of Red Wing, of which Mrs. Hobart had been a devoted member for over twenty-five years. Mrs. Scovell, state president, and Mrs. Frances Neal, both spoke tenderly and feelingly of Mrs. Hobart's life and influence. A spray of smilax tied with the bow of white ribbon was dropped on the casket by members of the union as they passed it in taking a farewell look at the dear face, and then they took their places on each side of the aisle where they waited until the body was borne from the church. The aged husband remains yet a little while, cheered by the precious consolations of the Christian, and the prospect of reunion in the future.

Then swiftly followed the news of our Chieftain's going, and we were almost dazed. Many refused to believe first reports, and when these were confirmed, from everywhere came the cry, "What are we to do? How can we go on?" followed in many cases by the afterthought, "We must do a little more, now; work a little harder. So shall we show our loyalty to her, and the cause she loved." Memorial meetings are being held everywhere, and the sweet influence of that matchless life is being told over and over to listening audiences, many of them composed of people who loved and revered her, yet who will seldom attend a temperance gathering of any kind.

Minnesota Prohibitionists have also been called upon to part with Rev. James Pinkham, whose death occurred recently, and who was one of the ablest advocates of our righteous cause, well known throughout the state and beyond its borders by his able and forceful lectures. We are almost led to exclaim, "Are we unworthy of our leaders, that so many are called hence? or what is the lesson God would teach us?" Perhaps it is this; that we should lay fewer and lighter burdens upon the hearts and nerves of those who are so willing to forget self in the work.

Winona West End union recently held a very interesting parlor meeting in the home of the president, Mrs. J. C. Kiern, carrying out the program suggested by Mrs. Nettie B. Fernald, of West New Brighton, N. Y., the subject being "Foods." Three new members were secured. An evening entertainment to raise money for the Temple netted ten dollars. A temperance program supplemented the social hour.

Rushford union, since last heard from, has held a mothers' meeting, four parlor meetings, and seven lectures, at all of which free-will offerings were taken. A "green tea" social was also a fine success. They have paid five dollars each to the Temple and National Hospital, two dollars for state work; $10.48, to Hope Mission, Chicago, besides nearly ten for other branches of our work. At the memorial meeting for Miss Willard, Mrs. Bruun, of Chicago, gave a sketch of Miss Willard's life, and Rev. A. Wright gave the memorial address in the Norwegian language, a fine and appreciative effort. At the close Mrs. Bruun spoke of Miss Willard's love for the Temple and her wishes concerning it, and a collection of five dollars was given to help fulfill those wishes. After the close of the meeting another five dollars was handed in, and the next day fifteen dollars more, making twenty-five in all.

Cherry Grove people listened to a temperance lecture from Mr. Geo. E. Gates a little time ago. Mr. Gates was eighty-one years old the day of the lecture, a fine specimen of well-preserved manhood, and his lecture was highly spoken of by the local press.

Edgerton union is actively alive. All its officers are women who are ready to work, to give and to sacrifice. The red-letter days are all observed, also temperance Sabbaths, and gospel temperance meetings are held once each month. The ministers, schoolteachers, editors and business men are all called upon and expected to help with addresses and the young folks and children also given a part.

Preston union gave a reception to the ministers and their wives in the Masonic Hall, which they had decorated for the occasion, and a large attendance rewarded their efforts. They have also had a lecture by Rev. R. H. Buttey, delivered before a large audience and much appreciated. At one of the recent regular meetings of the union, the question, "What has the W. C. T. U. done for me?" brought out many interesting answers. Gospel meetings are occasionally held in the jail; the flower mission has done good work among the sick; they are raising money to pay the amounts asked by the National Temperance Hospital and National treasurer, and preparing for a medal contest, and they feel that temperance sentiment in their town is advancing.

Montevideo union had Miss Brehm with them during her recent visit to our state, and it is very evident she made loyal friends there as well as aiding very materially in the work. She gave two evening addresses upon woman suffrage and Christian citizenship, besides holding a parlor meeting. As one result a year's program for mothers' meetings has been arranged, including many topics of vital importance to the home. The union held a Temple fund social some time ago, but owing to a storm the attendance was small. Still a little was raised, and more added later and sent to do its share in aiding to lift the burden. The local press is open to the union, which uses it freely, and feels that it in turn is helping them.

Elgin union, organized a year ago with five members, has now sixteen, and two honoraries. They have a column in the local paper each week, keep a paper rack in depot and get new papers in regularly; have several subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and White-Ribboner, and have an L. T. L. of about twenty-five members. They have responded to calls from National Treasurer and National Hospital, and are planning a number of good things for the future.

Willmar union had Miss Brehm with them, and they "cannot speak too highly of her." The lectures she gave were characterized as strong and forceful, yet so sweetly and charitably given that she won many friends. This union has done a noble work in caring for a crippled child whose home was only such in name; and have also found a good home for an infant which was almost dead from neglect.

Atwater union has lost some members, but keeps up its work, meeting monthly, and holding mothers' meetings. They sent for copies of the law forbidding minors to enter saloons and are also trying to have the anti-cigaret law enforced; are also making efforts to provide entertainment for the boys and young men that shall keep them from harmful places. They keep a rack in depot supplied with papers, and have induced several men to take the Keeley cure.

Litchfield union had Miss Elizabeth Preston, of North Dakota, with them in January. She gave a lecture in the evening and held an informal methods meeting in the afternoon. The union of Litchfield began early to plan ways and means to secure no-license. A meeting was appointed to consider the subject, and the program committee desired to have an evening session and invite the temperance men to

It Takes Longer....
TO REACH THE BOTTOM OF A BARREL OF
FRANKLIN MILLS FLOUR,
A Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat,
because it nourishes as it goes, and being rich in brain, bone, nerve and muscle making substances of the entire wheat, less of it is required. It is a little off white—that's where the richness lies, in its tint.

If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.
MARRIED TO GLUTEN
See that the Flour delivered bears our label; avoid substitutes.
Send for Booklet.
The genuine made only by the
Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c.
All Druggists.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

come and give the women the benefit of their experience. How the plan succeeded has not yet been told. But it certainly is a step in the right direction. Men and women united will save humanity far sooner than either sex alone.

The W and Y unions of Wood Lake held a harvest home festival last fall, consisting of a New England supper and an auction sale of vegetables and other commodities. Temperance Sabbath was observed by a concert given by the Epworth League. A parlor meeting has been held to which written invitations were sent out and a very good attendance secured. The Y's entertained the honorary members one evening last month. A short program was given, the honoraries taking a part in it, after which refreshments were served. Miss Brehm gave them one lecture while here. Granite Falls union also had Miss Brehm with them and evidently enjoyed her visit very much. The ministers of Granite Falls gave a number of temperance lectures before town election, and the eve before election the W. C. T. U. held a mass-meeting in the opera house which was filled. Yet the no-license people lacked seventeen votes of winning, but felt they had gained ground.

Mrs. Alice Bordwell, an active member of the Woman's Relief Corps, as well as a W. C. T. U. woman, conducted an entertainment at the state Soldiers' Home, at Minnehaha, not long since. Considerable temperance sentiment was included in the fine program rendered. The old soldiers expressed themselves as heartily pleased with the attention shown them, and many a hearty "come again" was heard. Mrs. Bordwell believes the W. C. T. U. could accomplish much among the veterans there by systematic attention.

Lucy Hayes union, of this city, held a medal contest March 4. Besides the seven contestants' speeches, there was singing by a band of children, one a marching song, with drums and banners and flags; also a recitation by little Miss Audrey Gerry, who won the gold medal at the state convention of 1896, a solo by Miss Gertrude Sprague and another by Mrs. G. E. Dennis. The medal was won by Miss Irons.

(MRS.) AMY B. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.
2208 Oakland Ave.

Louisiana.

AN interesting entertainment was recently given in the Opera House, under the auspices of the Jeanerette union, consisting of music, recitations and a white-ribbon drill. Rev. Henry, of the Methodist church South, delivered an eloquent temperance address.

The first district, Mrs. A. M. Zable, of New Orleans, president, convened in the Methodist church at Baton Rouge. Mrs. M. R. Goodale, state president, led in the opening devotional exercises. Mrs. E. M. Haughton, National evangelist, was present and conducted the noontide hour of prayer and gave a Gospel temperance address at the evening meeting.

Addresses of welcome were given by Rev. Compton and Mrs. Octavia Rickey. Mrs. M. H. Crouch, of New Orleans, delivered the responsive address. Rev. Allison and Rev. Rickey assisted in the devotional exercises and the church choir sang on welcome night. An attractive feature of benefit night was the stereopticon views given by Professor Dodson. Miss Clara Baer, of Sophia Newcomb College, gave several of her inimitable recitations which always charm her audiences. There were four contestants in the silver gray contest and Mrs. Zable won the medal. Professor Clarke gave several instrumental selections and Miss Dreuker a fine solo.

Of this really superior program, the newspaper item says: "There was a small but appreciative audience," which, rightly interpreted, means financial embarrassment for those who bear the burden in the first district.

However, the union, which had been practically dead for several years, was reorganized and revived, and an L. T. L., with thirty-two members, was started, and let us hope a new era in the temperance reform has been inaugurated in the capital city of Louisiana.

The Central union in New Orleans held memorial service in honor of Frances E. Willard on the 27th. Ministers from all the different denominations in the city were invited to speak. Mrs. Goodale, Mrs. Merrick, honorary state president, Mrs. Lyon and Mrs. Wheaton, prison missionary from Chicago, paid loving tribute to the memory of Miss Willard, and the songs she loved were sung. The Baldwin union used the memorial service arranged by Mrs. Henry, National evangelist, and held an appropriate and sweet service on Sunday afternoon in loving memory of Miss Willard.

There is no minister at present in this country place, and the members of the union conducted the service alone.

Mrs. Haughton is now making a tour through Southwest Louisiana, visiting all the unions in the second district.

(MRS.) LURY GOULD BALDWIN,
State Reporter, Baldwin.

Obituary.

Entered into rest, December 21, 1897, at her home in Mountain Lake Park, Md., MRS. ELIZA A. SMITH, beloved mother of Miss Jennie Smith, National Evangelist of the W. C. T. U.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Headquarters has been a more than usually busy hive of activity during the past week. We are striving to take up the dropped threads of her work, despite our aching hearts. A circular letter has been sent to every local union in the country, asking that the collection taken on Memorial Sunday, if there be one, be sent to Miss Dow, Portland, Me., that it may be applied to the fund in her hands for retiring the Temple Trust Bonds. Two official letters have also been sent to all the members of the executive board, and one to each state corresponding secretary and to the National superintendents. This has, of necessity, meant much additional work, but it is thus that we can best show our love for her who has left us for a season, and it is through work, organized, energetic, consecrated on the part of each member of the white-ribbon host that our great principles must be pushed forward to ultimate victory. I earnestly hope that each individual white-ribboner may take to herself the words of John G. Woolley, as given in the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL. The glorious life that has left us for a season has ascended indeed that it may descend in blessings, and it is for us to say what shall be the measure and what the extent of that blessing.

I am earnestly hoping, also, that Memorial Day, and indeed all the public meetings in the future, may be utilized for the securing of new members. I have heard from so many places that the hearts of people are touched and that a desire to join seems to spring up spontaneously at the story of Miss Willard's life and death. I spoke last Sunday at a little church on the West Side of Chicago, and several women came to me at the close and expressed a desire to cast in their lot with us; hearts are tender now, and the time is truly ripe for an extension of our work, both in membership and in scope. Do not let the precious moments slip by without utilizing them to the full for God and humanity.

From Indiana there comes a most encouraging report of a state institute held in connection with the midyear executive committee meeting. I cull extracts from the report sent me: "The executive was called to order at 1 P. M., March 8; over forty county presidents answered to the roll-call by telling of the number of new unions, the number of new members, and the most important work of the several counties. The reports created great enthusiasm and interest. Benson county reported one hundred and eight members secured by twelve days' work of state corresponding secretary. One small union decided to make a living memorial to Miss Willard by making the union fifty strong. This it did and then decided to make it one hundred strong by state convention. Never has it been my privilege to see such enthusiasm in the Indiana state executive. At eight o'clock a public meeting was held in the auditorium of the largest M. E. church, where Mrs. Rounds delivered one of her finest addresses. The church was literally packed with people. March 9 we held an executive meeting from 7:30 A. M. to 10 A. M.; then went into the institute. The program was carried through the day greatly to the satisfaction of those attending. The plan is to have similar institutes held in every county during the year. The county presidents will now go home and conduct county institutes, having received instruction from the state." This surely is a plan which will be adopted by all states. If the midyear executive meeting could be utilized for practical work, and the enthusiasm increased, it would result in great good to the work at large.

From West Virginia comes this cheering note: "We are gaining in membership. Parkersburg reports a gain of one hundred and twelve active and honorary. Fairmount has recently gained over one hundred new members, and we are doing better work than ever before. Our dear leader's going home has stimulated our membership to renewed activity. May God sanctify our affliction to each of us, and may our great loss bring us nearer to the life of self-abnegation that our leader lived."

Mrs. Ellis writes from Washington that she is "up to her eyes in petitions. Never before have so many been received from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and from the churches. The local unions are this year realizing the importance of securing signatures from church members, as well as from white-ribboners."

A hearing before the committee in the house on alcoholic traffic, on behalf of the bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in all government buildings was held last week; Mr. Crafts, Mrs. Platt, Mrs. Shelton and Mrs. Ellis being the principal speakers.

The week before there was a hearing on the Sabbath Rest Bill of the District of Columbia. Our legislative work at the capitol is certainly in the right hands, and being pushed most grandly.

I sincerely trust that the Day of Prayer, April 8, will be observed throughout the nation, and the world as well. We need to take hold upon the divine strength more than ever before; and that strength will surely not fail us in this, our hour of need.

KATHARINE L. STEVENSON.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—Mid tears and smiles I write to-day. Tears bitter, and with a heavy heart, because of our great loss, but with smiles because of the glorious gain, reunion and rest, which has come to our beloved chieftain.

As organizers we feel that we have lost our best friend, and that our great organization must suffer by the loss of her sweet counsels and leadership, and especially is this true of our L. T. L. branch which ever was near her heart. "But though dead, she yet speaketh;" and if all feel as I do, a new inspiration to do more, and better work comes from the thought that she loved it and gave her life for it. The dear Lord is still at the helm and the work will go on for it is His.

Circumstances which I regret, but

(Continued on page 13.)

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

Gail Borden

Eagle Brand

Condensed Milk
HAS NO EQUAL AS AN INFANT FOOD.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.
NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. N.Y.

over which I have had no control, have delayed my writing for our column up to the present time. Until Christmas I was busy in Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, organizing many L. T. L's and some unions, speaking in the public schools and junior church societies, almost daily, beside my regular evening chalk-talks. Since that time I have rested with a sister here in Nebraska and will not resume my work until April. I will then be ready to respond to calls. Indiana, Michigan and Ohio, possibly Pennsylvania and New York, and any points en route, will be my next field during the spring months. As a much needed help can we not request the secretary of our board of organizers to prepare, with our assistance, a circular of detailed instructions to be used by the unions in preparing for our coming, the new unions, especially, would often be glad of such a help, and greater results be obtained from our visits.

I believe there is no better way to promote the growth and permanency of new unions than to help them to find an L. T. L. superintendent with a corps of helpers, if possible, and after enthusing and organizing the children so far as possible, in our brief visit, leave with her definite instructions and helps. Pennsylvania gives each new L. T. L. an organizer's outfit free, and is, no doubt, just as generous with her new unions. When all states do this the work will grow and become more permanent.

I am pained to find so many L. T. L. superintendents discouraged and their work languishing because the union gives them little or no aid and sympathy. Our most flourishing unions seem to be those who make department work the chief study and topic of their meetings, the superintendent of each department knowing some weeks in advance that she must prepare for and take charge of her hour, keeping in touch with her state superintendent for aid and instructions, the Y superintendent often bringing in some of her bright girls to aid her, and the L. T. L. superintendent a part or all of her Seniors or Juniors to assist her. If this is not practical let the L. T. L. invite the union, its mother, and entertain her, the union returning the favor, either in a private or public way, thus binding the ties closer, which should ever exist, and thereby being mutually helpful.

Let us, as organizers, carry out the new plans just published for the Temple as a memorial to dear Miss Willard. My faith is equal to the task and I hope to do my part at once. I believe it will be our "Willard Temple" if we will rally as we should, one and all, to its aid.

Faithfully yours,
ELLEN A. DAYTON BLAIR.
Norfolk, Neb.

DEAR COMRADES:—The time for me to address you through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL is long past due, but the delay has been unavoidable. I began a week ago to write a letter, but just then the news came of the death of our beloved Chieftain, and so great was the shock my pen has refused to write since until now.

Surely thousands all over the world are in deep gloom. 'Tis true we have God still with us, but who will not feel that it is difficult to go on without Frances Willard? It brings a heartsick, lonesome feeling over us to think of the vacant chair, but in the midst of our great bereavement we must remember that the greatest monument we can build over her is to continue more bravely and earnestly the work to which she devoted her life. It is difficult to understand how the work of such a woman can be finished, but we must leave all in the hands of an all-wise Father.

In November I came to Manitoba to work in the interests of the plebiscite, and with the exception of a flying visit home in January have been constantly at work, speaking every night and many afternoons and sometimes three times on Sunday. The object has been to reach every part of the province, hence I have gone under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Good Templars, Royal Templars, Christian Endeavor societies, etc., and am glad to note many victories, giving all the glory to God. I expect to close my work here March 18, and then, after stopping for a few days in Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. D., will return to Michigan to work during the spring months and perhaps longer. May God help us in these days of bereavement to carry on His great work!

Yours for Christ and humanity,
E. NORINE LAW.
En route in Manitoba.

To the Board of Superintendents.

What can we do to show our love and appreciation of the beloved leader and guide who is with us no more? Thank God! the inspiration abides, and doubtless we all long to give ourselves more earnestly to the work so dear to her heart. Shall we not specially at this time give ourselves to prayer that we may more earnestly and successfully carry out our department work? Let us unitedly observe the Sunday evening sunset hour, looking for wisdom and help to the Divine One; and let us gather into this thought and observance, our state and county and district and local superintendents and workers in our departments. This means of course, the great constituency of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

You have perhaps heard of the token given in behalf of the National superintendents at the Willard services in Chicago—an open Bible of white roses bordered with violets, and the text, Rev. 22 : 4, "And they shall see His face and His name shall be in their foreheads." How shall we farther embody for her our more lasting, loving thought and appreciation?

A personal letter will be sent to each one of you. In the meantime any word or suggestion will be gladly received by

Yours most heartily,
LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
Chairman Board Nat. Supts.

Announcement.

To the members of the Executive Committee of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

DEAR SISTERS:—Believing that it is not for the welfare of the organization that officers should be elected, constitution and by-laws amended by the executive committee, I therefore propose as soon as it can be done by the mode declared by the present constitution, that Articles 3, 4, 5 (section 3), 8, 9 and Article 8 of by-laws be amended as follows:

Article II of Constitution. Strike out the words, "of the Executive Committee," both times they occur.

Article V. Strike out the entire article.

Article VIII. Strike out "Executive Committee" both times it occurs and substitute "Convention" in both places.

Article X. Strike out all that follows the word "amended" and substitute "by any biennial convention," notice of said amendment having been given in writing at the previous biennial convention.

By-laws, Article VIII. Strike out "Executive Committee" and replace it by "Convention at any Biennial Meeting."

These amendments are proposed by Mary Clement Leavitt, honorary life president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Boston, Feb. 28.

A Call to the Loyal Temperance Legion.

In the departure of our great leader we have lost the most influential friend and advocate of the L. T. L., the one who believed most earnestly in our department and proved her faith on every occasion by her works. Therefore, I ask that each Legion in our broad land will hold a Willard memorial service, either independently or in connection with the W. C. T. U. I would also ask that each L. T. L. member be supplied with the memorial number of The Young Crusader, with the request that it be carefully preserved.

To each W. C. T. U. in the land may I be permitted to say that I believe in no way can our white-ribbon women more truly honor our beloved leader than by writing upon the living tablets of the hearts of the children the truths for which her life was given, and by training these children, through the agency of the Loyal Temperance Legion, to take up her unfinised work and to carry the cause to which she consecrated her all on to victory.

HELEN G. RICE,
Nat. Sec.

Notice.

Will the National superintendents who have not yet paid their one dollar assessment into the National superintendents' treasury, as arranged for by action at the Buffalo Convention, kindly forward the same by mail to Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, treasurer of the board of National superintendents, 1905 Tioga street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WAR PICTURES
IN BEAUTIFUL COLORS.
Battleships MAINE and INDIANA
(Latter cleared for action,) each 12x18.
NORTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON
All ships of the line in action (12x36). Drawn from life by Reuterdahl. Finest pictures ever published.
New York Bombarded.
The Bicycle in War.
All the above beautiful colored pictures will appear in TRUTH. $1.00 will bring TRUTH for 6 months; and following pictures on heavy plate paper for framing, will be given free as a premium.
Battleship "Maine," 12x18. "Indiana," 12x18. North Atlantic Squadron, 12x36.
Address TRUTH, No. 153 E. 19th St., New York.

Conservatory Life
is most healthful and delightful. The teachers are masters; the students are enthusiasts. Everything in the equipment and environment of the
New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
tends to encourage high ideals and a devotion to art.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALB, Gen'l Mangr., Boston, Mass.

SEND FOR A BICYCLE
High Grade '98 Models, $14 to $40.
GREAT CLEARING SALE of '97 and '96 models, best makes, $9.75 to $18. Sent on approval without a cent payment. Free use of wheel to our agents. Write for our new plan "How to Earn a Bicycle" and make money. SPECIAL THIS WEEK—40 high grade '97 models [slightly shopworn], $10.75 each. "Wanderings Awheel," a souvenir book of art, FREE for stamp while they last.
MEAD CYCLE CO., 279 Ave. P,, Chicago.

THE HOLY GRAIL. The Silent Teacher. Mary Hanford Ford.
A beautiful book, giving history and interpretation of the literature of the Holy Gall from the earliest mediæval stories to the Parsifal of Wagner. The interest is held from beginning to end.
THE LIVING CHURCH: The book is an interesting and exhaustive history of the legend of the Holy Grail. Supplies a need.
THE OUTLOOK: Mrs. Ford has done real service to literature, philosophy and religion.
Sample pages free. Prepaid, $1.00.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO.
277 Madison St., CHICAGO.

1898 High Grade BICYCLES

for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models.
$75 'Oakwood' for $32.50
$60 'Arlington' " $24.50
No Money in Advance. Others at $15, $17 and $20
WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER. Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50
Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits
Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION,
162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 60, Chicago, Ills.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 305

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
DIABETES FLOUR
Also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit Cake and Pastry Flour.
Unrivaled in America or Europe.
Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free.
Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD
by Anna A. Gordon, Miss Willard's private secretary for over 20 years. The only book authorized and endorsed by the W. C. T. U. Over 1,000,000 copies will be sold.
The Greatest Seller of the Century.
Write for outfit. Best terms. Circular free. Act quick. Don't miss this. J. S. ZIEGLER & CO., 325 Dearborn St., Chicago

Trial Package Free.
If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—Kindly announce that we are handling "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," the book authorized by and bearing the official stamp of the W. C. T. U., that we allow agents our usual liberal commission, and will send complete canvassing outfit prepaid on receipt of 50 cents.

J. A. RUTH & Co., Publishers,
56 Fifth Ave., Chicago.

TEACHER (to geography class)—Can you tell me what island is noted for its great internal improvements? Small boy (triumphantly).—Castor ile.

Perhaps You Have Heard

of a railway system running between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland and Duluth, known as the Wisconsin Central Lines. Before making a journey to any of these northwestern points, inquire relative to the Fast and Elegantly Equipped Trains which leave Chicago daily via the Wisconsin Central. Your nearest ticket agent can give you complete information. JAS. C. POND, G. P. A., Milwaukee, Wis.

"I wish," said a maiden of five summers, whose mother had reprimanded her for some misdeed, "that you and I were strangers to each other."

CHICAGO'S FAVORITE PASSENGER STATION.

Reasonable success seems to have followed the efforts of the management of the Nickel Plate Road to make it popular as a passenger line for travel East. It is regarded as a favorite by many in making the journey from Chicago to Eastern points.

Patrons of that line will be gratified to learn that arrangements have been made effective, March 6, for all passenger trains of the Nickel Plate Road to arrive at and depart from the Van Buren Street Station in Chicago.

The many advantages afforded by this great Union Depot, located in the heart of the business portion of Chicago, and the continued advantage afforded by lower rates than over other lines, having three express trains daily, with through sleeping cars to New York and Boston, and the advantage of superior Dining Car Service, when all considered, should show increased travel over the Nickel Plate Road.

TOMMY (whose questions had been legion).—Pa, where did Adam get the names for all the animals? Father (absently).—From the dictionary, of course.

THE OPIUM AND MORPHINE HABIT.

"What We May Do to be Saved" is little book, giving full particulars of a reliable cure. Free. Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B., Lebanon, Ohio.

"IF I buy all the finery you seem to want for your summer outing this year, my daughter," observed Mr. Billus, "you can't go to the seaside at all. You will have to choose between old point lace and Old Point Comfort."

THROAT DISEASES commence with a Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and sure relief.

"GENTLEMEN," wrote the editor of the Bloomville Terror, "the Klondike fever has hit this community hard. Please send me at once, by express, four pounds of cap K's and the same amount of lower-case k's. Can't get this paper out till they come."

All elevated trains on the Loop now stop at Nickel Plate Depot, Van Buren Street Station. Call up City Ticket Office, Telephone Main 3389, for lowest rates to all points East.

MOTHER—Have you been into those plums again, Charlie?

Charlie—Why, mamma, you told me I could have all of your things when you died, and yesterday you said you were half dead—so I took half of them!

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit" with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed, 10c, 25c, 50c.

Our Library Table.

HOW TO MAKE THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL GO, by A. T. Brewer. Price 60 cents. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth avenue, New York.

MONEY: THOUGHTS FOR GOD'S STEWARDS, by Rev. Andrew Murray, author of "With Christ," "Abide in Christ," etc. Price 25 cents. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, Ill.

THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE, an interpretation by A. H. Ames, M. D., D. D. Price 90c. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THE ART OF GETTING RICH, by Henry Hardwicke, member of the New York Bar. Published by the Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., 120 Broadway, New York. Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50 cents.

DISCIPLESHIP, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, pastor of New Court Congregational church, Tollington Park, London. One of the series of "Little Books for Life's Guidance." Price 50 cents. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, Ill.

A volume of "Gems," beautifully bound in white and gold, has been compiled by Mary E. Vibbert. The selections are from the best authors, carefully chosen, and comprise a mine of literary treasures. For sale by the author, 191 W. Springfield St., Boston, Mass. Price $1.00.

FAITH: Chapters by Finlayson, Spurgeon, Moody, Aitken, Maclaren; and NAAMAN THE SYRIAN, by A. B. Mackay, are two new additions to the Moody Colportage Library which comprises a series of books by well-known Christian authors, undenominational, thoroughly evangelistic, for all classes of people. Prices, single copies 15 cts; 10 copies for $1. Published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 250 La Salle avenue, Chicago, Ill.

SOCIAL PROGRESS LECTURES with outline of the Topic-a-Month course of reform studies, by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D., superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C. Mr. Crafts' book is so complete and comprehensive on every question of social reform that it is difficult to give an idea of its scope in a brief review. It will be of special interest and use to local unions who are studying along these lines, and the price to such has been put at 10 cts.; regular price, 25 cts. Address, The Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Ave., N. E., Washington, D. C.

The March number of MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE might be characterized in a sentence as a literary and pictorial exposition of the heroic side of real life. A letter from Nils Strindberg, one of the two men who have gone, no one knows whither, with Andrée, in the bold endeavor to reach the North Pole by balloon; Mr. Walter Wellman's predictions as to the probable fate of the Andreé party; Herbert E. Hamblen's account of his own adventures as a locomotive engineer; and a true story of the ingenuity and bravery of a Chicago fireman—all dealing with matters of fact, are still full of the very stuff which the novelist (too often in vain) beats his brains for. S. S. McClure Co., 141-155 E. 25th St., New York.

Notice.

Mrs. J. G. Hauser, of Delaware, O., who spent fifteen years in India, has prepared three twenty-minute papers on the following subjects, "The Hindus," "The Mohammedans in India," "Native Christians and the Farmer's Life in India." The short addresses are each illustrated by Indian costumes representing the classes of people described. Full directions will be given as to the manner in which the costumes are put on. These addresses and illustrating costumes will be found interesting, and a great aid to missionary or other societies in preparing special programs.

To the W. C. T. U. Workers Among Sailors:

An Icelander, by the name of Ogmunder Sigurdson, who was registered on an English steamer for Australia in 1890, has not been heard of since. By the request of his mother, one of my best friends, I urgently ask my dear sisters of the white-ribbon working among sailors to do all in their power to find some trace of this man, and when found kindly let me know of it. By this time he is about forty years of age, low of stature, somewhat square-shouldered, has dark hair, a broad face and dark eyes. Wherever he may be and whatever his conditions are, please let me know it, as it is his mother's great desire to hear from him. OLAFIA JOHANSDOTTIR.

Carlisle, Pa.

Convention Corner.

ARKANSAS W. C. T. U. convenes at Newport, April 13-16. Reduced fare one and one-third round trip on the certificate plan. John G. Woolley lectures on the evening of the 14th. Send name of delegates to Mrs. Judge Scarboro, Newport, Ark. A large attendance is earnestly desired by entertainment committee.

(MRS.) E. ETHRIDGE,
Cor. Sec.

Announcement.

Mrs. Cornelia C. Moots, West Bay City, Mich., has been appointed lecturer for the department of Sabbath Observance.

V. F. Cox,
Nat. Supt. Sabbath Observance.
Tabor, N. J.

PHOTO OF... Miss Frances Willard or Lady Henry Somerset

on a beautifully enameled PHOTO BUTTON 7-8 inch diameter, mailed on receipt of 15 cents; 12 for $1.00.

PHOTO BROOCH 1 1-4 inch diameter, with either of above Photos 30 cents each; 12 for $2.00. Brooches or Buttons delicately hand tinted, 25 cents each extra. Gold Plated Frames for Brooches or Buttons, 25 cents each: Best Rolled Gold or Black Mourning Frames, 50 cents each: Solid Gold Frames $1.75. No charge for mounting Buttons or Brooches in Frames.

ANYBODY'S PHOTO on a Button, 25 cents, or on a Brooch 60 cents.

YOUR PHOTO WILL BE RETURNED UNHARMED.
Description, Price List and Terms to Agents Mailed Free.

AGENTS WANTED.

F. PARKER, Mfr., 277 E. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Spruce Bark Bed Sheets and Comfortables.

A Luxury for the Healthy.
A Tonic for the Convalescent.
A Remedy for the Sick.

And Spruce Bark Bed Comfortables or Sheets are a positive necessity to Travelers and Tourists obliged to sleep in strange beds and berths in hotels and on boats.

Spruce Bark Bed Comfortables and Sheets are made of the tender inner bark of the Canadian Balsam Spruce Tree, stripped early in the spring when the sap is rising in the tree. By a special process the bark is made into thin sheets as smooth, soft and pliable as cloth and in which all the powerful aromatic and balsamic qualities of the spruce are permanently retained.

Nervousness, Insomnia, La Grippe and ordinary Colds are almost completely allayed with a single night's rest between Spruce Bark Bed Clothes and their constant use is recommended by Physicians as an absolute protection and preventative against these ailments.

The only difference between the Comfortables and Sheets is in the weight. The Sheets are made very light especially for summer and weigh less than 12 oz.

Spruce Bark Bed Comfortables and Sheets, size 64 x 72 ins., are packed in curious wooden bags, silk lined and trimmed, and, if your dealers cannot supply them, we will ship anywhere in the U. S. or Canada, carriage and duty free, on receipt of price, $2 each for either the Comfortables or Sheets. Money refunded if not satisfied.

Booklet containing testimonials sent free on request.

THE KING-JONES CO.,
DEPARTMENT D. L., TORONTO, CAN.
JONES & CO.,
DEPARTMENT D. L., NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Drinking Fountains
FOR
MAN and BEAST
Manufactured by
The J. L. Mott Iron Works
84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.
311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.

Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

AGENTS WANTED
MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT CUBA BOOK.
All about Cuba; Spain; Maine Disaster; and War; great excitement; everyone buys it; one agent sold 87 in one day; another made $13.00 in one hour. 600 pages; magnificent illustrations; photographs, etc.; low price; we guarantee the most liberal terms; freight paid; 20 days credit; outfit free; send 10 two-cent stamps to pay postage.
THE BIBLE HOUSE, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

BUGGIES, Carts, Surries, Phætons, Spring Wagons, Harness and Saddles shipped C. O. D. anywhere to anyone with privilege to examine at lowest wholesale prices. Guaranteed as represented or money refunded. Send for illustrated catalog and testimonials Free. Addr. (in full)
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158 W. Van Buren St., B 80 CHICAGO

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"THE Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," compiled by her secretary, Anna A. Gordon. Introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Only official edition authorized and indorsed by the W. C. T. U. Beautifully illus. Only $2. Agts. wanted. Liberal terms. Act quickly. National Pub. Co., Chicago

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.
Send for free sample and literature.
A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

CONSUMPTIVES Try thi Salve! Tested; true. Doctors fail; it cures. You make it. Formula, 50 Cents.
MRS. J. BURT, Oklahoma City, O. T.

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Easter Cards and Booklets

348

50 CENTS EACH.

SEVEN VIOLETS FOR EASTER WEEK.
DAYBREAK.

233

40 CENTS EACH.

JOYOUS EASTER BELLS.
EASTER BELLS.

BOOKLETS.

Below you will find a large assortment of Easter Booklets, all new and beautiful designs and most fitting for this blessed season.

236

25 CTS. EACH.

An Easter Vision
Joy Cometh in the Morning.
An Easter Pean.
Easter Light.
Easter Glory.

241

20 CTS. EACH.

Vacant Cross and Empty Tomb.
Our Saviour Lives.
The Bells of Easter-tide.
Death's Conqueror.
Easter Greeting.
Peaceful Easter.

12 CENTS EACH.

SWEET EASTER CHIMES.
EASTER PRAYER.
JESUS LIVES.
RISEN CHRIST.
PEACE ABUNDANT.
A CROWN OF LIFE.
EASTER MELODY.
THE DAWN OF EASTER.
MY SAVIOUR LIVES.
JOYFUL EASTER.
A HAPPY EASTER.

10 CENTS EACH.

DAY OF EASTER HOPE.
HAPPY EASTER TIDE.
EASTER COMFORT.
EASTER GRATITUDE.

1

247

CARDS.

A complete stock in exquisite designs and coloring from 1 cent up to 30 cents each. Also in packages of 6 cards for 25 cents; 8 cards for 25 cents; 10 cards for 25 cents.

BOOKS.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM.
Gift Edition. Illustrated. $1.25

THE SHEPHERD PSALM.
CHRISTIAN LIVING.
PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE
FUTURE TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE.
Bound in Cloth. Each, 30 cts.

Quiet-Hour Series.

LIFE FOR A LIFE.
PEACE, PERFECT PEACE.
MONEY: THOUGHTS FOR GOD'S STEWARDS.
JESUS HIMSELF.
LOVE MADE PERFECT.
IVORY PALACES OF THE KING.
18mo, Cloth. Each, 25 cts.

GOD'S BOX.
EXPECTATION CORNER.
Two attractive Booklets. Each, 10cts.
EVERY-DAY RELIGION. Price, $1.00
THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.
Standard Edition, . . . 75 cts.
New Edition, ... 30 cts.
PATHWAY TO EASTER.
SEVEN WORDS FOR THE SEVEN DAYS.
Price, ... each, 15 cts.

THESE PRICES ARE NET CASH . . . PLEASE ORDER AT ONCE TO MAKE SURE OF PROMPT ATTENTION.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 1110 The Temple, Chicago.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume....

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

which will be in the hands of the reading public at an early date, will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is hoped that this prompt announcement will prevent any unauthentic edition from being placed on the market. Each copy will bear the Official Stamp of the W. C. T. U. on the title page.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple....Chicago.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c
Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

Publisher's Notes.

Statement.

Some confusion has arisen in the minds of white-ribboners, and those wishing to act as agents for the memorial volume from the unauthorized statement of some subscription book houses that they publish the only official life of Miss Willard. The subscription book houses sell the book through agents, but the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association are the only authorized publishers and all prospectuses will bear the imprint, Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. As we have no subscription book department it was thought best to place the book on the market through the medium of these houses. A large number have been authorized to sell but not to publish the original book. We do not make terms with agents, we have no canvassers in the field; we do not supply prospectuses, but you can always be sure of dealing with an authorized party if you look for the official stamp as you have seen it in our advertisement in this number under "Important Announcement."

Official Picture of Miss Willard.

The National officers of the W. C. T. U. have arranged with a first-class engraver to produce a large etching of Miss Willard, which will be suitable for framing and will be the only official picture authorized by them. The W. T. P. A. will have it on sale within two months. Price $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASSN.,
The Temple.

Signal Notes.

LA LIQUE Anti-Alcoholique is establishing temperance cafés in Paris.

MR. WM. WILKINSON estimates that about 5,000 names will be added to the Total Abstinence roll as the result of the Irish Temperance League's recent efforts towards realizing the "million more" scheme.

A YOUNG Chicago high school girl, Miss Beatrice Miller, sixteen years old, has invented an appliance for distilling water from an ordinary teakettle or boiler. It is a simple still consisting of two spherical bodies, one inside of the other. The smaller one, or condensing chamber, receives the steam from the kettle by a tube and this is condensed by means of cold water passing around in the outer sphere. The cold water also replenishes the kettle but is so regulated that it does not stop the boiling. The distilled water passes out of the condensing chamber by a tube and the surplus cold water also has an outlet from its chamber. The whole appliance is automatic and needs no attention after it is placed upon the kettle and the cold water connected with the hydrant faucet by a rubber tube. Chicago water is a fit subject for this "Ralston Still."

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

IVORY SOAP

Is sweet and clean, Careful housekeepers will have no other in the kitchen.

99 44/100 per cent PURE

"A HANDFUL OF DIRT MAY BE A HOUSEFUL OF SHAME." CLEAN HOUSE WITH

SAPOLIO

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple,
CHICAGO.

Take Notice

that the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the only house that will publish the official memorial volume of Frances E. Willard. It will be sold through the leading subscription book houses throughout the country. If subscription book houses claim they are the only publishers, please send to them the above statement.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we desire again to state that while the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the only publisher of the authentic life of Miss Willard, by Anna Gordon, those wishing to become agents should write direct to subscription book houses for prospectuses, terms, etc. We do not authorize or make terms and have no control over territory.

THREE NEW BOOKS
BY DR. CRAFTS.

Social Progress

With Topic-a-Month Studies. Commended for study by W. C. T. U., by MRS. K. L. STEVENSON. 12mo, 160 pp. Illustrated 25c

Before the Lost Arts

12mo, 96 pp. Illustrated. Cloth, 50c ..... paper, 25c

Mail and Empire, TORONTO—"A strong and telling argument for the truth of Christianity on a new line."

Practical Christian Sociology

Cloth, 524 pp. Illustrated ... $1.50

THIS BOOK DISCUSSES

Temperance	The Sabbath
Impurity	Divorce
Immigration	Municipalism
Law Enforcement	Woman Suffrage

And all the forty departments of the W. C. T. U., not separately, but in their relations to each other, with latest statistics, making this volume a handy compend of the whole subject of social reform.

Frances E. Willard—"It is packed with just the information that a 'Christian at work' most needs to know, and which he might search for through a hundred volumes in vain . . . I wish that it might be studied in all the local unions of the W. C. T. U."

These books supplied at above prices, prepaid, or sent free with monthly documents to Unions or persons taking a membership of $3.00 or more, by

THE REFORM BUREAU,
210 Delaware Ave. N. E. WASHINGTON, D. C.

[Send also for free "petition pattern" and list of moral measures in Congress.]

BARGAINS AT HOME Send us your name and address and we will mail you free of charge weekly bulletins of wonderful bargains. KELLOGG, GRACE & CO., 202 S. Clark St., Chicago

ASTHMA COCA-CHEKAN CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial package FREE
COCA DRUG CO., BOX 424, CINCINNATI, O.

1892. "THE RISING SUCCESSFUL BOOK HOUSE OF THE WEST." THE DOMINION COMPANY, "THE LEADING AND MOST WIDELY KNOWN SUBSCRIPTION BOOK HOUSE OF AMERICA." 1898.

PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, NEWSDEALERS.

Authorized Distributers of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

This book is the Memorial Volume of Frances E. Willard. It is published by the authority and under the supervision of the official publishing house of the National W. C. T. U. The biographical part of the book is written by Miss Anna A. Gordon, who, for more than twenty years, was Miss Willard's private secretary. The introduction is by Lady Henry Somerset, who was Miss Willard's bosom friend and co-worker. Among the leading men and women who will contribute special articles to the book, are Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Pres. W. C. T. U., Archbishop Farrar, Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, Dr. N. D. Hillis, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Archbishop Ireland, Joseph Cook, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, Bishop Potter, Bishop Vincent, President Henry Wade Rogers, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, Dwight L. Moody, Theodore L. Culyer, Clara Barton, and other persons distinguished in the realm of philanthropy, temperance and reform.

This grand volume will be sold exclusively by subscription. In no other way can the attention of the people everywhere be brought to the book, and insure for it the greatest possible circulation. As authorized distributers we want a representative at once in every community in the United States and Canadian provinces to help in circulating this book. We can give profitable employment at once to 50,000 salespeople.

What an Agency Means.—An agency for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" means two things: First, it will aid a noble cause. Secondly, it is the greatest opportunity of a lifetime to make money. While the greater part of the net profits on the book will go to the temperance cause, all who engage in the sale of the book have been provided for that they may have liberal pay for their work. Hundreds of copies will be sold in every village and town. Orders will be taken readily. Previous experience in book-selling is not required to sell this book. Large lists of orders can be taken each day. A few hours each day devoted to showing this book to friends and acquaintances will yield an income of from $4 to $10 a day, and in many places much more, while experienced salespeople will be able to double and treble these figures. If you can spare any time to this work, send for canvassing outfit and full particulars at once and get started. Strike now. Don't delay an hour or you may be too late.

Opportunities.—The intelligence of our people is such that averaging one community with another seventy of every hundred families are so intelligent that they will be interested in "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" and will buy it when it is brought to their attention. This means seven orders out of every ten persons canvassed. Your community may be above this average. If every family in the nation could be canvassed with this book, over 8,000,000 copies would be sold, and the proceeds which would go to the temperance cause would be so great as to place the W. C. T. U. on a financial basis that would forever endure. Then think what a tremendous sum would be distributed among salespeople! Millions upon millions! Canvass your community and you will have done what you could to further the work, besides make money for yourself. This is a grand opportunity. No capital required, no risk to run, no expenses, and yet your profits will be greater than those of the merchant who invests large sums of money and takes big risks.

Terms.—We pay the largest and most liberal commissions and help our representatives in every possible way to successfully conduct the business. We allow three per cent. discount for cash with order. When the amount of the order is $35 or more, and the agent remits in full with the order, we pay freight (not express) on the books. On books shipped to Canada we arrange to pay the duty. To honest agents who need credit on the books to conduct the business, we can arrange to give 30 days' time, that they may deliver the book and make collections for them before paying us. In this way everyone, no matter how he may be situated, can engage successfully in the sale of this great book.

Canvassing Outfit.—This consists of a sample book of upwards of a hundred pages of the complete book, showing nature of contents, kind of type, many of the beautiful illustrations, quality of paper, styles of binding, size of complete book, and contains guarantee to subscribers and blank pages on which to record orders. With the prospectus we send our best instructions for successful work, special instructions for selling this book, and necessary blanks. Our instructions are so complete that anyone can succeed. The complete outfit will be sent for 50 cents. This may be deducted in remitting for the first ten books sold. We are not permitted to send outfits free, hence do not lose time and possibly the chance to represent this book by writing for free outfit. Order to-day—this very hour, and be ahead of agents who will soon swarm the country with cheap, trashy books thrown together with scissors and paste by unscrupulous concerns offering unauthorized, unreliable books of the proceeds of which not one cent will go to the W. C. T. U.

Territory.—In order to help you in securing orders readily and rapidly we will not restrict you to any particular territory, but will let you take orders among your friends and acquaintances wherever they may be. You can select such fields as you will be able to handle to the best advantage. We want you to do well, to make many sales, to make money, and to do good.

We want a member in every local W. C. T. U., in every church, in every church society, in every temperance lodge, in every benevolent and humane organization, in every township, village, town and city, to volunteer at once to canvass every member, and every person that can be reached, with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want every man and woman in the United States and Canada, who has had any experience in the sale of books, to devote themselves for a time to the sale of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." It will pay. Drop all else.

Size and Prices. The book will be a royal octavo in form, about 16 x 10 inches when open, will contain between 400 and 500 pages beautifully and profusely illustrated, and will sell for $2.00 in Cloth, $2.75 in Half Morocco and $3.75 in Full Morocco.

All Prospectuses and Complete Books will have this official stamp on the title page.

The first thing to do is to send your order for canvassing outfit. Send it to-day, this very hour. There is a rush for outfits on this book. Your order will be filled from the first edition of outfits. In this way not an hour will be lost unnecessarily. Address,

THE DOMINION COMPANY,

Authorized Distributers . . . Dept. 5, 352-354-356 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, U. S. A. (Mention "The Union Signal," please.)

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 13. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, March 31, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
At Home — About Women — Educational — Abroad — Temperance 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Lead, Chieftain, Lead! By Kate Lunden . . . 3
Poem, Easter Chimes. By Flora Hazelton Bailey . . . 3
An Easter Anthem. By Ella Beecher Gittings 3
Ideals the Basis of Progress. I By Lucinda B. Chandler 4
A Scientific Lecture Bureau. By T. D. Crothers, M. D. 4
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Encouraging News From Japan 5
A Letter From Jerusalem 5
Spanish Work in New Mexico 6
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Now the Noisy Winds Are Still. By Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge 7
Hunting Easter Eggs 7
How They Fooled Auntie. By S. Rosalie Sill 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Women and the Resurrection 8
A Plan of Battle 8
The Writer of Miss Willard's Life 9
Miss Willard's Will 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
The Hospital Fund—Exhortations to Better Lives For Girls 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
South Australia 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
California — Louisiana — New Hampshire — District of Columbia — Indiana 10, 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Non-Alcoholic Medication 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 12
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 13
W. C. T. U. NEWS 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14

Notes and Comments.

WE congratulate our readers and ourselves as well, that we secured so good a picture as appeared on the cover of our last issue of the woman toward whom white-ribboners are thinking most tender, prayerful thoughts in these days of our great bereavement. Mrs. Stevens' face is one that does not readily yield itself to the photographer's art. The look of sadness which marks it when in repose is so constantly changing with varied emotions that the majority of her pictures give a very inadequate idea of the real woman. The photograph from which our cut is taken was made by Miss Alice Hughes, the famous London photographer, and the pen sketch by H. von Hofsten, of Chicago. The portrait is considered a most excellent one.

NOTWITHSTANDING the request made in our issue of March 17, on page 1, reports of memorial services are being sent to THE UNION SIGNAL. If we attempted to give place to all the beautiful tributes in prose and verse that come from sorrowing friends and comrades of our beloved Miss Willard, and all the accounts of services held in her memory, we should have room in the paper for nothing else for many weeks. So we ask again that reports of these meetings come through the regularly appointed state reporters, who are requested to crystallize the many which will be received by them from the local unions into a few short paragraphs expressive of the thought and feeling of their respective states upon the loss they have sustained in the death of our great leader.

WE have this year in the matter of Easter stories an embarrassment of riches, which makes us wish we had, this week at least, several pages at our disposal for stories. As it is, we shall give place in the two issues succeeding this, our regular Easter number, to a story in two parts written for THE UNION SIGNAL by Marietta Holley ("Josiah Allen's Wife"), entitled, "An Easter Party in Jonesville."

KENTUCKY water just at present outrivals Kentucky's famous whisky. Of the two battleships launched at Newport News, Va., last Thursday, the water-christened Kentucky is receiving by far the widest attention and interest. This fact is indicated by the press reports which have given much prominence in news and editorial columns to the christening by Miss Bradley, while the champagne christening of the Kearsarge has been dismissed with brief mention. We are glad to note that Kentuckians themselves rallied to the support of Miss Bradley. The state's General Assembly adopted resolutions of commendation, and six hundred visitors from the Blue Grass State were present at the launching and cheered her to the echo. The following telegram was sent from National Headquarters: "Congratulations from the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. A half million white-ribboners bless your heroism;" also one from Col. Geo. W. Bain, of Lexington, Ky.: "Heaven bless Kentucky's brave daughter for her lesson of safety to sailors on the sea."

THE Chicago Central union held its twenty-fourth annual meeting, on March 24, in Willard Hall. The forenoon and part of the afternoon was devoted to the regular business of the organization. The reports showed a most encouraging activity in all the varied lines of philanthropic effort which include, besides the regular W. C. T. U. department work, Hope Mission, Florence Crittenton Anchorage, Bethesda Day Nursery and Kindergarten, Industrial and Manual Training School and Men's Club. The union has expended during the year $8,000 in carrying on its work, and its power for good is constantly increasing. Mrs. Carse was unanimously elected president for the 20th time. At one o'clock luncheon was served on the eleventh floor to members of the union and their friends. At three o'clock a memorial service for Miss Willard was held, conducted by Mrs. Carse. The platform was beautifully decorated with palms and lilies and upon an easel well to the front stood a large picture of our promoted Chieftain. Two-minute speeches were made by women who had been associated with Miss Willard in the early days of white-ribbon work in Chicago, and the service throughout was most touching and impressive.

WE earnestly urge our women who are sending petitions to their representatives in Congress, to study carefully the instructions given many times in THE UNION SIGNAL and to use the form of petition which has been kept standing in the official pages, except when crowded out by a press of other matter, and this week is given on page 15. Mr. Crafts, who with Mrs. Ellis, is in Washington promoting the interests of the various reform bills now pending, writes us as follows: "After all the directions given by THE UNION SIGNAL and sent out by the Reform Bureau and Mrs. Ellis, here comes a petition, signed by 299 names and indorsed by unions of 300 membership, besides asking for ten bills all on one petition, bills which are in nearly as many different committees. Such a petition can help only in one committee in each branch of Congress. The petition is otherwise well gotten up and represents days of devoted labor. Let every union see to it that the secretary keeps always in her book a 'Petition Pattern,' such as is given nearly every week by THE UNION SIGNAL."

THE General Officers have recently sent a circular letter to each member of the executive committee and board of superintendents urging their coöperation in a plan for securing a memorial to Miss Willard. The letter starts with the proposition that, inasmuch as the Temple is so closely allied with the name of the great leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it would seem as if no other memorial could be so fitting, and urges that a supreme effort be made to secure the entire ownership of this building. The plan contemplates the organizing of a citizens' memorial committee in each city and town throughout the nation, the amounts raised to be placed in the hands of a local treasurer, to be designated by the committee, and held until the aggregate local sum shall be placed in the hands of Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., the one chosen by Miss Willard and appointed by the Buffalo Convention as custodian of the Willard Temple Fund. Already a cordial response has been received from the presidents of several of the states, and the women are throwing themselves into the work with courage and enthusiasm and with the clear understanding that if, by the next National Convention it shall be proved that the amount necessary for purchasing the Temple can not be raised, the money shall be invested in some other suitable memorial. The Temple trustees are proceeding with their plans as announced, and, of course, the money from the wheels, cards, and from any plans which may be hereafter inaugurated by them, should be sent in the usual way to Mr. G. B. Shaw, vice-president American Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago, treasurer of the Board of Temple Trustees.

Current Events.

Christening of the Kentucky.

The New Battleship Baptized With Water by Miss Christine Bradley.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24.—Miss Christine Bradley, daughter of Governor Bradley, of Kentucky, who was chosen sponsor for the magnificent new battleship that bears the name of her native state, is a student at the Woman's College in this city.

When her party, en route to Newport News, entered the depot and stood nearly on the spot in the waiting room where President Garfield fell, she was met and greeted by a company of local white-ribboners, led by Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, the local president. They had assembled to greet her and bid her Godspeed on her lovely mission. Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley, wife of Francis M. Bradley, official head of the Sons of Temperance in the nation, pinned upon Miss Bradley's breast a small silk American flag, surmounted by the white ribbon. Addresses were made by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the Reform Bureau; Mrs. Crafts of the World's W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, of soldiers' and sailors' department of National W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Clinton Smith, of Young Woman's Branch; member of Congress Albert M. Todd and others.

Mrs. T. A. Williams, the district treasurer, stepped forward and presented a large bouquet of white roses tied with a white ribbon, to which was attached a card bearing this sentiment:

"Our best wishes for the success of the Kentucky. May her career be as honorable as her christening is pure. Though formed for war may she prove an emissary of peace."

Miss Bradley responded in fitting language to the congratulations of the white-ribboners, then went aboard the train accompanied by her mother and Mrs. Thacher. She was attired in a charming tailor-made gown of navy blue broadcloth, trimmed with gold braid.

NEWPORT NEWS, March 24.—If such a thing were possible, Kentucky was made a thousand times more famous here to-day. Beginning this morning with the launching of the battleship bearing her name and ending this afternoon with a speech by her governor that surpassed every expectation of his warmest lifelong friends, the entire day has been one grand ovation to the Blue Grass state, her eloquent men and fair women. It was a Kentucky day that makes a page of history.

It was exactly ten o'clock when the Kearsarge dipped into the waters. The christening by Mrs. Herbert Winslow with champagne was cheered, but nothing like that of the Kentucky which followed one hour and thirty minutes later. At 11:36, amid the yells of thousands and shrill shrieks of hundreds of whistles, the Kentucky dipped majestically into Chesapeake bay, and the event that nations have watched with interest was at an end.

Between the two launchings the marine band played "Old Kentucky Home" twice, and through both all cheered, alike the south and the north, with the Kentuckians.

The christening, which many officials thought should be done with wine or Kentucky's famous product, was done with pure water, Miss Bradley declining to use anything else, winning her fight for it after a private but hard-fought battle with those who opposed her. Carrying out her sentiment in the matter, she had the water brought in a plain, wire-covered glass bottle from the famous crystal spring on the spot where Abraham Lincoln was born in Larue county, Kentucky.

At the banquet which followed the launching, Governor Bradley responded to the toast, "Kentucky and the Kentucky." He spoke in part as follows:

"No ship has ever been christened as it has been. Not according to the custom of pirate Vikings, clad with the skins of wild beasts, but with sparkling water from the spring which quenched the infant thirst of him who gave freedom to a race and saved our country from destruction.

"And when the great ship majestically moves to the glorious destiny which is in store for it, it will be sanctified by the prayers of more Christian women than all the others that have ever moved on the face of the waters.

"Whether under calm and cloudless skies or struggling with tempest and waves, whether in peace or war, there shall hover over it, not the spirit of alcohol, which has destroyed so many lives, desolated so many homes and caused the shedding of so much blood and so many tears; but the spirit of Kentucky's noblest son, the grandest man 'in all the tide of time,' symbolized by God's gift to man, that which causes the earth to yield its fruits and harvest, which cleanses and purifies, which quenches the thirst of the living and relieves the parched lips of the wounded and the dying.

"Purity and patriotism have to-day been blended in the christening of the ship, which I predict will win more fame, gather more laurels and accomplish more good than any that has ever swept the seas.

"And in our parting with the majestic vessel, Kentuckians with one voice exclaim:

" 'In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the seas;
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee.' "

Temperance.

THE board of directors for Renwick Park, on Cayuga Lake, Ithaca, N. Y., have decided that no beer, wines, liquors or spirituous drinks of any kind shall hereafter be sold upon the grounds.

S. C. RANK, a former police lieutenant of Chicago, was sentenced by Judge Chetlain to pay a fine of $500 and to serve sixty days in the county jail for extortion of money from blind pig keepers in Hyde Park.

THE W. C. T. U. of Churubusco, Ind., have succeeded in entirely ridding the town of saloons. Sixteen women appeared before the county commissioners and were successful in defeating the three remaining saloon-keepers, who desired to continue in business and had applications for renewal of license pending.

DESPATCHES from Wichita, Kan., state that twenty women raided and burned a saloon in a big store building on the Kansas and Oklahoma Territory line, on March 24. The citizens on the Kansas side claimed that it was subject to the laws of that state and ordered it closed. The owner refused, with the above result.

CITY Attorney Kirkpatrick, of Monmouth, Ill., in his relentless war against the illicit sale of liquor has won a decisive battle against the enemy, compelling seven men to appear in county court and confess to ten counts of illegal sale of liquor. They were each fined $250 and bonded themselves not to again engage in the sale of any beverages in the city, even to a glass of milk.

ACCORDING to returns made to Congress by the District commissioners there are 547 retail and 147 wholesale liquor establishments at the national capital. This is a reduction of nearly half in the number of saloons within a couple of years, said to be due in a great measure to the high license exacted from the proprietors, only forty-seven of whom were convicted in the last year of violating the excise laws.

AT the annual convention of the State Temperance Union of Kansas, over 600 accredited delegates were present. Through the splendid efforts of Dr. Howard H. Russell, national superintendent of the American Anti-Saloon League, seventeen hundred dollars were pledged to the work of the Temperance Union. The plan of work adopted contemplates placing three state organizers in the field during the year. In addition to these, it is expected that Dr. Russell and two of his most valuable assistants will spend all of April in the state. The outlook is good for a great temperance revival during the present year.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT, National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, has been urgently invited to go to Japan and extend her work of scientific temperance education in the public schools of that country. The invitation explains that up to very lately there has been little opportunity for such effort in Japan, as the Minister of Education upon whom so much depended was not approachable—was, in fact, anti-foreign, but that Hon. Mr. Hamao, former president of the Imperial University, now holds that office and is most desirous of introducing western methods and teaching. The door is open—they want the text-books on temperance physiology used in this country and they are waiting for a leader. Mrs. Hunt's work in her own home field is so overwhelming that it will be impossible for her to go this year, at least.

MUCH agitation has been caused in Christian temperance circles of the Trans-Mississippi states over the published statement that the California exhibit at the Omaha exposition would include an immense vat to be kept filled with wine, which would be dispensed without money and without price. Letters, petitions, etc., have been flooding exposition headquarters, until the board of managers have authorized the publicity of a sweeping denial of any such infamous plan ever having been entertained by the authorities.

REV. A. EISMANN, pastor of the Evangelical Protestant church at Marion, O., is quoted as having made the following statement in response to a request to become a member of the anti-saloon league: "The saloon is a legalized institution, and a law-abiding citizen ought to stand by the law. An additional reason is that the saloon is a temptation, yet we cannot take away temptation in this world, but should overcome it. For this reason our preaching is not as much directed against the saloon-keeper as against his customers. Our church does not believe in drunkenness, but temperance. I do not preach, however, that drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. I refer to Colossians 2:16 and 17; Matthew 15:11, and Timothy 4:1 to 4. Those who preach prohibition should dismiss those unruly members from the church instead of retaining them in full membership, and by that means purge the church of its sinners."

Educational.

HARVARD University has received a gift of $20,000 from Mrs. William Belden Noble, of Washington, to endow a lectureship, in memory of her husband, a graduate of the class of 1885.

DR. JAMES B. ANGELL, minister to Turkey, announces that he will resign his post and return to this country in time to resume his duties as president of the University of Michigan at the opening of the fall term.

THE Duc de Loubat, of Paris, France, better known in New York as Joseph F. Loubat, has given property valued at $1,100,000 to Columbia University. This is the largest gift ever made to the institution. The income is to be devoted to the library.

THE $50,000 necessary to be raised by subscription for Colby University at Waterville, Me., to secure $10,000, conditionally given by the Baptist Educational Society of America, has been secured. It is now expected that two college buildings will be erected this season—a chemical laboratory and a building for the use of young women students.

THE Alabama Normal College for girls at Livingstone are to have in June a Frances Willard commencement and have sent for material on which to begin the study of her beautiful life. The principal, Julia S. Tutwiler, wishes to impress on this class of 1898, composed of twenty girls, the example of nobility and unselfishness as shown in the life of our leader.

At Home.

BLANCHE K. BRUCE, register of the treasury, who, next after Fred Douglass, had long been regarded as the most conspicuous man of his race, died at his home in Washington on March 17.

THE resolution to submit to popular vote the question of amending the state constitution by striking out the word "male" as relating to suffrage, was defeated in the Iowa legislature by a vote of 47 to 50.

THE commissioners in charge of the Kentucky state penitentiary at Frankfort have appointed two women as guards, with the same salary as the men. They will have charge of the women prisoners, and will perform the duties of prison matrons, but as the statute does not provide for matrons, they will be called guards.

THE Senate has passed the bill for the protection of song birds, which provides that the importation into the United States of birds, feathers, or parts of birds, for ornamental purposes, is prohibited, and also prohibiting the transportation or sale of such articles in any territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

Contributed.

Lead, Chieftain, Lead!

BY KATE LUNDEN.

LEAD on, dear heart! From loftier heights of power,
Still lead us on.
We will not falter in the crucial hour,
Though thou art gone.
God's will is ours, though seen through blinding tears;
His Fatherheart is greater than our fears.

Lead ever on! Great souls can never die;
The sun may set,
But in the orbs that stud the midnight sky
We see it yet.
And so thy spirit, beckoning from afar,
Breaks through the clouds, a radiant guardian star.

Love never fails. Though clashing faiths may cease,
The world shall read
In loving deeds, in messages of peace,
Thy simple creed.
And through thy words, by us now doubly prized,
We learn from thee what thou didst learn of Christ.

Lead, Chieftain, lead! Thy faithful follow still O'er paths of thorn,
Through bridgeless streams, thy guiding foot-prints till
God sends the morn,
And we shall greet, when the last deep is crossed,
The tender face we miss, but have not lost.

Easter Chimes.

BY FLORA HAZELTON BAILEY.

SWEET Easter bells, ring out thy chimes!
Ring, for the risen Lord!
Ring out His praise, in dulcet tones,
Ring, ring, in sweet accord!

The risen Christ brings peace and love:—
We know, we feel, we hear!—
His Easter angels touch the harp
That vibrates sweet and clear.

Rejoice, oh, earth, there is no death!
Ring, ring, sweet Easter bells!
Ring, 'till each heart in every land
With wond'rous music swells!

Britt, Ia.

An Easter Anthem.

BY ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS.

ANDREW HAY had sung in St. Luke's church since he was eleven years old. Now he was seventeen. Four new surplices had been furnished him, and his present one was decidedly too short. As he marched at the head of the choir, the abrupt descent from the leader to the next boy in size marred the symmetry of the line. If the rector or choirmaster noticed this they prized Andrew's voice too highly to speak of it, but Andrew himself knew it and it made him ill at ease. The leaven of approaching manhood was so active within him that he felt out of place among so many smaller boys.

When the Easter rehearsals began and the choirmaster said to him, "You must be measured for a new surplice, Andrew," he replied that he had decided not to sing any longer. The leader looked at him in dismay.

"Not sing any longer, Andrew? Why, we cannot possibly do without you. Has anything gone wrong?"

"You must have noticed, sir, that in size, at least, I have quite outgrown a boy choir. I both look and feel awkward in it. Naturally, you would dislike to tell me so, therefore, the best way is for me to dismiss myself before I become a real incumbrance."

The choirmaster taken thus by surprise scarcely knew how to reply. At length he said: "I know, Andrew, that you cannot always remain a boy, but I think the time has not yet come when you need to leave the choir. I think I voice the sentiment of the entire congregation when I say we cannot spare your voice. There has been some talk of forming an adult choir in addition to the surpliced one. When the time comes for you to part company with the boys, you can join that."

"I think the time has come already. Of course, I cannot use this surplice at Easter, and it is folly to purchase another for me."

"The price would be a small one to pay for your help at Easter alone. Promise you will stay till after Easter at any rate. I am sure the rector would say that a voice like yours should not be withheld from the Master's service."

"I want to do what is right, and I love to sing. Yes, I will stay until after Easter; but my resignation must take effect immediately after. It is right that you should have that much time in which to fill my place."

. . . . . .

The doctrine of heredity had been impressed upon Ralph Horton's mind since his earliest childhood. His mother had for years been superintendent of that department in her local W. C. T. U. Not only did the library tables teem with literature upon the subject, but it was common talk in the family. Although Ralph often wearied of it, and as he grew older sometimes caricatured it, yet he never for a moment really doubted its truth. Doubtless his mother, extremist though she had become through constant consideration of one side only of the question, would have been shocked had she known that to him it was a doctrine of fatalism. Whatever you are born to be, you will be, and there's no use fighting against it. Heredity is an unmitigated curse or blessing as the case may be.

Had she known this and also that he had already tasted his first glass of wine, she would not have said to him exactly what she did when he left her to begin his college life. She told him a carefully guarded family secret. It was, that his father, who had died in Ralph's infancy, had been a victim to alcohol through inherited appetite and a doctor's prescription. Then she had said with an emphasis which sounded a death-knell to her son's high hopes for the future:

"Your only safety lies in never drinking the first glass. One taste could arouse a demon of appetite which would lead you to certain ruin."

He said some husky words of thanks and kissed his mother good-bye, but he did not tell her that the danger line of which she warned him had already been passed! What use? Why bring that haunting terror into her life? He could only hope that death would claim one of them before the final catastrophe came. How well he remembered that first glass! It was at a banquet given his high school football team in a neighboring city. He disliked being conspicuous and nearly all the boys took wine. Besides he owned to a strong curiosity to know how the deadly stuff tasted. It had such a strange effect upon him that he scarcely knew whether fear or pleasure predominated—but he wanted another glass. Then the very sight and smell of it bewitched him and he would have taken still more had not a comrade whispered:

"You've had enough, boy. Do you want to go home drunk and disgrace the team?"

Not the team, but his mother! That thought brought him to his senses. As they went out he whispered to the friend who had warned him:

"Don't say anything about the wine at home, please. I'm never going to touch it again. My first drink shall be my last."

But another temptation had come at a class "spread," given by a high school senior, anxious to ape college ways. It seemed to Ralph that if his life had depended upon it, he could not have refused the wine after its subtle odor had penetrated his senses. He had drained three glasses, and his host had looked curiously at him as he filled a fourth and said, with a laugh that was almost a sneer:

"When the sons of temperance cranks once slip the noose they go to greater lengths than any of us."

The slighting allusion to his mother shocked him a second time into his senses and roused all the manhood within him. He set the glass down untasted and sprang to his feet, anger for the moment getting the better of appetite.

"You are right," he said. "It is time I left both you and the wine. It is late and my mother will be anxious. Good-night."

As he walked home in the cold starlit night he made a solemn vow never to touch wine again and to avoid all companies where it was likely to be served. Yet, sometimes the very memory of the sparkling liquor would set his veins tingling and a great longing for it would seize him. Now he understood it all. King Alcohol claimed him by the inexorable decree of heredity, and the fires of his hell had been kindled in that first glass of wine. If he could only fight it off till his mother died!

The college to which he was going was one of the oldest and most influential in the land—founded by a Christian church. Probably he would be safe from temptation while there. To his horror he found that there were dozens of saloons and brothels within two blocks of the college campus. Not only this, but the students were allowed to have liquors in their rooms and serve them at banquets and private "spreads." All the air about was redolent of the odor which meant death to his soul. Avoiding all society, he shut himself in his room, never left the campus unless necessity compelled, and worked desperately for class honors. He would give his mother what comfort he could. So things went on until the Easter holidays arrived. He had made a brave fight and so far conquered, but he was worn out with close confinement and overwork and felt his will-power weakening day by day.

Easter Sunday dawned bright and beautiful with bird songs and spring odors in the air. But Ralph Horton felt out of harmony with nature. The church bells jarred upon his nerves. Morbid brooding had made him cynical. He said that religion was a mockery, and church organization a farce. Was not the devil stronger than God? He was triumphing every day—must triumph in the end, and this thing called heredity was his deadliest weapon, wrested from the very hand of Him who created it.

He spent the day reading Rousseau and writing to his mother. By the time the evening church bells rang he had a maddening headache. He opened his door to let in more air. A student passing had spilled some wine in the hallway just in front of Ralph's door. He caught its scent and staggered back into his room. Great beads of perspiration were on his face. What was the use? He could not hold out much longer, and—his mother might live for years. Evidently the only thing to do was to end his own life. A suicide was more respected than a drunkard and he could manage to make it appear accidental. Ah! he had it! He would take a boat and go out on the river. His mother knew he was unskillful with the oars. But before he went he would have one last glorious drink. He would drink to the Mighty Demon, Heredity! He dressed himself carefully and went out. The capricious April weather had changed and a strong east wind was blowing. So much the better! The river would be very rough.

He passed St. Luke's church just as the choir boys were marching in. A voice of marvelous beauty arrested him. He turned to see whence it came. The church door stood open for some late comers. The soft light streamed out upon the pavement, and the rich scent of Easter lilies came with it. He stopped and listened to the voice. Clearly the words of the processional fell upon his ears:

"In the beauty of the lilies,
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom
That transfigures you and me.
As He died to make men holy,
So He rose to make men free."

Music had always had a powerful influence over Ralph Horton, and the wonderful voice drew him irresistibly. He followed the late comers into the church and slipped quietly into a vacant seat next the central aisle. He scarcely heeded the prayers but sat awaiting the voice, with the words, "He rose to make men free," echoing in his mind. He scarcely knew when the prayers changed to Scripture reading until these words arrested him: "The sting of death is sin." He shuddered and thought of the turbulent, rushing river—and after that . . . ? "But thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Thus endeth the first lesson."

A moment's hush, then faint and sweet as though the breath of the Easter lilies had broken into articulate speech, organ notes and clear boyish voices blending in almost perfect harmony—"He that hath ears to hear let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches."

A strange calm fell upon Ralph Horton's troubled soul. The mood of the music was swaying him. As the low chant ended, the organ notes glided gently into the prelude of an Easter anthem.

Feeling that this was his last Sunday in the choir, Andrew Hay resolved to do his very best, to forget himself and let the soul of the music possess him. A few more low, sweet notes from the organ, a sudden swell of gladness—a hush—and a voice of joy and triumph proclaimed, "I know that my redeemer lives!"

Ralph Horton started and leaned suddenly forward as though the words had been addressed to himself alone. All the misery, the despair, the unutterable longing for rescue that had filled his soul during the past months of torture, seemed to speak from the burning eyes that shone from his haggard face. Unconscious of everything save that wonderful song of redemption, he remained in the same attitude until the last notes of the anthem died slowly on the throbbing air. The rector saw him and his own soul responded to the look of agonized entreaty in the young student's face. His thoughts flew swiftly during the singing of the anthem.

Then there happened a strange thing in St. Luke's church. For the first time in its history the rector preached without notes. A carefully prepared sermon on "Consider the lilies," lay untouched in its handsome leather case. Without giving chapter or verse, he announced his text: "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." Then he preached not to the fashionable congregation, but to the young man with the anguish of a lost soul speaking from his eyes. He preached of Resurrection—not from the grave, but from the bondage of sin and fleshly lusts.

Still a stranger thing happened when the sermon was finished. Stepping in front of his desk the rector said in tones of entreaty:

"If there is one here to-night anxious to escape from this bondage of the flesh and who would like a word of personal counsel from one who has suffered in like manner, I shall be glad to meet him in the vestry at close of service. Follow the path on the east side of the church and enter by the outside door."

"Did you ever hear of such a thing!" exclaimed a fashionable lady, as she left the church. "One might as well be in the Salvation Army barracks and have done with it!"

But Ralph Horton followed the path on the east and met the rector waiting for him at the open door.

Just as the clocks struck the midnight hour, the two men rose from their knees. The look of despair on the young student's face had given place to one of glorious hope. As they clasped hands at parting the rector said:

"Never for a moment doubt, my friend, that He who created it is stronger than the law of heredity, and that He is able and willing to keep that which you have committed to him. But I am certain that when He taught us to pray—'Lead us not into temptation'—He meant that we were to avoid it wherever possible. Therefore, I earnestly advise you to seek another school from which your peculiar foe is excluded. I will go with you, if you wish, and we will state the situation candidly to the faculty. And now, good-night and may God keep you. I will see you again in the morning."

The rector of St. Luke's church did not lose sight of Ralph Horton until he saw him safely established in a school of equal repute with the one he had left, but where he could fight his battle against appetite without such fearful odds against him. Then he sought Andrew Hay and told him of the salvation his voice had accomplished that Easter night. And Andrew, with a great gladness in his heart, promised to stay by the boy-choir until the adult one was formed, even though a surplice a month must be furnished him at his own expense.

Colorado Springs, Col.

FOR every dollar paid the school to cultivate the intellect of this country, nine dollars are paid the saloon to blight that intellect.—Geo. W. Bain.

Ideals the Basis of Progress.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

I.

WHY should we hold ideals? Because life and growth, the development of all that is admirable and reliable, that is pure and sweet, noble and beautiful, that is grand and worthy as the end and aim of existence, proceed from ideals. The primitive hut would still shelter earth's inhabitants had not an ideal of structures more commodious, comfortable and beautiful, stimulated the thought and mechanical faculty of man. Indeed, a domicile of even the rudest form of shelter could not have materialized in response to the desire for protection and a resting place, had not the idea of such possible deliverance from the discomfort of the elements suggested the construction of a shelter.

In the world of thought, as in the world of manifestation, life is a transforming principle, constructing and reconstructing. The ideal is regenerating. The absence of the ideal is degenerating. Renewed life, renewed activity, ceaseless endeavor to become, to improve, to make beautiful, to make serve larger uses, all depend upon and are involved in ideals. Banish ideals and stagnation follows. Better be a "visionary" even, than void of ideals. Imagination on the rampage is not so stultifying as imagination inert, asleep or smothered. The power to apprehend, to conceive, to clothe and muster an idea, to form and habilitate it to a definite purpose, is the highest creative power of mind. A mind without ideals is like the working engine unharnessed to any machinery or object that is movable. Its activity accomplishes nothing but the wearing of the engine. But there is this difference between the engine and the human mind—the accomplishment of the engine through the accessory of machinery does not renew the engine nor enlarge its capacity. But the human mind is renewed in vigor and enlarged in capacity by the continued application of ideals to the uses of actual existence and the improvement of individual character.

The constructive and reconstructive power of the ideal is the basis of social evolution. It is hindered by the conservatism of habit and custom, by the remnant of the savage instinct, by the inertia of minds in bondage to the demonstration of the actual. But spite of these hindrances the altruistic spirit which overrules the universe and touches with quickening power the human mind and heart, keeps the ideal ever active, ever seeking, ever proposing a better way. The idealist is in harmony and coöperating with the universe because always proceeding toward the more perfect, the unexplored. The idealist can not fossilize, cannot settle into a rut of thought, of belief, of action. On and on into new realms of vision, a wider horizon of mental activity, a deeper search into the meanings of life experience is the tendency of mind when the ideal is accepted as the true guidance to progress. There is no limitation. The eternal now is boundless opportunity. Listlessness and indolence may rest in present imperfection and narrowness, but the inquiring, the seeking, the active mind is impelled by the universal and never ceasing operation of the infinite perfection to move on, to explore. Its empyrean ever recedes as it advances. Ideals are its pinions and the actualization of these ideals the process by which life is constantly made more bright and beautiful. Even the common and meaner things catch the radiance of its higher realm and are transformed from the dull and sordid to the image of its glory.

This uplifting transforming activity begins in the child and leaves its impression upon all the associations of its early environment. The commonest objects are magnified or beautified in its imagination. As experience, observation and the unfoldment of mental faculties brings these objects into true proportion and relation, the same activity of imagination conceives more desirable and more beautiful objects. According to the bias given to its thought by surrounding influences and teachings, the ideals of the child-mind become more and more the basis of its conduct. The child is not an automaton repeating mentally parrot-like what it has been told is good, but it intuitively forms an idea of the good for itself and in the conduct of others. The evolution of individual character proceeds, and can only proceed from the ideal, the capacity to conceive what is good, true, right, worthy, beautiful. If there is growth there must be ceaseless seeking. If there is advancement, there must be constant climbing toward ideals, ideals of truth and goodness. Ideals inspire to this effort to attain. All in human nature which is base, mean and sordid, and which is hindering to healthful growth or harmful to others, is the weakness which can be overcome by the exercise of climbing toward ideals of goodness, nobility, beneficence and usefulness, a wise application of energies to actualize ideals.

Chicago, Ill.

A Scientific Lecture Bureau.

BY T. D. CROTHERS, M. D.

A NUMBER of thoughtful temperance workers have expressed a strong conviction that the time has come for a new class of teachers on the platform. The public has lost much of its former interest in the emotional appeals of revivalists and alarmists, who seek to build up a following on fear and excitement, and the narration of sad, bitter experiences. It was estimated that over a thousand men and women were teaching the evils of alcohol from the platform continually all over the country last year. At least half of this number are occupied all the time and many of them are most earnest, excellent workers, doing a great deal of good. A large number of clergymen urge the moral side of this evil on all occasions; and a number of what are called reformed drinkers make their own experience a text and subject of warning in almost endless harangues.

The constant reiterations and statements, real and doubtful, with the arguments and passionate appeals, are so familiar that the public is indifferent. Sensible men and women reason that the facts in themselves, as seen in everyday life, are more startling than any oratorical presentation of them, but these facts are often inexplainable. The phenomena of the fascination of and degeneration from alcohol, and the means of prevention, are so far theories, on which a great variety of opinions are expressed. This confusion of theory and effort to understand and apply practical means for relief, is always an obstacle toward united efforts in all platform teaching.

During the past few years a great many new facts have been gathered by scientific men concerning alcohol and its effects, which have not been made public or popularized for the platform. These facts have now accumulated and become sufficiently established to be taught as authoritative, and will bring a new spirit and impetus to the subject. It is believed that a large number of temperance workers would welcome a series of scientific lectures on this side of the drink problem. It is proposed to establish a lecture bureau for the purpose of bringing these recent modern researches on the effects of alcohol and the disease of inebriety before popular audiences of persons interested in this subject. This bureau is simply for the purpose of arranging topics and dates and speakers, so as to economize the time and expense of the lecturers. A number of eminent men familiar with the new researches on this line have expressed a willingness to prepare and deliver one or more lectures, during the coming season, within a reasonable distance of their homes, for a small gratuity. It is proposed to have two or three lectures on the scientific side of the drink problem, delivered in at least a hundred towns and cities of the country, and try to rouse up a newer, fresher interest in this topic. These lectures will be entirely unpartisan, and simply a presentation of the cold facts, which in all cases will not conflict with any teachings of temperance workers. In reality, the conclusions from scientific study of the drink problem are clear, emphatic denials of the nature of alcohol and wider conceptions of the laws of cause and effect relating to it.

It is believed that the time has come to turn on the "new light of science," and clear away much of the doubt and prejudice existing. These efforts are simply to bring new spirit and vigor to the army of platform teachers, and help them to follow up the subject on a higher level of facts and reasoning; also to rouse and give permanent direction to much of the enthusiasm and energy that is so freely expended. Practical temperance teaching is the great demand of the day, and the public is ready to hear any one who has vital facts to present. I have consented to act as secretary to answer all questions and suggestions from any one interested in this new effort.

Hartford, Conn.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

AT midday, in Willard Hall, from five hundred to one thousand worshipers have assembled daily. About three times each week we invite the strangers in this room to stand. From twenty-five to fifty, and often a larger number, answer to this invitation. Since our sainted Chieftain entered into rest, greater earnestness and more tenderness of spirit has been manifest, many feeling that we, too, are only a step from our promoted leader, who inspired all for larger service for God and humanity. Strangers often say that what they experience in this room is beyond their largest hope, and we who have been present for more than six hundred days do not doubt the truth of their words.

. . . . . .

Evangelist David, a native of Ceylon, India, who came to America in the early fall and to Chicago, November 1, 1897, has been on the platform in Willard Hall twelve weeks, with few intervals. He teaches the Word with marvelous clearness, giving chapter and verse at every point.

This method has been the means of sending multitudes to searching the Scriptures daily. Could you look upon the hundreds sitting and standing, with pencil, paper and Bible in hand, held as if spellbound, from one hour to one hour and twenty minutes, you would feel assured of the growing hunger for the truth as it is in Christ.

At the close of the address an opportunity is given for all who will, according to the best of their knowledge, renounce everything that Christ may live in the soul to make it known. Hundreds have claimed to come into possession of the life more abundant, while other hundreds have claimed the new birth.

Continue to pray and work for this open door of Willard Hall, that it may prove the entrance into the kingdom for hundreds more.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

Encouraging News From Japan.

DEAR EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—Those who just will take a pessimistic view of things would not admit it, perhaps, but there really have been wonderful changes in Japan during the past year, and nowhere are these changes more apparent than in the line of temperance reform.

Twelve months ago the W. C. T. U. had few enthusiastic friends in the Mikado's Empire; now it is actually popular to wear the white ribbon, and there are not places enough for all those who are willing and anxious to take some definite part. "Nippon Fujin Christian Kyofu Kwai, banzai!" (Long live the W. C. T. U. of Japan.) This is the greeting heard on every hand.

Let me give you a little idea, if I can, of some of the instrumentalities God has used to bring about these marvelous changes in public sentiment. You remember I wrote you that during our campaign in the north in the autumn, we had the largest women's meetings, in some places, that had ever been held. Here is a partial report of the results of one of them, from the pen of Miss Alice Otto, of Hirosaki, Methodist missionary, and a devoted white-ribbon girl:

"Now I must tell you good news from our meetings. Three of the women from the W. C. T. U. have given their hearts to Christ, and I think no one of them had ever been inside the church till the day when you were here." Then she goes on to give me the history of each, but I will repeat a part of one only:

"The third woman is the mother of one of our little school girls, and of course received the invitation I sent to each home. At first she said she would not go, since the meeting was in the church (she was bitterly opposed to Christianity and allowed her child to come to our school only because there were no other girls' schools in the place), but the daughter begged so hard that at last she consented, to please her. She was much surprised to find that she heard only good things, and concluded that Christianity was not so bad, after all. When the invitation was given to join the society she gave her name, to the great delight of the little girl. She has never missed a meeting since, but we knew nothing of all this until our recent revival services. The first time she came, she was so moved by the testimonies that she began to speak, and said: 'For ten years I have not tasted fruit, having taken a solemn vow to give up this luxury until I discovered the way to make my home happy and train my children to be good and pure, and I have at last found it in the Christian religion.'"

The writer tells much more that is of great interest—how the husband drinks, and how difficult it will be for this "babe in Christ" to stand, etc. Will you not all remember her at the noontide hour? Perhaps the greatest revival of the year, in Japan, swept over Hirosaki at this time, and scores were brought to the Saviour.

Miss Otto has prepared and printed a program for the local W. C. T. U. meetings for the whole year, and these have been sent out to all unions in the empire for a model, another comrade who realizes that "the joy of life is doing good according to a plan."

Through the coöperation of Misses Allen, Fife and others, several W. C. T. Unions and L. T. L's have been formed since my last letter. In two schools where there are children's societies, the Japanese teachers have become so "full of the spirit" that they want to organize a band to make their meetings more stirring. At one place a girl has been elected president of the Legion, the boys all voting for her, though many of them her senior. I was sure the "new woman" would come to Japan, but I had not believed the boys would so gallantly open the gates. Lo, a greater than Deborah may even now be here!

The Tokio leaders have arranged for four mass-meetings during the year—especially for laboring men—at Y. M. C. A. Hall. The first of these was held on the night of February 11, and notwithstanding the fact that it was almost the very worst night of the whole winter, an audience of fully seven hundred people gathered. There was excellent music, and everybody seemed cheery and impressionable. Just the atmosphere, you know, that makes every one forget class differences and "love his neighbor as himself." Hon. Taro Ando, who is such a favorite in all circles, made the big speech of the evening. He "clinched" what the rest of us had said, and at the close asked how many would sign the pledge. Instantly and simultaneously a hundred hands were raised, and at the very same moment—in response to a signal—the band commenced playing, "Marching Through Georgia." It was a climax, I tell you. Can any one feel more intense patriotism than can fill the soul of a woman far from home? These are just a few of the things which maketh the hearts of the workers glad.

I must not close without asking you to pray especially for the success of the National Convention of the Native Women, which comes April 2, 3 and 4, in Yokohama. Mrs. Yajima and I have just spent a week there, holding seven meetings and making all preliminary arrangements. Pray that the influence of the convention may be felt, not only in that wicked city, but throughout the entire land. Pray, too, for

Your loyal comrade,
CLARA PARRISH.

Tokio, Japan, Feb. 14, 1898.

A Letter From Jerusalem.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Greetings from Jerusalem to my comrades, in the midst of snow and sleet, with a fine rage of the elements, gotten up in true American style. It is impossible to go out, so can take time for writing, a function which has simply been impossible of late. If one ever ought to do what one can not, I ought to have sent a letter from Cairo, Egypt, telling of my delightful visit. As the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Harvey of the American mission, I was in the very center of good work. Miss Thompson, the resident leader of our W. C. T. U. work, lives there, and is a host in herself. Everything was done to make my visit enjoyable, and to give me opportunities of presenting our topics to different classes of people. I was there just a week, and in that time spoke in drawing-rooms and church, addressing ladies' meetings, teachers, theological students, and large audiences, representing Christians, Coptics and Moslems, some of whom called upon me afterwards for personal inquiry and conversation. Also spoke in the schools and to the native Christian Endeavor girls. Had large numbers to sign the pledge, in schools and public meetings, and used up many yards of white ribbon.

I visited some of the Moslem homes, where, of course, I could only speak through an interpreter, as in the schools and some of my other services. Had the special privilege of visiting the prisons, and was much interested in the women, who have recently been placed in the care of the wife of the general superintendent, who seems "the right man in the right place." With his experience and under his guidance I am sure the needed reforms will be brought about, and they may not move more slowly than in some countries where we might reasonably expect greater things.

One sees little drunkenness, for in these countries, "those that are drunken are drunken in the night." It is everywhere admitted that indulgence in strong drinks is on the increase and that English customs and habits have had a demoralizing tendency. I was able to get at some facts and figures, rather astonishing in themselves, when one is constantly being told, "there is very little need of temperance work in these countries." I promised to send pledges for the schools and literature on various departments of our work with copies of THE UNION SIGNAL.

It was gratifying to find all our missionaries so thoroughly with us, both in sympathy and practice. I am sure British mothers, who have sons in the army stationed here, owe a debt of gratitude to Mrs. Harvey, who always keeps open house and gives a motherly welcome to the soldiers. It was good to see both the Highland costume and the red coats, and to know their owners would not be tempted by the wine cup, but by influence and example would be shown a better way of dispensing hospitality and having a thoroughly good time.

I shall not attempt to write of the Nile, the visit to the Pyramids and Sphinx or of the wonderful panorama of life at Cairo, or the time spent at the Boulac Museum. The one thought in going to the latter place was to meet a royal personage, from whose hand the sceptre fell more than three thousand and five hundred years ago. Looking at the rigid features of the king, whose wrath was feared by Moses and who so cruelly oppressed the Hebrews, there came thoughts of the retribution which long ago fell upon Egypt. For hours after I felt as in a haunted presence, which was only laid by earnest prayer, that as Isaiah's prophecy had had its partial fulfillment in the past, so there might come the better days indicated, "And the Lord shall smite Egypt; he shall smite and heal it; and they shall return to the Lord, and he shall be entreated of them and shall heal them."

At Port Said I longed for an "out and out," up to date, resident evangelist, who, by purity of life and earnestness of effort would meet some of the crying needs of the place. It used to be considered the dumping ground for the refuse villainy of two hemispheres, but the Suez canal and its railway connecting with the Egyptian road at Ismailia makes it the halfway house on the highway to the East, and it is estimated that fully half-a-million people call here yearly. Boats leave every week for the Levant and for Jaffa and Beyrout, ports for the Holy Land. Passengers are detained for trains and steamers, often of a Sunday, as we were. The streets are thronged with people, travelers, soldiers, sailors, from every nation and of every tongue. There is a finely decorated English bar-room, and plenty of places where temptations to evil are openly flaunted and made persuasive. Ah, what might not be done if two consecrated men, speaking English, French and Arabic, were located in a bright and pleasantly furnished reading-room, and who were alert to save men from the surrounding perils.

"Throw out the life line" would be as applicable here as from the deck of a sinking ship. That reminds me that Mr. Sankey was in Cairo and kindly sang that hymn at the close of one of my meetings.

Pass my call along in both England and America for volunteers for Port Said, and for means to inaugurate and carry on a gospel temperance mission there. I was told an American vessel anchored in one of the ports recently and the sailors drank so terribly and held such high carnival that a Moslem said, "The Christians serve their God well." What can be done to offset this? I wish I could make my cry heard "round the world." In the midst of it all I hear a wonderful refrain, "All the earth shall be filled with the glory of God."

On the 23d of January we sailed from Port Said, with the expectation of reaching Jaffa the next morning, and of spending the following night in Jerusalem. What really became of us must be told in another letter.

Your "round-the-world missioner."

MRS. J. K. BARNEY.

Jerusalem, Feb. 15, 1898.

Spanish Work in New Mexico.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For the encouragement of those interested in Spanish work, we would say that much good and effectual seed sowing for the temperance cause in New Mexico has been accomplished during the past year through the efficient labors of Mrs. E. J. Harwood, the state superintendent of Spanish work. Early in the year Mrs. Harwood inaugurated a series of Demorest medal contests in the Spanish evangelistic training school of which her husband, Rev. E. J. Harwood, is superintendent and she a faithful teacher. Several most successful contests were held, the recitations having been first translated into the Spanish language.

Those unacquainted with actual conditions in New Mexico may not be impressed with the significance of this special work, but we are persuaded that every such effort put forth in the interests of the Spanish people has been a sledge hammer for the cause of total abstinence and prohibition.

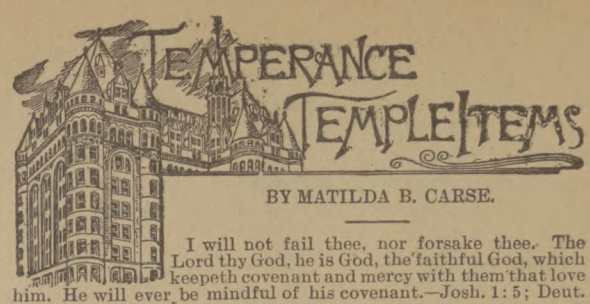
During the summer vacation when those young men were at their homes in different parts of the territory, our hearts were often rejoiced to hear of them holding temperance meetings among their own people, and repeating the recitations used in the contests, on several occasions creating a real wave of temperance enthusiasm. God speed the day when these young men shall be called to fill pulpits of Spanish churches in this territory.

Brother and Sister Harwood have been in the Spanish mission work in New Mexico for the past twenty-five years, under the auspices of the M. E. church, faithfully teaching the Christ gospel and living the Christ life. Many strong, noble characters are being trained by them for the Master's service, who shall unite in calling them blessed. Our contest for humanity would soon result in a glorious conquest for the Prince of Peace if in all the department work of our white-ribbon army, strong, sturdy, Christian prohibitionists were being manufactured in the same proportion to the numbers reached, as in the department of Spanish work in New Mexico. For many years to come the controlling power of this territory will be in the hands of the Spanish speaking people, hence the great importance of this special line of work. Sisters, give it the added strength of your earnest prayers.

MARY J. BORDEN,
Pres. New Mexico W. C. T. U.

"ONLY the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the Golden Age of Man."

Local Union.



DEAR SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNION:—It is the part of courage as well as of honesty to confess to a mistake of judgment, and that act I am about to perform. You will remember that this column was placed in my hands at the General Officers' meeting following the last Convention, with the understanding that it was to be used twice each month for the "Mother Experience" column of questions and answers, and on the alternate weeks for a course of study which I was to present in outline. Experience has convinced me that it was a mistake to expect that a satisfactory course of study could be given through the medium of one column in any paper. The only way to insure success in the course itself and interest on the part of those who may wish to pursue it is to have its outline given in such form that the end may be seen from the beginning and the unions know from the outset what they are about to undertake. Therefore, after consulting with Mrs. Stevens I have decided to attempt no longer to carry on a thing which, being unsatisfactory in form to myself, can not fail to be so to others. Just as soon as possible I shall issue, in pamphlet form, a series of questions and answers for every week in the year on the subjects already decided upon; viz, the history of the W. C. T. U. and its various lines of work, and the study of Christian sociology, with Dr. Stuckenberg's latest work as the foundation text book. Then this column can be utilized as a side help. Difficulties that may arise in the minds of any can be discussed here; questions will be answered and the whole subject can, I am sure, be treated in a much more satisfactory way than if we had attempted to pursue the original, unfeasible plan. We learn chiefly through our blunders and I have certainly learned through this. I thank the sisters from whom I have received such kind, appreciative words concerning the course even in its embryonic state. If you will show the same patience with me I feel quite sure we shall have something practical and helpful before the next convention—a long time before it, I hope. Meantime, it will be my aim to make this column serve the local union so far as possible, so please send questions and problems ad libitum. Send also helpful programs, plans, explanations of the carrying out of programs, etc.

From Mrs. Nettie B. Fernald, who gave the helpful program on "Foods" comes the following explanation: "The program was made up of original papers and talks. As we have such women as Florence M. Kingsley, author of 'Titus,' Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National Y secretary, Mrs. Lida Scott, daughter of Dr. I. K. Funk, and other talented mothers, it is always easy to have home talent. Mrs. Kingsley gave a most instructive talk on milk; its value for children and for grown people as well—a perfect food for baby, helpful when taken hot by those older than the baby, good for growing girls and boys instead of tea and coffee; need of using it freely in home diet. Mrs. Scott gave a paper on meat, having consulted beforehand good cookbooks and a physiology to ascertain how to prepare meats properly, also their value in building up waste tissue. [To this might well be added a study of their abuse, and the question as to whether they have any value as a food which is not far better supplied byother food substances.]

"Mrs. Ella A. Boole gave the closing talk on, "Alcohol not a Food." So much has been written upon this subject that it is difficult to select references. Send to the W. T. P. A. and the very best leaflets will be sent. Remember this is the most important part of your program and select some one of your number who will be willing to study well and give the cream of her research. So you will grow in knowledge, adding to knowledge, temperance.

Don't close such a meeting as is here described by one word or thought which might mar its effect. The aim of every right mothers' meeting is to make the mothers wiser, better and happier in order to cultivate the sweet home graces of wisdom, diligence, faith, virtue, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, and last and greatest of all, love. Follow a meeting on such a practical subject by one on "How to help other mothers."

K. L. S.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. The Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him. He will ever be mindful of his covenant.—Josh. 1:5; Deut. 7:9; Psa. 111:5.

WHEN our beloved ones pass from our sight into the glory of the unseen, although our faith assures us of their perfect joy, our human hearts cry out for one more look at the dear face that we so loved. What a comfort in such an hour if we have a life size picture of them, in all the glow of life to the very color of the dress they wore. Such a picture as this has just been completed of Miss Willard by one of Chicago's great portrait painters. It is painted in water colors on porcelain, life size. Those who were best acquainted with her, who have been called in to view it, can find no flaw in the beautiful counterpart of our great Chieftain.

✠

Miss Willard a year ago last November wore a gown at the St. Louis National Convention, which we all greatly admired. It was a dark blue woolen fabric, with jacket lapels faced with white satin, and a white satin blouse. In the painting she is attired in this gown. The shimmer of the satin and the lily-like whiteness of her face find a beautiful contrast in the golden ripple of her hair and the heavenly blue of her eyes. Never before have I seen a picture of her so beautiful and perfect. The company, who did such splendid work in lithographing the World's Fair paintings at Chicago, has contracted with the Temple trustees to reproduce a picture, by a wonderful new process, as perfect in every detail as the beautiful painting on porcelain I have described above; in fact they say we will not be able when it is put side by side with the original to tell them apart.

✠

We hope to sell hundreds of thousands of the above picture; every one will purchase it as soon as they have seen it, as its artistic merit is beyond dispute, and the price will be within the bounds of the most slender purse. Already we are flooded with letters from unions and individuals desirous of becoming agents for the sale of the picture. We wish to say to all such that it will not be on sale for three weeks yet, as the process of reproduction is very slow. We wish also in this connection to say that this picture is the only article we have for sale for the benefit of the Temple. No money comes to the Temple from the sale of Miss Willard's book, unless generous white-ribbon agents donate a part of their percentage. No money comes to the Temple from the sale of any commodities. The need of this notice will be recognized from the following card displayed in a grocer's window in Lacon, Ill.: "Save the W. C. T. U. Temple." We take this method to reply to the many letters of inquiry in regard to the above. There seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding which I hope all who read this will help to correct.

✠

Mr. J. Hale Ramsay, Montreal, Canada, is one of the greathearts of our temperance reform. He has just sent his check for $100, which he says he does "at great sacrifice"; he adds that he would "send thousands if his means were not so limited." Two years ago he gave a premium of $50 to the person who filled the most Temple Wheels. Mrs. Naomi Bradley, Bolivar, N. Y., pledged $100 at a Temple rally at Buffalo. She has sent her check for the above amount. The three following unions have completed their hundred dollar pledges by sending the following amounts: Churchville, Pa., $34; Washington, Ia., $76; Rock Island, Ill., Central, $76.

✠

All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send a two cent stamp to her either for a subscription card, Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago. Or if you prefer you can send to Miss Cornelia Dow, Portland, Me.

Our Children.

Now the Noisy Winds Are Still.

BY MRS. MARY MAPES DODGE.

NOW the noisy winds are still;
April's coming up the hill!
All the spring is in her train,
Led by shining ranks of rain;
Pit, pat, patter, clatter,
Sudden sun, and clatter, patter!
First the blue, and then the shower;
Bursting bud, and smiling flower;
Brooks set free with tinkling ring;
Birds too full of song to sing;
Crisp old leaves astir with pride,
Where the timid violets hide;
All things ready with a will,—
April's coming up the hill!

Hunting Easter Eggs.

LET me tell you of some merry egg-hunters I once saw, and of the big, downy nest where fifty lovely eggs cuddled in soft gray moss. When I first saw the nest it was empty, and oh, what merry laughter there was as one by one the pretty eggs were placed there—not by biddy. She would have cackled with surprise to see the creamy-brown of her egg-shells changed to bright red and purple and gold.

No, it was fifty pairs of lively feet, and fifty pairs of small hands that hunted for the eggs and then brought them to the mossy nest, and this is how it happened:

"Once upon a time," but not "long ago," there was a lady who wished that all her little friends might have as much fun hunting eggs as she had when she was a little girl.

But she had no barn, no haymow, not even one hen. In spite of this she invited fifty small boys and girls at Easter-time "to hunt eggs in my house!"

You can imagine how surprised those children were, and you may be sure that they were all there on time.

It was a big house, with five large rooms on the first floor, and all opening into one another so that the children could go in a circle from room to room. In the center of the largest room was a low stand, and on this was the big nest, all covered inside and out with silvery Florida moss. Around this were gathered the eager children.

"Now, my little friends," said the lady, "somewhere in these five rooms, tucked away in all sorts of cozy corners, are fifty Easter eggs, each having on it in letters of gold the name of some boy or girl here. No egg is out of reach of the smallest child, and there must be no climbing or moving of things in the rooms.

"When I blow this whistle you may all start in different directions and hunt. As soon as you find an egg bring it to the nest and go to hunt for more. If you find an egg with your name on it, it is yours at once; but you will like it better if you put it with the other eggs until the hunt is over. Now!"

S-s-s-s-t went the shrill little whistle, and away sped one hundred nimble feet.

What squeals of delight there were when an egg was found and proudly brought to its place in the great nest! What funny remarks there were over the first finds.

Ned called out, "This was an easy egg!" and sweet little Cathy said, "Mine was very hard," for of course all those eggs were hard eggs!

The little girls got tired first, but the boys would not stop until the fifty were found. Then the whistle was blown and the children gathered about the full nest.

Dick's was the last find, and as he was the biggest boy there he counted to see if there were really fifty eggs.

"Why, there's fifty-one!" exclaimed he, and sure enough a pure white egg lay among the fifty gaily-colored ones like a lily in a pansy-bed.

What a surprise for everybody! How did the egg get among its bright companions?

Could any boy have brought it in his pocket by mistake?

"Who found this white egg?" asked the children's friend.

"Oh, I did," said Dick, "and it was a hard one, too. I saw lots of easy ones, but as I was the biggest I thought I ought to leave them for the littlest ones. The hunt was almost over and I thought I shouldn't find a single hard find."

"But where did you find it? I hid only fifty colored eggs," said the lady.

"The whistle was blowing for us to stop hunting," said Dick, "and I happened to notice pussy curled up in her basket by the fire in the dining-room, so I stopped to pat her, and as she crooked up her back my hand touched something hard under the cushion in her basket. I lifted it and peeped under—and there was the pretty white egg!"

Little Dick was at first troubled a bit, but soon he laughed loudest of them all when it was discovered that his find was a porcelain darning egg!

When later Baby Robin was brought in by his nurse to see the happy little egg-hunters, he explained the mystery by going straight to pussy's basket and saying:

"Pussy, baby hide mamma's boofer egg in your baxit for you. Did you find your Easter egg?"

And Dick had the reward for his unselfishness in letting others have the "easy finds," when wee Robin saw the white egg among the others and cried out with glee:

"Come, pussy, here's your boofer egg!"—Eugenie L. Beckwith in Youth's Companion.

How They Fooled Auntie.

BY S. ROSALIE SILL.

"WE came just on purpose to April-fool you," said Lena and Hazel, as they came bounding into auntie's room, with sparkling eyes and glowing cheeks.

"Dear me," said auntie, from the depths of her wheeled chair, "I am now nearly sixty, and I was never yet fooled. What put it into the heads of two such pussy cats as you to fool me?"

"We thought it would be such fun," said Lena.

"But how are you going to fool me?"

"Oh, papa is bringing in a basket."

"And the basket is full—just as full as can be," said Hazel, who is a little tot. The basket being brought in and deposited near auntie, she gingerly took up the top package, saying, "I am half in fear. What if it should prove to be dynamite." Then both of the girls clapped their hands and laughed, while auntie, who was feeling her way slowly, smelled of the package saying, "It smells like fish."

Amid much fun the package was opened, revealing several large and beautiful fish.

"We'll have some fried for dinner," said auntie, as she took up another package.

"It smells like grapes, yet it is not the season for grapes."

Then how the girls did laugh, for did they not know they had especially saved some of their finest packed grapes for this very occasion.

"I cannot tell what is in this package," said auntie. "I cannot smell anything, and this may prove to be the dynamite. I think I will leave it unopened."

"Do please open it, auntie," said Lena. How she did wish to surprise her aunt with the beautiful white hickory nuts she and Hazel had gathered for her on that hazy, lovely day during the previous October. How well she remembered how soft had been the beds of moss on which the nuts had lain, and how spicy the air had been which came up from the woodland.

"Well, I never! Who ever once thought I would have been afraid of a harmless package of hickory nuts. It was the dread of being April-fooled. But, girls, I think your fooling has been a harmless and profitable one, I wish other little girls, and boys, too, would go and do the same."

"All parents should learn their little ones to turn a day of bad repute into one of joy and blessing," said the mother of the girls.

What do my little readers think of what the mother said?

"WHY are you eating that piece of pie in front of the glass, Johnnie?"

"So I'll think it's two pieces instead of only one."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The beautiful Eastertide is almost here again, and I would like my little friends to enjoy it in the deepest, truest sense. To most children Easter is principally associated with a supply of gorgeously colored eggs. They make charming gifts, and so give pleasure, but the true spirit of Easter is the germ of life within the egg, symbolical of the immortality of our Lord Jesus, who arose from the grave.

We make gifts to our friends at this season because of Christ's gift of eternal life to us through His death and resurrection. Will my boys and girls give to each other kindness, courtesy and affection, and to their parents love and obedience, and so fulfill the divine command and make themselves worthy of the sacrifice Christ made for us all? I am sure you will, and may this Easter be fraught with happiness and holiness to each one of you.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I wrote to Aunt Jane once, so I will write to you. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and I like to read the Children's Page. We have an L. T. L. here that we just started. I want to join the Cozy Corner. My aunt made me a white-ribbon baby when I was only three years old. I am always going to work for temperance.

Your niece,

GRACE B. VAN AUKEN.

Watervliet, N. Y.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—We are temperance girls fourteen years old. We have never seen any letters from here, so we thought we would write one. Our papas vote the liberty ticket, and our mammas belong to the W. C. T. U. We expect to join soon. We have both signed the pledge. We take THE UNION SIGNAL, and enjoy reading it very much.

JENNETTE REED AND BRUCIE ALLEN.

White Cottage, O.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I am a little girl eight years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and I enjoy reading the Children's Page, and can hardly wait till it comes each week. I have a big brother named Arthur. My papa is a minister. We are all temperance folks. I vote for the pansy; it is one of my favorite flowers. I hope all the boys and girls will work for temperance.

Yours truly,

NEVA M. KISSELL,

Ripple, Ind.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl eleven years old. My mamma is the president of the W. C. T. U. She has belonged to it for fifteen years. We have no L. T. L. here now. I think I ought to belong to the Cozy Corner because my name was put in the corner-stone when I was quite small. I have been a temperance girl all my life and always expect to be.

Your niece, LENA HAMILL.

West Union, Ill.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

II.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of ten letters.
My 10, 4, 2, 6 is admired by all.
My 8, 2, 3 is made from coal.
My 9, 6, 5, 1, 4 to welcome.
My 7, 2, 6 is spoken of in the Bible.
My whole is something that will soon be in great demand.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MARCH 24.

10. Aunt Mary.

Correct answer to No. 8 was sent by Alice Adams, Prescott, Arizona; to No. 9, by Ethel C. Watts, New York City.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON, MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.
OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Women and the Resurrection.

TIMIDLY in the first dusk of day after Christ's tragic death, some women came to the tomb. They were three, the divine number. Perhaps they had not loved better than John or Peter, but being women they must do something. They brought their spices—spices that purify, sweeten, preserve. How the world needs them yet, the unclean, greedy, spoiling world, needs the spices of Christian women in philanthropy, reform, social life, education, politics, religion, in the palace on Capitol hill and in the commons among the submerged, for the white-souled baby and for the blackened desperado. The literal reading of I Corinthians 2:14 puts a holy meaning to all this—"Now thanks be unto God who always leads us forth to triumph with the Anointed One" (there could have been no triumph without the resurrection), "and who diffuses by us the fragrance of the knowledge of him in every place." We, to whom a whiff of fragrant mint recalls a scene long since with mother at the old spring, to whom a breath of summer brings the sweetbriar at the window-sill far away, to whom the subtle perfume of the lilac is as the flutter of an angel wing over the white bed of childhood know the power of association and will keep ourselves sweet as sunlight, that the "fragrance of the knowledge of Him" be by us diffused everywhere. The glory of it!

"He is not here." It took an earthquake to open the tomb. The world fears shocks; loves calm, even the calm of spiritual death. We need expect no opening of the tomb in which lies dormant, if not dead, the national conscience, round which are piled rocks of selfishness, indulgence, indifference, greed, without shaking the continent. Welcome the earthquake.

Then came that revulsion, the marvel of all time: "He is risen!" No sting in death from that glad hour to this. No doubt of life from that glad hour to this. The angel lifted the stone that they might see this immortal miracle with their mortal eyes, saying with loving assurance—for being women they were fearful—"Be not afraid." What can hold a woman to earth after that? Touched by divine breath, the Holy Spirit, she rises above tuition; she has intuition. Obstructions are become her throne. Diffidence, weakness, legends of the past, the dart of malice, the hard hurt of poverty, the slugshot of indolence, the poisoned arrow of misapprehension are calling out all the innate forces of her soul. When she is weak then is she strong, for God comforts "as one whom His mother comforteth," and the old significance of that word is, "to bring strength." Sitting there on the stone God's messengers have rolled away, do not forget your weak points, woman! Do not believe that only words of honey are fit for your ear. Be thankful for disaster, for blows even. How else shall you grow strong enough to sit on the rolled-away stone?

Then came divine marching orders: "Go quickly and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead." Unknown women the first human messengers to sound the bugle note of victory over death! The women of our day—some of them—would have shrunk back trembling. They would have said: "There is some mistake. I must go home now and look after the breakfast. It is not seemly for a woman to take, even from the lips of an angel at the tomb of a risen Christ, this wonderful word. I have a son; wait till he is grown. I will try to rear him to go and tell the world our Lord is not dead."

No lagging footsteps now. "And they did run to bring His disciples word." An ordinary journey is retarded by going hither and thither on errands for others. But heavenly mathematics are not governed by earthly tables of distance. When we run to bring unhappy, discouraged humanity this glad word, we are the more furthered on our own way. Poor Christian, when you are so lame, plodding your own path, so footsore you can not turn aside on heavenly errands for others, are you sure you will know the goal when you come in sight of it?

"And they did run." If they had hidden, even behind their cloak of womanliness, and refused, even through a delicate sense of unworthiness, to go when the angel sent them, to hurry with all their mights toward those despairing disciples and tell them the blessedest news ever carried to human ears, then what? Then they would never have been met in the way; would not have been the first to whom Christ announced himself; would not have heard "All hail" from our Lord's own lips; would not have clasped His feet in the dawn of the first Lord's Day; would not have received from His own lips the divine commission, "Go tell my brethren." More than this. Not they alone would have been losers. How should anybody know "the power of His resurrection" as did these first witnesses? The best news a groaning, unbelieving, dying world ever could hear, the news of a Live Christ, would have been kept from that world till the Lord might find those who could forget themselves in announcing Him. This message to woman echoes down the centuries: "Tell my disciples" not death, but life, more abundant life. Frances Willard, Mary T. Lathrap, Elizabeth Greenwood and a host of elect women in these later days have heard and heeded, have helped towards perpetual Easter. Life, life, life!

In this hour, when the Easter dawn of some is clouded by our late sorrow and the "pulse of hope beats low," resurrection assurance was never so blessed. Our work is God's, it cannot fail. Our Saint Frances was lent us long enough to demonstrate the power "which leads us forth to triumph." No home-going of Jesus-folk ever told this heavenly news more sweetly, as was like her; the new white dress "lovely for a shroud," as one would say of a bride's going-away gown; the absolute touch of the mother beside whom she "crept"; the buoyant rapture of the soul, long cognizant of the beauty God's friends grow into, in radiant oneness with Him. "How beautiful"; the lifting of heaven's western gate, after her tired dust was left in God's Acre, so that the very clouds were a winter rainbow.

The W. C. T. U. of the world, "led forth to triumph with the Anointed One," has never seen so meaningful an Easter as God has planned this to be for us. And clearly still sounds the Master's voice, "Go tell my brethren."

A Plan of Battle.

THE Voice some time ago named six objective points to reach which the temperance host, however divided in other respects, might present an unbroken front:

1. To compel the more than 300 universities and colleges of America to protect their students with clean and anti-liquor surroundings.

2. To prevail upon the 115,000 physicians in the nation to cease prescribing alcohol for internal use, except as they would prescribe other poisons.

3. To bring the leading life insurance companies to acknowledge publicly what they admit privately, that total abstainers are at least twenty per cent safer risks than moderate drinkers, and then to take the further logical step to grant these total abstainers the benefit of their abstemious habits in lower insurance.

4. See that the millions of children in the Sunday-schools are systematically fortified against the drink habit by moral and spiritual arguments, as they are now beginning to be fortified in the public schools by physiological and hygienic arguments.

5. That the 100,000 clergymen systematically, once a month at least, inculcate from the pulpit the advance arguments for temperance.

6. To prevail upon the industrial and commercial classes to recognize the vital bearing of total abstinence on their respective interests.

We print these in full because we believe they might suggest to many of our local unions lines of work in which they might profitably engage, and further, we would be glad to set our bright women to thinking of the best means to reach some of the ends, and be ready for some plan to present at the annual gathering of the clans.

The fourth and fifth points, as we all know, the W. C. T. U. has for years worked persistently to secure. The fourth, indeed, we consider practically accomplished by the introduction into the International Lessons of a temperance lesson, not as an alternative with a review or missionary lesson, but as a regular part of the work. In many places, too, our women find no difficulty in getting the ministers of the various denominations to preach regular temperance sermons. But this has not been secured generally, and we shall rejoice to have the coöperation of other wings of the temperance army.

We have already joined the Voice in its work in the colleges by our petitions to Yale, but there is a greater work still in this line which our white-ribbon women can do. Let every woman and every union inform themselves concerning the status of the temperance question in the colleges and universities in their own vicinity, and bring all possible pressure to bear to secure total abstinence and prohibition wherever these are not already enforced in these institutions.

By means of our temperance hospital, and by constant agitation, we have long been working to influence physicians to take the stand indicated in the second point with regard to alcohol, and to find substitutes for its use as rapidly as possible.

We do not hesitate to say that the W. C. T. U. may be counted on to join in any well concerted plan to reach all of the ends mentioned in the above.

The Writer of Miss Willard's Life.

THE white-ribbon world is accustomed to think of Miss Anna Gordon as Miss Willard's private secretary, as the unifier and builder of the L. T. L's. as a song writer, as the assistant secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., and as a wise little woman, with the faculty of smoothing out everything from a big Home Protection petition to the ruffled feelings of the most dignified and self-important man or woman on the planet. All have wondered at her successes, few have really known her power.

In a sketch of her in the New York Tribune last August, written from an interview with Miss Willard while she was at Ogunquit, Maine, just previous to the great Conventions, we find the Chieftain speaking in this wise of the time when Miss Gordon served her in the Boston Moody meetings as organist, and thereafter: "I soon learned to turn over to her my letters and messages and plans as well. I have not known her equal in prompt and accurate execution of commissions, skillful style of correspondence and tactful meeting of people." Of the lecture trips she planned those early days, showing town, hostess, place of meeting, time of trains, etc., Miss Willard used playfully to say that if she could only pin them on her back she could go the country over in the capacity of an express package. Beginning with such capabilities it is not strange that Miss Willard should have said in the close of interview alluded to, "There is history yet to be made by Anna Gordon. She is in her happy prime, in better health than ever, with a rich experience and an ever widening outlook. Best of all she grows steadily in the sweet grace of humility and the crowning beatitude of loyalty to our Heavenly Father."

It is interesting now to know that a part of this history is to be the putting into literary form of the beautiful life of Miss Willard. Nothing could be more satisfactory to white-ribboners than this, and no other could do it in its entirety so well. She alone can give the heart-to-heart testimony that the world wants. She has all of the data and the literary skill as well. And she has the self-sacrifice to do it now, even while her heart is flooded with exquisite pain and tempered with exquisite memories, in order that the sisterhood and the world may have a history of our leader's life thus fittingly enshrined, rather than allow incomplete and unauthentic works lacking the touch, the sympathy, the spirit of the movement to which the Chieftain was consecrated, to preoccupy the ground. White-ribboners especially will owe a debt of gratitude to her for this supreme effort.

Miss Willard's Will.

THIS unique document has been much commented upon by the daily papers of Chicago, and will be of great interest to all who knew the writer. It is free from legalities, is not technical, and is as unconventional as was the author. At the same time it is religious and affectionate, and has a large block of temperance in it. The original is in Miss Willard's own hand, and is written on a single sheet of note paper and with the freedom which indicates that it was her first copy and that it was written without studious effort, after the subject had been digested in her own mind. There is no codicil, as some have supposed. This is the first and last and only will of Miss Willard:

EVANSTON, ILL., November 15, 1895.

This is my last will and testament, after fifty-six years of my Heavenly Father's discipline and blessing to prepare me for better work hereafter (as I believe) in wonderful worlds unknown:

All of my personal property and the summer homes at Twilight Park, Catskill mountains, New York; Pacific Coast Chautauqua, near Astoria, Oregon, and near Bar Harbor, Maine, ("Willard's Acre")—of all of which I have deeds—I bequeath to my beloved Anna Gordon who is to have them all out and out and forever. The Rest Cottage home at Evanston, Illinois, (deed recorded in Chicago) I bequeath to my beloved sister, Mary Bannister Willard, and to Anna Gordon equally to be used by them or dealt with as they may deem best during their lifetime and to be made available to either or both of my nieces, Katharine Willard Baldwin and Mary Willard, if they should have need thereof, but to revert, aside from the claimants herein named, to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the purpose of teaching boys and girls the evil effects of alcoholics and tobacco upon the tissues of the body and temper of the soul and to indoctrinate them in habits of personal purity in word and deed. (This disposition of the dear old home is in accordance with the understanding I had with my beloved mother who hallowed it by so much of her life and by her triumphant passage to heaven from within its peaceful walls.)

Remembrances of me are to be given by Anna Gordon to my dear relatives and comrades according to her knowledge of my wishes. My dear friend, Kate A. Jackson, is to choose whatever she would like as souvenirs of one who knew and loved her long, and gratefully remembers her loving kindness in earlier days.

To my beloved Isabel Somerset, who has everything that heart could wish, I have nothing to leave save as she may choose any souvenirs she likes, and the undying gratitude toward one whom my mother loved from the first hour of her coming into our lives even as I did. I make her and Anna Gordon my literary executors and the executors of this, my will and testament.

In my personal property is, as a matter of course, included the birthday fund of three thousand dollars ($3,000) given by sister white-ribboners on my fiftieth birthday.

(Signed) FRANCES E. WILLARD.

(Witnesses.)
SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ADA M. MELVILLE.

IN a spirit of fairness we gave place last week to a second correspondence on the subject of the position of the Wesleyan Church of England on the temperance question as represented by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. We believe with our good prohibition brother that the evil is to be wiped out eventually by the ballot, but we submit if his policy of non-agitation would ever bring that day. The question voted down last year by the Wesleyan Conference of England was the proposition to elect no liquor dealers to office in the church, and it was that action which was defended in Rev. Hughes' letter and not the question of expelling them from the church. All the bad conditions in this country any one can sum up, all the lack of temperance progress in England claimed, all of the ignorance of conditions in foreign lands attributed to other writers, none of these things mitigate the fact that leading ministers, followers of John Wesley, are not willing to take a stand against the official complicity of the church with the liquor traffic. We ask again, where are they as temperance leaders? Have they progressed a step beyond advocating personal abstinence? Do they even stand there, or is it simply moderation they preach? The brother wouldn't be so severe about going "over the seas" to criticise if he would remember that THE UNION SIGNAL is the organ of the World's W. C. T. U. as well as a National organ, and that many of its writers are more familiar with conditions in other lands than in America.

THE new scientific temperance law of Illinois is being well enforced. The Chicago board of education has adopted for use in the city schools, text-books authorized by the National W. C. T. U.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Lillian M. Phelps, of Canada, elocutionist and orator, has been lecturing in Baltimore, Maryland.

Mr. Heli Chatelain, who went out some time ago under the Philafrican Liberators' League, writes that he has just reached the spot in West Africa where he will build his station and open his mission.

Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell informs us that it is almost certain that Miss Willard's face will be carved on the western staircase of the state capitol at Albany, N. Y. Mrs. Howell's husband is state architect and both are greatly interested in the matter.

Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger, writes appreciative words of the National organ, and adds, "In Ohio we glory over but one thing and that is that we are out of debt and have money in the bank. May this also yet be the lot of our dear UNION SIGNAL."

John B. Culpepper has been lecturing in West Virginia. He writes that often he sees from seventy-five to two hundred don the white ribbon at the special W. C. T.U. service which he always gives with his gospel work, and that our cause is growing with thinking and reading people. His address is Fort Worth, Tex., to which place he moved some months ago.

The Third Annual Conference for Ministers and Christian Workers will hold its sessions in Chicago, at the Bible Institute, 80 Institute Place, throughout the month of April. It is free, undenominational, and open to all interested in any line of Christian work. Mr. Moody will be present for some days at the opening, and many other noted workers will be in attendance.

Alice Stone Blackwell writes that at the congressional hearing given to the advocates of equal suffrage at Washington, William Balderston, of Boise, sketched the effects of woman suffrage in Idaho. He said: "An interesting result of the new law was observed during the session of the legislature last winter. In Idaho there had been a law legalizing gambling. Up to the time of the adoption of equal suffrage, it would have been impracticable to repeal it, but when a bill was introduced last winter for that purpose, it went through with a large majority. The majority for it was universally credited to the fact of the addition of the woman element to the electorate."

Rev. R. A. White took THE UNION SIGNAL to task for its editorial of January 27, based on utterances concerning laboring women attributed to him by the daily press; and enclosed in his letter a long newspaper report of a subsequent sermon on the same subject. A reply was sent to Brother White at once assuring him that we desired to do no one an injustice and offering him space to make a denial, or such modification as would fairly represent what he said at the Chicago Neighborhood house. He did not avail himself of this offer nor has he made any denial in either of the two letters received from him, except by inference. In reply to our invitation he characterizes our editorial as "absolutely misleading" and refers to his printed sermon as representing his views and from which he thinks we ought to correctly represent him. But unfortunately the sermon is not necessarily at variance with the other utterances attributed to him, and all we can say in the absence of an express statement on his part is, that the sermon is very mild in comparison to the words credited to the brother at the Chicago Neighborhood house which we now suppose were not spoken, but we would have liked the brother to say so squarely. The unusual pressure on our columns for a number of weeks prevented an allusion to the subject earlier and it is mentioned now because of public charges of unfairness made by Rev. Mr. White.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

The Hospital Fund.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—In the issue of March 17, Miss Cora Larimore, your custodian of the Y fund for the National Temperance Hospital, made a practical appeal for renewed activity in this department and outlined a plan for a "Hospital entertainment" which she hopes all Y unions will give early in April.

Mrs. Maude L. Greene, National organizer, was a patient at our hospital for some four months, and in the hospital column of this issue will be found a letter from her expressing her appreciation of the treatment received, and her earnest conviction of the importance of the institution as an affiliated interest of the W. C. T. U. Miss Larimore hopes that you will incorporate this letter in the program arranged for your entertainment, as it gives a word picture of the hospital that can not fail to stimulate the interest of every Y. The Y room is yours, dear girls, a responsibility that you have voluntarily assumed. By contributing $700 a year, $350 for each bed, you have made it possible for the hospital board of directors to extend a beautiful hospitality in your name, and the keeping of this pledge is a sacred duty. Miss Larimore is laboring earnestly to gather the amount named for this year, as well as to add something to the building fund, and I am sure that you will give her practical assistance. EDITOR.

Exhortations to Better Lives for Girls.

THE Daily Times, of Port Huron, Mich., gives the following extract from a lecture recently delivered in that city by Rev. Frances E. Townsley, known and beloved by all the Y's. Her subject was, "If I were a girl again."

"If I were a girl again, I would be very careful of my treatment of other people's feelings, and of my criticisms upon people who might not see truth as I see it. I would do those things which are kind, and I would let this action begin at home with my own mother and family. I would have a practical aim in my life, and remember that religion is only sanctified common sense and living out the sweet reasonableness of the life of Christ. I would not live in a poetical frame altogether, but would dust the kitchen and the parlor also. I would find an enlarged opportunity in working in the cause of clean literature, in the W. C. T. U. pockets in the railroad depots, or in serving the great cause of the Chicago Temperance Hospital, or in gathering papers and literature for the lumber camps in northern Michigan. I would prepare for some definite work in life, and finding my adaptability, would do the work it called for. I would keep myself well informed, and would know the why of the day's affairs. I would have some money of my own, and would remember my obligations and the advantages to be gained in paying tithes upon it all for God's cause. I would be very choice in the selection of my intimate friends; touching for good as many as possible, but having few intimacies; avoiding free-and-easy ways, but being reserved and dignified when in public, and using no slang or extreme statements. I would cultivate a respectable demeanor toward persons older than myself. I would have distinctive principles of right and justice; have these well understood and pay all my obligations created by these. I would be very much alone with Jesus Christ, and friends should be measured by His standard, remembering that atheism stands for nothing that is high and noble in this world."

Everyday illustrations were freely used by the speaker, who received many earnest thanks for the "big sisterly" address.

World's W. C. T. U.

South Australia.

THE temperance party scored a nice little victory, back in December, when through the use of the local option poll, an attempt to get a licensed house for the sale of intoxicating drink at Blackwood was defeated. This is the first contest under the act of 1896. The resolution submitted was, "That no new publican's licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be granted," and the poll was taken through the electoral district of Sturt. The voting was 869 for the resolution, and 340 against. There were many difficulties in the way, such as the size of the electorate, the short period between the gazetting of the election and the poll itself, and the usual strenuous attempts to hinder people from voting; thus, it will be seen that temperance workers had to labor diligently to secure a sufficiently large majority of votes. The result is that no new license can be granted for Blackwood for the next three years.

Our union is working now for the raising of the age of consent to eighteen years. There are several reforms on purity questions before us at present, and to which our aims and prayers are directed. We are more than ever established in the conviction that "a white life for two" is the only proper development of God's plans for the sexes, the only just and fair attitude of the sexes to one another, and the only solution of the awful problems that confront the thoughtful, and we hate, with a bitter hatred, any legislation which will defy God's laws, and induce men to sin against women or shield them in their sin.

Though to a large extent defeated in our efforts to secure complete Sunday closing, we are not daunted, but intend to make it our business to push our views, and urge our plea until the measure we seek becomes a fact. At present the law is scandalously evaded in some places just outside the specified radius, and the Sabbath becomes a rollicking picnic day.

Our Australasian superintendent of scientific temperance instruction is arranging with the different colonies for a competitive examination, to come off in each colony simultaneously, some time in October or November of this year. It is thought that this step will do much toward rousing parents to the need of the times, as it concerns their children, and awakening public interest and attention. In some districts the children are fairly well instructed as to the nature and effects of intoxicants, but as a general rule much ignorance prevails. It is said that juvenile drinking is on the increase, and if this is so, I believe it is largely due to the taking of hop and root beers and other pernicious things which have been flooded upon the public under the guise of "temperance drinks," and being so cheap have come within the purchasing power of vast numbers of boys and girls, most of whom are entirely unaware of their nature. It is high time that enlightenment on this subject became a customary part of education.

Our natty little Australasian monthly paper, Our Federation, has made its advent, and we have reason to be proud of it. It is a most promising child, and in the hands of our Australasian president, who loves it most ardently, works at it most diligently, and plans for it most carefully, it is sure to be worth reading. It has been sent forth with, and followed by many earnest prayers, and we hope it will soon be a power for good, and a white-ribbon advocate wherever it goes. J. A. CLATWORTHY,
Colonial Reporter for South Australia.

News from the Field.

California.

ON TO LOS ANGELES.

REPORTS from county presidents, at the January executive meeting, were on the whole very hopeful and satisfactory. Over twenty superintendents of departments reported their respective efforts, showing vitality and interest in all lines.

A shipbuilder of this city lately turned out a fine vessel for the Japanese navy. When the launching and christening of the ship were announced, the state W. C. T. U. promptly memorialized the proper authorities asking that instead of breaking a bottle of wine upon the ship's side, the beautiful Japanese custom of liberating a cage full of doves above the moving ship, be observed.

The result, was—both ceremonials took place—and better than that the action of the W. C. T. U. was thoroughly discussed by newspapers and in drinking places; and next time the idea will not be new and will have grown in favor.

Of course all our thoughts and plans will bend toward the next National Convention, and the expectancy itself is helpful to us. We feel yet the disappointment of two years ago. This year it is to be at Los Angeles, which is only second in our hearts and hopes to San Francisco. This notary has just returned from a visit to Southern California, and desires to tell of the charms of that beautiful land. If the National were coming to San Francisco the attractions of this region might be rehearsed, but the south now has precedence. I have been struck by the fact that the average eastern mind has not taken into consideration the great extent of this state. They speak of conventions distant from previous points of meeting, as for instance New York and Atlanta, but that is not farther apart than our two California coast cities. Nature has given the south great attractions, and these have brought the wealth of the east to occupy and adorn its loveliness. In fact, the southern counties are like the cozy corners in our homes; the comforts, the cushions, the luxuries, the beautiful and brilliant things are massed in the cozy corner of California.

There could be no more delightful place of meeting than Los Angeles. The air is charged with a sympathy for works of reform, that candor compels me to admit has not yet been reached in our more northern regions.

Among the heterogeneous masses of this part of the state, therefore, while we need the Convention and its influence more, it will be happier in the congenial and delightful environment of the south. Los Angeles, and, indeed, all the neighboring towns, are made up of beautiful homes, and the free outdoor life of the people is one of the charms of that section.

A description of the country would be out of place, but I do want all the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to know that it is not probable that the National Convention will for many years again meet at a point that presents so many attractions. To many it will be the event of a life to come, and to all it will be a joy.

The short excursions about Los Angeles are many and lovely, without being an alarming expense. Pasadena, that fought out bravely for all the state its contest for local prohibition, is only ten miles away—and so abounds in beauties that everybody who proposes to come should begin now saving up adjectives and exclamation points, for no one has enough. The drive around San Gabriel Valley, of which this is the center, is advertised as a trip around the world, and the tourist feels that in one day he has seen the kingdoms of the earth and the glory of them. The ascent of Mt. Lowe is one of the wonders of the world. Mt. Wilson and Old Baldy never doff their snowy caps until late summer is here; the natural scenery is superb, the citrus fruits culture adds to the picturesque effect, its glorious touches of color, the long lines of palm and pepper tree lined avenues, the artesian wells supplying ever living streams, and the beautiful homes everywhere, all lend beauty to the scene. After visiting old missions, olive and lemon groves, vineyards and orchards, ad infinitum, and think of it—right in California, several prohibition towns—you drive back again to Pasadena, the queen of them all, and just behind that lovely town come out on the wonderful Arroyo Seco, the greatest of all surprises, then following its sinuosities and looking into its depths cross an airy bridge to a mountain road worth a journey to see; for what panorama was ever like the changing views of a mountain road, and this road comes quietly down into pastoral scenes of idyllic loveliness, and in a characteristic California way runs through a tunnel—four hundred feet long—built by the farmer, whose convenience required it, to take his produce to market; private property but open to all use. Beyond this in a lovely dell stands a gem of a church still on that same ranch, built by the widow who now owns the estate, in memory of her loved ones. Art and nature vie with each other in all these beauties.

Our southern counties have excellent railroad facilities—the famous kite track takes one in a day's journey through the most important points—including a stop at Redlands long enough to visit Smiley Heights, perhaps the most beautiful drive in Southern California, and another at Riverside, enabling one to ride through sixteen miles of orange groves, and see one of the finest possible illustrations of coöperative methods applied to a whole community. I have not time or space to tell of it, but that, quite as much as climatic conditions, gives to the Riverside oranges the quality which insures their reputation and market value.

Beautiful for situation is San Diego, and balmy its soft breezes. This is the ideal of Eden; but the Convention will be at Los Angeles, and if that had not attractions enough, its near neighbors Santa Monica, Long Beach, Redondo and the rest are all holding out a hand of welcome, and better than its royal beauty are the loyal women even now counseling of the time to come.

Mrs. Kenny, the state president, at her home at Long Beach, is laying plans broad and deep, and Miss Stickney, the active and alert corresponding secretary, is busy at her post at headquarters in carrying forward the work, and behind them the women appear to stand shoulder to shoulder and ready for service.

I have no apology for expressing all this honest admiration. I conceive it to be my duty to tell the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL what there is in store for those who come to the coast. It was largely by such means that the great excursion of the Christian Endeavorers to San Francisco last year was made a memorable success. So for all considerations, I say, "ON to Los Angelcs!"

DORCAS J. SPENCER,
State Reporter, San Francisco.

Louisiana.

THE third district W. C. T. U., Mrs. Kate E. Wilkins, president, convened in the Methodist church South, at Lake Charles, March 9, and continued three days.

Mrs. Haughton, National evangelist, was present and the noontide hour of prayer was one of the blessed privileges of the convention.

Consecrated self-sacrifice was the keynote of the president's annual address, and surely the "W. M. Richardson banner" was won by hard work in this district. The wide prairies of the parishes which comprise this district, the impassable roads of a new country and streams of water without bridges, make this a pioneer field of work.

Miss May C. Walker, of Baldwin, read a paper on the wanton destruction of song birds for millinery decoration, which was so favorably received that she was invited to repeat it at the public school.

Mrs. A. M. Zable, of New Orleans, gave briefly the "Evolution of the temperance work in Louisiana." The state was not organized until 1882, although there was a union in New Orleans several years before this date.

The address of Rev. G. N. Funk, of Jennings, on Christian citizenship, was especially good.

Addresses of welcome were made by Judge Wells and Hon. S. O. Shattuck, which were highly appreciated.

Among the best papers was one by Mrs. Barteau on "Temperance work among the children," and especially the kindergarten, which she called the germ of all temperance reforms.

The memorial service held in memory of Frances E. Willard, and the promoted comrades from the district, was appropriate and tender. Mrs. Zable sang the hymns which Miss Willard loved. Miss Walker read a biographical sketch of her life and Mrs. L. G. Baldwin gave some scenes at the Buffalo Convention and Miss Willard's last work for the cause she loved. Mrs. Haughton, Mrs. Wilkins, Rev. Harp and others, spoke in loving memory of the beloved leader and friends who had gone. Mrs. Morse read the memorial poem.

Grandmother Mayo, who is eighty-four years old and a loyal white-ribboner, was present at nearly every session, an interested and attentive listener.

The poem dedicated to the W. C. T. U. was sung by Miss Barteau, the author. Good recitations and choice music made the program pleasing and interesting throughout the convention.

Mrs. Otto is the faithful superintendent of prison work. In the report was the following statement: "All the prisoners used liquor with one exception," which is the way our jails are filled all over the country.

A man said to Mrs. Otto, "Let me pick out the rose like those in my mother's garden." All of the prisoners had praying mothers, but none of them had praying fathers, was their reply to her inquiry one day.

Mrs. Kate E. Wilkins, of Jennings, was re-elected president; vice-president, Mrs. M. L. Barteau, of Lake Charles; recording secretary, Mrs. M. E. Beach, of Jennings; corresponding secretary, Miss Minora Grubb, Jennings; treasurer, Mrs. R. M. Dunlap, Lake Charles. Superintendents for ten departments of work were appointed.

(MRS.) LURY GOULD BALDWIN,
State Reporter, Baldwin.

New Hampshire.

IN the literature boxes which our superintendent of work among railroad men has urged upon the W. C. T. U. of New Hampshire, we are finding a grand opportunity to put before the public good temperance literature in a very quiet but effective way; scores of people will read anything at a railway station who would never take the slightest interest in a temperance leaflet that was handed them elsewhere. We look for a great advance in our work from this cause alone. Mrs. N. M. Cummings, superintendent of this department, is an earnest, conscientious worker.

Peterboro has a wide-awake union, reporting in their winter's work literature and cash for the lumbermen, Christmas gifts to the almshouse, two dollars for the National field work, and five cents a member for the National Temperance Hospital, five stirring temperance addresses, emergency boxes in the local trains and literature at the station.

The meetings of the Claremont union are unusually well attended. At the present time they are raising money for the Temperance Hospital and have arranged a series of temperance addresses for the coming months, Mrs. Ella Keith, of Worcester, Mass., giving the first lecture of the course. She was greeted by a large audience who listened gladly, and responded liberally.

Mrs. Conklin is still doing good work in the state; she spoke at Derry Depot, March 6. This union has assisted in the work among lumbermen, the Mercy Home and the Temperance Hospital.

The president of the Littleton union, Mrs. Josephine Austin, has awakened a great interest in that town, in the matter of woman suffrage as exercised at school meetings. Many interesting opinions from the leading men of the place have been elicited, and in almost every case favorable to the movement.

Haverhill held its annual sociable last month; a delightful meeting. Although a hard snowstorm was in progress, a good sum was realized for work among lumbermen, and they have also sent gifts to the Mercy Home.

Oh! Ribbon white, hold firm your encircling band in this sorrowful hour, when we are turning to one another for sympathy. We are left with leaders strong and true, and the wisdom, tact and influence of Frances E. Willard is all around and about us, yet we are very human, and we sigh "for the touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that is still."

ELIZABETH PARTRIDGE,
State Reporter, Claremont.

District of Columbia.

THE W. C. T. U. of the District still holds its own in numbers, interest and in scope of effort. Scarcely any good work goes on in the city that our members are not heard from in it.

Too much can not be said in praise of the superintendents of departments. They are all wide-awake, up-to-date women, specialists in their respective lines, ever on the alert to grasp what will be of advantage to their departments. Our indefatigable superintendent of prison and jail work, Mrs. Cowsil, is one of these, and Mrs. M. E. Catlin, of the Sabbath observance department. Mrs. Grace L. Chapin spares no pains to provide and keep constantly on hand suitable literature for every phase of "our many-sided work."

Mrs. Alla B. Foster, our superintendent of L. T. L. work, has given instruction to a normal class in accordance with the plan of Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of the National. Mrs. M. P. Mitchell, of our Sunday-school department, coöperates with Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the World's W. C. T. U., and provides pledge cards from which chains are made after being signed in the Sunday-schools and festooned about the room on gala occasions and "temperance Sundays." Mrs. Crafts gave her unique Brownie entertainment in this city and generously contributed the proceeds to the local work.

Mrs. E. H. Catching, of the purity department, looks sharply to the status of her bills in both House and Senate, while Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley, of the Young Wage Earners Club, cares for her large class of boys bordering upon young manhood, with the vigilance of a mother's love. Mrs. R. E. Lawson, of the colored branch of the District work, prosecutes every line of work that is profitable for the cause among her race. She is faithfully seconded by Mrs. Arthur S. Grey and others. Mrs. Mabel Welch, our chalk-talker, and all the rest are valued co-laborers.

We are cheered at the national capital by the presence of some of our prominent leaders. Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis is here in the interest of her department, and doing valiantly for legislative and petition work. She sends out and receives thousands of petitions, which she addresses, arranges and places in the hands of the proper committees. This furnishes a daily task for her and her good husband of much more than they can accomplish. Mrs. M. L. Welles, a National organizer, is kept pretty busy addressing meetings and speaking encouraging words to the women of our locals, with whom she is a great favorite. The presence of Mrs. Emma M. Thatcher, of the National department of soldiers and sailors, gives an added impetus to that work, while Mrs. Alice J. Harris, the sweet singer and former musical director of the National W. C. T. U., consents to lend her voice to make our public meetings attractive. At one of our late meetings we listened to a hymn sung by Mr. Hutchinson, the only surviving member of the distinguished Hutchinson family.

In the name of the District union, Mrs. Emma F. Shelton, the secretary, sent to Chicago a floral offering for the funeral of our blest leader gone before. The memorial meeting held here was unusual in interest and attendance, many prominent persons taking part. There were a dozen five-minute speeches and two exquisite musical numbers by Mrs. Harris, with Bischoff, the distinguished blind organist, as accompanist.

(MRS.) CLINTON SMITH,
Official Reporter, Washington.

Indiana.

FROM an article to state reporters, in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 27, I infer that I have not occupied all the space that might have belonged to Indiana in the past. I regret this and hope to do better in the future.

I feel an apology is due Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, in omitting her name from the list of visitors in attendance at our state convention in my letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, and I hereby make such amends as is possible.

The tidal wave of activity in our state is rising higher and higher this year. A majority of the unions have put out programs for the year in advance, and as they come to my desk they are suggestive of originality, of research and enterprise. The unions organized are more than double the size of those organized last year.

Our superintendent of health, heredity and physical culture, Miss Clara Agnes Boyd, Rockville, is very progressive. She has appointed Miss Elizabeth Fisher, Indianapolis, as lecturer for her department from the standpoint of dress reform. Miss Fisher has a system of her own which she is introducing very successfully in some parts of the state. Miss Boyd acted with promptness on Miss Willard's suggestion at the St. Louis Convention and prepared a stereopticon lecture on her work, and more recently "the only James Whitcomb Riley entertainment of the kind in existence." Our state superintendent of Sunday-school work, Mrs. Alice G. Geary, Logansport, came out in the November Message, the first issue of our state paper after our annual gathering, with her plans for the year. On time is one element of success. Mrs. Geary is an up-to date woman. Miss Mary Hadley, Bloomingdale, vice-president and state superintendent of schools of methods, or normal institutes, as we call them, has her program and plan in the hands of the women, through our February and March Message. The work began March 14, and we expect to reach every one of our ninety-two counties with a day and a half-day's institute and one-half day of county convention. We have divided our state into four sections with a special institute instructor or leader for each section; in this way the work will be completed in about three months.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

Mrs. Ella J. Davis, Richmond, and her seven associates in the evangelistic field, have been doing some excellent service; Mrs. M. A. Tompkins, Elkhart, and Julia A. Treile, of Warsaw, report very gratifying revival meetings and hopeful conversions.

The medal department has seventy contests to report since the beginning of the year's work. Mrs. Lou E. Rall, Huntington, superintendent of the department of mercy, Mrs. Calla Vayhinger, Moore's Hill, of Sabbath observance; Mrs. Mary E. Sims, Indianapolis, colored department; Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, of jail and prison and miners, have been very earnest in putting their special helpers to work through the columns of our official organ; these sisters are on the alert for their special objects. Miss Clara M. Sears, Anderson, secretary of our Y Branch, is full of zeal, strong in faith and wise in plans to develop this beautiful branch of youth with bud and blossom. Mrs. Amanda R. Gordon, Argos, secretary of the L. T. L. Branch, has accepted the invitation of the Acton Assembly union to hold the state L. T. L. convention on those grounds August 3. It will be a high day for our children and a happy hit for the program committee and the gate receipts.

Rev. Mattie O. Cammack, our recording secretary, and one of our state organizers and lecturers, has made a splendid record. In the months of January and February in part she added 168 members to our roll and seventeen honoraries. The county presidents where she has labored write in glowing terms of her work. I never begin to mention names but I regret the many I can not mention who have been abundant in labors and sacrifice, state, county and local workers.

Miss Marie Brehm, from our sister states, has made an extended campaign with us and a name for herself as an orator, organizer and a Christian sister. The women love her, the local press has been fluent in her praise, the churches open to her and large audiences greeted her throughout.

Mrs. Emma Cranmer, Aberdeen, S. Dak., on her return from the National Convention tarried with us twenty-five or thirty days and delighted everyone who listened to her. The warm-hearted invitation to come again is open for her acceptance any time. There can be no better testimony of a speaker's worth.

MARY E. BALCH,
State Reporter, Indianapolis.

Mothers
Who Nurse will find the
Franklin Mills Flour
A FINE FLOUR OF THE ENTIRE WHEAT

an invaluable food, increasing the quantity and improving the quality of the lactael secretion. Deficiency in this is one great cause of infant mortality and one of the most fertile sources of anxiety to careful physicians.
Also Franklin Mills Flour, a Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat as produced by the Franklin Mills process, when properly prepared, has been found far superior to prepared package infants' foods. It will supply the child with just the material for real growth and sustenance, furnishing sound teeth, strong eyes, full development and will build up a strong and vigorous constitution.
If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied. Booklet mailed free.
The genuine made only by the
Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c.
All Druggists. 308.

Official.

Non-Alcoholic Medication.

A new edition of the leaflet, "Safe Remedies in Illness," has been issued this year enlarged to sixteen pages. Enough copies of it have been sent to state superintendents, free of charge, to supply each local union with one. States without superintendents of this department have been treated likewise where corresponding secretaries, or other workers, expressed willingness to forward to unions. There are eleven state unions to which they have not been sent. Of these, six have sent no answers to letters written. Arrangements for forwarding to the remaining five states are being made, so that before this year expires most of the unions will have had opportunity to study this leaflet prepared to meet the query, "What shall we take instead of alcohol?" These leaflets should be put into as many homes as possible, as they take away all reasonable excuse for the home prescription of alcohol, and teach women what to say if alcohol is ordered by a physician. I shall be greatly disappointed if "Safe Remedies" are not largely called for to distribute, for I have spent much time and money in preparing what so many seemed to want. One state superintendent ties a bow of white ribbon in the corner of each leaflet, and gives them out at conventions as souvenirs. They are eighty cents a hundred postpaid, or in small quantities two cents each. Superintendents of literature, or those ordering in large quantities will receive a liberal discount.

The companion leaflet, "Is Alcohol Useful or Necessary as Medicine?" is fifty cents a hundred. The latter contains comparative death-rates, with and without alcohol, and is valuable to give to teachers, ministers and editors.

The leaflet on patent medicines, promised some time ago, is written, but for good reasons can not be published for several months yet. Notice of its issue will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL. As many have written for the percentages of alcohol given by me at Buffalo, I will give those here: Green's Nervura, 17.2; Paine's Celery Compound, 21; Hood's Sarsaparilla, 18.4; Ayer's Sarsaparilla, 26.2.

These, together with others, to be published in the leaflet, are taken from the report of a chemist employed by the Massachusetts state board of health, hence can not be gainsaid. The doses are large enough, taken day after day, to create or revive an alcoholic appetite, and the percentages of alcohol are greater than in beer, cider or unfortified wines. Yet church and temperance papers advertise some of these things freely, and temperance people who ought to know what physiology teaches of the injurious effects of alcohol taken continuously, will consume bottle after bottle of these poisonous compounds.

I am very anxious to gain information as to present teaching regarding alcohol as a food and as a medicine in the various medical colleges of the country. Superintendents or other workers who will make careful inquiries on this line and report to me will greatly aid in my plans for the future. The dean of Syracuse, New York, medical college has recently given to the public his reasons for abandoning the use of alcohol as medicine. Another Syracuse doctor says, "It is only laziness makes physicians prescribe alcohol." Let us recommend to intending medical students such colleges as we learn are teaching truth on this question.

In states having superintendents of Hospital work it was our dear Miss Willard's wish that this department coöperate with that. This is my wish also. Every superintendent of non-alcoholic medication should do all in her power to aid the Temperance Hospital, and every Hospital superintendent should be glad to avail herself of the helps of this department. Let Hospital work be reported to Mrs. Hammond and the rest to me.

At the last convention two National lecturers were appointed for this department, Dr. Myra A. Gillette, of Medina, N. Y., and Miss Celia S. Hutton, of Penn Yan, N. Y. Unions desiring the services of either of the National lecturers will please write to them direct, not to me. Dr. Gillette will make very liberal terms to schools of methods and Chautauqua assemblies.

(MRS.) MARTHA M. ALLEN,
Nat. Supt.

Newark, N. Y.

WITHIN the last few months two Y societies have been organized in the eleventh district of Michigan. One at Harbor Springs, by Mrs. E. Norine Law, and one at Traverse city, by Mrs. Gertrude Minore.

"A PERFECT FOOD—as Wholesome as it is Delicious."

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
BREAKFAST COCOA
"Has stood the test of more than 100 years' use among all classes, and for purity and honest worth is unequalled."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.
Costs less than ONE CENT a Cup.
Trade-Mark on Every Package.
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.,
TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

From all over the field come the cheering tidings that the hearts of the women are being drawn closer together with a new sense of responsibility and consecration. Side by side with this comes the equally cheering fact that the hearts of those outside our ranks are being interested in our great cause. From Maine to the Pacific coast and from North to South the report is the same. Never were women so ready to join us as now. I am sure this ought to mean a harvest time for our organization. In my Local Union column next week I hope to give some suggestions as to methods which may be used for the securing of new members; many of them will

(Continued on page 13.)

Prof. Arthur R. Spade.

The Journal of Education has the following from the pen of Professor Arthur Spade of Wilmington, Del.:

"Poor ventilation is not responsible for all the dullness and headache among school children. In our school of two hundred pupils, at least one hundred and seventy were found to be tea and coffee drinkers, with the habit so strongly fastened upon some of them that they could not well do without coffee for one day.

"If we only knew how much headache and even heart trouble the use of tea and coffee produces, a mighty crusade would be made against their use. They are positively injurious to children and young people, and many persons past middle life would be much better off without them. An experienced physician, who has spent many years in a great hospital, declares that over seventy per cent of the cases classed under nervous diseases, that came under his personal observation, were caused by tea and coffee drinking."

In another letter the Professor says:—"After using Postum Food Coffee two weeks I found that I had gained four pounds in weight and that my appetite had increased."

When first tried it failed to suit the taste, but when the secret of preparation was learned, it came to the table a most delicious cup.

The proper taste and nourishment cannot be obtained unless it is allowed to continue boiling full 15 minutes after boiling starts, not simply 15 minutes after it is put on the stove.

Many of the imitations of Postum have a favorable taste upon two or three minutes preparation. The analysis shows these to be a low grade adulterated coffee and without food value.

It requires time to extract food value and flavor from pure cereals.

Enameline
The Modern STOVE POLISH.
Produces a JET BLACK enamel gloss. Dustless, Odorless, Labor Saving. 5 and 10 cent boxes. Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

not be at all original, but will be the report of methods used successfully by other workers. Let us put in the sickle while the harvest is ripe.

Miss Anne Rothwell Stewart, one of our bright young women secretaries, of Maryland, has been among the first to utilize the stereopticon lecture, and has done so with great success. She has a new lecture on the Toronto Convention entitled, "Echoes of a Great Convention," in which she gives views both of the city and of the Convention itself, with pictures of the most noted leaders. Her terms are very reasonable and unions employing her could not fail to derive great benefit therefrom.

Mrs. Unruh has just closed a most successful series of engagements in Mississippi. The workers all over the state speak most enthusiastically concerning her work. All feel that she was the right woman for the place, and that she has done more for them than almost anyone else could have done. Mrs. Howe has closed a very successful series of engagements in Arkansas, while Mrs. Harford is still hard at work in Kansas. Mrs. Law has been giving most of her time since convention to the work in Manitoba for the plebiscite, and has been blessed with great success. Our dear Mrs. Bullock has not yet recovered sufficiently from her severe illness to take up work in the field, but we are hoping that she will be in her old place as organizer, before the summer shall end. Mrs. Fields is still in Missouri, and of the other organizers, some of them are doing work in their own states, while others are taking much needed rest. I am hoping all will be actively engaged for at least some part of the year. Mrs. Gibson, of Tennessee, the new state president, is giving much time to organizing work in that state, and from all the points visited by her there comes most cheering intelligence of the work she has been enabled to accomplish.

Mrs. Borden writes from New Mexico of their great grief in Miss Willard's loss, and says: "I preached a sermon in her memory on February 30, which was interpreted into Spanish by the Rev. J. J. Gilchrist, superintendent of Spanish missions. We held a memorial service on the evening of March 6, in which the churches of Albuquerque participated, and the Opera House was crowded, floors and gallery."

From far-away Panama comes the report of a memorial service, to be held by the Anna Gordon L. T. L. on the evening of March 27, at which Rev. Mr. Geddes will deliver the memorial address. Mrs. Marie Duckatellier was chiefly instrumental in the organization of this Loyal Temperance Legion, and is carrying forward its work with whole-hearted enthusiasm. Thus far-away lands join hands with us in our common sorrow.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Y's have taken hold of the hospital work with hearty sympathy and purpose to hold special meetings early in April, giving an interesting program for the benefit of the fund. The following letter from one of their number, Maude L. Greene, chalk-talker and organizer, was written to Miss Cora W. Larimore, of Larimore, N. D., custodian of the Y hospital fund, and will be of interest to the dear girls who are giving their time and talents to the work:

WILL'S POINT, TEXAS.
March 2, 1898.

Indeed, I am more than glad to say anything I can for the hospital, having been there for four months. Before entering the National Temperance Hospital as a patient I had a perfect horror of such institutions, but now were I ill I know of no other place that I would rather be. Could I say more if I wrote volumes?

The most tender care was given me possible; the dear nurses were like sisters to me. How well I remember them in their pretty uniforms of white and blue; dainty caps and large aprons of spotless white. How softly they enter the rooms! How gently they move about the snowy beds; how deftly they lift and make more comfortable the suffering ones lying there; how dainty are the trays and delicate the food prepared by their careful hands. Dear girls! Never a frown on their sweet faces; never a tone or movement of impatience; no respecter of persons, but cheerfully performing their duty to each one.

Then I would not forget the motherly matron, the dear superintendent of nurses, the sweet-faced house physician, who live in the building and are ready to render aid during all hours of the day or night, also the efficient staff of city physicians, who come daily to give help and advice.

Not one drop of medicine do they prepare or administer which contains that health-destroying poison—alcohol!—and not one drop of alcohol is ever used in bathing or "restoring" the patient. To prove the wisdom of this form of treatment, let me say, that, although all diseases admitted to hospitals of this class are treated there, the death rate is less than in hospitals where alcohol is used.

Believing that in few places can the principle for which we stand be more fully demonstrated than in an institution of this kind where physicians are educated and nurses trained to this right principle of non-alcoholic medication, the W. C. T. U. have joined hands to provide a place where this can be done. Therefore, there are memorial rooms daintily furnished by interested individuals and societies, even the children and young women having a part.

The dainty room cared for by the children of the Loyal Temperance Legion is occupied by the little ones who are ill, and the room cared for by the young women of the Y. W. C. T. U., furnishes a place for young women. This room, however, does not yet do credit to the thirty thousand young women enlisted in our cause. The first part of my stay at the hospital was spent in this room, but as the dear girls from away had not been slipping in to "freshen up" or to replace some needed articles, or had not been sending sufficient funds to allow its being done by others, the room was not as cheery as a sick young woman's room should be even in a hospital—plain and restful (for the sick one's eyes must not be wearied by intricate stitches and too bright coloring), but fresh and sweet, like the girls themselves.

In closing, let me ask, Can we, as a Christian people, whether we belong to the grand army of white-ribboners or not, whether we wear the tiny badge, whose snowy bands have girded the world, or not, can we do more for weary and suffering humanity than to lend our influence, give our prayers and our most earnest efforts with voice, pen and pocketbook to carry on this grand work for God?

Let each one help now, at this crisis time, aiding in the work of building larger buildings, or in whatever way may be deemed wise by the efficient board of managers. We can not put our means where they will bring a larger dividend for God, Home and Humanity than here where our principles are so practically carried out.

MAUDE L. GREENE.

What stronger plea can we make for the Hospital than is voiced in this letter? The experience of the writer is but one of many, and the need of the Hospital appeals in a personal way to those who have been its guests. Through them it is now reaching out to all who "belong."

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but all regular reports must come through the state Field reporter.]

FORTY new members have been added to the union at Hillsboro, O.

THROUGH the efforts of Mr. A. C. Rankin at Cando, N. Dak., sixteen new members were added to the union, 367 signed the pledge. Mr. Rankin's lectures were considered very helpful.

DURING one week Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, World's and National superintendent of school savings banks, filled orders for school savings banks literature from applicants in Illinois, Indiana, California, Louisiana, Kentucky, New Jersey, Ohio, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Michigan. The largest order was for three thousand "How to Institute School Savings Banks" from the school board of Shenandoah, Pa. The school savings bank is a popular and easy method of teaching the practical economy that results in temperate and thoughtful citizenship.

She's bound to have Pearline, this lady. The grocer has just sent her one of the many substitutes instead. You can't see the boy, but he's on his way back to exchange it. If all women were only as careful and determined, there would be less grumbling, and Pearline sales would be multiplied.

Probably no woman who uses Pearline would take anything else, knowingly. But since Pearline has become a household word, the ignorant and the careless suffer. The ignorant think that "Pearline" means any washing-powder; the careless fail to notice that they're getting an inferior article. 543

Millions NOW USE Pearline

DRINKING FOUNTAINS
FOR MAN AND BEAST
THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
84-90 BEEKMAN ST. NEW YORK 311-313 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.

Copyright, 1893, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

HOLY GRAIL Mary Hanford Ford.
A beautiful book, giving history and interpretation of the literature of th Holy Grail from the earliest mediæval stories to the Parsifal of Wagner. The interest is held from beginning to end.
PROF. GEO. D. HERRON:—I know of nothing so beautiful in literature concerning the spiritual facts and forces of the relations of love and life.
THE OUTLOOK: Mrs. Ford has done real service to literature, philosophy and religion.
Sample pages free. Prepaid, $1.00
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO.
277 Madison St., CHICAGO.

CANCER
I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

High Arm

Warranted Ten Years.
TRY IT FREE
for 30 days in your own home and save $10 to $25. No money in advance.
$60 Kenwood Machine for . $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for . $19.50
Standard Singers, $8.00, $11.50, $15.00
and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once.
Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION,
158-164 West Van Buren St., B-80, Chicago, Ills.

WANTED RELIABLE MEN in every locality, local or traveling, to introduce a new discovery and keep our show cards tacked up on trees, fences and bridges throughout town and country; steady employment; commission or salary; $65.00 PER MONTH AND EXPENSES not to exceed $2.50 per day; money deposited in any bank at start if desired. Write for particulars.
THE GLOBE MEDICAL ELECTRIC CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

CONSUMPTIVES Try thi Salve! Tested; true. Doctors fail; it cures. You make it. Formula, 50 Cents.
MRS. J. BURT, Oklahoma City, O. T.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume....

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

Canvassing outfits are now ready. Those desiring to aid the cause by soliciting for this book should immediately take steps to procure an outfit from some one of the houses distributing the book. Outfit alike to all 50 cents. Official Stamp of the Publishing House of the W. C. T. U. on the title page.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple....Chicago.

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

SAYS, IN HER PREFACE TO

The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard

"The sending forth of a memorial volume at the loving insistence of the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a sad and sacred privilege entrusted to me, because for 21 years God gave me that which was my highest joy, the opportunity to share the most toilsome period of Frances Willard's sublime and heroic life. * * * We believe this picture of her remarkable and winsome personality will 'bless and brighten every home that it enters' deepening in the hearts of its readers the desire to hold aloft her white banner of purity and peace, patriotism and prohibition; the protection of the home and the redemption of humanity."

NO HUMAN BEING WHO HAS THE HOPE OF A BETTER WORLD CAN AFFORD TO MISS THE INSPIRATION OF THIS STIRRING STORY

A Splendid Book for Development of American Patriotism.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

SEE ADDRESS BELOW

THE

BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

A GREAT LITERARY AND ARTISTIC MEMORIAL TO A GREAT AND HEROIC LIFE

.....BY.....

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

For Twenty-one Years her Private Secretary

IT WILL ALWAYS STAND AS AN ILLUMINATING PILLAR OF FIRE IN THE HOME

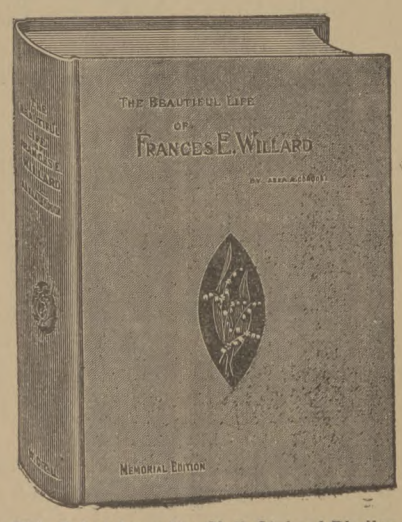
WITH INTRODUCTION BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET

The Only Authorized Life Story

WITH TRIBUTES BY

DR. FRANK W. GUNSAULUS,

DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS,



FRANCIS E. CLARK, President of Christian Endeavor Society.

MARGARET BOTTOME, President of King's Daughters.

The Great, Eloquent and Wise Unite in Splendid Testimonials

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association have placed this book in our hands for distribution in the United States, England, Canada, Australia, etc.; but Agencies can be secured through any subscription house.

We want solicitors in every town, village and hamlet to canvass for this, the greatest selling book of the century. We will pay the most liberal commissions. Capital not necessary as we give credit. Circulars and terms free. The important point, however, is to get into the field at once; so we advise sending Fifty Cents for a complete canvassing outfit, instructions, etc., TODAY, and thus head off competition and secure the greatest number of orders.

This Cut pictures the Cloth Style of Binding

The American flag, with all its streaming history, floated in every breath of Frances Willard's life. She has put new music into the song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee;" she has taught hundreds of thousands of emancipated men to sing it and to sing it worthily. The children of a million families ought to read this book. It is pre-eminently valuable to all who would lay upon the altar a consecrated life and expect a blessing for God and humanity.

The book contains nearly 500 pages, is 8 inches wide by 10 inches long, and is printed on fine paper, manufactured expressly for the purpose. Every line, as well as every picture, is brought out in exquisite strength and harmony; 32 Full-Page Half-Tones.

RETAIL PRICES	Cloth	$2.00
	Half Morocco	2.75
	De Luxe Edition	3.75

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

ADDRESS

Monarch Book Company

DEPT. G,

General Agents for United States, England, Canada, Australia, Etc.

Chicago, Ills....Philadelphia, Pa....Oakland, Cal.

ADDRESS THE NEAREST OFFICE.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

ONE small whisky glass, roughly carved on a small headstone, would often tell more truth than three volumes of biography.

THE OPIUM AND MORPHINE HABIT.
"What We May Do to be Saved" is little book, giving full particulars of a reliable cure. Free. Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B., Lebanon, Ohio.

"No, I didn't have a very good time," she said. "I wanted to talk and there wasn't a man there." "But there were plenty of other girls." "Oh, of course; but that was no satisfaction. They all wanted to talk, too."

FOR COUGHS, ASTHMA AND THROAT DISORDERS "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual remedy. Sold only in boxes.

"WON'T you try the chicken soup, judge?" asked Mrs. Small of her boarder, not noticing that he had gone beyond the soup stage in his dinner. "I have tried it, madam," replied the judge; "the chicken has proved an alibi."

DON'T MISS YOUR TRAIN.
All passenger trains on Nickel Plate Road now arrive and depart from Van Buren Street Station, near Clark Street, Chicago. Lowest rates to all points East. Solid trains to New York. City Ticket Office, 111 Adams Street. Telephone Main 3389.

A BOY being asked to describe a kitten, said: "A kitten is remarkable for rushing like mad at nothing whatever, and stopping before it gets there." It must have been the same boy who thus defined scandal: "It is when nobody ain't done nothing, and somebody goes and tells."

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.
Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

"THAT settles it," exclaimed Cupid, as he picked up an arrow that had failed to reach its mark. "That's the last time I shoot at a new woman. Why, the point is bent double."

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

[All W. C. T. U. state papers please copy and keep this standing.]

What to Ask of Congress and How.

Let every church and every other society devoted to social welfare adopt at an early day, some or all of the following petitions, all of which call for bills pending in present Congress.

Resolved, That the pastor of this congregation (or the president and secretary of this society) is hereby authorized in our behalf to sign and send petitions in duplicate to the two houses of Congress, through our congressman and one of our senators, requesting the passage of bills:

1. To forbid the sale of liquors in the National Capitol and in all government buildings.
2. To prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.
3. To raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen years in the District of Columbia and the territories.
4. To protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the same.
5. To prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or kindred devices.
6. And also the interstate and mail circulation of extended newspaper descriptions of such fights.
7. To substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes.
8. To protect state anti-cigaret laws by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

Please write your congressmen and senators in behalf of the above.

PETITION PATTERN.

Having voted the petitions preceding, make a separate petition for each request on large square sheets, as follows: "To the U. S. Senate: The undersigned hereby petition your honorable body to———. The above was approved by a vote of —— persons at a meeting of —— in —— on —— Attest:——Presiding." Then make duplicate addressed, "To the U. S. House of Representatives." Fold petition once and back it, "Petition from — for—." Send the petitions for the House to your own congressman; the one for the Senate to one of your senators. Let us keep up a steady snowstorm of petitions and letters for the whole two years of this Congress, beginning early and winning surely.

[Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, our "brother helper" at the national capitol, sends the above instructions. He says: "Submitted for a place in some nook of THE UNION SIGNAL for every issue, save as reduced by victories, till March, 1899. Let the type be as small as you please, but please keep this information before your constituents constantly as we can not possibly spare the precious hours to mend petitions day after day. I have spent nearly eight hours today making over petitions of W. C. T. U., and sending back many so bad they could only be made over at the starting place." —EDS.]

Publisher's Notes.

An Explanation.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We take pleasure in announcing that owing to the prompt action on the part of the Monarch Book Company—our general agents, the official memorial volume of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," is now being sold by the leading subscription book houses of the United States and Canada through their agents. Canvassing outfits are now ready. Price fifty cents. Commission to agents forty per cent. No distributer is permitted to give better terms than these nor to assign exclusive territory to agents. Please bear in mind that the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association does not furnish outfits or control territory.

Many white-ribboners wonder why this book is not sold as well as published by our organization.

In explanation, we beg to say, that in order to prevent unauthentic books being placed on the market, and also to give the book the widest possible distribution, we deemed it advisable to place it in the hands of the Monarch Book Company who, besides selling it through their own agents, have arranged with other Subscription Book Houses to distribute it through their agents as well.

We commend this action on the part of our general agents, feeling that by so doing the book will have the greatest possible sale and thus the cause for which Miss Willard labored will obtain a foothold which will live throughout eternity.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager.

BIBLE READING FOR APRIL.—"Rooted and Grounded," by Lilian F. Lewis. Based on Ephesians 3: 7–21; pointing out the "secret of power," and emphasizing "boldness" and "access with confidence" in seeking guidance. To "know the love of Christ" is to take root downward; to be "filled with the fullness of God" is to bear fruit upward. The application of the lesson for white-ribboners is "If ye had faith ye might say to that Upas tree, the liquor traffic, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and it should obey you."

RESPONSIVE READING FOR APRIL.—"The Press," by Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, National superintendent of that department. Through the medium of questions and answers this reading sets forth, in most practical manner, the duties of press superintendents, state and local; how to approach the editor of a city daily and the editor in a small town; the kind of news to furnish; the needs of newspapers, secular and religious; gives information concerning "patent pages" and the Associated Press, and suggests how to help "elevate the press." It will be a great help, not only to press superintendents but to white-ribbon workers generally, and we predict a large demand for it.

Official Picture of Miss Willard.

The National officers of the W. C. T. U. have arranged with a first-class engraver to produce a large etching of Miss Willard, which will be suitable for framing and will be the only official picture authorized by them. The W. T. P. A. will have it on sale within two months. Price $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASSN.,
The Temple.

If the many kind white-ribboners who have offered to send their UNION SIGNALS to the poor women mentioned in our issue of March 3, would send the same amount of postage to the Philanthropy Fund, we could furnish THE UNION SIGNAL to many such deserving ones. More than a dozen interested readers have offered to donate their UNION SIGNALS to this afflicted woman, so that her needs are supplied.

Everybody ought to wear the beautiful Willard badge. (Button shape, with pin attached) for sale at 10 cents each, $1 a dozen or $5 a hundred. Beautiful tinted buttons 25 cents each. Order them by the hundred for your state and county conventions. Send orders to Mrs. Abbie Frankel, 4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

The large special edition of the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL is exhausted. Another edition is now on the press, and orders will be filled as promptly as possible. There will be very little or no delay in filling orders, and we ask the patience of those who may not receive their copies as soon as expected.

Price, single copy, 10 cents; 100 copies, $7.50; 50 copies, $4; 25 copies, $2.25.

OUR NEW 1898 FLOWER SEED OFFER!

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS 306 Varieties, FREE!

An Unparalleled Offer by an Old-Established and Reliable Publishing House! THE LADIES' WORLD is a large, 24-page, 96-column illustrated magazine for ladies and the family circle, with elegant cover printed in colors. It is devoted to Stories, Poems, Ladies' Fancy Work, Home Decoration, Housekeeping, Fashions, Hygiene, Juvenile Reading, Floriculture, etc. To introduce this charming ladies' magazine into 100,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following colossal offer: Upon receipt of only Twenty Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Six Months, and to each subscriber we will also send, Free and post-paid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, 306 Varieties, as follows:

1 Packet Imperial Japanese Morning Glory. The flowers are of exquisite beauty and enormous size, often five inches in diameter; great variety of colors, some beautifully striped, mottled, penciled and bordered.

1 Packet Superb Asters. Choicest possible mixture, composed entirely of the finest named varieties, including the Victoria, Non Plus Ultra, Comet, Truffaut's Perfection, Triumph, etc.

1 Packet Scabiosa (Bridal Bouquet.) New strain, pure white, as distinguished from the old-fashioned "Mourning Bride." Large, double flowers; easily grown, and excellent for bouquets.

1 Packet Dreamland Poppies. A fine collection, comprising many new, rare and expensive varieties, such as Irresistible, American Flag, Cardinal, Danebrog, etc.

1 Packet Everlastings, for winter bouquets. A choice mixture of all varieties that retain their color and form longest, including Acroclinium, Ammobium, Helichrysum, etc.

1 Packet Dwarf Sweet Pea "Cupid." Grows only 6 to 8 inches high; fine for borders; flowers profusely all summer; blossoms large and fragrant.

And Three Hundred Other Varieties, including Fireball Dianthus, Phlox Drummondii, Single Dahlia, Gaillardia, Lobb's Nasturtiums, Ice Plant, Thunbergia, Candytuft, French Balsam, German Stock, Crimson Eye Hibiscus, Lilliput Marigold, Salpiglossis, Forget-Me-Not, Cosmos, Pansies, Verbenas, Chrysanthemums, Mignonette, Cyprus Vine, Digitalis, Crimson Flax, Petunia, etc.

Remember, twenty cents pays for the Magazine for Six Months, and this entire Magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds (306 varieties), put up by a first-class Seed House and warranted fresh and reliable. No matter how many flower seeds you have purchased for this season, you cannot afford to miss this wonderful offer. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of the seeds if you are not entirely satisfied. This offer is reliable. Do not confound it with the catchpenny schemes of unscrupulous persons. We have been established over 22 years, and refer to the Commercial Agencies as to our responsibility. Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for $1.00. Write to-day! Don't put it off! Address

S. H. MOORE & CO., 23 City Hall Place, New York.

SEND FOR A BICYCLE

High Grade '98 Models, $14 to $40.

GREAT CLEARING SALE of '97 and '96 models, best makes, $9.75 to $18. Sent on approval without a cent payment. Free use of wheel to our agents. Write for our new plan "How to Earn a Bicycle" and make money. SPECIAL THIS WEEK—40 high grade '97 models [slightly shopworn], $10.75 each. "Wanderings Awheel," a souvenir book of art, FREE for stamp while they last.

MEAD CYCLE CO., 279 Ave. P,, Chicago.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 806.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 161 West Van Buren Street, B. 30, Chicago, Ill.

$18.00	Carriages for $9.00
$12.00	" " $6.00
$5.00	" " $2.50

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.
Send for free sample and literature.
A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"THE Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," compiled by her secretary, Anna A. Gordon. Introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Only official edition authorized and indorsed by the W. C. T. U. Beautifully illus. Only $2. Agts. wanted. Liberal terms. Act quickly. National Pub. Co., Chicago

Trial Package Free.
If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

ASTHMA address, we will mail trial COCA-CHEKAN CURED never fails; send us your package FREE
COCA DRUG CO., BOX 424, CINCINNATI, O.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Signal Notes.

WYOMING and Utah have laws according to men and women equal wages for equal work.

WILHELMINA, Queen of the Netherlands, will take the oath of ascension to the throne on September 6, 1898, in the new church at Amsterdam.

THE amount of tobacco consumed annually per inhabitant in Germany and the United States is three pounds, and in Russia, France and England the amount is one pound.

Announcement.

There has been such a call for a fine large picture of Miss Willard at a moderate price that the Temple trustees have contracted with a noted art firm of Chicago to get up a superb life size picture in life tints. It is now being painted by an eminent artist and will be a perfect reproduction of the painting. On account of the large number we expect to dispose of we are able to produce them at fifty cents. We want White Ribboners to act as agents in every union to sell them, for which we will pay a liberal per cent, either to the Union or to individuals. All who desire to act as agents apply at once to me at The Temple. All profits accruing will go to the Temple fund.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed, 10c, 25c, 50c.

IVORY SOAP

Is sweet and clean, Careful housekeepers will have no other in the kitchen.

99 44/100 per cent PURE

"BREVITY IS THE SOUL OF WIT."

GOOD WIFE! YOU NEED

SAPOLIO

A MEMENTO

of the beloved leader

FRANCES E. WILLARD

is what every one now desires. What better one could be found than the

WILLARD BROOCH?

A genuine photograph and a good likeness.
Plain 12c., Hand-Tinted (water color) 20c.

Wood-Allen Publishing Company
1730 West Avenue

Ann Arbor, Mich.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

THE DOMINION COMPANY,

Publishers and Sellers of "Echoes from the Rocky Mountains;" "Infallible Logic;" "The Universal Cyclopædia and Dictionary," six volumes; "Standard Cyclopædia;" "The World: Mysterious and Heroic;" "In Richest Alaska;" "Facts and Fiction," a Monthly Magazine, etc., and

Authorized Distributers of

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard,"

BY ANNA A. GORDON,
For Twenty Years Miss Willard's Private Secretary.

The Memorial Volume of Frances E. Willard, a tribute of love and a token of remembrance of America's noblest woman.
Published by the official publishing house of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

"You may break, you may shatter, the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still."

Frances Willard has passed beyond, but in the hearts of humanity everywhere she lives as grandly as ever. Love has hung over her brow a halo of remembrance that through all time will glow as a beacon to guide the bark of Endeavor safely past the shoals. Never before has an American woman been so enthroned in the hearts of her countrywomen; never before has the passing away of an American woman caused such intense sorrow and called forth such universal expression of sympathy. Into the mansion of the rich, into the hovel of the poor, has gone the sunshine of her work, emancipating here, cheering there—always helpful, always encouraging.

The most fitting monument that can be erected to the memory of such a woman is a volume in which is described her beautiful life, and in which is recorded the world's tribute of love and praise to the departed. Never before in all the realm of books has there been such a spontaneous demand for a book as there is for "THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD." Over 40,000 advance orders were received before even a canvassing prospectus was ready. From the flower of the women of the land come sympathetic letters and volunteer offers to aid in distributing this grand volume. Officers of state and local W. C. T. U's are volunteering to canvass, many of whom will donate their profits to the temperance cause. From everywhere come letters of good cheer and Godspeed in the work. What a noble work to help circulate such a book! What great good this book will prove to the cause by its inspiring life-history and its gospel of temperance and purity. Into every home where there are boys and girls it will come as a gospel of love and cheer, to inspire to better lives, to redeem and to save from drunkards' graves and lives of shame.

We never loved any other book as we do this one, nor felt half the enthusiasm that we do about its success. It goes to your heart, it touches your feelings, it breathes peace into your troubled soul—somehow it brings back the loving face and the gentle voice of the dear one who has passed beyond mortal ken. As you turn the bright pages and read the beautiful story of the life of this saintly woman, tears of sacred joy gather in your eyes, and roll down your cheeks, and drop one by one upon the words—for they are words that have come from golden pens dipped in the fountain of love.

What an Agency Means.—An agency for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" means two things: First, it will aid a noble cause. Secondly, it is the greatest opportunity of a life time to make money. While the greater part of the profits on this book will go to the temperance cause, all who engage in its sale have been liberally provided for that they may receive good pay for their labor. In every county are thousands of admirers of Frances Willard, who will want a copy of this book. Large lists of orders can be taken each day. A few hours a day devoted to showing this book to friends and acquaintances will yield from $4 to $12 a day. Reports so far received verify this. The amount which experienced salespeople can make is almost unlimited.

Opportunities.—If every family in the nation could be canvassed for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," over 8,000,000 copies would be sold, and the proceeds that would go to the temperance cause would be so great as to place the W. C. T. U. on a financial basis that would forever endure. But what can you do with this grand book? We do not care what you have done with other books, or whether you have done anything. This book is a record breaker and will beat them all as a seller. How many homes are there in your county? One thousand, five thousand, ten thousand? No matter how many or how few, you will get an order at almost every house. Ten calls a day will get you at least five orders, and most likely eight or nine. Everyone, whether directly interested in the cause for which she worked, knew of and loved Miss Willard, and will want this grand, inspiring book, telling all about her heroic, self-sacrificing and beautiful life.

Terms.—We pay the largest commissions and help our salespeople in every possible way. We give a discount of 3 per cent for cash with order. When the order amounts to $35 or more and cash accompanies the order in full, we pay freight (not express) on the books. We pay duty on shipments to Canada. To honest agents we can arrange to give a credit of 30 days. Hence, everyone can conduct this business.

Canvassing Outfit.—This consists of a sample book of about a hundred pages of the complete book, showing contents, beautiful illustrations, quality of paper, styles of binding, and size of complete book, and contains guarantee to subscribers and blanks on which to record orders. With it will be sent our best instructions for successful work. This complete outfit will be sent postpaid for only 50 cents. The 50 cents may be deducted in remitting for the first ten books sold. Outfits are now ready. Order to-day—this very hour—and be ahead of agents who may soon swarm the territory with spurious books.

Territory.—To help you in taking orders readily we will let you select such territory as you can reach and canvass to the best advantage and with the greatest profit.

We want a member in every local W. C. T. U., in every church, in every church society, in every temperance lodge, in every benevolent and humane organization, in every township, village, town and city, to volunteer at once to canvass every member, and every person that can be reached, with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want every man and woman in the United States and Canada, who has had any experience in the sale of books, to devote themselves for a time to the sale of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." It will pay. Drop all else.

Size and Prices.

The book will be a royal octavo in form, about 16 x 10 inches when open, will contain between 400 and 500 pages beautifully and profusely illustrated, and will sell for $2.00 in Cloth, $2.75 in Half Morocco and $3.75 in Full Morocco.

All Prospectuses and Complete Books will have this official stamp on the title page.

The first thing to do is to send your order with 50 cents for canvassing outfit. Send it to-day, this very hour. Outfits are now ready and in the hands of agents. Yours will be sent by return mail. Don't lose an hour. Address,

THE DOMINION COMPANY,

Authorized Distributers . . . Dept. 5, 352-354-356 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, U. S. A. (Please mention "The Union Signal.")

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME: WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 14. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, April 7, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
Prospect of War—Alaska Prohibition in Danger—Temperance—Educational—About Women—At Home—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Our Leader. By Emma Playter Seabury 3
Poem, On the Death of Frances E. Willard. By Mabel Estelle Callahan 3
An Easter Party in Jonesville. Chap. I. By Josiah Allen's Wife 3
Ideals the Basis of Progress. II. By Lucinda B. Chandler 4
Mrs. Kaji Yajima. By Clara Parrish 4
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Signs of the Times in Virginia 5
The Ethical Code of Lawyers 5
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Do You Know Her? 7
The Shadow Picture. By Anna Blanche M'Cune 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Battle for Temperance in Our Colleges and Universities 8
Opinions on School Suffrage 8
Mrs. M. E. Kirk, of Australia 9
In Aid of Suffering Cubans 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Y's at Work 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Nevada—Virginia—Ohio—Michigan—Arkansas 10, 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
School Savings Banks—Work Among Miners—Schools of Methods and Parliamentary Usage—Purity in Literature and Art 11, 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 12
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
WHERE OUR SPEAKERS ARE 13
Obituaries 13
W. C. T. U. NEWS 13
Announcement 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14

RED-LETTER DAY.

TEACHERS' DAY—APRIL 21.

The birthday of Froebel.

Notes and Comments.

THE effort of the Maine W. C. T. U., under the leadership of their state president, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, to purify the judiciary by securing the removal of Judge Foster from the supreme bench upon a charge of immorality, has been successful. He has been dropped and a better man appointed to the place, in spite of the fact that he was a Mason and a G. A. R. man, and had, until later years, been an acceptable judge.

THE last sacred service for our beloved leader, Miss Frances E. Willard, will be held at Rosehill cemetery, on Easter Sunday. No day could have been more fitly chosen than Easter in which to lay the precious "earthly mantle" of our dear Miss Willard under the "low green tent whose curtain never outward swings." Our deepest sympathy will follow the group of kindred and nearest neighbors during this sad service, with the prayer that triumphant faith will enable them to look from the open grave to the open heaven.

MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, of Maine, superintendent of the department of peace and arbitration for the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, has sent to President McKinley, on behalf of a half million women, a letter commending the action of the administration in the present crisis, and urging that peace be maintained. This document bears also the signatures of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president, and Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

THAT the appeal on page 9 in behalf of Cuban sufferers, sent out by the King's Daughters, may have all the emphasis we can give it, we quote here the substance of Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson's letter to THE UNION SIGNAL: "Something has been done to meet the cruel hunger that has destroyed hundreds of thousands of the dwellers in this beautiful island; but the distress of nakedness is to be met as well as that of starvation. I would not ask from any member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union that she give money by which we may purchase either garments or materials. In view of the Temple need, I would not feel justified in diverting one penny from that which will help the Temple fund; but I would like to ask if all over this country there are not unions which could give a little time to the sewing of plain, simple garments suitable for summer wear, thus swelling the number which we hope to send out by every Saturday's steamer. The dry goods dealers will, we think, if properly approached, donate the materials. The work can be done in groups, or by each woman who can do so consenting to make one or two, or as many garments as possible in her own home. You know the situation, and your hearts feel it as mine does, and will spring even more readily to the help of the suffering women and children, for you have all been trained by your own long practice, as well as by the teaching of your great departed leader, to give yourselves to the womanhood and the childhood of the world. May we not hope for your sympathy and prayers and coöperation in the present crisis?"

IN one of the parlors of the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago, the lesson committee of the International Sunday-school Association met last week to arrange a six years' course of study for the Sunday-school pupils round the world—some twenty million in all. Twelve of the fifteen members which make up the committee were present, among them Mr. B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, the veteran Sunday-school worker and founder of the international lesson system. The lessons for three and one-half years, beginning with January, 1901, are taken from the New Testament, and for the remaining two and one-half years from the Old Testament. Despite the pessimistic utterances of Mr. Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, concerning the decadence of the Sunday-school (which are being vigorously combated by the religious press), and despite the fact which every observing person must recognize, that there is plenty of room for improvement in methods, history proves that the Sunday-school is steadily increasing in numbers and in influence. A lesson plan which links together all the Sunday-schools of Christendom is a grand idea. The only criticism we make at present is, that while two-thirds of the church membership and the majority of Sunday-school teachers are women, there is not a woman on the lesson committee. We women are always "wanting to know you know," and if there is any good reason why this committee should be a sex-tarian body we would like to be informed of it.

ON March 22, the United States Senate passed without opposition the Pritchard Bill, to raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen in the District of Columbia and the territories, a bill for which the W. C. T. U. department of legislation and the Reform Bureau have worked for two years. Three times committees reported unfavorably on this measure, but the rule of "three times and out" is not recognized by the promoters of reform legislation. The House Judiciary Committee refused to report the Senate bill, but has reported instead the Broderick Bill, with sundry amendments for the protection of men. This committee, it appears, is so nearly unanimous for these amendments (and here lies a potent argument for woman suffrage) that it is probably the best that can be obtained at present. There is already a law punishing a man or boy in the District of Columbia who wrongs a girl under sixteen, whether with or without her consent, by a maximum penalty of fifteen years' imprisonment. Another law also remains in force, applying to both men and women of the District of Columbia and the territories, which provides a maximum penalty for fornication of six months' imprisonment and a hundred dollar fine. The effect of even the amended House bill would be to double this penalty when seduction and previous chaste character can be proved in the case of District girls of sixteen and seventeen, and the amendment of the Senate, extending the law to the territories, should be urged, especially by letters from the territories themselves. This would strengthen the law in Mexico and Oklahoma also. In any case, say our workers at Washington, it will be best to ask every congressman to aid the passage of the Broderick Bill, as amended, amending it, if possible, when it comes to vote, by making the maximum imprisonment five years to equal the law of Arizona, and the age twenty-one years.

Current Events.

Prospect of War.

Intervention on the Cuban Question May Result in a Conflict Between this Country and Spain.

THE long pending problem as to the outcome of the insurrection in Cuba bids fair to have been definitely settled before these pages reach our readers. The president is now preparing a final message to Congress bearing on the situation, and unless Spain surrenders the island in the meantime, action will be taken immediately upon its receipt.

The course of President McKinley has been conservative to the last degree, every possible effort having been made to secure the freedom of Cuba without resorting to the horrors of war. Diplomatic messages have been exchanged between this government and Spain, however, without securing the desired result, and meanwhile the preparations for war have gone rapidly forward. Our navy has been materially strengthened, arms and ammunition purchased, war vessels put in fighting order, and naval recruits are being enlisted daily. In addition to the $50,000,000 placed at the disposal of the President by Congress, New York has appropriated $1,000,000, Iowa $500,000, and other states will do the same.

The freedom of Cuba is assured, but at what price remains to be seen.

Alaska Prohibition in Danger.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4.—On March 24, in the United States Senate, the bill to strengthen the government of Alaska being up for consideration, Senator Perkins introduced an amendment, a part of which would repeal prohibition and establish high license instead. Senator Hansbrough offered a substitute continuing prohibition, and adjournment occurred without a vote. Senator Carter, who has the bill in charge, has been induced by The Reform Bureau to delay the vote until the people can be heard from, if they speak swiftly. Even if the Senate adopts the amendment, as it is feared it will, there will yet remain time for the people to protest against this surrender to the rum power in the House. The war excitement ought not to be allowed to divert attention from moral peril, which history shows to be more dangerous to nations than invading armies. Even the senators from prohibition states are very generally accepting the argument that because prohibition is not enforced, it should be repealed. One would think the best way to deal with law-breakers was to compel obedience to law rather than reward law-breaking by licensing the criminals, as if they would be likely to obey any law, when government had surrendered to them. Even temperance people often forget that choice is not between violated prohibition and obeyed license laws, for there are as many speak-easies under the best high license as under the worst prohibition. Let us ask enforcement rather than repeal of prohibition.

Temperance.

THE New Haven No-License League is inaugurating a no-license campaign in New Haven, Conn.

NINE-TENTHS of the blackberry cordial is made without blackberries, and has none of their admirable qualities.—California Wine Co. circular.

A STRONG union of temperance forces is being formed to compel the enforcement of the prohibitory law, and to do away with the liquor joints in Kansas City.

PROHIBITION in North Dakota has saved the people of that state more than $23,000,000 during the less than eight years that the prohibitory law has been in force.

NINETY-ONE school districts in New York failed to furnish proof of compliance with the law requiring instruction in narcotics. These districts were informed that public money would be withheld because of such failure.

ONE of the results of Dr. Swallow's campaign last fall is to be seen in the present activity of temperance people all over the state of Pennsylvania, in opposition to the granting of licenses. Hundreds of remonstrances are being filed with the judges having jurisdiction.

THE National Prohibition conference at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, will be held on July 1, 2 and 4. The third of July will be memorial day to General Neal Dow and Frances E. Willard, and on the 5th and 6th the National Medical Temperance Congress will be held.

A BUFFALO correspondent to the C. T. A. U. Bulletin says that within twenty days five young men died in the Erie county, N. Y., hospital, to whom the attending priest was not allowed to give any of the last rites of the church, because they remained in a drunken stupor until they died.

THE United States Supreme Court is to be asked to decide whether it is constitutional to grant liquor licenses. Mr. Hiram De Walt, of Philadelphia, has brought a remonstrance against the renewal of the license of one J. F. Boyle, of that city, on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the license system, and declares his intention of carrying it to the highest court.

DR. WILLIAM R. HARPER, president of the University of Chicago, has the following to say to The Voice on the subject of prohibition in the university:

"1. Students of the University of Chicago are not permitted to have alcoholic liquors in their room.

"2. They are not permitted to have alcoholic liquors at the tables in the university houses.

"3. They are not permitted to have alcoholic liquors at class spreads.

"4. It is a law of the University of Chicago that the house rules of every house, including fraternities, shall contain a rule prohibiting the use of alcoholic drinks in the house or at entertainments given by the house. The Quadrangle Club, the membership of which is largely composed of professors and instructors of the university, contains among its regulations such a rule. So far as I am aware, there is no disposition on the part of the students of the university to disobey these rules. Drunkenness on the part of the students is something almost unknown to the authorities. The trustees and officers of the university coöperate very heartily with the citizens of Hyde Park, in maintaining the law which makes the Hyde Park district a prohibition district."

Educational.

THE highest salary of any college professor is $20,000. Professor Summer, of Edinburg University, receives this amount.

YALE annually buys $7,000 worth of books for her library, Harvard spends $16,000 for the same purpose, and Columbia $43,000.

CO-EDUCATION in the Taylor high school for English boys and girls at Poona has been discontinued and now there are two schools.

THE latest published list of university settlements enumerates 74 in the United States, 41 in England, 6 in Scotland, 1 in Bombay, India, and 2 in Japan, a list of 124 settlements of the world.

AN association of Baltimore women has contributed $500 to found a fellowship to enable some worthy young woman to study abroad. The young woman best fitted by natural ability and testimonials to health and character will be chosen.

THE Chicago Board of Education has adopted a resolution increasing the salary of every grammar and primary grade teacher in the public schools of Chicago $75 for the year 1898, and $50 per year thereafter until a maximum salary of $1,000 shall be reached.

THE University of Chicago received Easter gifts aggregating $320,000. One-half the amount was given by a woman who prefers to be unknown, and Miss Katherine Bruce, of New York, gave $1,500 outright and $15,000 conditionally to the astronomical work of the university.

About Women.

GOVERNOR TYLER, of Virginia, has vetoed the bill which permitted women to become notaries.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET has attained the dignity of a grandmother, her son's wife having recently given birth to an heir.

MRS. LUCRETIA GARFIELD, widow of President Garfield, contributed $500 toward the Tucker memorial at Washington and Lee University.

THE Countess of Wisberg, wife of Prince Oscar of Sweden, is in London taking a course of training as a nurse, in order to help her husband in missionary work he has undertaken in Africa.

Two women doctors have been specially honored by the India office. Dr. Margaret Marion Traill Christie and Dr. Alice M. Corthven have been appointed to look after the hospitals for native women in Bombay, especially in connection with the bubonic plague. Dr. Corthven at present holds the office of demonstrator of physiology at the London School of Medicine for Women.

MRS. LIVINGSTONE, formerly of the Dominion Lands Office at Winnipeg, Canada, has been appointed by the Department of the Interior to take charge of the immigration of a superior class of domestic servants from Britain to Manitoba and the territories. The position calls for journeys to Britain to select and bring out the girls, and also their general supervision in this country. Mrs. Livingstone's first trip will be to Scotland, shortly.

MISS LENORE MOONEY, chief clerk of the postoffice inspector's department at Chicago, has been promoted to the position of chief clerk in the same department at Washington. The selection of a woman for the position of chief clerk at Washington, which is one of great trust, is regarded as an unusual departure, but Miss Mooney's friends consider it but the proper recognition of her merit. The promotion carries with it a substantial increase in salary

LADY TENNYSON, Mrs. Wilberforce and more than a thousand other influential churchwomen in England, petitioned Convocation that women should be eligible to serve on the new parish church councils, as they already are to serve on the secular parish councils. The Lower House of Convocation recommended that the petition be granted, but the bishops have decided that no women shall sit in the church councils, except those women who are church wardens. These will be members ex-officio.

At Home.

JUDSON W. LYONS (colored), of Georgia, has been named by President McKinley to succeed the late Blanche K. Bruce as register of the treasury.

A PORTRAIT of the late Gen. Neal Dow, painted by the celebrated artist, Walter Gilman Page, was presented to the city of Portland, Me., on March 21, with appropriate ceremonies. Col. Fred N. Dow was the donor.

BY a vote of 95 to 28 the Louisiana constitutional convention adopted a suffrage plan providing for educational and property qualifications and a poll tax, the object being to disfranchise negroes. Provision was made to let in as many white people as possible. This may be accomplished by exempting naturalized voters as well as those who were voters in 1867 with their sons and grandsons.

Abroad.

PRINCE BISMARCK celebrated his eighty-third birthday on April 1.

MRS. DELIA T. STEWART PARNELL, mother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, leader of the Irish Home Rule party, died on March 26 from the effects of burns received by her clothing taking fire at an open grate.

HON. WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE, the "grand old man" of England, has returned to his home at Hawarden to die. His physicians have assured him that the end is not far off, and he has expressed his content that it should be so.

Contributed.

Our Leader.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

WHAT shall we do without her, our leader wise and great,
When we wrestle with grave issues in council and debate?
When the wrong stands firm, united, its legions full of might,
And our forces fail and scatter with the ensign of the right?

What shall we do without her, when faltering hearts grow weak,
And she is not here to rally, or her cheering words to speak?
When doubts and fears o'erwhelm us, and our flag is in the dust?
Her faith nor waned, nor wavered—calm, her abiding trust.

What shall we do without her? When the cheer of triumph came,
Her voice rang out glad tidings, her soul set ours aflame,
And the glory of a conquest cannot be one half so sweet,
Unless we lay the laurels of the victory at her feet.

What shall we do without her, our leader brave and true,
When her plan is not accomplished, and there is so much to do?
When our hearts are dumb with anguish, and our hope is dim and low?
But we dare not pause for grieving as we face the watchful foe.

What shall we do without her—leader, woman, sister, friend,
Without her inspiration to guide us to the end?
Life must gather stronger purpose in her unfulfilled commands,
And the duties and the issues she has thrown upon our hands.

Pittsburg, Kan.

On the Death of Frances E. Willard.

BY MABEL ESTELLE CALLAHAN.

THERE came a Voice in the early morn,
A soft, clear voice;
We heard it not, but to her it spoke,
"Thy labor is ended; put off thy yoke;
Come home; rejoice!
It is enough; thou hast well done;
I will reward thee, faithful one."

An angel came in the early morn,
And took her hand.
Her banner dropped, but we who remain
Will lift it up quickly on high again
O'er all the land,
And carry on the work begun,
Until we, too, shall hear, "Well done!"

The worker dies, but the work goes on,
Throughout all time.
Grand and noble, a genius of power,
Ready for duty at every hour,
With spirit sublime;
Thus will her mem'ry crown the years,
While we press on, 'mid hopes and fears.

Washington, D. C.

An Easter Party in Jonesville.
In Two Chapters.

BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE.

CHAPTER I.

I HAD a old-fashioned Easter party here. We have been in the habit of givin' 'em for a number of years. There is sunthin' so upliftin' and glorious in this season that it always seems appropriate, and so I cook up oncommon good vittles (which is very happifyin' to my companion), put on my best clothes and try to clothe my soul in clean and becomin' garments fittin' for the occasion.

Josiah's idees about Lent are some different from mine, though he means well. I asked him what he meant to give up this year durin' Lent, for conscience sake. And he said he guessed he would give up the pleasure of givin' to the missionary fund. Sez he, "You know I always have give ten cent a month, and I guess that I may as well give that up this year durin' Lent."

Sez I, "Josiah Allen, be you conscientious in that? Do you give it up on principle, or do you do it to scrimp and save?"

He waved off my question. He acted guilty, and sez he, "Well, I guess I'll give up gum."

"Gum," says I dreamily, "what kind of gum?"

"Oh, spruce and pepsin and beeswax." And he went on with a shrewd look on his mean, "You know if I give up gum I'll be a-hittin' two birds with one stun. You know what a crusade eminent clergymen are a-makin' ag'inst gum chewin', for as they well say, this country is liable to be plunged into ruin by this wicked and dangerous habit. Don't you remember that eloquent sermon we read by that high dignitary in the church where he called on all progressive and public-sperited men to take a stand ag'inst the gum fiend that stands ready to plunge its deadly fangs into our best and noblest youth to ruin 'em for this world and bring 'em down into a gum chewer's unhallowed grave? How eloquently he spoke of the wretchedness and want it brung into the homes of the gum chewers—I could see it all as in a picter," sez Josiah, "a cent a stick, and as many as forty sticks consumed a year, and mebby their children barefoot, and the shame and disgrace that overwhelmed the innocent wives and children of the gum chewers, that was drawed into the deadly vortex. Wuzn't you thrilled by it, Samantha? Why them noble words went through me like a simiter."

"Well," sez I, evasively, "most probable I hain't so good a judge as he wuz, for I hain't never happened to see anybody reelin' round, crazy drunk, from the effects of spruce gum, a danger to themselves and society, but," sez I, "if it is a matter of conscience with you, I hain't a-goin' to break it up."

So I guess he did leave off gum. He had used pepsin gum some for dyspepsia, and thought that it had helped him, but I didn't see him use any durin' Lent. I didn't say no more ag'inst it, for one of the very things I intended to give up durin' Lent wuz comin' out and arguin' with my pardner, even if it wuz for his good, though I had sometimes thought and felt that it wuz a great job to tackle to keep my pardner headed right, yet there had been a satisfaction in it when I see that my words had took effect. And then I laid out to stop as much as I could a-feelin' proud over Thomas J's success in business, and lookin' down in my mind on Uncle Ichabod's son, who wuz a lawyer, but not to be compared with Thomas J. And I laid out to be more charitable in my heart towards Mis' Sylvester Bobbett's housekeepin' (she hain't no housekeeper at all compared with me). And I laid out to give up lard in pie crust; it makes pies look fur better, but hain't so healthy as butter. But I laid out to spend the most of my strength on my mind and heart, and to keep 'em jest as nigh right as I could, feelin' that that wuz a sacrifice we poor mortals needed most to make. We are all such poor weak creeters that we need all the help we can git from any source to keep ourselves headed right.

Why, Mis' Sylvester Bobbett gin up tea and sugar last year, and wuz mad as a hen when she found out that Mis' Solomon Bobbett had gin up wheat bread and salt, as well as tea and sugar. It made a hardness between 'em; they had words about it to the Easter meetin', and hain't spoke since, so I have been told. Now, that hain't any way to keep Lent. Salt and sugar wouldn't done 'em nigh so much harm as their jealous and bitter feelin's toward each other.

But to resoom. Though I say it that shouldn't, better vittles wuz never set on the table in Jonesville or Loontown, or probable in the hull town of Lyme. I cooked every mite of it myself, with a little of Philury's help. Josiah said: "Well, Samantha, we did git up a good dinner, didn't we?"

"For the land's sake!" sez I, "what did you do about the cookin'?"

"Why," sez he, in a hurt axent, "I killed the old gobbler."

And so he did; it wuz always a high-headed thing, scarin' the children and gobblin' and actin'. Wall, he cooked out dretful tender, brown and juicy. And we had some beautiful clear oyster soup, a pair of wild ducks that Thomas J. killed down to the ma'sh, and vegetables of all kinds, and plum puddin', and mince pie and cranberry sass, and strawberry jell, and cakes of all kinds, and some oranges and white grapes, and rich coffee, with yeller cream, and I brung out my best dishes and the caster and made quite a fuss.

I put on my best tablecloth and napkins with the snowflake pattern, and the children brought me some flowers offen their house plants, and Maggie brought me a Easter lily, and with what I had it made a handsome bunch, and they arranged 'em in the centre of the table in a glass dish with some sweet geranium leaves, and they looked perfectly beautiful. I love to see such things but I don't have much time to tend to 'em, bein' took up with the essentials, such as vittles, etc.

We have enough Easter blessin's to be thankful for every year, Josiah Allen and I do, when we come to set down once a year and count 'em up, without addin' anybody else's blessin's to 'em, and so I hardly ever invite anybody else only the children and grandchildren; but brother and sister Minkley bein' in the family, as you may say, they come over with Whitfield and Tirzah Ann. And thinkin' a good deal of the Presbyterian minister's folks at Loontown, and knowin' that Mis' White had a spraint wrist so that she couldn't cook up, I asked them over to dinner. Ury went after 'em; they don't keep a horse. I hadn't had them to a Easter dinner before since the year that she that wuz Euphemy Emory's girl, sweet little Dollie, had got engaged to Royal White, the minister's only child, and seein' them and the children all here together on another Easter day it put me in mind of that time. Sister Minkley is own cousin to Euphemy, and she had told me when she first come that she had had a letter with startlin' news in it. It wuz the news that Euphemy wuz to be married after fourteen years of widerhood, and wuz a-goin' to give a big Easter dinner in honor of the event, a sort of a Thanksgivin' dinner, Mis' Minkley said.

"Well," sez I, "sometimes new husbands are to be gin thanks for, and then ag'in, they hain't. I think, myself, that Euphemy is resky in givin' one so soon." Sez I, "I believe she ort to have held off for a year or so before she gin thanks in public."

"Oh, no," sez she, "mebby she wouldn't feel so much like holdin' the party if she waited."

Mis' Minkley always will stand up for her folks; she always says, if your own folks won't stand up for you who will? And I see there wuz some sense in what she said, and I sez:

"Well, the land knows, I hope Mis' Boodle has got a good husband, and that she will take a little mite of comfort after what she has went through."

"Yes, indeed," sez she, "if there ever wuz a mourner for a first husband it has been Cousin Boodle. But this new husband of hern bids fair to be a accusation from what I hear, bein' fourhanded and good dispositioned, a old bachelor with no incumbrances."

"A old bachelor!" and I sithed ag'in, and sez, "It wuz dretful resky in Euphemy in givin' this party so soon, but I hope for the best."

"Yes, indeed!" sez Mis' Minkley. And then she sez, "Do give me the recipe for this dressin', Sister Allen, before you forgit it." Sez she, "Such dressin' I never see, much as I have seen good dressin' in my day."

And I told her how I made it. It wuz extremely beautiful. I put in chopped onion and a little pinch of summer savory, I like it better than I do sage. And so the world goes; all of our deepest joys and our deepest sorrows, our life or our death will be made the theme of our friends' momentary talk, and call out a groan or two and three or four sithes, and then be forgot in worldly matters, recipes, etc.

But not by me, no, indeed! After the company had all gone, Josiah a-hitchin' up and takin' Brother and Sister White home in the democrat, I sot by the fire and mused and mused on Euphemy Boodle and what she had went through; a-settin' all alone by the fire the past come a-sweepin' up ag'inst my conscientiousness, some as the sweet and yet melancholy west wind wuz a-sweepin' round the house and wailin' up ag'inst the settin' room winders and down the chimbly. Some of her history wuz sad and some of it wuz light; but truly our joys and our griefs are all twisted in so in this world that the stripes come dretful curious—sad and gay, dark and light, all twisted in one cord and that cord a-trailin' off out of sight, we can't tell where to. The clouds sweep up in front of it and hide it, so we can't tell whether the next color is a-goin' to be black or rosy.

But to resoom. It is some years ago sence Mis' Boodle, she that wuz Euphemy Emory, come to Jonesville to spend the summer, or as she called it, "the heated term." She hired the old Emory cottage and come home with seven trunks, a only child, a girl eighteen years old, and a lot of furniture. The house wuz furnished, but she wanted luxury, so she brung more luxurious easy chairs, and rugs and pictures, and small statutes, and a piano and things.

But the prettiest thing she brung wuz her girl, Dorothy Emory, named in a good old-fashioned way after her Grandma Emory. But her ma called her Dolly, and a prettier creeter I never see nor never expect to than Dolly.

You see Euphemy married a sort of a speculator called Boodle and wuz s'pozed to not be doin' very well. But how little, how little you can tell about such things in this world, it is such a curious place!

John Boodle wuz a native of Loontown and speculated in calves, and skim cheeses, and things on a small capital, probably not over thirty dollars at the outside. And folks thought that she'd better married Ebenizer Bobbett, who had a deep affection for her and a stiddy income; ownin' a farm of forty-five acres, and, as is well known, land is as stiddy property as you'll find, only in times of earthquakes and such.

But Euphemy loved John Boodle, and had from the time they went to school together. He a-speculatin' in jackknives and marbles and other tradin' stock, and a-drawin' her home on his handsled or a little wagon. And marry him she would, and marry him she did, and love didn't question how she wuz a-goin' to git along in the future.

But she no need to worry, John Boodle did the best that ever wuz; he made money hand over hand, and died in Chicago deeply lamented, leavin' her about five hundred thousand dollars, a perfect palace of a house, and one of the sweetest girls you ever see in your life.

Well, Euphemy bein' left alone—for after John died she looked on Chicago as she would on the desert of Sarah, without a livin' man in it. She kinder pined for the old home, the old friendly faces of neighbors that knowed her when she wuz a girl. She wanted to live in the house where she first met John; she wanted to see the parlor where he asked her to be his wife; the piaza where she consented; the old meetin' house where they wuz married; they wuz both Presbyterians by persuasion, and sung in the quire, and she wanted to see them old singin' books John used to write things in and pass over to her, and visey versey. So she gathered up her lions, rented her palace in Chicago, and come back to the old Emory place for the summer. The man that owned it now bein' more'n willin' to move out for what she gin him, and work the farm from a cross road, where he rented a house.

Well, the old Emory homestead is pretty nigh our house, not over half a mild cross lots, and bein' that Dolly took dretfully to us, and we to her, the pretty creeter used to run over most every day to see us. I and Josiah are very agreable, and are called so by good judges. And how we did set by her, Josiah and me. And how it brightened up the house to have her a-settin' on fair mornin's in our east stoop, with her big white hat in her lap, and her hands full of posies mebby, not one on 'em sweeter than her pretty face. And her bright eyes a-questionin' my pardner and me about everything just as much as her gay, sweet voice did.

She wanted to know about everything, dretful interested in country matters, and she'd tell us lots about the city and where she'd been, and what she'd seen, and about the books she'd read and all her life in the past. But there wuz one thing that she didn't tell me about, but I read it all the same. There is a language writ in flushing cheeks, and brightening eyes, and shy looks and actin's, that I could read jest as plain as the book of Sams, which fell onto me from Mother Allen, printed in large type for aged people.

This one subject she did not talk diffuse about wuz Royal White, the Presbyterian minister's boy from Loontown. She met him when she first come here, her ma a-bein' a old-fashioned Presbyterian, keepin' up strict, goin' to all their meetin's and prayer-meetin's, etc.

Well, Dolly and Royal White hadn't met more'n several times before the old story Adam first whispered to Eve under the glowing shade of Eden wuz enacted again in Jonesville, and to Dolly and Royal occurred the same old miracle—they wuz carried right back to that Eden, glorified skies bent over a glorified earth, and under that glowin' light that wuz never on land or sea they heard the first whisper of love that the first man said to the first woman, and her happy heart answered it and the hull earth wuz transformed into beauty.

Well, Royal wuz such a remarkable good and smart boy, and always had been, (of which more anon) that there couldn't be no objections made, save on the ground of youth and poor circumstances, and Euphemy bein' sensible (and a-rememberin' her own past, so it wuz spozed) knew that Time would make the first all right and she could fix the latter—so she didn't make no objections, in fact seemed to look forrered to it with perfect willingness, she thought so much of Royal herself. And to us whom second sight had gin wisdom to see, the prettiest poem in the world wuz lived out there right before us through the long golden summer days.

And when Euphemy and Dolly went back to Chicago in the fall Dolly wuz engaged to be married as soon as Royal went through college, he wuz twenty and Dolly was eighteen. They could wait. And as sweet as Dolly wuz and as much as we liked her, we wuz willin', Josiah and me wuz, to have Royal White the man of her choice, for he wuz one of the nicest boys in the world. As I said, he wuz the Presbyterian minister's boy in Loontown; his pa and ma had lost six children, Royal bein' the seventh. And whether it wuz that seven is a lucky number, or whether it wuz in his constitution and makeup, or whether it wuz that Mis' White took better care on him, I don't know or Josiah don't, but any way and 'tennyrate Royal thrived and wuz jest the prettiest baby and the prettiest little boy and the nicest young man I ever see in my hull life. You see his pa and ma had lived right there in Loontown, only two milds away, and I'd known him from Alpha to Omega, or as fur towards Omega as he'd got.

Ideals the Basis of Progress.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

II.

THE most encouraging and healthful tendency of the new school of thought to-day in the realm of ethics is the affirmation and acceptance of the truth that divine possibilities are inherent in human nature. The morbid and devitalizing estimate of human nature, bred by the unwholesome, theological systems of the past, and held through the centuries as sacred truth, has paralyzed moral sense, and weakened instead of developing, the higher powers of the race. The tendency to expect the meaner instead of the nobler qualities of humanity to dominate has become deeply rooted. Instead of holding that, it is commonly accepted that the wrongs and iniquities of self-seeking, and the weaknesses of the lower nature will prevail. And one who squares the thought and conduct of life to truth, principle, and higher ideals than to the common thought seem practicable, is termed a crank. Impracticable is the verdict when a higher ethical standard is proposed as possible to be actualized.

> Ever the right comes uppermost,
> And ever is justice done,

This tendency of thought is ever pushing the mind into the gloom of pessimism, turning the thought backward and chaining it to the imperfection of the past, pronouncing with the hopelessness of a death-knell, it always has been and it always will be. The inbred distrust and ignoble estimate of human nature that has tended to fortify the self-seeking of individualism has created the chief obstacle to that unity, fraternal impulse and heart culture, that can promote the general welfare and establish justice. But the ideals of Sir Thomas More's "Utopia" survive to-day in Bellamy's "Economic Equality." Godin and Owen actualized the ideal so far as one personality can accomplish it. The coöperative idealist to-day knows that the success of mutualism depends solely on the strength of the altruistic spirit of the body of persons coöperatively working together. This spirit is exercising the thought and quickening the fraternal impulses of many minds to-day. Truer ideals of human nature and higher ideals of human obligations and responsibilities have modified the severity of penalties for misdemeanors and reduced the number of capital crimes. The increased care and provision for the comfort of the insane, the feeble-minded, the helpless and dependent in childhood or in age, imperfect though the provision may be in detail, indicate the advancement of humanity through higher ideals. As it is impossible for the individual to grow, to develop the higher nature, the diviner possibilities except through ideals, so is it impossible for associated humanity, the collective body, to develop the more perfect conditions which are possible except through ideals. "The proper study of mankind is man," and the proper study of associated humanity is the social organism. The two great responsibilities of the human being are to cultivate, develop and train to strength, wisdom and goodness the individual ego, and to find the true relation of the individual to all other individuals in the collectivity.

The supreme ideal which is equally binding in both responsibilities is that which can only benefit the collectivity by benefiting each of the individual members. The whole is greater than any of its parts. The welfare of the social body involves the welfare of each and all its parts. The ideal of individual rights has developed to some extent the sense of the responsibility of individual sovereignty, of the responsibility of the individual to seek the welfare of all individuals composing the social organism. It has developed a higher standard of citizenship. Under monarchy, aristocracy or hierarchy, the subject is overshadowed by and is responsible as a citizen only to the ruler. This overruling power is one assumed and instituted by fallible mortals. The responsibility of this power cannot from its nature identify itself with the interests of its subjects. Under the ideal of democracy, of individual sovereignty, the personal responsibility to obey the dictates of conscience and judgment, and to consider the necessities and general welfare of all the members of the social body, has developed a more intelligent and better citizenship, a broader view of human relations, a knowledge that the interests of each and all are identical, and a growing spirit of brotherhood.

While the prevailing systems, the trend of commercialism and attitude of mind, recognizes individual self-interest as the chief motive and object, there is and has been during the past century an undercurrent of mutualism steadily permeating the thought world. It has modified the asperities of the selfish forces in operation, it has quickened and strengthened the fraternal spirit, it has developed a keener sense of justice, and it has unified the purpose of many and diverse minds to promote the general welfare.

Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Kaji Yajima.

BY CLARA PARRISH.

ONE of Madam Willard's favorite counsels was: "If you withhold your meed of praise where it is due, you are simply a defaulter." It is with a full appreciation of this beautiful sentiment that I write the following sketch.

Mrs. Kaji Yajima, president of the Japan W. C. T. U., was born near the famous city of Kumamoto, in 1834. She is now three score years and more, but you would never suspect it, for her hair is still as black as the proverbial raven's wing; her eyes retain their brightness, and, best of all, to quote one of her own countrywomen, "her mental strength and enthusiasm have not abated to this day." It must be that to find the fountain of perpetual youth for which Ponce de Leon searched, is simply to give one's self to humanitarian work.

To begin with her childhood. The father was a landholder, so silkworm culture became the principal occupation of the women folk of the family, and the daughter was trained in all the homely arts of spinning and weaving silk. There were no schools in those days, but she seems to have received more than an average education—mainly from her mother—and her beautiful penmanship is known all over the Empire, and is the admiration of every youth.

She married very young, as was the custom at that time, but the union proved to be an unhappy one, and while her third child was still a babe in arms, she returned to her father's house. Referring to her past life, she says that much of her zeal for the temperance work had its origin in the sad experiences of those early years. I always think of Malachi 3: 3 in this connection: "He sits as a refiner and purifier of silver."

In 1871 (then thirty-seven) she came from her southern home to Tokyo on business, and was persuaded by relatives to remain and prepare herself for teaching—the government having opened a few schools by this time. This she did, and the great work of her life began. Speaking of her relatives, it is interesting to note that she belongs to one of the most progressive families in Japan. The younger men, as journalists and college presidents, are perhaps doing more to-day to mould the thought of the nation than any other persons.

Shortly after beginning her school work Mrs. Yajima made the acquaintance of some Christians and commenced attending church. The officials of her school were not pleased with this, and made it so unpleasant that it was necessary for her to find another home. All this apparent loss was to be only gain in the end. How beautifully does our Father plan for those who really want to learn of Him! Through the pastor of the church she met Mrs. True, one of the rarest spirits that ever graced the mission field, and the latter invited her to Graham Seminary. Soon she became permanently connected with this school, now called the Joshi gakuin, and is at present the Japanese head. In 1877 she was baptized and entered the communion of the Presbyterian church.

During the next ten years she gave herself unstintedly to building up her school, and in so doing developed her own character. Who should be so capable as she, when Mrs. Leavitt came in 1886, of comprehending the spirit of our great reform? She gave the W. C. T. U. her best love, and to this she has ever been faithful, agitating, educating, organizing, until the union has become an acknowledged power for good in the land. No writer, now, either religious or secular, in his summing up of the work in Japan, fails to mention the Nippon Fujin Christian Kyofu Kwai.

But how little the "sketches" we write really reveal of the struggles, the victories, the work of a great life! It would not be possible for us of the West to understand what it cost a sensitive woman of the Orient to reach the place of honor and trust which our Japanese leader has attained. In a country where women are only servants, she is respected and called one of "the prophets of the new time." Words can not express my appreciation of such a life. The pathway of every girl in Japan will be strewn with at least a few flowers because she lived and conquered. God bless her! I love her truly. I believe in her fully. She is a wonderful woman, one of the dearest mother-hearts I have ever known, and I shall always be braver and better for having known her, which is the highest tribute I could pay. May "the angels of the Lord" continue to bear her company, and may she be permitted to live to lead her countrywomen to still greater and grander heights!

Willard Hall Echoes.

THE twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Willard Hall, Thursday, March 24, from 10 A. M. to 1. P. M., and from 2 to 5 P. M. Miss Willard's pure face spoke to us in bust and in two life size crayons, and the atmosphere of the room was such we felt that our loved leader was not far from us. Mrs. Matilda B. Carse presided. The devotional service at 10 A. M., conducted by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, was followed by reports from officers and superintendents of different branches of the work. Miss Louisa S. Linebarger gave a cornet solo. Miss Emily S. Dryer, a Crusader, with snowy hair, stepped forward, holding in her hand the same Bible from which she read the Scripture in the first noon meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. in Farwell Hall, twenty-four years ago. She read the same portions of Scripture read in that first meeting. Her words were tender and helpful as she linked that beginning to the present hour. Then Mrs. Carse presented the National W. C. T. U. president, Lillian M. N. Stevens, who spoke with deep emotion, rising to a point of eloquence that carried conviction to every heart.

At 2 P. M. Mrs. S. M. D. Fry led the devotional exercises, and Mrs. Charles L. Krum and Mrs. Frank Bosworth rendered a beautiful duet. This was followed by reports by other workers having charge of different branches, and a solo by Mrs. Krum.

Mrs. Carse conducted a memorial service for Miss Willard, weaving in touching incidents of the early days in the work, when our gifted leader turned her back upon the honors offered her, enduring privations and hardships because her fellows were being slain by the destroyer.

. . . . . .

For two weeks V. D. David is to be away from Willard Hall. If the Lord will, he will return Monday, April 11, 1898, and continue to speak at the noon meetings.

Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, who has just returned from the Pacific coast, will speak from March 28 until April 8. "It is wonderful," said Dr. Henry, "what a reputation this place has on the Pacific coast." Letters from the Atlantic and from nearly all parts of the country tell the same story.

ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

Signs of the Times in Virginia.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I do not in any way wish to usurp the duties of our talented press superintendent, but I feel as if it will be a real privilege to talk a little with my sisters everywhere about sayings and doings down here in "Ole Virginia."

It is said that Virginia, the Old Dominion, the mother of heroes and statesmen, is fond of her toddy, and in many lines of reform is far behind her sister states.

Born and reared in Virginia, I wish to tell her in all kindness, that her people do most unhallowed things, and public sentiment is not as sensitive as it ought to be. If it were, it would be impossible for papers to publish glowing accounts of banquets, giving long lists of names of ladies (the very flower of our land) to whom these banquets are given, describing their costumes and jewels, giving the names of special belles who presided over the punch bowls, and saying, "each room was abundantly supplied with punch and champagne—the champagne adding new luster to already brilliant eyes." Truly, it is time for some one to fear that Virginia is in a state of moral torpor. But Virginia is opening her eyes. When she gets thoroughly awake to her responsibilities, and can give up some of her old customs and traditions, she will make rapid strides in the right direction. Being a near neighbor to our capital, Richmond, and having many acquaintances in the legislature now in session, I am in a position to know that never before has so much interest been manifested by Virginia in various lines of reform, especially in that of temperance. The other day our new governor, Tyler, at a banquet of the Democratic Club would "drink the toasts" in nothing stronger than buttermilk. The Virginia House has passed a bill to tax clubs dispensing liquors the same as saloons. A dozen senators have petitions from their constituents begging that it shall pass the Senate.

Another bill provides for the removal of saloon blinds, screens, curtains, etc., and that no liquor be sold between twelve o'clock Saturday and sunrise of the succeeding Monday.

The Baptist ministers of Richmond meet in conference Mondays. One whole morning was spent discussing a petition for compulsory scientific temperance instruction, which was before them for endorsement. One stanch lecturer, author and preacher, well known all over this country, stuck at "tobacco and other narcotics." While he didn't use tobacco at all, he was opposed to placing tobacco with other narcotics. Another eminent divine said that he was raised on a tobacco farm, and had used it nearly all his life, but had given it up of late as a bad thing. He had for years had a boys' meeting at his church every Sunday afternoon, and being closely associated with these boys, year after year, had seen the terrible effects of tobacco on their character and lives, and on that account had given it up, and he urged that tobacco should be included with other narcotics. The endorsement was unanimous, with the exception of the brother who was not willing that tobacco should be in bad company. It was hard to make these educated men believe that Virginia was one of only four states without a compulsory scientific temperance law. You see we have set them to thinking!

At another meeting of this same conference a discussion took place on the question of whether a liquor dealer should be received or retained as a church member. No action was taken.

The W. C. T. U. of Virginia is much wrought up over the scientific temperance instruction bill pending in the legislature. Our state superintendent, Mrs. A. E. Wait, prepared a bill, that should it pass, would make an ideal law. Mr. Maupin, who engineered so successfully the anti-gambling bill two years ago, offered it. It was referred to the committee on schools and colleges; after passing through all the committee stages, it was reported unfavorably yesterday.

We cannot tell yet what the result will be, but this bill has done a great deal toward arousing and educating. Ministers, lawyers and legislators who, three months ago, cared nothing for and knew nothing about the subject, and in some cases would not read or even look at the petition, are now its stanchest supporters.

The W. C. T. U. of Newport News petitioned the Secretary of Navy, Hon. James D. Long, praying that, instead of following the old-established custom of christening warships with whisky, wine or champagne, he order the battleships Kentucky and Kearsarge to be christened with water from the historic James river. So you see Virginia is falling into line and even coming to the front. With a little more agitating and educating the victory will be ours.

(MRS.) THOS. P. BAGBY.

West Point, Va.

The Ethical Code of Lawyers.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—A brief editorial note in this paper several weeks ago referred to the meeting of the National Prison Association at Austin, Texas, and mentioned several recommendations concerning possible methods for checking the increase of crime, that were there adopted. One recommendation not alluded to in the item, but which I deem of great importance in connection with the social renovation, was that which affirmed the need for a "reconstruction of the ethical code of lawyers." As this subject, by a coincidence, had a little while previously been claiming my own attention, and it being in accord with the general purposes of the National Reform Association, just met in convention at Philadelphia, that body was communicated with upon the subject, and the following pertinent resolution was adopted: "That we thoroughly agree with the National Prison Association in session at Austin, Texas, that one of the principal means to be looked to in the endeavor to check what is correctly referred to as 'the frightful progress of crime,' is a reconstruction of the ethical code of lawyers, with the law of Christ as the high standard, after the example of the elder Horace Binney and other lawyers, who refused to be retained upon any case that showed the taint of deception or immorality."

I will give, from personal knowledge, several illustrations of legal talent used in the direct promotion of immorality. In the year 1885, after sundry appeals made to the police authorities in the matter of the display of indecent theatrical show bills, resulting in their successive removal, yet followed by the exposure of others that were still more objectionable, it seemed to be my personal duty (the chief of police declining to assume any responsibility) to cause the arrest of the theater manager who was the principal offender in this direction. The manager retained for his defense two lawyers, one of them well known in the community as of the kind to champion a bad cause, while the other was of much better reputation. Surprised that he should thus stand up for the promotion of vice, I privately told him so. I thought he had fallen into a low association. Providentially, the cause of purity prevailed, the manager was found guilty, was fined one hundred dollars and to pay the costs, and has been more careful as to the character of his posters ever since; but the lawyer just mentioned, with singular inconsistency, was announced at about the time of the trial as lecturing to a class of young men in a Baptist congregation on the subject of good morals!

There began to be published in New York city, about four years ago I believe, a copiously and very sensuously illustrated weekly, more morally dangerous even than the notorious Police Gazette. It has been exposed at almost all the sidewalk news stands, and, in the hope that its open sale at least might be suppressed, complaint was made by me against a vender. His counsel (who, I doubt not, was also retained for his defense by the Newsdealers' Association) is a representative, unscrupulous attorney. Skilled in all sophistries he showed to the jury that the black was really white, or very nearly so, that his client was a greatly maligned gentleman, and that the witnesses as to his excellent character (whom he successively marshalled to the witness stand) would prove it to be the case. The sufficient evidence of the vicious sheet itself, with the adduced fact that the Union News Company, supplying many hundreds of railway news stands, would not permit any of its agents to handle the publication, went for naught; yet the judge's comment to the jurors, upon returning their verdict which marked the failure of justice, was, that in his personal opinion the paper was exceedingly obscene. Now, I suppose there is not a paper the country over which does more in the direct promotion of impurity than this one. The lawyer won his case, while there was not found a daily paper to speak out and say what might have been the community's decided gain but for the attorney's unpatriotic service.

More than a year ago the license of the Trocadero Theater was revoked, upon evidence supplied by the director of public safety that a performance given by that manager of universally bad name, Sam T. Jack, was grossly immoral. Such a reproof and salutary example were sorely needed in Penn's degenerated city, yet I regret greatly to say that our district attorney (who had done some faithful service for decency in former years) was found willing to appear acting unofficially as a pleader on behalf of a new applicant for the theater's license.

What has been said hereinbefore bears upon the matter of good morals. As affecting the imposition of money burdens, the lawyer has been very much in evidence these many centuries, but never more so than in the closing years of this, the nineteenth, when day by day we hear of the spoils of trusts, syndicates, municipal franchises, fraudulent pensions, and the like. Replying to many recent criticisms upon the great pension burden, Commissioner Evans said: "There are a great many attorneys who literally stop at nothing to secure a pension. The system is all wrong." And as to strange inequalities in the voting: "Sharp and unprincipled attorneys and incompetent medical examiners—there's the secret. This is a fraud, but how are you going to reach it?" An expert's investigation refers to the pensions of many deceased beneficiaries as being drawn by "unscrupulous attorneys," and to the fact that the name of almost every soldier from a certain state is on the pension rolls. "The pension attorneys are responsible for this state of affairs." It takes lawyers of smartness and talent, and too often very unprincipled ones, to secure the grabs and effectually fasten the burdens. To the reproaching attorney of old time came the severe declaration of the Master, "Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers."

In my paper of this day I have learned of the annual banquet of the Chicago Bar Association, in the principal speech whereat, made by the eminent New York lawyer, Joseph H. Choate, it is said that while there is certainly some base alloy in the fraternity of ninety thousand American lawyers, yet "you will look in vain elsewhere for more spotless honor, more absolute devotion, more patient industry, more conscientious fidelity than among these." This characterization is assuredly just for not a few, and I am loth to disturb it. There is sufficient evidence, nevertheless, that there is the need, as claimed, for a "reconstruction of the ethical code of lawyers," for I do believe, because of their evident malefic works, that of a great many it may still be said, "the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of Him."

JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Local Union.

QUESTION:—What are the best means to use for securing new members to the local union?

ANSWER:—One can never speak of an absolute "best" since methods which work well in one locality are often absolutely ineffective in another. Some of the methods which have been used with best results are as follows:

1. Appointing a committee whose business it shall be to pass through the audience at all public meetings, with pledge cards and white ribbon and personally solicit members. This is as old as the W. C. T. U. itself, but has by no means lost its power, as is proven again and again in our public meetings. The committee should be carefully chosen; its members should be women of tact and of standing in the community, and it is especially desirable that they should be women who can take a refusal as graciously as a consent. This method should always be used in conventions. I fear we suffer much good seed to be lost simply because we do not follow the impression at once with this practical call for immediate decision.

2. House-to-house visitation is another excellent method. It is not nearly so formidable as it seems. It does not mean that each member of a local union is to call upon every woman in town who does not wear the white-ribbon, but simply that each member is to take one or more women upon her heart in an especial manner, and is to call upon them not often enough to make the subject tiresome, but often enough to assure them of continued interest, presenting the work of the W. C. T. U. and its claims upon them as lovers of humanity. Many rare trophies have been won to our cause by this simple method, and why should not our calling list—if any of us have time for a calling list—be set apart for God?

3. The post-office is a medium not yet sufficiently utilized in the interests of our work. Miss Willard long ago urged a "Post-Office Crusade." This involves the sending of leaflets and the sending of personal letters as well. Sometimes the written word proves more effective than the spoken. Printed or engraved cards of invitation have been sent out by some unions with excellent results.

4. Mothers' meetings and parlor meetings have also proved most efficient agents for winning new women to our ranks. They first touch the mothers' hearts at the most vital point—their love for and interest in their children; the second appeal to the social instinct which is native to us all, and which should have a medium for healthful development. Somehow there is a charm in the mere fact that women have eaten and drunk together, and the partaking of temporal food often opens the way for the reception of a new thought and the awakening to the perception of a new duty. Mothers' meetings and parlor meetings may be, if properly managed, the right and left wings of the grand membership crusade every local union ought to be waging.

5. A membership contest on the plan adopted by the Y. M. C. A. has been used with excellent results in several states, notably in Indiana. The union "chooses sides" very much like an old-fashioned spelling match. Each side chooses a color, and for thirty or sixty days, as is deemed best, strenuous efforts are put forth for securing new members. The finale is a grand reception at which all the new members and the winning side are guests of the losing side. Thus the tie is early cemented by closer acquaintance, and the strengthened union is prepared to go forth to new victories. If any union adopts this plan—or indeed any other—I hope they will not fail to place in the hands of each new member an Annual Leaflet and a sample copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. Other plans will be given later.

A BUTCHER not long ago delivered a whole temperance lecture in a single sentence:

A young lady called upon him, and with much misgiving asked for a dollar toward paying a temperance lecturer who was to speak for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. He replied: "There's your dollar, I've sold more meat in one day since this town went no-license than I used to in a whole week when we had saloons."—Selected.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised. And blessed is she that believed; for there will be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.—Heb. 10:23; Luke 1:45.

ANNA GORDON tells us in those last sad days before the departure of our Saint Frances to "those other worlds" she longed to explore, the Temple lay heavily on her heart. She says, "Sunday afternoon, February 13, Miss Willard talked much of the Temple and told Dr. Hills its history; the forces that had helped and the forces that had hindered the enterprise so dear to her heart, and the doctor said, 'If you will only get well, Miss Willard, we will create a great enthusiasm and get the Temple paid for, but to get well is the first consideration.' 'Oh, no,' she said, 'I think you could do it better if I didn't get well.'"

Dear heart, she knew the misunderstandings; she knew as well as the writer that if there had been a concert of action in every state and a determination not to listen to the voice of those who would breed dissension, the Temple, even in spite of the hard times, would have been paid for long ago. With the prescience of one standing on the threshold of the other world, she realized that her departure would link the hearts of her women together as they never had been before, and that they would rally as one woman to the rescue of the Temple in order to carry to success the dying wish of their leader. Hence she said: "I think you could do it better if I didn't get well."

The forces are rallying. The National officers have sent out to every state a call for the formation, in large towns, of a citizens' committee to raise money for the Temple among the rich and well-to-do outside of temperance lines, and in the smaller towns, a committee on house-to-house visitation for the same purpose. The money raised in this way is to be sent to Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me. The Temple Trustees' plans are on a different line with the same end in view, viz., the wiping out of all indebtedness on the Temple and making it a monument to the memory of our Chieftain, changing the name to Willard Temple.

The Temple Trustees wish to do their work as much as possible through our own constituency, believing they are the most interested, and that each one has at least four friends who would be willing to send them fifty cents each towards the desired end. Hence we have sent out to unions in different states 400,000 fifty cent collection cards, constituting each member of the W. C. T. U. an agent to exploit four cards among her friends. Beside this we want each white-ribboner to send as a personal gift one dollar for Miss Willard's memorial. There are certainly very few that can not by a little self-denial raise the above amount in loving memory of our great and departed leader. The Temple Trustees also passed resolutions requesting the president of the World's W. C. T. U., Lady Henry Somerset, to issue a call for one dollar each for the above purpose from the World's organization. We also sent an appeal to our Canadian sisters and one to the presidents of all woman's clubs of the United States, and one to Miss Susan B. Anthony, requesting a like gift from the Woman's Suffrage Association. Also one to women teachers in Chicago, which we wish could be extended all over the country.

The money from all these sources is to be sent direct to the treasurer of the Temple Trustees, Mr. G. B. Shaw, vice-president American Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago. This fund he is to hold intact for the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds. In fact, every dollar that comes in now will be set aside for this purpose, and for the purchase of stock, as all office expenses after this will be met from profits accruing from the sale of Miss Willard's life size picture which will be out in two weeks, and for which we want agents in every union.

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of G. B. Shaw.

Our Children.

Do You Know Her?

I HAVE a little friend who doesn't like to mend,
To dust, or set the table, or even make a bed.
The very thought of sweeping nearly sets her off a-weeping,
And she always goes about it as though her feet were lead.

She "hates" to rock the baby, and says that some day maybe,
She'll go away, and linger where they have no babies 'round
To keep folks busy rocking; but really this is shocking,
And she doesn't mean a word of what she says, I will be bound.

'Tis true she can not bear to walk across the square
To buy a reel of cotton or stamps for mother's mail,
And it's much against her wishes that she's set to wash up dishes,
While to speak of darning stockings is enough to turn her pale.

In fact, she wants to shirk everything resembling work,
And the only thing she does enjoy, so far as I can say,
Is to take her doll and book, and within some quiet nook
To read of elves and fairies, and dream the hours away.

The Shadow Picture.

BY ANNA BLANCHE M'CUNE.

THE fountain in the little lake threw up its slender arches of sparkling rainbows. The birds dipped down in the shallows to bathe. The shaded walks looked temptingly cool.

But Miss Marion must have had on her blue spectacles that June morning. She sank wearily into the first seat she could find, and looked, not at the scarlet geraniums, but away over the tree-tops to the ugly gray roof of the great hospital she had just left, and she set her lips in a straight line, hard, as if, would she but allow them to curve the least bit, they would rather cry than smile.

And I think they meant to cry, even if Miss Marion was a young lady, because you see she thought herself alone in the little park. But that moment she caught the reflection in the lake of a pretty scene, and the next was transferring it with quick, light strokes to the cover of her magazine, and had forgotten for the time that she wanted to cry because she had been sick a whole year and felt she was of no more use in the world; and the lips smiled now at the finished sketch as she tucked her pencil again in her hair.

They were still smiling as she looked up at the two little boys loitering curiously near her bench. Why, yes!—surely, they were the same, the substance of which she possessed the shadow! and her eyes smiled, too, as she called, "Good-morning, boys, would you like to see?" holding up the book.

Otho lifted a freckled little face with gay blue eyes after a moment's inspection. "We knew you was makin' a picture; was this it? It's the lake and trees, only they're upside down, and two boys behind that bush looks like Rol and me—I'm the biggest—but they're upside down, too, and we wasn't. Look, Rol!"

Miss Marion laughed and explained, but to her surprise they stoutly expressed doubt of their identity. The shadows had shifted from the sheet of water, leaving it clear as a mirror. But on the opposite bank at the right angle a gentleman appeared. "Hey! He's upside down!" both shouted, to the sudden embarrassment of their artist friend.

After that their interest in the "upside down picture" was an absorbing one, and as they watched the skillful pencil retouching the lines, talked confidentially.

"My name's Otho Sanderson," said the white-haired little Swedish boy. "His is Harold Olson. I'm ten—yes, we go to school in afternoons, 'cause there's no room in the mornings. I've got a big chum; his name's Dan Lee. He ought to be in the higher room. My mother don't like him, 'cause he swears awful."

Miss Marion understood boys extremely well. She didn't say that swearing awful was very wrong and she hoped her young friend never indulged in the habit. She waited for a moment before saying anything, and then looked up with a smile.

"Do you think I should like him?"

"I don't know," doubtfully. "I have his picture at home. D'you want to see it? 'Cause I'll get it."

"You have been making a picture of Dan for me, just as I drew your shadows this morning without having seen you." The boys looked puzzled. "You see how we make the shadows of our friends so other people may see them. Otho, have you learned in school yet the meaning of influence?"

"It's—I can't tell exactly," answered Otho, slowly, "but it's what you make other people do 'cause you do it;" and as she smiled encouragingly, added, "but you can't tell whether people are bad or good by their shadows."

"No, but if you had had only one leg or a crooked arm your shadow in the water would have shown it, and so—"

"Dan's not got a crooked arm but it's awful shaky—can't hardly hold a pencil."

"Why, is he sick?"

"Oh, no!" said the boy nonchalantly throwing himself flat on the grass, "smokes so many cigarets, I guess. Everybody in school does."

"And do you?"

Otho looked defiant, and Miss Marion, seeing her mistake, hastened to remedy it.

"Shall I tell you of a school I visited a year ago? The boys marched straight and square as soldiers. Their school-work, writing, drawing and wood-carving was beautifully done, showing what careful fingers and steady nerves must have been required. The boys and I became great friends, and they invited me to a meeting of their little school society. They have their own president and other officers and in it they pledge themselves from cigarets and tobacco, bad words and thoughts."

"Ho! Guess such a thing as that wouldn't have a chance in our school. Nearly every boy smokes cigarets and most all the girls too—they're sneakin' about it, but we know it and plague 'em too. Guess no teacher could start that there."

"But the teachers didn't start it. The boys did it themselves and no teacher is allowed in it. And the girls could have one too—," Miss Marion choked a little. Could it be true that the girls, her laughing, sweet-faced little girl friends, needed too this pledge society?

"Oh, there's a dog, see! He's upside down! He's been smokin' cigarets too!" and with this astonishing application of the little sermon they rushed off unceremoniously after the inverted canine, a big good-natured Newfoundland.

But later while walking soberly homeward Otho suddenly remarked, "Wish't we'd asked her more about how to do it. You know that pledge thing she talked about."

"I can ask my pa. He b'longs to a secret society and so does yours. I can be president," calmly concluded this embryo politician.

And so that was just the way the 'Pon Honor League for the suppression of cigaret smoking was started in Hayes school. It is more difficult to tell who started it. Not Otho who only told the boys about it and urged it zealously; nor Otho's papa who jokingly gave the proper directions for "running" a society although he still smoked his own cigar; nor the teachers of Hayes school for they were too busy to notice until the results became apparent; nor yet Miss Marion to whose sick room the knowledge would have been as a ray of warm sunshine. It must have been the pencil which so stubbornly persisted in drawing the "upside down picture" that summer morning, when discouraged Miss Marion wanted instead to cry. For it was the "upside down picture" that had preached the shadow sermon.

"Tommy," said his mamma one day, "slip up-stairs quietly and see if papa is asleep."

Tommy soon returned and said: "Yes, mamma, he's all asleep but his nose."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Vacation time is here again, and though it is only one short week, what a feast of good things you can have! But I don't mean the good things to eat that mother will put in lunch baskets for her boys when they go fishing, or set out for the girls' tea parties when they exchange visits; I mean all the beautiful things that feed the senses of sight and sound and smell, at this season of the year. I have been watching a little strip of grass that borders a Chicago boulevard turn to a beautiful emerald, and when I remember how fresh and fair everything is in the country at this time, I want to pack my belongings and start right off on a vacation with the boys and girls. As I can not do that I want you to write and tell me all about it.

The springtime holds so many beauties for us if we but look for them with seeing eyes, chief of which, to me, is the awakening into a new life of the trees and grass after the seeming death that came with winter. Do you stop to think of it when you look for a nice place to play "mumble peg" or "hop-scotch"? Isn't it lovely that spring comes, no matter how long and cold the winter? It is like all of God's promises to us; though we may fail to-day there is always a new day and a new beginning.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—We have an L. T. L. in our town. My mamma started a W. C. T. U. here. My papa is a Prohibitionist. Before we moved here we lived in Camden, N. J. My mamma was president of the W. C. T. U. there. I have signed the pledge. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I have a rooster and four hens, a cat whose name is Sam, and a dog whose name is Duke. I have a dear little brother. Dear Aunt Mary, I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I am twelve years old.

Lovingly,
MARGARET L. S. HILDEBRAND.

Wayne, Penn.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I like to read the Cozy Corner. I have four sisters. I am eleven years old. I want to join the Cozy Corner, and I would like to have Clio Pitman write to me.

Your little niece,
LAURA C. CURRY.

Lemon City, Fla.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

12.

CHARADE.

My third is in my first and second;
My first's in second too—
A place in which to take one's ease,
As travelers often do.

My second is a part of fish;
My third's the happy creature—
The best beloved by all the race
Of every form and feature.

My fourth doth cheer but doth not harm,
The poet doth agree;
My all hath neither bound nor end
Through all eternity.

13.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of fourteen letters.
My 13, 4, 7, 2 is nice meat.
My 5, 1, 7 is good for lunches.
My 11, 6, 8, 7 is what comes after a storm.
My 3, 1, 9, 13 is used in building railroads.
My 6, 14, 12, 10 quickly.
My whole is the name of a poor boy who came to be loved and honored by all America.

HOMER B. HUNT.

N. Charlestown, N. H.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MARCH 31.

11. Easter Eggs.

Correct answer to No. 10 was sent by Bessie E. Stout, Louisville, Ky.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

Organ of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—Frances E. Willard.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—Lady Henry Somerset.
MANAGING EDITOR—Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres.
Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Treas. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Sec'y.
Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Me.
Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill.
Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago.
Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Burlington, Ia.
Mrs. Evalyn Graham, Newark, O.
Mrs. Eliza H. Gage Cutter, Joliet, Ill.
OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—Mrs. F. E. Beauchamp, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.
All money orders for The Union Signal or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.
Please examine the label on your Union Signal and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

The Battle for Temperance in Our Colleges and Universities.

THE Voice, of New York, is pushing with its accustomed vigor and acuteness an attack upon the wine-bibbing custom in our institutions of higher education. Having brought Princeton to a sense of the error of its ways, it is now training its batteries upon other sinning colleges. Dr. Moore, of the Western Christian Advocate, finds cause for criticism in that due prominence was not, in his judgment, given to the facts which exonerate leading officials of the Methodist church from complicity in the permitting of wine-drinking at the alumni banquet of Wesleyan, but, with characteristic generosity and good humor, this good brother comforts himself with the reflection that it is altogether a good and safe thing to have "a hunter afield who will shoot wherever the grass moves."

The methods on the whole are admirable because effective, and, as to the work itself, none more important has been attempted in many a day than this effort to secure total abstinence as the acknowledged principle in our colleges, and prohibition of the liquor traffic as the law in college towns.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has always laid great stress upon the work of educating the young. What else could be expected of "the organized motherhood of the world"? Long experience in rescue work has convinced us that it is easier to train up ten boys in the doctrines and practice of total abstinence than to reclaim one drunkard. We have learned also that our only hope for complete prohibition of the liquor traffic lies in the boys and girls of to-day. Orators have waxed eloquent over the pretty sentiment that "the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." But American mothers have proved, to their disappointment and sorrow, that it is the hand that drops the ballot that rules in this republic, and if the above poetic sentiment is ever to be more than a sentiment, the "hand that rocks the cradle" must control, as it does not now, the hand that holds the ballot. We confidently expect that some day the hand upon the cradle will also cast a ballot. In the meantime we are trying to transform, as far as may be, the sentiment into reality by training the boys and girls of to-day, the fathers, mothers and voters of to-morrow, in the doctrines of total abstinence and prohibition.

Thus far our work has been confined chiefly to the children and, though this must in the end leaven the colleges and universities, the importance of immediate work among these institutions of higher education cannot be overestimated. It is not merely the students themselves who are to be considered; it is not because the habits of life are usually settled at college; it is not because these youth are soon to be the voters, the executives, the legislators of the nation, weighty as these considerations are; it is rather the decisive influence which the educated classes wield in the civilization and thought of mankind that makes the battle for a pure college life one of such overshadowing importance. It has been said that the views of life which form the great underlying principles of any civilization and which produce progress and reform originate with the educated classes. History confirms the statement. It required a man learned in all the learning of the Egyptians to lay the foundations of the national life of the chosen people of God. He who was the "chosen vessel to bear the name of the Lord before Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel," had not only sat for years at the feet of the greatest Rabbi of his people, but possessed also the culture and learning of Greece. The great reformers of Christianity, the Luthers and the Wesleys, have been college educated men. Superstitions have melted away in the light poured upon them by men of education and science. It is said that during the Middle Ages there were probably not two persons in all Europe who bathed oftener than once a year. It is not strange that scratching posts were among the necessities of the times, and we need look for no other explanation of the terrible plagues which periodically swept off hundreds of thousands of the inhabitants. The investigations of educated men and women have introduced the cleanlier habits, the more hygienic conditions of the present. Kidd, in his "Social Evolution," attributes the remarkable revolution which the views of mankind concerning the social structure have undergone during the last fifty years, to the doctrines of evolutionary science. Thus, in all fields of thought, the beliefs of the masses are the result of the investigations and teachings of the educated. If, therefore, we win the educated classes to the cause of temperance, we reach the fountain-head of influence.

And not only is this line of work hopeful because of its far-reaching results, there is more reason to expect success here than in almost any other field. The men with whom we have to deal have no interest, financial or otherwise, in the liquor traffic; they have nothing in common with liquor men. On the contrary, they are men of culture and refinement; men, who, whatever may be their mistakes of judgment, intend to do right. They are naturally affiliated with the righteous elements and movements in our civilization. The claims of justice and morality when presented to them do not fall upon indiffierent ears or appeal to hardened consciences. The worst that can be said of them is that they are inclined to be over-conservative, to attach undue value to that which is old, and to doubt the possibility of radical reforms. They belong to the class who need not to undergo a complete change in their habits of thinking, their views of life and their purpose in living but to have an "arrest of thought." To such men we appeal with the confidence that ultimately we shall win their conscience and their judgment.

Opinions on School Suffrage.

A BILL was introduced last January in the Ohio legislature to repeal the law giving school suffrage to women in that state, on the ground that not enough women expressed their appreciation of the privilege, and not enough votes are cast to justify the expense of separate books for registration, etc. A symposium on the subject was kindly secured by Miss Georgia Hopley for The Union Signal, but our columns have been too crowded to give place to it earlier. The bill has been defeated in the meantime, as was the one asking for full suffrage, but as the arguments stand good for all such campaigns, and as this was probably the last expression of Miss Willard on this subject, we give place to the symposium.

Frances E. Willard: How absurd it would be to say that because men in large numbers did not vote at a given time, or on specific measures, they should therefore be disfranchised. If there is a subject in which women have a vital interest it is the character and conduct of the public schools in which their children are to be trained; they ought to vote concerning who shall be the school board, the teachers, etc., and they ought themselves to be among the officers. If when such a law has been a few years on the statute books women have not in large numbers learned to realize the good that will come to their homes by using their influence to help make the public schools all that the best men wish them to be, it is the height of folly and injustice to declare that they shall not vote at all because some added expense is involved in carrying on the law. Doubtless this is a subterfuge; if we could see all the secret workings of political intrigue we should learn that there are other reasons, and very likely the manipulators of the liquor traffic oligarchy desire to see women deprived of the vote because they know that by means of their ballots the instruction in physiology and hygiene with special reference to the effect of stimulants and narcotics on the human organism, will be more thoroughly taught. Surely you will find the good sense and right conscience of the community with you in this effort to retain a just and wholesome law for the protection of the home upon the statute books of the Crusade state.

Miss Susan B. Anthony, National president of the Woman's Suffrage Association: The plea that women do not exercise their rights is only a pretext and does not hold good. There are numberless men who do not take advantage of the privilege of citizenship, and their right of franchise is not questioned. So that if it be true that women do not exercise their rights it is not just to take from them all that privilege, and the difference in expense is small. It is this taking and giving that is exactly the thing the woman suffragists object to; this is not a favor that should be extended and taken away at will. It is the right of every individual to say what the laws under which they live shall be.

Miss Leila S. McKee, president of the Western College at Oxford, O.: Perhaps a woman directly in touch with schools and school questions as I am, naturally looks at every question with reference to its educational value, and the fact that women are uninterested, that they will not vote, is to me the strongest reason for continuing suffrage until they are educated and understand the importance to themselves and their children of right legislation. Once convince a woman that it is her duty to do a certain thing, and she will do it at any cost. The right of every woman to an opinion on questions relating to the moral and mental training of their children is an undisputed fact. The legal right which will enable her to enforce these opinions and judgments should also be beyond controversy. To repeal a law already existing which has given her this right, will be a fatally backward step in the progress of our country towards wise and just legislation, and one that I earnestly hope will not stain the record of the state of Ohio.

Miss Margaret W. Sutherland, principal of the Columbus Normal School, associate editor of the Ohio Educational Monthly:

Women should vote for members of boards of education for the following reasons:

1. It is impossible for any one to feel more interest in the proper education of a child than its mother feels. So much more of her time is devoted to the family that, with an equal interest in the child she has greater opportunity for knowing its needs.

2. The number of girls graduated from the high school of our state exceeds considerably the number of boys; consequently, there must be a larger number of women than men who understand from actual experience our educational system throughout.

3. Women are more apt than men to place politics as a secondary consideration in voting for members of school boards of education. They are less liable to be influenced by private business considerations and the effect that the election of a certain man will have upon contracts for buildings and supplies.

4. Intelligent influence to which there is often responsibility attached, wields a power for good both for the cause upon which it is brought to bear and upon the one who exercises it. In time women will realize this influence, and feeling their responsibility instead of shirking or neglecting the duty of voting upon school questions, will conscientiously and regularly discharge it. That many women have failed as yet to vote is no reason why there should be a repeal of the law granting them school suffrage. Nearly all reforms that are lasting, work very gradually at first.

Mrs. C. M. Everhard, president of the Ohio State Suffrage Association: We observe that no such method is suggested when men poll a small vote, which often happens when there is no important issue to call them out. On the contrary they urge by every means at hand not to fail to register. As for the expense, it is niggardly to mention it; woman get little in return for the money they give the state in taxes, and if men object to separate ballots for women, they can easily avoid that outlay by voting a constitutional amendment expunging the words "white male," from Art. V, Sec. 1, and no separate boxes or ballots would be needed. Until that is done it is unbecoming in men to talk about the extra cost of separate ballots for women, and the political party that asks for a repeal of that law is going to give itself a blow.

Mrs. Bashford, wife of President J. H. Bashford, of the Ohio Wesleyan University of Delaware: Whatever view may be taken of the general question of school suffrage for women, it must be plain to all that the law has had too brief a trial to warrant adverse judgment and final condemnation being passed upon it. Women have given such full and unmistakable proof of their ability to teach and conduct schools of every grade, that the most skeptical admit their fitness to have a voice in the management of educational interests.

Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins, of Cleveland, editor of The True Republic: I have just been to pay my taxes, and saw many other women doing the same. I thought the small expense of separate books, etc., could easily be taken from the taxes which women pay, and there would be a margin of many thousand dollars remaining. The strong, noble women of Ohio, the tax-paying women, are interested in many other things besides school officials. They want good mayors, good senators and good representatives; they want the saloon and dens of iniquity closed; they want cleaner streets and cleaner street cars and better sanitary conditions in all of our cities; they want purer men for city officials. Again I say, take the expenses of the voting women from the taxes that women pay, and tell us about the balance.

Mrs. Canfield, wife of the president of Ohio State University: I am always in favor of woman's suffrage on this question, and I am much disappointed that they do not take more interest in the privilege which has been granted them. However, one must not be too impatient, for results and enlarged opportunities will undoubtedly bring about greater appreciation.

Mrs. M. E. Kirk, of Australia.

ONE of the delegates to the Toronto Convention, and rather a quiet one, has been a power for good in the country she represented, viz., Australia.

There are many questions in such a new country, which would be left severely alone if it were not for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and if that union had not as energetic a worker as Mrs. M. E. Kirk. It is in her struggles for degraded women that the results have been the most telling. There was an effort to introduce and enforce the C. D. Acts in the Colony of Victoria, under the specious name of "Health Clauses." People were mostly ignorant as to their nature when Mrs. Kirk's agitation commenced. She appealed urgently against them in Parliament, and also to the members of the Intercolonial Medical Congress, and to men and women throughout the country. The opinions of the most enlightened were widely circulated, and many prayers went up that God would cause these opinions to sink deeply into all hearts. And the current was turned. On another occasion, when in the Crimes Act Amendment Bill, the "age of consent" bid fair to be considerably lowered, Mrs. Kirk and her helpers were again in the field. Nothing was spared; time, money and influence, and again success crowned the effort. Mrs. Kirk was brought up among the Friends, of which church she is a member, and gave herself early in life to Christian and temperance work; and for ten years she has been secretary of the Victoria W. C. T. U.

In Aid of Suffering Cubans.

THE King's Daughters and Sons are uniting to aid the Red Cross and the Central Cuban Relief committee in their work for Cuba. Miss Clara Barton reports great need of clothing, and the following appeal is put forth:

We ask the friends of humanity to interest themselves in securing from manufacturers and dealers cotton goods, calicoes, ginghams, muslins, lawns, or ready-made summer garments for women and children. Old clothes, unless in perfectly good condition and adapted for summer use, should not be sent. Through the generosity of the Joint Traffic Association the railroads included therein, transport food, clothing and medical supplies free of charge. Two lists should be forwarded with each consignment. No words of ours could describe the pitifulness of the need, as reported.

All goods should be sent by freight and addressed, together with all correspondence concerning them, to the Cuban Committee of the King's Daughters, 17 Astor Place, New York. Contributions of money for the purchase of materials may be sent as heretofore to the editor of The Silver Cross, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The appeal is signed by Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, general secretary, and by others.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

During the World's Convention at Toronto, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon were guests at Mrs. Massey's elegant home. Mrs. Massey writes that she was pained and grieved to receive the sad intelligence of the death of her dear and honored friend, "She indeed gave her life to the uplifting of the whole world." The Massey Music Hall in which the convention was held was named in honor of Mrs. Massey's late husband.

Miss Slack writes: "Please tell your readers for me how splendidly the British press has done justice to Miss Willard, from the most influential papers in the land to the most insignificant. Her life and work have been fully referred to in the most beautiful manner. I feel that this ungrudging whole-hearted admiration of our people for one who is universally acknowledged in England to be the greatest woman of her generation, should be known in America." Miss Slack also wishes it known that she has no more copies of the World's Reports for sale, but that she hopes to have many calls for Miss Willard's Toronto address with her picture, which she is offering for fourteen cents postpaid.

Mrs. Mary Z. C. Main, assistant secretary of the National Conference of the Liberty party, held at Columbus in February, furnished THE UNION SIGNAL with a report which could not be used, as our News page was, for the time being, devoted to other purposes. It is still of interest to note, however, that Mrs. Henrietta G. Moore was made vice chairman, and Mrs. Law, of Wisconsin, chairman of the committee on resolutions, and that women delegates were especially favored throughout. Hon. R. S. Thompson was chairman and the conference declared for the initiative and referendum and advanced it to the first plank in the platform. The thought that direct legislation would be the basis of union in the future was expressed.

Mrs. Maud B. Booth writes us that she is sufficiently recovered from her illness to be once more at her office, but not yet strong enough to travel. She says: "We have at the present time in our home quite a number of men for whom I am anxious to find positions as laborers, farmhands, coachmen, painters, and also some skilled workmen and clerks. Many more will be coming to us this spring, and those who know anything of our work will understand how anxious I am to place them with Christian employers, who will not only by hiring them, give them a chance, but will be ready with the kind word and brotherly sympathy that means everything to a man who is struggling to make a good, true life for himself with the handicap of past difficulties." Address Mrs. Ballington Booth, 34 Union Square, New York city, N. Y.

Miss Margaret Sudduth was for so long a time editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, white-ribboners will like to read what she says of her mother's illness and death in a private letter to a friend: "Mother did not know that Miss Willard had gone, but she knew of her serious illness and talked much about her in her delirium, explaining to her nurse just who she was and the importance of her recovery. The W. C. T. U. was her main theme during the last week of her life, and the names of nearly all the women in the Temple and other prominent state and National leaders were continually on her lips. She loved the organization with a rare devotion, and would have sacrificed anything for it. For myself, I can not yet realize that Miss Willard has gone. Her death occurring just at the most critical period of mother's sickness, I could not compass both, and as mother's was the nearest and the most real to me, the other is still far away and mystical. Dear Frances Willard, the greatest, grandest heroine of the ages! To think that we have had daily, intimate association with such a spirit is to exalt our own lives and give us swift connection with the divinity that now environs her. May we 'follow the gleam' of her shining track!"

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Y's at Work.

MARYLAND.

IT is a little hard to tell just at this time whether the work here is progressing or is at a standstill, although there are "signs of promise" for the spring.

Owing to a new financial arrangement, whereby there are no funds with which to carry on the work this year, but which promises well for next year, there has been no field work done at all in our Branch by state workers. Last fall Mrs. Unruh went through the state filling a number of engagements, and as a result two new Y unions were organized, one of which has more than doubled its membership.

Late in the winter it occurred to me that if I could visit every county where there was a Y secretary, spending a week in her territory and winding up with a county Y conference, that our Branch would surely be strengthened. So to this end letters were sent out, and judging from some of the replies there seems to be a "rattling among the dry bones," and efforts are being made to carry out this idea. Two counties are already planning for Y conferences in April, at which time the program will be something like this: The morning session to be devoted to points of particular interest to Y members, the afternoon session to be a young people's temperance rally, with parliaments, symposiums, etc., on practical temperance questions participated in by representatives from the various young people's societies, as well as young people from the churches and Sabbath-schools, and to close, a mass-meeting at night addressed by Mrs. Boole. When I write in July I will give the result of this project, for it seems to promise well.

On last New Year's day as usual the Baltimore city Y unions gave their annual dinner to poor men, when over seven hundred were fed, and it is hoped helped, physically and morally. Some of the unions are working along bravely, making their influence felt locally—others are apparently sleeping. It seems to me that the unions need a "deal of mothering," and we can't do that with empty treasuries.

A great many unions have held memorial services for our promoted Chieftain, and perhaps have been made to feel what an important part they must play in helping to bear the burden that grew too heavy for her frail shoulders.

Anne Rothwell Stewart,
State Y Sec., Chestertown.

WYOMING.

SINCE I reported in November I have not been able to organize any new Y's, but the three mentioned then are still at work. Miss Mazie Wylie is secretary at Rawlins.

Rock Springs sent one dollar to Mrs. Jobson for the purse for Mrs. Barnes. The flower mission department has called itself a relief committee for the winter months, and distributes clothing and food to the poor. They call themselves the Neal Dow Y, and helped with the memorial services program on March 20.

The Unruh Y, at Green River, have a constantly increasing membership, and practically all sign the triple pledge and also White Shield. They keep the wall pockets made by the W's supplied with literature, voted fifty cents to the Barnes purse, send literature to county jail, at Christmas sent stamps and stationary and written messages asking the prisoners to "write a letter home." They sent five cents each in response to hospital call. One young lady has organized a Band of Mercy, and the secretary and one of the honoraries have undertaken the L. T. L. work since the W's are too busy for it. The Y choir furnished music for the two memorial services on March 20. Also Y members read tributes to Miss Willard and otherwise participated in the services. All this from a society but eight months old, whose members average only nineteen years in age and many are fifteen and sixteen. Also it is worthy of note that this society has exactly twice as many honoraries as girl members.

Marie Moss Wheat,
State Y Sec.

News from the Field.

Nevada.

RENO has been greatly favored with visits from some of the National workers. Early in the fall Miss De Velling helped the union to a better understanding of the do-everything policy of our great organization. Nevada had long waited for the coming of this leader, and her presence brought, as was expected, a blessing. May her travels bring her this way again, was the wish of all who heard her. Miss Belle Kearney, fresh from the Alaskan fields, made herself most interesting and helpful to the university students, the Century Club and the W. C. T. U. May this consecrated sister from the sunny Southland come again and stay longer.

Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake and Dr. Carolyn Geisel have lately finished a very busy week in Reno, stopping on their way to reorganize the Wadsworth union, speaking upon social purity to public audiences, students of the university and the public schools, giving Bible readings, holding mothers' meetings, visiting the fallen in their resorts and enthusing the union with the spirit of their mission.

A rescue home to be named in honor of Miss Willard is under advisement. The W. C. T. U. with other Christian workers, purpose in love, that no one shall truthfully say, "there was no way out of a life of sin for me." Loving spirits have brought to the erring the words of the Saviour, "Neither do I condemn you, go and sin no more," and have made a place for the penitent one to go. We have done a little; with God's help we can do more.

The Reno W. C. T. U. is enjoying a good degree of interest under the leadership of its faithful president, Mrs. Sarah Gilman. Public meetings, mothers' meetings, memorial days, all have been opportunities for making and crystallizing sentiment. Virginia City, once so full of life but to-day so quiet, still keeps the white-ribbon banner afloat. Long may she speak of the gold that perishes not.

I shall write more definitely in my next of the good work in progress in this and other places in the field.

Lucy M. Van Deventer,
State Reporter, Reno.

Virginia.

EASTERN Shore district held a convention at Belle Haven, on February 22 and 23. During the afternoon short addresses and the department reports were heard. In the evening the pastor of the Methodist Church South preached the convention sermon. The following morning the session opened with a Willard memorial service, conducted by Mrs. Miley, of Norfolk. The president, Mrs. Rue, then delivered her annual address. Officers for the ensuing year were elected, Mrs. Rue being re-elected president. At noon the visiting delegates went their way, well pleased with the manner of celebrating this, the first birthday anniversary of Virginia's youngest district. The experience of a year proves the wisdom of organizing the Eastern Shore into an independent district. Its president is also district secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and has an auxiliary in all but two churches in the district. She says she will not be satisfied until she has the W. C. T. U. as thoroughly organized.

Norfolk district convention was held on Thursday, March 3, in Epworth church, Norfolk. The president, Mrs. Miley, offered her seventh annual address. During her long term of service the revenues of the district have increased from $8 to $143, and the Eastern Shore has been built up and made independent of us. Nearly all of this growth is due to Mrs. Miley's unremitting care. The only unwelcome paragraph of the address was that containing the president's request to be relieved for a time of her cares, in order to obtain much needed rest. All the reports received were encouraging. The noon hour was devoted to a Willard memorial service conducted by the pastor of the church assisted by our state president, Mrs. R. H. Jones. At one o'clock a Temple lunch was served by the local union in the entertainment hall of the church.

Reports and the election were the order of the afternoon, and a busy time they made of it. The Crittenton Home shelters sixteen women and twenty children, and is kept out of debt by the utmost care in housekeeping. During the day Mrs. Bagby, of West Point, gave the convention the history of a campaign that failed, that is, the history of the struggle for the scientific temperance instruction law. If Mrs Bagby's work at Richmond was as lively as her speech in Norfolk, she at least kept her enemies awake until the bill was beaten. The evening was given up to the Y program of reports, music and recitations. The verdict is that this last was the best convention Norfolk district ever had. The keynote was a sweet one, and there were no discords. On Sunday, February 27, Dr. H. E. Johnson (M. E. South) preached a Willard memorial sermon to the district W. C. T. U., the members attending in a body.

Richmond district also held a convention on March 3, but the report has not yet been received.

Miss Lu G. Cook is making a tour of the state in the interests of the Y work. She is paying especial attention to academies and girls' schools. She has been very successful in adding to the membership, and will probably work in Virginia until near the end of April.

Rev. Quincy Lee Morrow, of the Methodist Protestant church, is also working in our state for the W. C. T. U. His especial work is for Christian citizenship. He is quite successful, and deserving of strong commendation.

The Call, our state paper, is devoted to the young people this month. Many unions are trying to subscribe for each member, thereby filling up the subscription list in a manner most encouraging to the faithful editor and manager.

We are bereft, but not discouraged. It was said to us of Miss Willard, as has been said of so many of the saints of her church, "God buries His workers, but carries on His work.

Malinda Cleaver Faville,
State Reporter, Norfolk.

Ohio.

MRS. Peters having resigned her position as press reporter of the Buckeye state, there has been no official report from Ohio for some time. My appointment at the mid-year meeting held at Coshocton, March 2 and 3, to fill this vacancy, affords me my first opportunity to contribute to The Union Signal.

Trumbull county has just gained a victory over the saloon, through the efforts of North Bristol and Bristolville unions in securing local option in Bristol township. The movement originated in the W. C. T. U. and was carried forward by them as far as women could carry it; the honorary members and other temperance men then took hold of it and carried it to victory. A special election was called for that purpose. Total number of votes cast 198; against the saloon, 166; for the saloon, 32. On election day the W. C. T. U. served dinner to the voters. Trumbull county also has the honor of having planned a program for local unions that met the approval of the executive committee, who desire its adoption throughout the state.

The mid-year executive committee meeting was well attended, and the members transacted a large amount of business harmoniously. The ability and efficiency with which our new state president, Mrs. Annie W. Clarke, of Columbus, presided over her first meeting with the executive body, proved that the women had made no mistake in electing her their president, and the interests of the Ohio W. C. T. U. are in safe hands.

The noon hour of the last day was devoted to a Frances Willard memorial service. After devotional services the most prominent features were a description of the funeral by Lillian Cole Bethel, of Columbus, who was privileged to be present, and a beautiful tribute given by Miss Marie C. Brehm, of Chicago, National superintendent of franchise. The white-ribbon choir of Coshocton, gave appropriate music very accept-

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ably. The first evening Miss Brehm gave a splendid address on woman's sphere. It was well received and was very convincing. The last evening was given to a platform meeting. Our best departments were well brought out by their superintendents. This was Miss Brehm's first introduction to the women of Ohio. Miss Frances Ensign, state corresponding secretary, had sent out word that Miss Brehm was available for the month of March. More dates were asked for than there were days in the month. She will continue her work with us in the month of May. Miss Brehm, while in Columbus, gave several addresses, visited the local unions, and by her practical suggestions gave the women a new enthusiasm; one new union was organized and the way prepared for two more that will soon be organized.

Organization was the word emphasized for the work in Ohio this year and is being vigorously pushed. The normal grade of L. T. L. work for the use of local unions was adopted by the executive committee. It had been previously taken up by some of the unions. An L. T. L. commencement of W. C. T. U. workers will be one of the features of the next state convention. This work taken up systematically through the state will arouse our women to the necessity of this department, and I hope soon to be able to report that there are no childless unions in Ohio.

(MRS.) LILLIAN BURT,
State Reporter, Columbus.

Michigan.

A LITTLE more than three years ago we Michigan women stood by the open grave of our beloved state president, Mary T. Lathrap, feeling that our loss and our sorrow could scarcely be equaled, but to-day the nation and the world bow in sorrow, keen but sublime, before the tomb of our Frances E. Willard. Surely we are bereft, but amid blinding tears we can say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." We feel that our great Chieftain has left us a rich legacy, in her noble, beautiful life, full of labors of love, and now that she has gone "to be with God," the work she would have done is left for us, and I am sure I voice the sentiment of Michigan women to-day when I say we feel like consecrating ourselves anew to the work for which she sacrificed so much. We must not falter now.

From all over the state reports of activity come to me; our women are "up and doing," and the cheering words telling of the many good things accomplished cannot be told in this report for lack of space. Many unions have held memorial services for Miss Willard.

The counties holding their conventions in the spring are making fine preparations for them, Ionia, Jackson, Van Buren, Calhoun, Kalamazoo and Ingham being among the number. Our state convention is to be held in Saginaw, May 24 to 27.

Michigan lent her president, Mrs. Benjamin, to New York city for club drills, and to Chicago for two weeks' instruction in parliamentary law in the Columbian School of Oratory. With these exceptions she has given her entire time during the year to her own state.

The president and corresponding secretary of our state union sent a letter to the president of Yale, asking him to use his influence to make Yale a prohibition town, and also to prohibit the students from using alcoholics in their rooms or in spreads and banquets.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins delivered thirty addresses in three weeks' time, and gained seventy new members in the eighth district.

Work is being pushed vigorously in Detroit. Several new unions have been organized in different parts of the state. Mrs. Dawson has been doing grand evangelistic work in her district, the sixth.

Our missionary to the lumbermen has been well equipped with comfort bag and literature for his work. He reports many conversions.

(MRS.) I. W. SLOAN,
State Reporter, Clarendon.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c.
All Druggists. 309.

Arkansas.

EVERYWHERE over our state memorial services for our Chieftain have been held. Many ministers have presented their congregations with loving tributes to her even when not requested to do so by the local unions. The newspapers, too, have given honor to her that no other woman could have had and have said much to extend a knowledge of her dear self and our work that would not have been said while she lived. So though at rest she still helps the reforms she loved.

Mrs. Howe, National organizer, who spent February in our state, was at Little Rock on that first sad Sunday when we knew Miss Willard was gone. The meetings had been all arranged before we knew that she had passed away, and knowing that she would have desired that there should be no change because of her death, the dear women with sorrowing hearts went on. The result was a joy to all. Crowded houses heard the eloquent lectures, and sixty-five new names were added to their roll. So best they honored our beloved leader.

It has been especially noticeable that the revival services conducted by evangelists at various points have in almost all cases had as a part of the work strong talks on temperance and purity. It is no small gain when we can hear ministers doing the talking we wish to have done.

Prescott union secured over two hundred names to the anti-cigaret petition. Other unions have also done excellent work in this line. Some have also circulated petitions asking Congress to pass a law that no revenue on liquors shall be collected in prohibition districts. This United States tax is the greatest obstacle to the success of prohibition in our state.

Fayetteville has two thriving L. T. L's. They hold medal contests, and circulate pledges, and do much to develop temperance workers among the boys and girls.

Our state convention meets at Newport, April 12 to 15. This is the home of our loved state president, Mildred A. Dorsey, and no pains will be spared to make our gathering there a great good to the whole state. John G. Woolley is expected to lecture there for us on April 14.

Our state paper, the Arkansas Signal, has grown more and more of a necessity. It has existed two years, one as a private enterprise and one as the official organ of the state W. C. T. U. The first number contained an account of Miss Willard's visit to Eureka Springs, March 20, 1896, the last day our state was privileged to have her within its borders. May the paper started with a record of her blessed presence live as long as the work needs it.

MARY A. BROWNE.
For Francelia L. King, M. D., State Reporter, Fayetteville.

Official.

School Savings Banks.

"Make hay while the sun shines and institute school savings banks while the schools keep," is our motto. There is no philanthropy more pleasant, helpful and popular than going right into the schoolhouse and telling the children about real, practical economy. The best way to sow wealth seed is to be right on the ground. How the little hands fly up when we tell the pupils how they may be earning and saving pennies for the best uses, become responsible bank accountants, able to help themselves, and ask them if they would like to share this teaching. The most refreshing and restful thing I do is this practical work with the dear children. They are so alert and responsive that I wish we were all young again. If every woman of us had had the advantage of school savings teaching we would have fuller and better bank accounts, know more of business methods and enter more understandingly into home and organization work. That reminds me of a fresh incident. Having my bank book settled the other day, I questioned the balance and handed the cashier a list of the checks I had given. The mistake was corrected and the cashier said, "I never saw a woman who kept a correct record of her checks before." "I think you deal with few!" I retorted pleasantly, "there is no reason why a woman should be less accurate than a man." "There is no reason, but she is. There is no reason either why she should invariably sign a check on the wrong end, but she does." This was a sweeping assertion and my banker laughed. "I like your idea of teaching them while they are young," he added. His curtly put lesson may be deserved, and a few business rules are as necessary as parliamentary ones to us. This is another strong plea for our school savings banks teaching.

During the past month I have filled orders for literature from seventeen different states. The largest order was from a borough school board that bought three thousand of the circular—"How to Institute School Savings Banks"—to distribute among their patrons. I visited the Atlantic City (N. J.) public schools last week. They have had the savings system in use since 1895 and the scholars have saved over seven thousand dollars. The superintendent and the teachers speak most highly of the benefits of the teaching, and say some of the scholars have accumulated enough to take shares in a building and loan association, while parents are wanting to deposit with them savings for children under school age.

Dear state superintendents and friends of the work, will you please continue to go to the schools and the school directors with news of this simple method of teaching economy, self-responsibility and good habits. By frequent reprints of leaflets, five and ten thousand editions, I keep up the stock of literature. Stamps will bring it to you by return mail.

In love, in sympathy and hope,
S. L. OBERHOLTZER,
National Supt.
1905 Tioga St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For Breakfast,
MARRIED TO GLUTEN
WHEATLET

is preferable to oatmeal because Wheatlet is rich in gluten. Oatmeal is starchy. Many people cannot eat Oatmeal. Anyone can eat Wheatlet.
TRY IT.
If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.
There is but one Wheatlet; avoid the "just as good." Booklet mailed free.
Made only by the
FRANKLIN MILLS CO.,
Lockport, N. Y.

Work Among Miners.

DEAR COMRADES:—The new manual for workers is now ready and in the hands of my associates, Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, Champaign, Ill., and Mrs. Manetta Tinney, Kirwin, Kan.; also the National superintendent's Annual Report, the Program for meetings, and the National Leaflet. Those not having already received them may send five cents to either of the above named associates and they will be forwarded to them at once. Do not fail to get these helps. In the beginning of this year, it was thought best to divide the work of this department, giving the associates a large share and thus in some measure relieve the National superintendent that she may take a much needed rest. In fact the need was imperative. Until further notice the state superintendents and other workers in the following named states will please report quarterly to Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, Champaign, Ill.: Ohio, Missouri, Iowa, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, Washington, California, Colorado, Alaska, Arizona, Texas, Utah, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana, Idaho, Illinois. The following will report quarterly to Mrs. Manetta Tinney, Kirwin, Kas.: Vermont, West Virginia, Virginia, Alabama, Dakotas, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania.

The work is going on grandly.

Mrs. E. J. Cooley, Cripple Creek, Col., who is conducting a reading room in that place, will be glad to receive current magazines and papers for distribution among miners. She sends the literature by trusty persons into twelve or more mines; thousands of pages thus reach men who are hungry for something to read, every week. Everything must be sent prepaid whether by freight, express or mail. Will not unions and individuals respond to this call? Perhaps many of you can subscribe for religious or temperance papers or magazines. Subscribe in the name of Mrs. E. J. Cooley, Cripple Creek, Col. They will be sure to get into the hands of miners. Keep this work before your unions. The miner's need is so great and the number of miners is constantly increasing.

Let local superintendents keep in touch with district and state superintendents by frequent correspondence and quarterly reports. Write fully and freely and often to Mrs. Kuhl and Mrs. Tinney.

The manual will tell what and how to do the work. Blanks for annual reports will be sent to superintendents early in June if you will write to me and tell me how many you want for the unions in your states. Do not fail to do this. All annual reports must be sent to me by September 15.

Will all correspondents take notice that my address is not Quincy, Ill., as is given in our National Minutes, but Mattoon, Ill. Much of my mail goes astray.

Yours,
(Mrs.) W. F. English,
Nat. Supt.

Mattoon, Ill.

Schools of Methods and Parliamentary Usage.

Dear Comrades:—The days of convention are again fully come and for the next three months the flutter of programs, the resolutions of committees, and the eloquence of speakers will hold the attention (let us hope) of a multitude. I write to urge that each convention be made as nearly a "School of Methods" as possible, for present advices indicate fewer Schools to be held in connection with assemblies (fewer assemblies, too). I do not ascribe this to waning interest, but the rather, that we are coming to realize that there is a limit to human endurance. The truth is, the American people are organized past reason; what with society and societies, we are driven well nigh to death, and yet I have been seriously considering one other organization to be known as "the Home Club," the members pledging themselves to stay at home one afternoon and evening each week, and not to attend more than four meetings on Sundays. Truly, my comrades, if there is one subject more than another that should be thoughtfully and intelligently discussed in every School and convention, it is, How can we best conserve our forces? Some of the superintendents are asking for a "new topic" for program. Here it is. Will every School be kind enough to send me its conclusions?

Be sure, too, to give a fair proportion of the time to parliamentary law, for notwithstanding the many who are "well up" in this needful knowledge, the almost endless letters of inquiry convince me past doubting that this department should have closer attention in all our meetings.

Several weeks ago I sent to every state superintendent, and where the state does not duplicate the department, to the president, the department report for 1897, "The Heading" and "Question Blank," so that each superintendent may be at no loss to know what she will be expected to report. If any one has failed to receive these "documents," please let me know, and they will be promptly forwarded.

Any state superintendent who desires a larger number of blanks can be supplied.

Any superintendent wishing information will please ask definite questions, and I'll answer to the best of my ability.

Faithfully yours,
(Mrs.) A. S. Benjamin,
Nat. Supt.

Portland, Mich.

Purity in Literature and Art.

This, the last legacy of Miss Frances E. Willard to the department of purity in literature and art, is found in her last presidential address, page 110, National Minutes, "The Plea of the Women to the Press:"

We women, representing large groups of National, state and local workers in the various lines of reform, philanthropy and Christian effort, hereby present our plea to those who control the daily press of the United States.

We are sincerely grateful for the incalculable good that the newspapers have wrought for our respective societies and in helping on the public weal. We know many of the disadvantages against which they contend, but we believe that, notwithstanding these, to tell the story of today so as to make the world more brotherly to-morrow is the only right way, and would also prove expedient for all concerned.

The press is not indifferent to the element of good will. The humanitarian character of the best papers is confessed by all fair-minded persons, and will, we believe, continue to be a constantly increasing factor; still, in many cases, inaccuracy of statement, sensationalism and undue space given to recitals of crime and descriptions of brutal exhibitions make the newspaper a conglomerate of influence that we grieve to have come into the homes where our children and youth are being bred for beneficent lives.

We therefore ask you, the leaders of the press, to permit the influence of men and women who above all things desire the public good to reach you by means of friendly personal conference and to have more weight with you than has perhaps been practicable in the past. Were it known that any of our newspapers, great or small, had chosen to confer not only with those who represent the political and commercial interests of the country, but also with those who are the most closely associated with the guardianship of its homes, we believe there would be a stronger feeling of confidence and hope on the part of those whose good will and good word editors and publishers may well desire to win.

We believe you will receive this request in the same spirit in which it is offered, for we make it as your sisters, as patriots, and as those whose desire and purpose it is to think in the most friendly way of the press, that great power which has done immeasurable service for human liberty and is one of our guiding torches toward the better time.

Every woman who loves her country and desires the day to come when victory shall be proclaimed over impurity and intemperance, will secure the names of men and women of influence; the religious denominations, organizations, and societies; also state and county press associations and the endorsement of the local press.

Send these names and endorsements to your state or territorial superintendent. A clean press has much to do in making a clean people, and an indecent press is largely responsible for perverted morals. Through the efforts of our National press superintendent, Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, while in Washington, the endorsement of this plea by the Woman's National Press Association and the Woman's International Press Union was secured. The Woman's Prayer Union of Greater New York have sent out a request for prayer for the success of this plea.

The work of the department for the elevation and purification of the press has been endorsed by the Pan Presbyterian Council, representing twenty million of people; the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian church; the New York Synod; the Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church; the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance and various denominations and societies. Also twice by the National Editorial Association; twice by New York State Editorial Association; by the New York Republican Editorial Association and other editorial state and territorial associations, etc.

Yours in sacred trust,
(Mrs.) Emilie D. Martin,
Nat. Supt.

Room 280, No. 1 Broadway,
New York, N. Y.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Dear Sisters:—While the thoughts of our great army are turned with loving impulse towards the Temple as the outward, tangible memorial for our beloved leader, I earnestly hope we may not forget that other more enduring memorial which alone can fitly express her life and work—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union itself. A doubled membership ought to be the goal of this year's endeavor. The hearts of the women of the nation seem softened towards us as never before. From every section of the country come reports of the ease with which new members are secured. The time is ripe for the harvest. We shall be verily guilty if we do not put in the sickle and reap "for God and Home and Native Land."

Dear Sisters, I feel like condensing my notes this week into this one message: "Win souls." There are women all about us who are longing for just the impetus that white-ribbon work would bring into their lives. There are talents which are going to waste for want of a channel through which they may be wisely directed. Our work, too, is languishing in many places for lack of workers, and in no place is it being carried on as efficiently as it might be if only there were more feet to run on the errands of mercy, more hands to hold aloft our white standard of personal and national righteousness. We must increase our membership during this year—double it if possible. In no other way can we so honor her who has left us; in no other way can we so further our beloved work, always remembering that we seek members not merely for the sake of a lengthened roll-call, but because we desire to secure so many more vital factors for the carrying out of our principles of purity and righteousness.

In the Local Union column are given various methods which have been tried for securing new members, and others will be published from time to time. I should be very grateful if any who have successfully tried any new plan will write me of it. Meantime, below are appended the names of those who are already hard at work and who have won for themselves a place in the

HONOR ROLL.

Mrs. H. P. VanLiew, Wayland, N. Y.
Miss L. A. Chubbuck, M. D., New Bedford, Mass.
Mrs. L. E. Bailey, West New Brighton, N. Y.
Mr. C. J. Hall, Buffalo, N. Y. (11).
Swedish Union, Cottonwood, Minn.

Two of these have secured additional names which will be applied to the next ten.

The state corresponding secretary of Minnesota sends this most encouraging report: "In the first half year there have been organized in Minnesota twenty-seven W's and eleven Y's, with a total membership of 512. Six of the Y's were Somerset, organized in state normal school, commercial college and high schools." What state can better this record?

Yours for 300,000 paid membership in November, 1898.

Katharine Lente Stevenson.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

BABIES THRIVE ON IT. GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK.

OUR ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ENTITLED "BABIES" SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD. SENT ON APPLICATION.

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK.

Treasurer's Corner.

After many days of sorrow and an increase of work, incident to the sad changes that have occurred and that have so crowded the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, I come back into the Corner to tell the women how my heart has been cheered by the courageous words that have come to me from the women all over the country, saying, "We have consecrated ourselves anew to the work." "We must redouble our efforts." One says, "It is the feeling of every member of our union that we must be more faithful than ever before." Every letter breathes unfeigned sorrow, but also matchless courage. A society made up of such women gives great promise for the future of our work. The greatest and grandest worker falls, but the work goes on, because we follow the same Leader that led her.

The two-dollar letters are still coming in at a cheering rate and have been greatly appreciated at this season when so little usually finds its way into the treasury. New York is ahead in the amount sent in. Pennsylvania comes next, while Massachusetts and Illinois follow closely.

Dues have been received since last report from Ohio, Illinois, Maine, Connecticut and West Virginia.

The wrappers and labels are coming in increasing numbers daily, and I trust they will continue to increase more rapidly as the days go by. It is not necessary to send the whole wrapper. Cut out the narrow strip in the blue and red outside wrapper clear across that contains the firm name. This is all it is necessary to send, and you will save postage by not sending so much. I find that missionary societies and churches are availing themselves of similar methods to help themselves to money to carry on and enlarge their work. I hope the women will be faithful and earnest, and thus greatly help local, state and National treasuries.

I trust an earnest effort will be made to greatly add to the membership of every local union this year. Let us resolve to go up to the next Convention with our banner lifted high, and show to the world that though we have been sorely stricken, we are not cast down, and though our hearts are heavy, yet our hands are strong, because we are founded in truth and are born of God. There is no way that we could honor our departed leader so truly as to greatly increase our membership, and thus strengthen our stakes and lengthen our lines. Many women are thinking to-day, as they have never thought before on the temperance question, and especially of our W. C. T. U. work, and if properly approached, would join us and wear the white ribbon, and greatly strengthen our army. While we hear so much these days about recruiting for war, let us be diligent and recruit for our peaceful war.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec.—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

DEAR SISTERS:—The new pictures of our beloved Miss Wilard are meeting with favor, especially from those who saw her the last few months of her presence with us. Orders are already coming in to our treasurer for supplies. All orders will be promptly filled when accompanied by cash. See THE UNION SIGNAL advertisement for prices. Our Hospital is now doing work to its full capacity. One bed is already placed in the back parlor. It may seem best in the near future to turn our parlors into a ward, which we will gladly do if conditions require such a step. Our sisters have supplied jellies and fruit very liberally. Eggs, groceries or vegetables are always acceptable. The response to the call for five cents per member is bringing in some returns, but we hope and depend on larger sums the remaining time before the first of May. The Y's are bustling into life to help. If every woman who calls herself a temperance woman will send her nickel, the question of Hospital support will be settled for this year at least. This call was Miss Willard's own thought. The Hospital work always has held a favored spot in her loving, loyal-to-all heart.

Our state endowed bed has had a steady occupant for many months, as also the endowed bed of Mrs. J. B. Hobbs. The L. T. L. room, too, has its patient. Many times these three rooms do not cover the whole of our free work for the worn out worker. The management highly appreciates the splendid work done by all employés of the hospital. Such loyalty could not be purchased by money, it comes only when the ideal life of the Master is the pattern. The capacity of the building is twenty-two, we have now twenty-three patients. Physicians say they receive the best possible service the building will furnish. This is the sixth year in this building; it is not well suited to the needs of a hospital, but we shall hope for more commodious accommodations in the Lord's own time and way, for the work of greatest importance in this temperance reform is centered in non-alcoholic medication. No one can afford to ignore this great principle underlying all educational lines in advanced thought and action of the W. C. T. U., and as one sister puts it, "we are eternally opposed to alcohol either internally or externally."

Yours for the National Temperance Hospital,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—I write in the summerland of Mississippi amid the blooming flowers.

My heart is heavy, as all hearts are to-day in our great white-ribbon army, because she whom we loved has passed "from strifeland into lifeland." But the best tribute we can pay to the memory of our Chieftain is to work the harder for the cause to which she gave her life.

Mississippi women are gracious, her men chivalrous, and the work is moving on. There is some conservatism yet to meet and sweetly conquer, but our work makes friends for itself and the sunny southland will be our stronghold by and by. Mississippi has the strongest temperance sentiment of any state I have ever visited, and in this atmosphere the W. C. T. U. is sure to flourish.

I am impressed here as everywhere that we are not making the effort we ought to secure honorary members, and to make them feel that they really "belong." I often visit unions who never have had an honorary and who have not seemed to think of trying to secure any. On the other hand many men have said to me, when I solicited them for membership in the union, "Why, I did not know that you admitted men," or, "I have never been asked to join."

The membership dues of honoraries are not a small help to our finances and since they all remain in the local treasury should be looked to as a means for carrying on local work. But the impression should never be created that this is the main reason why we desire our brothers to join with us, for great as is our need for financial support we need moral support more.

We need the work of our brothers. I have long thought that we are not utilizing the great force of our present honorary membership as we might. They are already doing much for us in many places, but they ought to be given more to do. So we not only need to use more earnest and aggressive effort to secure honorary members but we also need to study out a systematic plan to put them "in harness." I have long waited for suggestions to come from other sources as to what might be done. Can not some one send in some thoughts along this line?

Let me suggest, dear sisters, that while we are sorrowing for our Chieftain, each member of the board of organizers will not forget to pray for her on whom Miss Willard's work has fallen for the time. Let the letters to our column be full of helpful thoughts.

Yours in white-ribbon bonds,

ADA WALLACE UNRUH.

Where Our Speakers Are.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY will spend the summer in the North and East. All letters addressed to Flora, Miss., will reach her promptly.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

The Philmont, N. Y., W. C. T. U. mourns the loss of its faithful secretary, MRS. ELLEN MARSHALL, aged sixty-eight years, who died March 7, 1898. For thirteen years she filled this office, and never failed to be present at every meeting as long as health would permit.

***

The Kewanee, Ill., W. C. T. U. mourns the loss by death of a noble Christian woman, a devoted member of the W. C. T. U., in the person of MRS. S. R. CHUBB, the wife of the Protestant Methodist minister. She leaves a husband and four children.

W. C. T. U. News.

FATHER MILLER, the venerable parent of Mrs. S. M. Walker, Nebraska's president, has been seriously ill at the home of his daughter, in Lincoln, Neb., for several weeks. Mrs. Walker has been obliged to give up her work in the field during the whole winter to give to her father the tender care he required.

REV. FRANCES E. TOWNSLEY has been spending the month of March in Port Huron, Mich. She addressed the Port Huron Y lately on the subject, "If I were a Girl Again." At Lenox her lecture for the W. C. T. U. was, "The Now and the How of the W. C. T. U. work." These addresses should be heard by every Y and W. C. T. U. in the land.

SPRINGFIELD, MO., reports most excellent work along scientific temperance lines in the public schools, in Drury college, in normal school, and the colored schools of that city. Prizes have been offered by the two unions for best essays on this topic in each of the schools mentioned. Good work is also being done in the Sunday-school department.

THE "Red Ribbon Club," of Lincoln, Neb., secured the Funk Opera House for its regular meetings for eight Sundays preceding the spring elections. At the third meeting the house was well filled. The president and prominent W. C. T. U. workers were on the platform. Resolutions on the loss of Miss Willard, were unanimously adopted. Impeachment charges have been filed against the Republican mayor of Lincoln for malfeasance in office, and the time seems ripe for change for the better in municipal affairs. The club meetings, it is hoped, will be a power in bringing to light the hidden things and creating a purer moral atmosphere.

W. C. T. U. work in Salt Lake City is earnest and effective. Nearly $500 have recently been raised to carry on the work of the Rescue Home. Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake made an appeal for it at a large mass-meeting with this result. Mrs. Lake and her traveling companion, Dr. Carolyn Geisel, held twenty-four meetings in the churches, colleges and Y. M. C. A. halls. Dr. Geisel addressed the largest gathering of Junior Endeavor workers ever held there. A struggling Y found a new leader and received many new members. At the invitation of some of the Mormon leaders they addressed a meeting for men only, another for women only in Assembly Hall. They were the guests of Mrs. Susie Young Gates, at Proro. These workers went from Utah to Nevada for work.

Announcement

ARKANSAS.

The twentieth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Arkansas will be held at Newport, April 12–15, instead of the dates published previous to this. MRS. ETHRIDGE,

Cor. Sec.

The dates in last week's SIGNAL made it 13 to 16.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed; 10c, 25c, 50c.

Intelligent Bread Selection

White flour, although it may be made from the finest wheat ever grown, does not and can not make healthful strength-producing bread, because it has been robbed of the gluten which is the nitrogenized nutritive element that the Almighty intended and decreed should be the blood-making, brain-feeding portion of the wheat berry. Gluten is never white in color, and every housewife should bear in mind the fact that starch, which is the inferior element of wheat, constitutes almost the entire bulk of the foolishly fashionable white flour that is causing so much lack of development among children, and making so many strong adults weak.

Graham flour, even though it be handled by the baker to the queen, can not make a bread that is easy of digestion and nourishing to the body, because it always contains a large proportion of the woody, coarse, and oftentimes dirty outer husk, which has no food value whatever, but which an all wise Providence intended only as a protection and covering for the pure and exquisitely proportioned food elements constituting the matured wheat kernel. Graham bread is always irritating to weak stomachs, and invariably leaves the stomach before it has had time to be digested and assimilated.

The Franklin Mills Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat, originated and made only by the Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y., and which is without doubt the purest flour in the world, makes the best bread now known to housekeeping or culinary science, because it contains (reduced to an even fineness) all the bone, muscle, brain and nerve feeding elements of the wheat kernel, so unfortunately lacking in white flour, and is entirely free from the woody outer husk that makes Graham flour so coarse and so painfully indigestible. The beautiful light golden brown bread made from this flour has a rich satisfying flavor that no other bread can possess, and it has no equal among the products of wheat as a natural, healthful and strength-building food. The readers of Woman's Home Companion should write to the makers of this flour, mentioning this magazine, and secure free of all charge their valuable booklet, which besides giving much valuable information, will demonstrate the fact that this flour, besides being immeasurably the best, is also the cheapest flour ever known, and gives more food value for the same money than any other flour in the world.—Woman's Home Companion.

A Spanish newspaper announces that the last two descendants of Christopher Columbus are now occupants of a poorhouse at Cadiz.

J. M. Davis, a wealthy Quaker of Cincinnati, has bought University Hall, at Wichita, Kan., will finish up the building, and will endow it with $200,000 and present it to the Society of Friends. The building is elegant, and cost originally $220,000. It belonged to the Christian church, and has been used as a school of art, literature and music.

In the Memorial number of The Union Signal on page 14 is the advertisement of the Medicated Cream Soap Company, in which a bicycle is offered to any one taking orders for one hundred boxes of soap at twenty-five cents each. This is a good chance to secure an 1898 wheel without paying out any cash.

Our Library Table.

Her Place in the World, by Amanda M. Douglas. In this, her latest work, Miss Douglas not only gives us a story of absorbing interest, but also such homelike pictures of the life in the small country town where the scene is laid, that we seem for the moment to become participants in the moving panorama. The characters are all strongly drawn, and naturally attract us. The book appeals especially, however, to young women, to whom it will be an inspiration and help, and perhaps assist to find Her Place in the World. Cloth. Price, $1.50.

A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, Ill.

Selfhood and Service: Christian Personality and Its Relation to Wealth and Social Redemption, by David Beaton, pastor Lincoln Park church, Chicago. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1. Fleming H. Revell Company, Publishers, Chicago, Ill.

The book treats the social problem from the standpoint of Christian personality, asserting its rights, including personal ownership of property, as opposed to all schemes of socialism and confiscation. It shows that the church possesses within herself the forces of social redemption in her doctrine of a regenerated selfhood, accepting the privilege of service. It is constructive and positive in method, furnishing a basis in nature and grace for a new social order.

A Christmas Accident, and other stories. By Annie Eliot Trumbull, author of "White Birches," "A Masque of Culture," etc.; 12mo., cloth. Illustrated. Price $1. A. S. Barnes & Co., 156 Fifth avenue, New York.

These quaint, bright stories of New England life and character have already called forth rather special interest as they appeared in several of the popular monthly magazines, and are now collected in book form for the first time. They show "Annie Eliot" at her best. They are short and contracted in subject as follows: "The Christmas Accident," "After—The Deluge," "Memoirs of Mary A. Twining," "A Postlude," "The Daily Morning Chronicle," "Hearts Unfortified," and "Her Neighbor's Landmark."

The People's Book Co. are issuing a series of Progressive Chautauqua Cards, by Florence Crosby Parsons, which should become very popular. The two series now out are Bible Characters and Places, and American National Characters. The former contain over one thousand carefully selected questions and answers to leading facts and events of the Bible. The latter give the same number of questions and answers of the leading facts in American biographies. These unique cards are designed to instruct and amuse young people in schools, at home entertainments, C. L. S. C. circles, Y. P. S. C. E. Leagues, reading circles, etc., etc. Complete set consists of 70 cards, 140 photographic half-tone pictures, and 140 sketches, printed from new type on superior quality of enamel-finish card-board. Full directions for playing accompany each set. Neatly boxed. Prices, plain edges, one color, $1; red edge, two colors, $1.25; gilt edge, three colors, $1.50. Address People's Book Company, 322, 324 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

NEW MULTIFLORA ROSES.

With seed of these new Roses, plants may be had in bloom in 60 days from time of sowing. Plant at any time. They grow quickly an d flowers appear in large clusters and in such quantity that a plant looks like a bouquet. Perfectly hardy in the garden, where they bloom all summer. In pots they bloom both summer and winter. From a packet of seed one will get Roses of various colors—white, pin k, crimson, etc.—no two alike, and mostly perfectly double and very sweet. Greatest of novelties. Seed 20c. per pkt., 3 pkts. for 50c.—or for 40c. we will send

1 pkt. New Multiflora Roses. All colors.
1 " Chinese Lantern Plant. Magnificent.
1 " Cupid Dwarf Sweet Pea. A real gem.
1 " Verbena, Giant White Scented.
1 " Tree Strawberry. Largest, finest berry.
1 bulb Double-flowered Tuberous Begonia
1 " Fancy Gloxinia. Extra fine.
1 " Giant Flowered Gladiolus Childsi.
2 " Spotted Calla Lily, Montbretia.
6 " Fancy Gladiolus. All different colors.
10 " Flowering Oxalis. Mixed colors. Also,

Our Great 160-page Color Plate Catalogue and THE MAYFLOWER Monthly Magazine for a year; illustrated—colored plate each month—devoted to Flowers and Gardening. Worth $1.50 but for trial

All the above for 40c. postpaid.

Our Great Colored Plate Catalogue

of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants, and Rar New Fruits, is the finest ever issued: profusely illustrated. 10 Magnificent Large Colored Plates, 160 pages. Mailed for 10 cts., or FREE to any who expect to send us an order after getting it.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

Drinking Fountain

FOR

MAN and BEAST

Manufactured by

The J. L. Mott Iron Works

84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.

311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO

Catalogue mailed on request.

Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

A NEW STRONG BOOK.

THE TWENTIETH . . . . CENTURY CITY

By Rev. JOSIAH STRONG, D. D.,

Author of "Our Country" and "The New Era."

16mo, paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

With the same fascinating presentation of facts and figures which made "Our Country" one of the great books of the century, Dr. Strong discusses the danger arising from the vast movement of population towards the Cities and the growth of their preponderating influence in the Nation, points out the principles which may be applied successfully to the solution of the great problems of modern society and makes a ringing appeal for action.

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers,
5 & 7 East Sixteenth Street, New York.

PLEASE TRY

Cascarets

CANDY CATHARTIC

REGULATE THE LIVER

10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 309.

PARLOR ORGANS At a Big Reduction.

To sharply reduce stock, we offer unprecedented values. Fine Organs, formerly bringing $75, now $47.50. Used Organs from $15. Don't fail to write at once for catalogue. The world-wide reputation of this house is a guarantee of the quality of the Lyon & Healy Organ. Address, LYON & HEALY, Wabash Ave. and Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Trial Package Free.

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

SIX LOVELY ROSES FREE

To introduce our popular illustrated literary and family paper, Good Literature, into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we make the following special and extraordinary offer: Upon receipt of only Twenty-five Cents we will send Good Literature for the Remaining Nine Months of this Year (April to December inclusive), and to each subscriber we will also send, Free and post-paid, Six Lovely Ever-blooming Roses, as follows:

Empress of China, a new hardy perpetual blooming climbing pink rose; blooms profusely from May to December; will make a growth of 10 to 15 feet the first year, and live through the coldest winter without protection; charming for walls, pillars and porches.

Inconstant Beauty, the rose of many colors; a single bush will bear at the same time flowers of various colors, including orange, yellow, pink, apricot and crimson.

Marion Dingee, the most magnificent dark crimson rose in existence; a profuse bloomer, and strong, vigorous grower; a very choice variety.

Empress Augusta Victoria, a charming new rose; color, creamy white; deliciously fragrant; pointed buds and full double flowers; free bloomer and healthy grower.

Sunset, a lovely rose, rich golden amber or old gold, tinged and shaded with ruddy copper, resembling the tints of a summer sunset; flowers large, full and deliciously perfumed.

Madame de Watteville, the tulip rose, creamy yellow, widely bordered with bright crimson; a hardy, vigorous grower and profuse bloomer. One of the most charming varieties.

Bear in mind that we offer, not one, but the entire list of six lovely ever-blooming tea roses described above, absolutely free, by mail postpaid, if you will send us twenty-five cents for GOOD LITERATURE for the remaining nine months of this year (April to December inclusive). You will get the full worth of your money in your subscripton to the paper; the roses are an absolute gift. Remember that these are not cheap, common roses, such as you see advertised at low prices. They are the choicest and most famous varieties, and such as are sold at high prices by all the leading florists. The roses are grown especially for us by one of the largest and most reliable firms of rose growers in the United States. We shall send you strong, healthy, well-rooted plants, well packed, by mail, guaranteed to reach you in perfect condition, and to give absolute satisfaction. GOOD LITERATURE is a large and handsome illustrated literary and family paper, each issue comprising from 20 to 24 large 4-column pages, including a beautiful cover. It contains Serial and Short Stories by the most famous authors, poems, sketches, instructive miscellany, Household, Juvenile and Humorous Departments, etc. You will be delighted with it, and the six lovely roses are worth many times the price of subscription. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. This is a special offer by a well-known and reliable publishing house, established over twenty-two years; we refer to the Mercantile Agencies and to all leading newspapers as to our responsibility. Address: F. M. LUPTON, Publisher, 23, 25 and 27 City Hall Place, New York.

1898 High Grade BICYCLES

for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models.
$75 'Oakwood' for $32.50
$60 'Arlington' " $24.50
Others at $15, $17 and $20
Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50

No Money in Advance. WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits. Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 80, Chicago, Ills.

AGENTS WANTED

MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT CUBA BOOK.

All about Cuba; Spain; Maine Disaster; and War; great excitement; everyone buys it; one agent sold 87 in one day; another made $13.00 in one hour. 600 pages; magnificent illustrations; photographs, etc.; low price; we guarantee the most liberal terms; freight paid; 20 days credit; outfit free; send 10 two-cent stamps to pay postage.
THE BIBLE HOUSE, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

(Trade-mark Registered.)

All persons are cautioned against buying or selling any goods called "Gluten Flour," "Special Diabetic Food," "Barley Crystals," "K. C. Whole Wheat Flour," or "Gluten Grits," except those made by Farwell & Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y., bearing their name and the criss cross lines, as on this notice. They are fully protected by patents, trade-marks and copyrights.

AGENTS Gents Ladies $100 A MONTH AND EXPENSES. WE FURNISH EVERYTHING.

You work at home or travel, showing, appointing agents, and taking orders. Patented "Quaker" Bath Cabinet. 97,000 sold. Demand unlimited. Home necessity. Turkish, Hot Air, Vapor, Sulphur or Medicated Baths at Home, 3 cts. Purifies system, produces Cleanliness, Health, Strength. Prevents disease, obesity. Cures Colds, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, LaGrippe, Malaria, Eczema, Catarrh, Female ills, Blood, Skin, Nerve, Kidney troubles. Beautifies Complexion. Guaranteed best made. Price, $5. Wt., 5 lbs. Write today. Book Free. K. WORLD MF'G. CO., Cincinnati, O.

BUGGIES, Carts, Surries, Phætons, Spring Wagons, Harness and Saddles shipped C. O. D. anywhere to anyone with privilege to examine at lowest wholesale prices. Guaranteed as represented or money refunded. Send for illustrated catalog and testimonials Free. Addr. (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158 W. Van Buren St., B 80 CHICAGO

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO., 2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.

Send for free sample and literature.
A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

EUROPEAN TOURS.

16th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by Dr. & Mrs. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

ASTHMA COCA-CHEKAN CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial package FREE
COCA DRUG CO., BOX 424, CINCINNATI, O.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

Attention! Please!

AND ALLOW US TO TELL YOU WHAT AGENTS ARE DOING WHO ARE AT WORK SELLING THAT SOUL INSPIRING BOOK

The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard

NO HUMAN BEING WHO HAS THE HOPE OF A BETTER WORLD CAN AFFORD TO MISS THE INSPIRATION OF THIS STIRRING STORY

One W. C. T. U. worker in New York says: "I received my outfit on Monday morning and started work as soon as I had studied your instructions. By Tuesday evening 48 persons had subscribed, and 30 of them bought the De Luxe edition."

One agent in California writes that she has secured 63 orders in less than three days actual work, with the promise of enough more to make 75. (Pretty good for a beginner.) Many of our agents did not wait for outfits but started right out with only the circular. Among reports to-day we find these letters:

"I tired of waiting for my outfit, so started out yesterday determined to get my list started. I worked all afternoon and to-day and have just 36 orders. Hurry my outfit."

Another says: "Though my outfit has not come, I feel I must tell you about my success. I have worked three days with only your circular and have 105 orders. I find Miss Willard's life has touched the hearts of more people than I dreamed of."

The banner report to date is from a Kansas agent, who says: "Outfit received in due time. It is a grand one; your instructions are helpful, and after studying them I began the canvas, and after two days' work I have exactly 29 orders for cloth, 20 orders for half morocco and 37 orders for the De Luxe edition."

We have hundreds of letters telling the same story of success. Do you want to earn money? If so here is your opportunity, for to sell this grand volume. Write for outfit today. See our address at bottom of this page.

We Want Agents Everywhere

A Splendid Book for Development of American Patriotism.

"If we would save America, we must first save the American Home."
—FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon..

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is well known that a large number of Subscription Book Houses are selling the official Life of Miss Willard, and in order to give all an equal opportunity it was agreed that a uniform discount of 40 per ct. should be given. Especial inducements should not be offered and territory should not be restricted. We repeat these terms in order that White Ribboners who desire to become agents may read with care all circulars, and may avoid entering into arrangements with firms offering extra discounts.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicago.

....THE....
BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

A GREAT LITERARY AND ARTISTIC MEMORIAL TO A GREAT AND HEROIC LIFE.

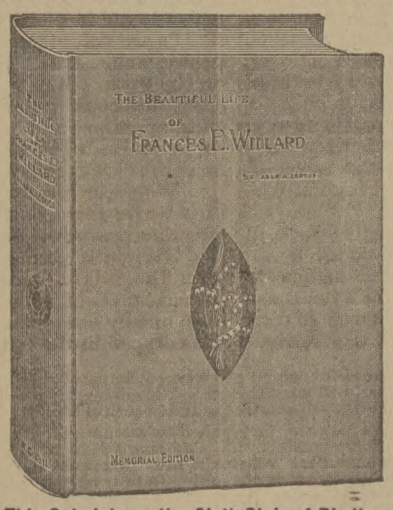
.....BY.....

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

FOR TWENTY-ONE YEARS HER PRIVATE SECRETARY.

IT WILL ALWAYS STAND AS AN ILLUMINATING PILLAR OF FIRE IN THE HOME....

WITH INTRODUCTION BY



LADY HENRY SOMERSET

The Only Authorized Life Story

WITH TRIBUTES BY

DR. FRANK W. GUNSAULUS,
DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS,
FRANCIS E. CLARK, President of Christian Endeavor Society.
MARGARET BOTTOME, President of King's Daughters.

and many others, constituting the Great, Eloquent and Wise, unite in splendid testimonials.

This Cut pictures the Cloth Style of Binding

The American flag, with all its streaming history, floated in every breath of Frances Willard's life. She has put new music into the song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee;" she has taught hundreds of thousands of emancipated men to sing it and to sing it worthily. The children of a million families ought to read this book. It is pre-eminently valuable to all who would lay upon the altar a consecrated life and expect a blessing for God and humanity.

The book contains nearly 500 pages, is 8 inches wide by 10 inches long, and is printed on fine paper, manufactured expressly for the purpose. Every line, as well as every picture, is brought out in exquisite strength and harmony; 32 Full-Page Half-Tones.

RETAIL PRICES	Cloth	$2.00
	Half Morocco	2.75
	De Luxe Edition	3.75

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

All Prospectuses and Complete Books will have this official stamp on the title page.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association have placed this book in our hands for distribution in the United States, England, Canada, Australia, etc.; but Agencies can be secured through any subscription house.

WE WANT SOLICITORS IN EVERY TOWN, village and hamlet to canvass for this, the greatest selling book of the century. We will pay the most liberal commissions. Capital not necessary as we give credit. Circulars and terms free. The important point, however, is to get into the field at once; so we advise sending 50 cents for a complete canvassing outfit, instructions, etc., TODAY, and thus head off competition and secure the greatest number of orders. Address,

Monarch Book Company...Dept. G

GENERAL AGENTS FOR UNITED STATES, ENGLAND, CANADA, AUSTRALIA, ETC.

Chicago, Ills....Philadelphia, Pa....Oakland, Cal.

ADDRESS THE NEAREST OFFICE.

Signal Notes.

Two new Floating Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized; one in the Christian Endeavor Home for Seamen, Nagasaki, Japan, and one on the U. S. S. Indiana.

The supreme court of Iowa has decided in favor of the anti-cigaret law, passed by the last legislature, which prohibits the sale of cigarets in that state, except by wholesale dealers for shipment outside the state. The law is intended to stop the sale of cigarets for consumption in the state.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD

Changed time and also depots March 6, 1898. All trains now arrive and depart from Van Buren Street Station, near Clark Street, Chicago. All trains on "L" Loop stop at Nickel Plate Depot. City Ticket Offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Telephone Main 3389.

The supreme court of Iowa has decided in favor of the anti-cigaret law, passed by the last legislature, which prohibits the sale of cigarets in that state, except by wholesale dealers for shipment outside the state. The law is intended to stop the sale of cigarets for consumption in the state.

A Slight Cold if Neglected, often Attacks the Lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and effectual relief.

Why shouldn't a rope learn something when it is taut?

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Why isn't a girl's figure her fortune instead of her face?

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

The vegetable oils used in its manufacture make it the best for the hair and scalp.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

"WHERE DIRT GATHERS, WASTE RULES."

GREAT SAVING RESULTS FROM THE USE OF SAPOLIO

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,		$ .10
100 Copies,		7.50
50	"	4.00
25	"	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

LIFE SIZE PICTURE

...OF...

"Miss Willard"

Painted on porcelain and pronounced

A MASTERPIECE

by her friends. The fac simile of this painting will be executed by one of the very best companies in Chicago, and it will be difficult to distinguish it from the original. We did hope to be able to sell the picture for fifty cents, but the process of getting it up has been so costly we will have to charge $1.00 for it. We want agents to sell it in every town in the United States. We will pay a liberal per cent either to individuals or Unions who desire to act as agents.

The picture will soon be ready for delivery.

Send $1.00 AT ONCE for canvassing outfit.

Apply to

Mrs. MATILDA B. CARSE,
Room 1118 The Temple, Chicago

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample and valuable information. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

SALESMEN WANTED —$120 monthly and expenses. Experience unnecessary. Address, with stp., Seymour-Whitney Co., H. 11, Chicago

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

THE DOMINION COMPANY,

Publishers and Sellers of "Echoes from the Rocky Mountains;" "Infallible Logic;" "The Universal Cyclopædia and Dictionary," six volumes; "Standard Cyclopædia;" "The World: Mysterious and Heroic;" "In Richest Alaska;" "Facts and Fiction," a Monthly Magazine, etc., and Authorized Distributers of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," BY ANNA A. GORDON, For Twenty Years Miss Willard's Private Secretary.

The Memorial Volume of Frances E. Willard, a tribute of love and a token of remembrance of America's noblest woman. Published by the official publishing house of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

"You may break, you may shatter, the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still."

Frances Willard has passed beyond, but in the hearts of humanity everywhere she lives as grandly as ever. Love has hung over her brow a halo of remembrance that through all time will glow as a beacon to guide the bark of Endeavor safely past the shoals. Never before has an American woman been so enthroned in the hearts of her countrywomen; never before has the passing away of an American woman caused such intense sorrow and called forth such universal expression of sympathy. Into the mansion of the rich, into the hovel of the poor, has gone the sunshine of her work, emancipating here, cheering there—always helpful, always encouraging.

The most fitting monument that can be erected to the memory of such a woman is a volume in which is described her beautiful life, and in which is recorded the world's tribute of love and praise to the departed. Never before in all the realm of books has there been such a spontaneous demand for a book as there is for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." Over 40,000 advance orders were received before even a canvassing prospectus was ready. From the flower of the women of the land come sympathetic letters and volunteer offers to aid in distributing this grand volume. Officers of state and local W. C. T. U's are volunteering to canvass, many of whom will donate their profits to the temperance cause. From everywhere come letters of good cheer and Godspeed in the work. What a noble work to help circulate such a book! What great good this book will prove to the cause by its inspiring life-history and its gospel of temperance and purity. Into every home where there are boys and girls it will come as a gospel of love and cheer, to inspire to better lives, to redeem and to save from drunkards' graves and lives of shame.

We never loved any other book as we do this one, nor felt half the enthusiasm that we do about its success. It goes to your heart, it touches your feelings, it breathes peace into your troubled soul—somehow it brings back the loving face and the gentle voice of the dear one who has passed beyond mortal ken. As you turn the bright pages and read the beautiful story of the life of this saintly woman, tears of sacred joy gather in your eyes, and roll down your cheeks, and drop one by one upon the words—for they are words that have come from golden pens dipped in the fountain of love.

What an Agency Means.—An agency for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" means two things: First, it will aid a noble cause. Secondly, it is the greatest opportunity of a life time to make money. While the greater part of the profits on this book will go to the temperance cause, all who engage in its sale have been liberally provided for that they may receive good pay for their labor. In every county are thousands of admirers of Frances Willard, who will want a copy of this book. Large lists of orders can be taken each day. A few hours a day devoted to showing this book to friends and acquaintances will yield from $4 to $12 a day. Reports so far received verify this. The amount which experienced salespeople can make is almost unlimited.

Opportunities.—If every family in the nation could be canvassed for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," over 8,000,000 copies would be sold, and the proceeds that would go to the temperance cause would be so great as to place the W. C. T. U. on a financial basis that would forever endure. But what can you do with this grand book? We do not care what you have done with other books, or whether you have done anything. This book is a record breaker and will beat them all as a seller. How many homes are there in your county? One thousand, five thousand, ten thousand? No matter how many or how few, you will get an order at almost every house. Ten calls a day will get you at least five orders, and most likely eight or nine. Everyone, whether directly interested in the cause for which she worked, knew of and loved Miss Willard, and will want this grand, inspiring book, telling all about her heroic, self-sacrificing and beautiful life.

Terms.—We pay the largest commissions and help our salespeople in every possible way. We give a discount of 3 per cent for cash with order. When the order amounts to $35 or more and cash accompanies the order in full, we pay freight (not express) on the books. We pay duty on shipments to Canada. To honest agents we can arrange to give a credit of 30 days. Hence, everyone can conduct this business.

Canvassing Outfit.—This consists of a sample book of about a hundred pages of the complete book, showing contents, beautiful illustrations, quality of paper, styles of binding, and size of complete book, and contains guarantee to subscribers and blanks on which to record orders. With it will be sent our best instructions for successful work. This complete outfit will be sent postpaid for only 50 cents. The 50 cents may be deducted in remitting for the first ten books sold. Outfits are now ready. Order to-day—this very hour—and be ahead of agents who may soon swarm the territory with spurious books.

Territory.—To help you in taking orders readily we will let you select such territory as you can reach and canvass to the best advantage and with the greatest profit.

We want a member in every local W. C. T. U., in every church, in every church society, in every temperance lodge, in every benevolent and humane organization, in every township, village, town and city, to volunteer at once to canvass every member, and every person that can be reached, with "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

We want every man and woman in the United States and Canada, who has had any experience in the sale of books, to devote themselves for a time to the sale of "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." It will pay. Drop all else.

Size and Prices.

The book will be a royal octavo in form, about 16 x 10 inches when open, will contain between 400 and 500 pages beautifully and profusely illustrated, and will sell for $2.00 in Cloth, $2.75 in Half Morocco and $3.75 in Full Morocco.

The first thing to do is to send your order with 50 cents for canvassing outfit. Send it to-day, this very hour. Outfits are now ready and in the hands of agents. Yours will be sent by return mail. Don't lose an hour. Address,

THE DOMINION COMPANY,

Authorized Distributers . . . Dept. 5, 352-354-356 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, U. S. A. (Please mention "The Union Signal.")

All Prospectuses and Complete Books will have this official stamp on the title page.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 15. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, April 14, 1898. [Price, $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
Temperance—Educational—About Women—At Home—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, For the Lost Leader. By Emily Huntington Miller 3
An Easter Party in Jonesville. Chap. II. By Josiah Allen's Wife 3
How the W. C. T. U. Can Help Procure Direct Legislation. By Harriet E. Orcutt 4
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Jaffa and Beirut 5
Saloon Brutality 5
The White Ribbon in the East 6
A Temperance Cyclone 6
Persian Lambskin and Tortoise Shell 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Raindrops 7
Not the Place for My Boy. By M. E. M 7
With the Children. No. 5. By Amy Leonard 7
Guess! 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
A Field View 8
A National Disgrace 8
Memorial Day 9
Your Name Counts Here 9
A Great Contrast 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Department Work Among the Y's 10
Y's at Work 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U. 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Mississippi—Georgia—Connecticut—Pennsylvania—Missouri 11-12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Coins, Curios and Relics For the Field—Literature—Work Among Foreigners 12, 13
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 14
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 14
What to Ask of Congress and How 14
Announcement 14
Obituaries 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 15
Take Notice 15
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15

Notes and Comments.

IN reply to the letter of the National Officers to President McKinley, commending his caution and prudence in the present crisis and expressing earnest desire that peace may be maintained, the President has written to Mrs. Stevens, assuring her of his appreciation of the cordial message of indorsement of the policy adopted by the administration sent by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

IN response to the appeal sent out by Miss Clara Barton, the National W. C. T. U. last week sent $200 to Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson for the Cuban Relief fund. This money was donated to the National expressly for charitable purposes, and the General Officers voted to so apply it. We are sure white-ribboners the country over will feel glad that they can thus have a part in relieving distress so terrible as words fail to describe and imagination to picture.

IT was doubtless noted that the paper in the memorial number was of a much better grade than we ordinarily use. It was made especially for this purpose. Lately the mills furnishing it have been flooded by high water and have not been able to fill our orders for an additional quantity, which was made necessary by the continued requests for this number. Our friends will please be patient. Their orders will be filled at the very earliest possible moment.

PRAYER is the refuge of white-ribboners in joy and in sorrow. The W. C. T. U. was founded in prayer, and, as the beloved Chieftain used so often to remind us, in faith and prayer are its "hidings of power." It was eminently fitting therefore that when the dreaded blow had fallen and word had gone forth that Frances Willard was dead, immediately there came to W. C. T. U. women everywhere a summons to prayer. In obedience to the call of our World's and National superintendent of evangelistic work, a few of the "Temple toilers," as Miss Willard was wont to call the workers at National Headquarters, gathered at one o'clock on Good Friday in the room of the corresponding secretary, and, led by Mrs. Stevens, spent half an hour in seeking divine strength and guidance in this time of special need. Desolate indeed, but not discouraged—this was the thought which breathed through those fervent prayers, and it expresses doubtless the heart feeling of our praying women all along the line.

CHICAGO'S municipal election, April 5, is regarded as an encouraging victory in this city's war of independence. It is a victory of the people against the street railway corporations. Twenty-five of the thirty-five aldermen elected are pledged to oppose franchise grabbing, and the fact that the city council will have an "honest majority," with three votes to spare, assures the non-partisan organization of the committees. This is a crushing defeat for the Yerkes forces, who, it will be remembered, saddled upon the people of Illinois through their "representatives," the infamous Allen bill, and is, it is believed, the beginning of the end for corporation rule and gang politics in Chicago. To quote Mr. George E. Cole, president of the Municipal Voters' League, which organization was a large factor in bringing about this result, "It means that the standard of municipal government has been raised, never to be lowered." The citizens of Chicago are to be congratulated that amid the excitement of an impending armed conflict with a foreign power, so many of their voters did not forget the dangers which threatened them nearer home but responded with true patriotism to the call of duty at the ballot box.

BEFORE these pages reach the eyes of our readers, the press will have informed them of the final funeral service at the grave of Miss Frances Willard, our lamented leader and beloved friend. To the great outside world that has spent itself in tributes of appreciation, every fact concerning the end of her pilgrimage is of moment. But to the world of women who loved her, whose hearts listen for every faintest echo of her thought, whose love answers all it can learn of her with quick throb of pain or grief, we will give next week the details which tender, sympathizing hearts desire to hear. Drawing near to them in confiding frankness of self-revelation, Miss Willard told her friends and the whole world in her autobiography why she chose the strange, luminous path of light rather than the dark, slow road of the "valley of the shadow of death." On page 693 of "Glimpses" she wrote:

"Holding these opinions, I have the purpose to help forward progressive movements even in my latest hours, and hence hereby decree that the earthly mantle which I shall drop ere long when my real self passes onward into the world unseen, shall be swiftly enfolded in flames and rendered powerless harmfully to affect the health of the living. Let no friend of mine say ought to prevent the cremation of my cast-off body. The fact that the popular mind has not come to this decision renders it all the more my duty, who have seen the light, to stand for it in death as I have sincerely meant in life, to stand by the great cause of poor oppressed humanity. There must be explorers along all pathways, scouts in all armies. This has been my 'call' from the beginning, by nature and by nuture; let me be true to its inspiriting and cheery mandate even unto this last."

Miss Willard believed in the sacredness of the "earthly house of this tabernacle" as the "temple of the living God." She spent years in showing how human beings might keep it so free from taint of drink and every other pollution that it should be a fit dwelling for the divine Spirit. She was ready, for this end, to present her own frail body a living sacrifice in toil and weariness and pain, and in death to offer it as a burnt offering on the altar of her conviction of right. She felt that He who would not suffer His Holy One to see corruption certainly could not desire it for even the least of His little ones, and that this mortal might elect to "put on immortality" by the swift road of the chariot of fire, as well as by the damp, dark path of the tomb. It seemed to her, as one of her friends wrote in trying to comfort Anna Gordon, "like letting even the precious body share the Spirit's unseen but vital forces. It seems like freeing the dear form that it may be clothed upon at once with immortality. In the grave it is swallowed up of death. In this way it is swallowed up of life. Take courage, dear heart! I feel as if you were freeing her and making her glad."

It will not seem strange to any one who knew her, that this "white life" chose the "white" path homeward, in full knowledge that the Refiner sits over against the furnace, and that even in passing through the fire, "the flames should not kindle" upon any sacred or precious thing. To her clear vision there was only beauty in the ideal of such a passing, and in her case there was only beauty in the reality.

Current Events.

The Conflict in Canada.

Principal Grant, Canada's Noted Presbyterian Divine, Withdraws From His Pro-Liquor Position.

A CORRESPONDENT of The Voice makes the following statement concerning the status of the plebiscite campaign: "The most severe blow that the liquor interests of Canada have yet received in the plebiscite campaign comes with the complete overthrow of Principal Grant, of the Queen's University, in his anti-prohibition championship. Early in the contest the Rev. Principal published a comparison between the prohibition state of Maine and the province of Ontario with regard to the prevalency of idiocy, deafness and blindness, attempting to show that these misfortunes were increased under prohibition.

"The absolute falsity of the position has been shown, and Mr. Grant in a letter in the Toronto Globe admits that his figures were worthless, and withdraws from his position."

Temperance.

MOUNT CARROLL, Ill., has voted no-license, the first time in nine years.

CHARLES F. BOUGH, prohibitionist, has been elected mayor of East Liverpool, O., by nearly 300 majority.

SINCE the first of January over 12,000 gallons of liquor have been taken into the Yukon district under permits granted by the lieutenant-governor of the Northwest Territories.

A STATE branch of the National American Anti-Saloon League was organized in Salt Lake City recently. The president is George F. Goodwin, and the secretary, Richard Wake. It is intended to push the organization over the state as fast as possible.

THE supreme court of Michigan has decided that in that state a saloon-keeper is liable for all damages which result to a wife by reason of the intoxication of the husband, and any one "causing or contributing" to the intoxication is liable. A declaration to recover damages need not allege that sales of liquor were made to the person when he was intoxicated or an habitual drunkard.

SENATOR RAVENSCROFT has introduced into the Maryland senate a bill compelling all signers of petitions for saloons to live in the immediate vicinity of the proposed location. It also provides that no saloon shall be located within 400 feet of schoolhouses and churches. At present the signers may live quite a distance from the proposed location, and the distance from churches and saloons is placed at 200 feet. The bill applies to Baltimore City.

THE prohibitionists of Wisconsin are called to meet in delegated convention in the city of Oshkosh on Wednesday, August 25, 1898, at 9 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of nominating a state ticket. Iowa prohibitionists will meet in delegated convention at Des Moines, June 1 and 2, for the same purpose. Charles P. Russell, state chairman of the prohibition party of Michigan, has resigned, owing to a pressure of private business. Fred E. Britten, of Albion, has been elected his successor.

THE Woodstock Sentinel Review states that a Masonic banquet was held in the town of Woodstock, Ontario, and that "the toasts were drunk with cold water and the fact was considered worthy of comment by one of the speakers as indicating the change that is coming over society and societies." Commenting on this statement The Canadian Craftsman says: "In the city of Toronto, and we may say the city of Montreal, also, as well as throughout the greater part of the Dominion, the best and most prosperous lodges have conducted their banquets without liquors for the past quarter of a century. In Toronto, for instance, St. Andrew's Lodge, the mother lodge of the district, banished liquor from its refreshment table some twenty-five years or more ago, and celebrated its seventy-fifth birthday a few months ago with a banquet equal to anything gotten up by the Craft, without a drop of intoxicating drinks."

THE New York Voice asked the 250 members of the faculty of Yale University this question, "Would you advise the voters of New Haven to vote 'yes' or 'no' upon the question of license, and why?" A stamped envelope accompanied the question. Seventeen replies were received, five of which were anonymous. The Voice says: "Of these, only four are willing to say that they will advise New Haven's voters to cast their ballots for no-license; two advise citizens to vote for license; fourteen replies indicate that the writers are sorely vexed at the Voice, and about thirty have returned the blanks or the envelopes without an answer. John Q. Tilson, proctor and steward of the university dining-hall, where wine sauces are advertised on the menu cards," says that he has voted no-license at every election for the last nine years. S. S. Curry, instructor in the Yale Divinity School, says he always votes for prohibition. Simeon E. Baldwin, professor of constitutional law, and Edward G. Buckland, assistant professor of evidence, would advise them to vote "yes." The other answers are either anonymous or evasive or abusive. The local option election in New Haven is to be held April 19.

Educational.

HENRY STAFFORD LITTLE, formerly clerk in chancery in New Jersey, has given $100,000 to Princeton University.

IN refusing to grant a writ of mandamus to prohibit the reading of the Protestant Bible in the public schools of Charleston, W. Va., the state supreme court decided that there was no law to prohibit it.

WOMEN are to the fore in educational matters in Colorado. Out of the fifty-nine counties in the state, twenty-seven have women superintendents of schools, and every school board has one or two women members.

The will of Hannah Davis, late instructor in the University of North Dakota, makes bequests to the Humane Society of Michigan, the Spiceland (Indiana) Academy and the Lowell (Kansas) Polytechnic Institute.

GOVERNOR BLACK has signed the bill providing that five per cent of the excise moneys of New York city shall be applied to the teachers' retirement fund. The board of education will apportion the money among the various boroughs, in proportion to the number of teachers employed and the amount of their salaries.

WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY has secured in its college for women, as a lecturer on household economics, Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, professor of chemistry in the Institute of Technology at Boston. Mrs. Richards is known as one of the most competent women in the world in her department. This department in Western Reserve University is one to which great importance is attached.

ROBERT THOMPSON, of Chicago, is the originator of a scheme to erect amonument to Lafayette at the Paris Exposition of 1900. The monument is to be a present from the American people and will be placed over the almost unmarked grave of the patriot. The idea has been indorsed by President McKinley, and a resolution has been introduced in Congress, providing for a commission to supervise the collection of a fund among all the schools of the United States. The intention is to unveil the monument and present it to the government of France, July 4, 1900.

THE eight largest universities in the world are on the other side of the ocean. They rank as follows: Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Naples, Moscow, Budapest, and Munich. Harvard, the largest American university, ranks ninth, having risen from the tenth place during the last year. The University of Michigan has risen from the eighteenth to the seventeenth place, Pennsylvania from the twenty-first to the twentieth, Yale from the twenty-fifth to the twenty-third, while the University of the City of New York has fallen from the forty-ninth to the sixty-first. The relative order of the ten largest American universities is: Harvard, Northwestern, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Yale, California, Chicago, Colorado and Cornell.—The School Journal.

A NEW idea has been introduced in the public schools of Brooklyn, Mass. Alternately the girls as well as the boys, are taught the use of the ordinary tools for working in wood, and the boys are taught how to do simple cooking, such as making coffee and broiling steaks and chops. The plan has been a notable success and other schools are adopting it.

About Women.

MRS. MINNIE WILLIAMS, of Marquette, Big Horn county, will succeed Hon. J. A. Williams as register of the United States Land Office at Lander, Wyo.

THE women scored a victory in Warren, O., on April 4, electing Mrs. Harriet T. Upton, of the National Suffage Association, and Mrs. Carrie Harrington members of the board of education.

MRS MARY S. GIST, the first woman who volunteered her services as nurse during the late war, is now living in Washington, and says that should war with Spain break out she is ready to enlist again.

THE fourth biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be held in Denver, Col., in June. Hundreds of women from every state will go in special trains, stopping en route at Omaha for a side convocation of two days.

MISS SPENCE, of South Australia, noted as the author of the Hare-Spence system of voting, has been appointed by the government of that colony as a member of the Provincial Board of Destitutes. She is the first woman to occupy that position in Australia.

MRS. JANET MACDONALD, of California, is making a tour of the South and East, lecturing on and illustrating with kinetoscope pictures the beauties of her state, with the view of attracting emigrants and capital to California. She is sent out by the Chamber of Commerce and the "Half Million" Club of San Francisco.

HOWARD COUNTY, IND., has five women assessors this year. The engaging of women in this official work is an innovation there and is perhaps the first instance of the kind in Indiana. The female assessors, who have already been qualified and commenced their duties listing property, are Miss Nora Pickett, Miss Emma Vickrey, Miss Pearl Olwin, Miss Elizabeth Pickering and Miss Mary E. Long.

At Home.

GENERAL SECRETARY H. H. HART, of the National Conference of Charities and Correction, has issued a bulletin announcing the twenty-fifth annual conference to be held in Carnegie Hall, New York, commencing May 18, and continuing one week.

ANOTHER terrible catastrophe is reported from the Chilkoot Pass, the second since the rush to the Alaska gold fields began. An avalanche descended on the trail between Sheep Camp and the Scales on April 3, and the loss of life will reach nearly one hundred.

AT this writing there are no special developments in the war situation, except those connected with the steady preparations for battle among the naval forces. The President's message to Congress was deferred several days in compliance with a request from Consul-General Lee that he be given time to get all Americans out of Cuba before the storm breaks. It is expected that the President's message will be promptly followed by congressional action which will be equivalent to a declaration of war.

Abroad.

NEWS from the orient states that by a serious fire in Tokyo, Japan, 1,111 houses were destroyed, resulting in death and accidents to natives, and 11,100 people were rendered homeless. The fire destroyed the Modykhana hospital for plague patients, erected by Europeans. On March 20 another fire in Tokyo destroyed 113 more buildings, among them the medical college of the Imperial university.

Contributed.

For the Lost Leader.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

[Written for the Memorial Service held by Chicago Central Union, in Willard Hall, March 24.]

GONE from our head? Beloved, think it not.
Out of the strife and tumult of our way,
She hath but stepped to gain some higher spot,
Above the mists to watch the coming day.

Smiling she waits, serene and undismayed,
For lo! her eyes in clearer light behold
The hosts of God in shining ranks arrayed,
The angel guard the prophet saw of old.

Onward with them her tireless footsteps press;
Her soul takes up their strong, exultant call,
And knows the truth our hearts but dimly guess,
How God's great purpose folds about us all.

Who knows what nobler errands of His grace
In ways untried her eager hands fulfill?
Or if her feet, with swift, unwearied pace,
Tread the familiar paths before us still?

With us, with them; unseen, yet near at hand;
Not loving less for that sweet, heavenly birth,
She has but joined the glad immortal band
Who do the Master's will in heaven or earth.

They hear His voice, they see His garments white
Shine on the sea when sorrow's night is dim;
Above, below, in darkness or in light,
They find it "beautiful to be with Him."

An Easter Party in Jonesville.

In Two Chapters.

BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE.

Chapter II.

WELL, to resoom. Royal's ma and pa had sot all their hearts and souls on him, and all their hopes, every one on 'em, and from his very birth they'd begun to lay up their pennies (and they wuzn't any too plenty in that parsonage, no indeed). But they saved every one on 'em they could spare, and took comfort in scrimpin' themselves to lay up towards his education.

Of course, bein' Presbyterians, they couldn't think of any other college to send him to only that big college of their own denomination, where ministers are made. For they dreamed beautiful dreams of their boy bein' a minister, with his genius and his warm heart a blessing to the sin-sick world.

You see, he had all the natural goodness that a boy can have, and they thought that all he needed to make him jest perfect wuz to live a spell amongst the great and good men to be found in that institution, to sort o' put on the last touches onto his noble character, jest as you'd put a coat of varnish on a meetin'-house steeple that's painted white as snow but only wants a little extra shine.

Well, he went away to college, bearing his pa's and his ma's hearts and about every cent of money they had, and Dolly's sweet heart and all her hopes and blissful anticipations.

Well, the first accounts from him from college wuz the most hopeful and encouragin' you ever see. He won honors to the right and to the left, and his life wuz as straight as a string held up perfectly perpendicular, and Brother and Sister White acted almost too hilarious about it. And they talked to me a sight about him (we wuz on visitin' terms, and had been for years), about how splendid he wuz a-doin' and what glorious surroundin's he had. Why, if he'd been in heaven, a-settin' down on a golden floor with a ring of angels round him, they couldn't seem to feel any safer and happier about him.

But anon or about that time tidin's reached me from them that knew that dangers wuz a-loomin' up in that college. Tidin's come to me from them that knew that a danger and a temptation wuz rared up there right under the winders of that institution, some like a open well, a hundred feet deep, in the dooryard of an asylum for blind orphans.

I cautiously but firmly locked arms with Duty and hinted at the danger to Mis' White. She scouted the idee, as I never hearn scoutin' before, and I've seen sights of scoutin's in my day; yes, indeed, I've been a married pardner for years and years.

"The idee!" sez she, "the very idee of the center piece of goodness in the hull world a placin' temptations to drink before the youth of our country." Oh! how she scouted the idee, and he too, worse than she did, havin' more strength.

"The idee! the bare idee," sez he, "of the best men on earth as well as the smartest ones j'inin' hands with the wicked and becomin' mates and pardners with the lowest criminal makers in the land."

Thus they scouted, and I stood the scoutin', and stood firm, for I'd been told by one that knew. Then they proudly said and some hauty, "Wait till Royal comes home on a vacation and they'd prove that I wuz in the wrong on't."

And I sez, "What did he answer when you writ to ask him about it?" (at my request)

And they said that Royal wuz in such a hurry when he wrote that he hadn't answered the question.

And I sez, "Why not write ag'in?"

And they owned up that they had writ two or three times but every single time Royal wuz in too much of a hurry to answer about it. "But, wait till vacation," sez they.

And I sez, "Wall."

But vacation come and Royal wuz invited home by a schoolmate and didn't come to Jonesville. A big blow, but Mis' White a-lookin' pale and wan from disappointment as anything, yet sprunted up and boasted what a rich feller it wuz that had invited him, and she sez with her lip tremblin' and tears she couldn't keep back a-standin' in her patient, lovin' eyes—

"We don't want to stand between him and success; influential friends will be a great help to him in his future career."

And I sez to myself Fidelity and Constancy and Gratitude and Filial Love do pretty well as friends to help a boy on in life. But I said this on the inside, on the outside I only said, "Wall," ag'in. I felt that that wuz safe to say.

As my revery come down nigh to the present I felt glad that both of the ministers had seemed to enjoy our Easter dinner first-rate. And it was a great success, a great one. Josiah, as usual, imbibed a little too freely of the beautiful viands, but on the hull happiness rained and good nater abounded, only as I mentioned to Josiah out in the back kitchen, perhaps Royal's name wuz too often introduced with too high emcomiums, and in too proud and joyous a tone. But knowin' that where the treasure is there will the heart be, and knowin' that every one of their thoughts wuz sot on him I didn't reprove his pa and ma even in my mind.

And Sister Minkley thought that Calvin wuz brung up more than wuz necessary and that John Wesley wuz some slighted. But good land! as I told her, "Wesley and Calvin wuz most probable the best of friends now, a-singin' 'Free Grace and Dyin' Love' to the music of their golden harps, and if they didn't mind it why should we?"

Well, that evenin', havin' been invited and importuned by Brother and Sister White, we all went over to a temperance meetin' in the Loontown Presbyterian meetin'-house. Afterwards we found out that the meetin'-house had felt kinder oneasy about the reports a-circulatin' about their highest place of learnin', and they felt that they must do sunthin' to nip 'em in the bud and show the public how false they wuz. But what wuz said to be the object of the meetin' (and important enough, too, the land knows) wuz as follers:

A decent man, but not over bright, and run down in means, wuz essayin' to open a saloon in Loontown; he had also made a effort, but as yet a futile one, to jine a meetin'-house, but bein' poor, and also on account of his business, he hadn't got in yet, and there wasn't much prospect of his doin' so.

Elder White wuz dretful sot ag'inst it, and he sez to our dinner table that very day, "The idee of lettin' a man whose trade is murder, and whose stock in trade is pizen, and whose success depends on the slaughter, soul and body, of our youth, and whose profits is blood money, the idee of lettin' such a man rare up his pirate flag in Loontown and shelter such a sin under the hallowed shade of our steeple."

He's real eloquent, Brother White is.

Howsumever Josiah seemed to favor the idee and reminded Brother White that a number right in his church approved on't; and Elder White turned right round as quick as a flash and sez he, "If I had my way I'd drive 'em right out of the meetin'-house. Why," sez he, "who is safe if such a business is sot up in our midst, enticin' our youth into the paths of darkness? Why," sez he, "I wouldn't have my boy subjected to such temptations for worlds like this."

And I j'ined right in with him and felt that he wuz in the right on't. But Josiah looked offish and acted dubersome; he said that "money wuz to be made, and trade drawed by the bizness."

And I sez bitterly, "Yes, coroners' fees and undertakers and grave-diggers."

And Elder White sez, "And eternal ruin and disgrace."

And Josiah looked kinder puffed up and obstropulous and Elder White as sot as sot could be. But at that very minute Mis' White said sunthin' in warm praise of Calvin, and Mis' Minkley sprunted up and praised Wesley, and I sez in calm, gentle axents, "Tirzah Ann, pass the pickles." So the storm blowed over for the time, and good nater and harmony prevailed.

But as I said anon and before, we all went to the evenin' meetin' at Loontown, and if I ever hearn eloquence I heard it there and then. As noble and lofty a sermon on temperance as ever I laid ear to, I hearn from Elder Elnathan White. The awful shame and disgrace of the drunkard-makin' business, the danger and agony it dealt out to the community, the earthly and eternal ruin that follered and ensued from it wuz dwelt on in a masterly way.

And then he pictured the woe and want and ruin of the drunkard's home, and as scathin' as he talked about the bizness itself he talked fur, fur scathiner about the so-called good men who upholded it and wuz willin' to have a drunkard-factory started in Loontown. "Why," sez he, "the place where they want it haint more than a hundred rods from the schoolhouse and as many as fourteen boys go there at one time. Will we, brothers and sisters, imperil the safety of them fourteen souls by openin' this sink of iniquity right in their midst? I would rather have my right arm perish," sez he, extendin' that strong right arm out over the congregation, "I would rather thrust it into the flames than to sign a paper that would be the death-warrant to hope and happiness, that will open the gate of ruin in the path of these boys, and girls too, for women's tears and heart's blood have paved the drunkard's path for centuries, and will as long as this giant evil endures."

Mis' White cried and wep' she wuz so affected, and sez she in a loud whisper, "Oh, how thankful I am that my boy is in a safe place."

And I whispered to Mis' Minkley, who sot on the off side of me, "Mebby he is and mebby he haint," for I had heard things foreboded; and I felt that if the flood of Elder White's eloquence wuz let loose in such a powerful way over the fate of fourteen boys what should be said when the fate of fourteen hundred boys was a-hangin' in the balances, and I thought to myself it may be a hard job to tackle to reconcile revealed religion with science, but how much harder to tackle the question of when a human bein' is turned into a crazed brute by drinkin', how to get harmonious and sweet influences to flow from his life onto his own family and the world, and when science and revealed religion had both demonstrated the awful truth that the drunkard's case wuz hopeless, both here and hereafter, why, why, should good men and learned men, open immense factories to turn 'em out.

It wuz a masterly effort and brung tears from me and a number of groans, and so it did from most every one in the meetin'-house. Even Josiah drawed out his bandanna sarahuptishly and blowed his nose, wipin' his eyes at the same time. It wuz a powerful effort, though Sister Minkley nudged me once and said that he might have acted a little less safe and proud about Royal, but good land, as I whispered back to her, "You can't expect perfection from a clay man anyway, and that is all that Elder White is, and our pardners too."

Well we gathered about the elder at the conclusion of his great speech, all on us, Jew and Gentile, as you may say, for we all on us belonged to different meetin'-housen, but all on us congratulated him warmly on his powerful effort. And Mis' White wuz jest a-sayin', "Oh, how proud and happy Royal would be if he wuz here, for he feels jest like his pa on this subject and he never knew the taste of whisky in his life. But," sez she a-talkin' some as if he wuz now in heaven, "much as we miss him we can't wish him back here, from the exalted and safe place where he is now."

And it wuz at this very minute that she said that that a letter marked "immediate" wuz put into her hand, for it had the postmark of Royal's place but it wuzn't his writin'. Elder White took it from her nerveless grasp and opened it, and all of a sudden his face turned a livid white, and he screamed out in awful axents, "Royal! my boy! killed in a drunken brawl! oh, my God!" and he tottered back into the arms of Elder Minkley who stood by him, and who, true to his religious instincts, said, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away."

And I spoke out unbeknown to me and sez, "The Lord gave and the devil hath taken away."

And I felt some conscience smut when I said it, but believed it all the same, and do yet.

Mis' White was carried home by two men, Josiah bein' one of the barriers. The Elder tottered home between two men on his own feet.

Mis' White lingered along a week not knowin' a thing what had happened. When her boy's funeral wuz a-bein' held in the room below, she lay smilin' and talkin', a-thinkin' that he wuz a baby in her arms, and a-tellin' her pardner how sure she wuz that he would grow up to be a honor and a blessin' to 'em.

Well, she lived a week, a prattlin', harmless lunatick, only at the very last she opened her eyes, sane, and remembered everything and cried out:

"Oh, Royal! oh, my boy, is it forever?"

And some thought she meant will the drunkard's doom separate us to all eternity, and some thought that it wuz sunthin' else. But 'tenny-rate, nobody will ever know, for the silence that settled down on her lips hain't never been broke by earthly language.

The old, white-headed, totterin' man that follered her to the grave, you'd never know him for the strong, eloquent, Christian worker of three days before. He wuz the one to be pitied, not she, who wuz somewhere, where the weary are at rest, and God wipes away all the tears from their eyes.

And that sweet girl fur away, the gay, young creature, never to be light-hearted again! Who should tell her! who could tell her! There in her luxurious boodore, with Royal's picture on the table and easel, and on a locket over her girlish heart, and printed on that true heart in lines that couldn't be wiped out, who could tell her that she must put away the pictures with the hopes that glorified 'em, wrop 'em up in black, anguished memories, put 'em away.

Euphemy told her.

Pull down the curtains! Shet the blinds! I can't look in there! no, I can't!

. . . . . .

Well, to resoom backwards a little, to the night after my Easter party. Well did I say that the black and rosy are all twisted in together in the warp and woof of the skein of life. A dark black had been purrin' off the skein, yes, indeed! black as a coal, and now jest as onbeknown a light pink onwound in front of me. Yes, as I sot down by the stove a minute after we got home from the temperance meetin', my mind and heart all tuckered out by the dretful tragic seen I had witnessed, I hearn a voice right behind my chair a-sayin' as a big, good-lookin' package wuz laid in my lap:

"There, Samantha, jest onroll that and see what a Easter present you have to be thankful for!"

Yes, my pardner had come in onbeknown to me, so wropped round I wuz with the mantilly of mournful retrospection, and I sez:

"For the land's sake, what is this! I wasn't expectin' a present!"

"Onroll it!" sez he.

I did so, and lo and behold! a gray woosted dress, with the children's names on it, all wool, and twilled; it couldn't be less than seventy-five cents a yard, and mebby wuz more.

It seems that the children had bought it some days before and gin it to their pa to hand to me that night before bedtime, mebby a-thinkin' that I would be tired out and would want a little cheerin' up, though little indeed did they dream of what I wuz to go through that night and how wearied out and melancholy I wuz in soul and body.

I felt highly tickled with the present.

Another package wuz still to onroll. It wuz marked, "From your faithful Josiah."

I looked grateful to him and real affectionate.

And sez he, "Open it, Samantha, and see what I picked out for you myself more than a week ago, askin' no advice and takin' none."

I opened it with some tripidation and there wuz a bright scarlet red necktie, with broad, flowin' ends half a yard long, and each one havin' a sunflower embroidered on it in the most glowin' yellow.

I said it wuz a necktie, for that wuz what my poor pardner called it; but I believed then, and I always shall believe that it wuz meant for a table scarf or a chair tidy.

I held it up a-smilin' a strange smile, for I felt that I must act pleased with a present anyway. But it wuz a queer, queer smile as ever I gin, and I've gin curous ones from first to last, every woman has. As I held it up with its long ends a-danglin' down onto my lap Josiah sez:

"Hain't that perfectly beautiful! There hain't a sister in the meetin'-house got one to compare with it."

"No, indeed!" sez I faintly, "no, indeed they hain't."

"As you come into meetin', Samantha," says he, "with that new woosted dress on, and this splendid ornament a-drapin' you in front, oh, what a proud man I shall be! what a stir it will make! Do you realize, Samantha," sez he warmly, "that for all this is such a world of grief and sorrow, do you appreciate what you have got to be thankful for on this Easter day?"

As he spoke it swept over me like a wave that here wuz a chance for me to show the real Lenten spirit of humility and self-denial. So I never said a word against the dreadful lookin' sight. And then, too, I felt that it wuzn't only for what we'd got, and had got to do, that we ort to be thankful for once a year, if not oftener, but it wuz also for what we hadn't got, and hadn't got to do.

And I sez in considerable warm axents, as thoughts of a foamin' stripe in a crazy quilt swep' through my mind, blent in with the sense of the good, lovin' sperit my pardner had shown, I sez:

"Yes, indeed, Josiah, I am thankful, deeply thankful."

How the W. C. T. U. Can Help Procure Direct Legislation.

BY HARRIET E. ORCUTT.

AS a nation we are rich and ought to be prosperous. Let us keep the fact in mind that there is enough for all were it justly distributed. In a nation that is rich enough to furnish—by per capita division—every family of five within its borders with a capital of five thousand dollars and an annual income of more than a thousand dollars, there should be no suffering for the necessities of life. And yet we all know that in this prosperous country of ours, blessed with abundant harvests, there are thousands and thousands of men, women and children, who, at this moment, are suffering for lack of proper food, clothing and shelter. What excuse is there for this condition of affairs? What reason? Could such things be if the legislation was all for "the greatest good of the greatest number?" An equitable division of the nation's annual product would give each inhabitant of the United States a larger portion to-day than ever before. Improved machinery and mechanical appliances of all sorts and kinds have made it possible for a smaller number of laborers to produce a greater amount of the necessities and luxuries of life than ever before in the world's history. One operator in a cotton factory can make cloth for 250 persons; one in a woolen factory for 300; one workman in a boot and shoe factory can furnish a thousand men and women with boots and shoes. Why should any go shoeless? The labor of seven persons can furnish a thousand with bread. Why should any go hungry? Our children to-day are born to a richer heritage than the children of any other age or nation. And yet some of these very children are starving! Why? Would this be the case if we really were a self-governing nation—if the people themselves really made the laws under which they must live?

It is very true that we can not make everybody rich by law; which is merely another way of stating that law does not create wealth. But although law does not create wealth, it has a great deal to do with its distribution. Laws so constructed as to take from the many to give to the few work hardship; and while we are busy saying that law can not make everybody rich, it is just as well to remember that law can and does make some people rich at the expense of others. It is equally true that good laws tend to the creation of conditions which will greatly increase the production of wealth; and if the increased production should be justly distributed, everybody would be a little richer, or at least, the great masses of the nation who do the producing would be richer, and able to procure more of the comforts of life. Just laws would mean a higher standard of living for the great majority. If the people made the laws, as they would under a good form of direct legislation, they would be made in the interests of the many. Under the rule of the few, the wealth of the nation is concentrating in their hands, and inequalities are rapidly growing greater. Under the rule of the many, special privileges—which are what has made the aristocracy of every nation—would be done away with; inequalities would be leveled; labor would be clothed with dignity, and the laborer would become a citizen and a man, instead of remaining a hireling and a slave to some corporation controlling his vote. We suffer as a nation, because we have lost what little power of self-government we once had. Take as an example the spectacle presented to our view, when, after long and full discussion, the income tax was enacted by our representatives in Congress, only to be declared "unconstitutional" by a majority vote of one in the supreme court! I am arguing neither for nor against the income tax in the present article, but simply use it as an example to show our utter helplessness in matters of legislation. Think of it; the expressed will of millions of people thwarted by the adverse vote of one man! Under direct legislation the will of the people would be the law of the land. If the people decided in favor of an income tax it would be constitutional. If they decided against it there would be no power which could force it upon them.

Are we always to be governed by the dead? They were wise for their day and generation, but conditions change. We could hardly expect them to foresee our needs plainly enough to legislate wisely for us for all time to come. With all due respect to them, would it not be well for us to do our own legislating, just as we do our own thinking? In art, in science, in labor-saving inventions we have made remarkable progress, but in the art of self-government we have lost ground. We are fettered by the chains of the past. Instead of keeping pace with progress in other lines, and governing ourselves to suit ourselves, we are largely governed by the dead. Our trouble to-day is, that the governmental machinery which we are using is awkward, unwieldy, and as old-fashioned and as much out of date as the first locomotive, or the first steamboat. Would our merchants think they could carry on the commerce of this nation in such unwieldy craft as served the purpose at the beginning of the century? No; they build floating palaces, in which the traveler has every convenience of modern civilization. How many would think of entrusting their lives to a shaky, battered, leaky old hulk, just because a hundred years ago it was the best boat that had ever been built? Our ship of state, when first constructed, was a noble boat, well adapted to the needs of three or four millions of people. But it is hardly a suitable means of conveyance for seventy millions. Let us build again a ship of state which will be suited to our needs, and let us so build it that our children can enlarge or reconstruct it as they choose. The adoption of direct legislation is the way to meet this requirement. The initiative, the referendum and the imperative mandate are the tools which will enable each generation to repair, to reconstruct, or, if necessary, to rebuild the ship of state. How shall the people obtain possession of these tools?

What can the W. C. T. U. do to help?

The campaign is of necessity largely educational. When voters thoroughly understand what direct legislation is, there are but few to be found who do not approve. I have not found any. The initiative and referendum are part of the constitution of many of the labor organizations, and the subject is understood by their members better, perhaps, than by any other class of voters. In the first place, let every member of the W. C. T. U. inform herself as thoroughly as possible on the subject of direct legislation. Let each local union appoint a day for the study of the subject.

If all the women of the W. C. T. U. would interest their fathers, husbands and sons in the movement, we would soon have an army large enough and strong enough to obtain direct legislation in all the states of the Union. There are still plenty of men to be found who do not know what direct legislation means—and they are voters too! Give them distinct, clear-cut definitions and ideas, and if they have any suggestions to offer which seem worth following, follow them. Voters are supposed to understand practical politics, while women do not; so follow any practical suggestion a voter offers, or get him to follow it! Where there is a will there is a way. Some unions can arrange for a lecture or lectures on the subject; others can have articles written and read, or a short symposium either spoken or written. Every union can do something to help. But if literary material is lacking, just appoint a good reader or two to read short, printed selections at some of your public entertainments. Introduce the subject to the people both publicly and privately at every opportunity.

South Butler, Mich.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

Dr. Oliver W. Stewart, ex-president of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Society, came to the platform on Monday, March 28. But few minutes could be given him because of a full program, but in these few he crowded more of real helpfulness than many speakers do in an hour. Associated with him on this visit was the Meneley Trio, of Urbana, Ill. They sang twice, being encored each time.

We expect Dr. Stewart and the Meneley Trio for the noon hour of one or more days later on, when the full time will be at their command.

On this same Monday, Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, pastor of the LaSalle Ave. Baptist church, began a series of addresses which continued through five days of the week. His pungent utterances pierced every conscience and the power of the Spirit was manifest. Hearts were melted before God, and many requested prayers when he gave the invitation at the close of each service.

On Friday the subject was "The Church and the State." As soon as the benediction was pronounced several tried to speak at the same time. It was an urgent request that Dr. Henry prepare this wonderful address for the press at the earliest possible moment. In response to this unanimous desire, expressed in the form of a resolution, Dr. Henry promised it. Readers of The Union Signal will be glad to know that the editors will give it space in an early issue. This week Dr. Henry is to give a series of talks on the "Scarlet Sins."

Mrs. G. E. Ardell, of Sydney, New South Wales, wife of the founder and director of the Sydney Rescue Work society, as well as the assistant in this good work, was a prominent figure in the noon meetings in Willard Hall last week. Her accounts of her labors among the outcast women and children of her country were listened to with the greatest interest. She will continue to give brief talks at the beginning of some of the noon meetings this week.

Abbie Frances B. Church,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

It's good to put a bother away over night. It all straightens out in the morning.—A. D. T. Whitney.

Correspondence.

Jaffa and Beirut.

Dear Union Signal:—My letter on Egypt is just closed, but as the storm continues I might as well go on and tell why I did not reach Jaffa according to plans. Well, modern Jaffa, being ancient Joppa, maintains its reputation of Jonah's time, and again "history repeats itself," and Jonah 1:4 would explain the situation for me: "The Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken." In the morning we were off Jaffa, but without hope of landing. At the best, it is a trying experience, for it must be done by boats, and none could live a moment in such a sea. A day and night followed never to be forgotten. It was impossible to move about, and no one came to us. We did not understand the situation, but learned afterwards that the cargo shifted and that the captain lost control of the ship. All realized that our peril was very great, and without doubt, every man "cried unto his God." I know that for one, I committed my dear ones to the Lord, and commended to him, as I thought, for the last time, the work which seemed unfinished, but which could by His guidance be made complete through other hands than mine. Never for a moment was there a regret that I had come, for I knew I had obeyed His call and could trust results to Divine care.

We were hours off Beirut, to which point we were driven before it was possible to land. From the commanding site of the American College our danger was discerned, and earnest prayers went up for our deliverance. Gradually the storm subsided, and boats from the shore came out to us. Then I felt the Lord's special care, for Dr. Jessup, who knew I had expected to leave for Jaffa on that date, had realized the impossibility of landing upon that inhospitable coast in such a storm, heavier, he said, than had been known for thirty years, so he had come out to look after me. I had known of his grand life work, and he had sent me a letter of welcome to the country, but as I took his hand, it seemed peculiarly the Father's expression of loving care.

I was soon at the American Mission, and lovingly welcomed and cared for by three dear women from "Native Land." This was Thursday, and there was no boat for Jaffa until the next Monday. So arrangements were quickly made, the ladies of the British Syrian Mission coöperating, and the results seem worth itemizing. Friday, 10 A. M., Girls' School at American Mission; 11 A. M., British Syrian Mission; 12 M., Mission for the Blind; 2 P. M., Prison for Men; 3 P. M., Prison for Women; 4 P. M., meeting in drawing room at Dr. Jessup's to present our W. C. T. U. work; 7:30 P. M., teachers and advanced pupils from both missions. On Saturday evening a public meeting; Sunday, 3 P. M., union Sunday-school, and in evening address at the college, with nearly 300 students. Then there were talks with native teachers and brief visits to the school rooms for pledge signing and conversation. In much of this work Dr. Jessup acted as interpreter, and most sympathetically did he change my sentences into Arabic, as I could understand by the expression of my audiences. I think every teacher, English, American and Syrian, in British and American Missions, signed the pledge and donned the white ribbon, and I promised to supply pledges for both schools. We did not formally organize, but felt we left the work in good hands. They are busy hands, indeed, but consecrated ones, from which work is not carelessly dropped. Dr. and Mrs. Bliss gave me hearty welcome to the college, of which too much cannot be said. With all branches of work thoroughly organized and equipped, they are sending out yearly young men fitted for usefulness in every department of life. Then the printing press and publications under Dr. Jessup's care are an untold power wherever Arabic is spoken. The temperance question has not been overlooked, as was evidenced by tracts and pamphlets shown me, and the beautiful pledges, which of themselves were a temptation to sign.

From a mission some miles in the country, there came the superintendent, an Irish lady, to invite me to spend some days with her, and it was hard to refuse, for she was so thoroughly in earnest, having already pledged about one hundred boys. She declared my work would not be complete without the visit she desired and thought the Lord might send another storm, compelling me to remain. The possibility of that is not yet over, for though we came down from Beirut to Jaffa in the calmest of seas, we have yet to embark for Port Said. Travelers are sometimes detained for a week or two, seeing steamer after steamer go by without the faintest chance of reaching them by boat, because of the storm-swept rocks which make the formidable defense of Jaffa.

In case I am thus delayed, I shall take the disappointment as God's appointment for me to go overland to Beirut and Damascus, and take in the visit which was so strongly urged, and I hope also to meet Dr. and Mrs. Howie, whom I missed before. The storm does not abate and as I look out upon Olivet from my window it is covered with snow and Jerusalem seems strangely silent and still. Our company chafe a little under the force of keeping indoors, when there is so much to be done in a limited time, but we gathered in the drawing-room and by invitation I gave a Bible reading. The day shuts down about us, and with the pelting of the storm, the thunder and lightning so unusual with snow and sleet, our sympathies go out to the poorly housed and thinly-clad people, who are totally unprepared for this weather, the like of which has not been known for many years. My thoughts wander off to the home land and my dear ones. Mails are uncertain and infrequent and there are no daily papers except one in Arabic. "In the world, but not of it," might surely be said of us in a certain sense, but over all God reigns and He careth for His own and His love makes a soft pillow wherever the head and heart is kept in trust and peace. Good-night, dear friends and comrades, "God be with you till we meet again." So sang the Syrian girls in Beirut as they waved their handkerchiefs at my farewell service.

Most truly yours in best of bonds,
(Mrs.) J. K. Barney,
Round-the-world Pilgrim.

Jerusalem, Feb. 15, 1898.

Saloon Brutality.

Editors Union Signal:—The following account of the brutalities of a saloon-keeper in this city was clipped from one of our English-speaking daily papers, and is certified to by several of my acquaintances, who from the outside saw the occurrence. Uniontown is a part of Astoria, inhabited by Russian Finns, who are largely temperance men, and who strongly objected to the licensing of this, the only saloon in their district. But the Astoria city council, in spite of the remonstrance from the citizens of Uniontown, licensed the saloon. The crowd who surrounded and cheered on the woman who wrecked the saloon were largely Russian Finns.

"'The Last Chance' saloon of Uniontown, owned and operated by Ole Hendrickson, was wrecked this morning by a woman, and the act was so popular that it would not have been safe for a policeman to have attempted to arrest her, nor can the proprietor procure a warrant for her arrest. The woman was Mrs. Junna, the wife of Abram Junna, a man who has a milk ranch on the Lewis and Clarke River. His ranch is a good one, and with the assistance of his wife, who has several small children, he has a comfortable home and a milk route in the city that brings in a considerable income. Junna has an inordinate passion for whisky, and nearly every month goes on a spree and spends all the money he can get his hands on. Two years ago, on a complaint sworn out by his wife, he was taken before the court and pronounced an habitual drunkard, and his wife appointed guardian of his property and person. This fact is known to all the saloons in the city, as well as by Hendrickson. On the first of the present month Junna started on a drunk, and failed to return to his Lewis and Clarke home. This morning Mrs. Junna came over to the city, and soon located her husband in the 'Last Chance' saloon. She sent word inside for her husband to come out and go home, but no attention was paid to her, so she went inside and was persuading him to come with her when Hendrickson interfered and ordered her out of his place. Upon her demanding her husband, he struck and choked her, and then threw her bodily out into the street. This aroused the Finnish blood of Mrs. Junna, and procuring a club, she started to demolish the place; she started in on the front windows, and by the time she had demolished these, out came Hendrickson, and she rapped him over the head a couple of times and drove him back again. She then completed breaking every window in the place, and was about to go inside to treat it likewise when a policeman arrived. The crowd that had collected were cheering the woman on, and they warned the officer not to arrest her, as she was doing right. The officer then went inside, brought the husband out and turned him over to his wife, who took him to their boat and started for home."

The Finnish paper of Astoria, after describing in detail how the saloon-keeper would watch for Junna at the beginning of each month, in order to get him to spend in the saloon all his earnings of the month previous, and the brutal attack of the saloon-keeper on the woman when she tried to get her husband out of the saloon, asks our city council the following pertinent questions which have been translated into English at my request:

"1. Will the people be compelled year after year to see and tolerate in their midst a nuisance like this saloon on account of which every woman must fear for their lives.

"2. Do you think it right or proper that two hundred or more children of Uniontown must every day see and hear the indecent performance of the besotted inmates of this dive?

"3. Is it right that Junna's and many other families must suffer and be in want on account of a rascal like Hendrickson, only because he pays the city a license?

"The people of Uniontown are aroused over this affair and the only way to quiet matters is for the city council to revoke Hendrickson's license and unless this is done, the city authorities do not deserve the name of protectors of the best interest of the people."

These questions might equally well be asked concerning every saloon of the United States.

NARCISSA W. KINNEY.

Astoria, Oregon.

The White Ribbon in the East.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I look for the white ribbon—the symbol of purity and love—wherever I go. In our long tour of eight months in China, Japan and Korea I was delighted to find the white ribbon not only on the dresses of our missionaries from the home land, but also on the dresses of native women and girls. At Ching Kiang, on the great Yangtze river, China, in Miss Mary Robinson's model girls' boarding school, I found a most vigorous Temperance Union. I was amazed at the intimate knowledge of the girls of our W. C. T. U. history in the United States. They were even informed on our great struggle to get temperance instruction into the schools of New York. I had the pleasure of attending one of their monthly meetings, presided over by their president, Mrs. Weir, the wife of the interpreter at our consulate. She filled the position beautifully. The program was most interesting and profitable, and the temperance songs rang out with all the fervor that we have in the home land. Six new members came forward and received the white ribbon that day.

At Kiu Kiang, many miles further up the river, we have another union in our girls' boarding school there. Later we went away up to Hakodati on the Island of Yesso Japan, and there we found a large company of women calling themselves the "Women's Temperance and Improvement Society," and I had the pleasure of meeting and talking to them on Sunday afternoon. This society includes women of different denominations, and it was a great delight to me to see the white ribbon on their dresses. There were a number of heathen women present who are interested in the work. I spoke to them especially on the use of tobacco, as the women of Japan smoke as well as the men. Miss Clara Parrish had visited them and helped them much. Later I had the pleasure of seeing Miss Parrish in Tokyo. I am hoping that the temperance physiologies may yet be put into the mission and government schools in Japan and indeed in all mission schools at least in the East. At Honolulu last Sunday I learned with dismay and grief of Miss Willard's death. Truly, this is a great bereavement for the world! ESTHER E. BALDWIN.

Steamer China, Pacific Ocean.

A Temperance Cyclone.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We have had here in the National Home for Disabled Volunteers what the chaplain calls a "temperance cyclone," and there is much rejoicing thereat in the hearts of the two white-ribboners mostly concerned.

Our dear friend and my department chief, Mrs. Ella Thacher, National superintendent of soldiers and sailors, came to visit us in our new home in the chaplain's quarters. The personal gratification of this visit was even exceeded by the glad surprise at the impression she made upon the old comrades in the home.

"I invited her," to quote the chaplain, "to talk to them at the time of one of my daily religious meetings and invited the comrades to come to hear what she had to say. We had an unusually large gathering and though the occasion was an impromptu affair, yet the result was in the nature of a temperance cyclone, to our complete surprise because we had not contemplated such a possibility." But two white-ribboners had been pow-wowing in their council chamber.

"At the close of Mrs. Thacher's address, noting the responsive chord she had struck in all hearts, it was proposed without any prearranged concert that an auxiliary of the soldiers' and sailors' department of the W. C. T. U. should be organized similar to what had been formed in the Marion Home, also in the Home for Regulars in Washington, D. C. Then came the cyclone; there was an instant rush of appreciating sentiment and recognizing the opportunity a call was at once made for names of those who would form and support such an auxiliary. Immediately as fast as two penmen could take them down, about seventy names were given by those who eagerly crowded the platform to be enrolled. Nearly a hundred pledge cards were taken on the spot." The next evening a formal organization was effected. It filled our hearts with rejoicing next day to see so many old veterans parading through the camp in every direction with white ribbons tied in their buttonholes.

All this was done at the most opportune moment—on the very evening preceding the day for the payment of pensions when the drink demon gets in his heaviest work in this camp. "Wherefore we may confidently and most gratefully give thanks to Him who orders the steps of all who love Him and would save the inebriate as well as the sparrow from falling to the ground."

Yours for the work,

MARY D. BRADLEY.

Chaplain's Quarters, National Home, Va.

Persian Lambskin and Tortoise Shell.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—May I through your columns call attention to the brutal and inhuman manner by which both tortoise shell and Persian lamb fur are obtained? Persian lambskin is the finest and most delicate fur in the world, and is made from the skin of unborn lambs. The ewes are fed on certain foods which stimulate the sheen and delicacy of the fur, and when the fur is at the best the poor little creature is torn alive from its mother who is afterwards killed. This fur is very expensive. A Persian blouse of Persian baby lamb costs three hundred dollars, and will only wear well about two years. It takes at least twenty of these pitiful little skins to make even a short coat, and for one collar four helpless creatures must die in awful agony.

Yet, baby lamb is the fashion, and as the New York Journal of November 21 has said, "Women who would not give pain to the slightest living thing are buying these pitiful little skins and wearing them as calmly as if they were roses grown in a garden full of sunshine."

The tortoise shell is also obtained by means of great cruelty. The turtles are firmly fastened to the ground by pegs; then a bunch of dried leaves or sea-grass is spread evenly over the back of the turtle and set on fire. The heat is not great enough to injure the shell, but merely causes it to separate at the joints so that it can be pried from the back with a large blade. This operation involves great cruelty, and many turtles, we are told, do not survive it.

ELLEN COMSTOCK.

Escondido, Cal.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

With God nothing shall be impossible, so that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.—Luke 1:37; Heb. 13:6.

WE are receiving scores of letters suggesting all kinds of plans for raising money to pay for the Temple. Rev. E. N. Andrews, pastor of the Congregational church at Peshtigo, Wis., suggests that we get out a fine picture of Miss Willard. He writes, "Pastors like myself would act as agents in small towns, if no better mode of distribution could be devised." Surely this is a most brotherly offer. Mrs. Harriet A. Brown, of Lodi, Wis., writes: "I want a likeness of our dear leader in my home. Where is there a white-ribboner that does not? The picture could be handled through each union if the president would appoint some one to take charge of it. The picture should be a good one, large enough to frame and moderate in price, so it might come within the means of all. This plan would serve a double purpose. It would give every white-ribboner a chance to possess a picture of our beloved leader, and also be the means of securing a large sum of money for the Temple."

✠

The above suggestions are admirable and are in accord with the plans of the Temple Trustees. Fac simile copies from the beautiful colored painting on porcelain of Miss Willard, lately completed by a noted Chicago artist, will be ready to put on the market in about a week. All persons desirous of becoming agents for the same should write to me at once for terms. We want agents for the sale of the picture in every town and hamlet in the land.

✠

Jane Weeden, that great-hearted friend of the Temple, who although as poor as her Master, raised about $2,000 for the House Beautiful. She has again been heard from. She says, "I have been thinking what we can do to express our loving devotion to the memory of our sainted leader, by which we can prove our sincerity. If 10,000 persons would pledge $10 each to the Temple to be paid on or before July 1 next, that would be $100,000. Then 10,000 more could pledge $5 each, that would be $50,000. Then the masses could give $1 each and one hundred or so pledge large sums by concerted action, the amount needed could easily be raised. I am moneyless as usual, but I will agree to raise $10 before July 1. I would wash dishes or do anything that is not wrong to save the honor of the W. C. T. U. and to make our beautiful Temple not only our indispensable headquarters but her monument whose loss we mourn. Brave words are good, but not by these our worth to the cause is weighed, deeds must be the final test."

I am sure the above proposition will commend itself to every lover of Frances Willard. Let there be a hearty response to the above admirable plan. We will start the 10,000 list with Jane Weeden's pledge for $10. Who next? Who will start the $5 list? Who the $1? And who the larger sums?

✠

Pledges for large s are coming in. The Gladbrook, Ia., union sends its pledge for $100. Harvard, Ill., union sends a pledge for a similar sum, and $100 is also pledged by the Albion, Ia., union, to be paid within a couple of weeks. Mrs. A. C. Cripps says: "This money is pledged with the understanding that the Temple is to stand as a monument to our sainted leader. By all means, let it be Willard Temple." It should have been stated some time ago that Elizabeth City, N. C., W. C. T. U. sent a check, which completed their $100 pledge. The union of unions of Toledo, O., also have sent a check, which completed their pledge on the Frances J. Sumner tablet, beside leaving a balance of $27 to be credited on the union's $100 pledge for their own name on a tablet. The St. Lawrence county, N. Y., union has sent the last installment on their $100 pledge.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

Raindrops.

O MERRY, sparkling raindrops,
You glimmer as you fall,
And all the little flowers
Will hear your joyful call.
You bring glad news of summer,
Of birds and blossoms fair,
Of fields and blooming meadows
That lately were so bare.

"Good-morning," sing the raindrops,
While falling from the sky;
"We can not tarry with you,
But quickly hasten by.
For we must wake the flowers,
And swell the little stream,
Then onward to the river
With a sparkle and a gleam."

—Child Garden.

Not the Place for My Boy.

BY M. E. M.

JOE ALLEN always was a good boy to work, especially when he could earn a little money as a result of his efforts. He often saw ways of getting a few pennies that other boys did not see or think of; so he became quite noted on this account among his brothers and sisters, and it was often said by them that he always had money.

This characteristic was not discouraged, for there were many wants in the little family that could not be supplied from the small income, as the father was dead and his older brother was in college and must be kept there some way, his mother said, making economy a stern necessity.

Joe went to school, and one day he learned, among other things, that a wholesale grocer at the farther end of the city hired boys to wait upon customers on Saturday, that being his most hurried day of all the week. He was filled with a great desire to be one of those boys, and his mother reluctantly gave her consent.

It was winter, and you can imagine a short, chubby fellow with dark hair, getting up before light, for the boys were expected early, eating a scanty breakfast and going off cheerfully to work all day in the cold store, for such stores are not warmed, you know. For his lunch he could eat anything he wished, as the other boys did, which he thought was an important consideration; to choose from a whole grocery store anything he wanted. But as it was cold and as there was little time allowed them in which to eat, it did not prove very satisfactory, in reality.

Forgetting the unpleasant circumstances he thoroughly enjoyed the day. He liked the hurry and bustle of the work and the rush of business generally. But the getting home at night was best of all; it was in his mind all day. Cold, tired and hungry he knew his mother would be watching for him. The fire would be bright and cheerful and there would be a nice hot supper ready and waiting for him. And then the money he had earned seemed so much to him, though I may as well tell you it was only a dollar; but he had worked for it, it was peculiarly his own. If you have never tried it you do not know how much more anything is prized that you have worked for, whether it is money or some other thing.

Joe's courage did not fail and several weeks passed. He was one of the most trusty, reliable boys. Sometimes he was sent to the bank to carry the funds which had accumulated during the day and Mr. Brown gave him more than at first when he paid him at night, so he had a little more money to take home.

But his mother who was ever watchful over her boy found out something one night that quite startled her. It was a tiny little bottle that he brought home in his pocket. Mr. Brown had given it to him and had said "it was good to keep in the house," and it was labeled "Fine Whisky." She looked at him reproachfully, too much astonished to speak. After supper she had a quiet, sensible talk with him. She found out that in the store liquor was kept for sale; there was a pile of boxes and barrels and behind them a little counter and a small dipper for customers to try the quality of each kind as they desired. "Joe," she said, putting her arm around him lovingly, "that's not the place for my boy." And Joe drew a long breath and said, "I knew you would say so, mother."

With the Children.

BY AMY LEONARD.

No. 5.

LITTLE Eva was once sent by her mother to get a pint of cream. As she was bringing it home she thought she would sip a little from the pitcher containing it. A friend met her and observing a telltale drop of cream upon her nose, said, "Does mamma like to have you do that?" "Oh, mamma won't know it," said Eva; "I shan't say anything about it." "If you do not there may be some way for her to find it out." "I don't think she will miss a few swallows of cream, do you?" asked Eva laughing. "Perhaps," said the friend, "if your tongue don't tell her your nose will."

Then the laugh seemed to be against her, and she trotted along, using her handkerchief quite vigorously. "You don't wish to deceive your mother, do you?" "Oh, not very often," was the response.

Ah, how much harm comes from "not very often." We think if we do not do wrong "very often" we shall come out all right. But shall we? If we escape detection shall we not be ready soon for another wrong step? And oh, how hard and how wrong for children to deceive their parents even in little things. The little drop of cream on Eva's nose told what she had been doing while she was thinking that none would know of the trick.

John went from home when he was sixteen, a temperance boy; when he returned his nose was red and his eyes were dull. What story did they tell? Late hours and drinking beer. His mother felt very sad, but his father said, "He must sow his wild oats." Oh, those wild oats, what a dreadful crop they bear!

Dear little children, don't deceive mamma and papa even in small things, and don't think it is no matter if you don't do bad things very often. We read in the Holy Book "There is nothing hid that shall not be made known."

Raynham, Mass.

Guess!

IT was hard for Margie to be in the house at Easter, even if she was glad to be able to sit up after her long illness. But when Tommy Bunch came in with "I've got somefing for you, guess!" Margie laughed gleefully. Tommy was such a funny little fellow; he was always making people guess.

"It's a piece of candy," said she.

Tommy shook his head. "It's round—'most round," said he. "And it's good to eat—'most of it is good to eat."

"An apple?" guessed Margie, thinking of the paring and the core.

"No-o!" gurgled Tommy, in great delight.

"An orange, then," said Margie, really puzzled.

"No'um," answered Tommy. "Why, can't you guess? It's just as easy as a wink. The outside's hard, you know, and—"

"Why didn't I think?" laughed Margie. "What a funny boy you are, Tommy! It's a cocoanut!"

But it wasn't a cocoanut. Tommy said so, dancing from one foot to the other. Then he went up to the big chair where Margie sat, and suddenly held out a chubby hand, wide open. In it lay a tiny white egg.

"My bantam laid it," cried Tommy, cheerily. "It's the first one she ever did. And I brought it to you, 'cause to-morrow's Easter. Ain't you glad? And wasn't it funny you couldn't guess?"

WILLIE came from school excited,
He had something strange to tell;
Mamma glanced up from her sewing,
With her sympathetic, "Well!"

"The teacher told us such a whopper!
For she answered Jimmy Giles,
Who asked how long was Mrs. Ouri—
'With her arms, three thousand miles.'"

—Adelbert F. Caldwell.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Every little letter that comes to me from you and every one that I send to you bears a postage stamp in the corner. Did you ever think how important that little stamp is? If you should drop a letter without a stamp into the postoffice it would perhaps never reach me, but with the stamp every clerk into whose hands it goes, sends it along to the next one because it is then in the care of the great United States government and so at last it reaches me safely.

If you could look into the postoffice in some large city and watch the clerks stamp and handle the letters so rapidly, and see such huge piles of them, you would wonder that more letters were not lost. You would almost wonder too that your little letter was taken just as good care of as any of the big ones. Do you know whose likeness is on the postage stamp?

Ever your friend,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl eight years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the Children's page very much. There are four churches here and no saloons, though the saloon men tried to get them back last fall. This county has had local option for eight years. Your niece,

Bangor, Mich. NINA ROBINSON.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I went to a reception at Lathrap union when I lived in Brooklyn in 1895, to see Frances Willard. The children of the L. T. L. went around the room and as they passed Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, they gave them roses; when I went up to see her she kissed me and said in her beautiful voice, "You must have some of my roses." I went with mamma to the steamer to see Frances Willard the last time she went to Europe. I was nine years old October 19, and would like to join the Cozy Corner. Lovingly,

FRANCES WILLARD GROO.

Middletown, N. Y.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am nine years old and would like to join the Cozy Corner. My mamma has taken THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read it. We have no L. T. L. here but I belong to a Missionary Society and a Humane Society. There are no saloons here.

Hesper, Kan. HELEN H. TOWNSEND.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—As I'm a little Band of Mercy boy I thought I would like to write and tell you about the large Band of Mercy that the W. C. T. U. have just organized in the schools. The W. C. T. U. women have bought our badges and we are going to do all we can for them. We are going to be kind to all creatures.

Your loving nephew,
LAWRENCE HILL.

Escondido, Cal.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

14.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of thirteen letters.
My 12, 10, 3, 9, 5, 4 is a part of a garment.
My 1, 11, 8, 2, 13 is close or snug.
My 6, 7 is an adjective.
My whole is the name of a well-known religious paper. ETHEL WILLIAMS.

ANSWER TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 7.

12. Infinity.

13. Abraham Lincoln.

Correct answers to No. 10 were sent by Ethel C. Watts, New York City; J. Belle Scott, Green Mount, Pa.; H. Lela B. Johnson, Waltonville, Ill.; Kitty Suydam, Canton, Ill.; to No. 11 by Clarence D. Britten, Albion, Mich.; George F. Hudson, Renwick, Iowa; Mrs. A. G. Pillsbury, Boscawen, N. H.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

Organ of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—Frances E. Willard.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—Lady Henry Somerset.
MANAGING EDITOR—Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres.
Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Treas. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Sec'y.
Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Me.
Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill.
Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago.
Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Burlington, Ia.
Mrs. Evalyn Graham, Newark, O.
Mrs. Eliza H. Gage Cutter, Joliet, Ill.
OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—Mrs. F. E. Beauchamp, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for The Union Signal or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your Union Signal and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

A Field View.

TIME was when less of anxious thought was given to the needs of our great movement. When all was on the qui vive, the women easily enlisted, there seemed little occasion for studying needs, but we have reached a point when each asks the other, why do not our numbers increase more rapidly?

The Christian Temperance Union woman sees many a splendid possibility which might become a grand reality did not the Lord's stewards sinfully appropriate to selfish uses so much of the gold and silver which are His; much brain force is everywhere expended in the endeavor to formulate the successful financial plan; but there is something more to be coveted than money; it is to see the combined social influence of the good women of every community brought into harmonious action. With that would come all the things we sigh for. We do not see this concerted action and many partial explanations are advanced. We have been passing through years of anxiety during which the question of difficulty in making an honest living has been a harassing and engrossing one. The experience has depressed courage and ambition.

Women join societies, plenty of them. The ever multiplying so-called benefit associations capture multitudes of women who see in them the shadow of something in the way of material advantage, while it is only a question of time and an ever-increasing death rate when most of these will explode into nothingness. "Society" has perhaps turned its back more decidedly than ever on good works, devoting its energies to pleasure clubs. A church, once content with one money-making society now engineers half a dozen, and women recognize in many an unwise and undignified scheme a more sacred call than to mould the character of the coming citizen. These things imply great need of enlightenment and conversion. Yet in the face of all this the greatest need to be perceived is for the cultivation of the missionary spirit, the turning of the minds of our own women far more earnestly and practically toward the increase of our organization.

It has been a surprising discovery, not a sudden one (but due to the gathering testimony from a wide territory during an extended period), to become aware of the self-centered attitude of many unions in this respect.

A humorist has said that when a man begins to go down hill everything seems to be greased for the occasion. This is doubly and dreadfully true of a good work. Yet, in the face of alarming symptoms, strong unions refuse to coöperate in revival effort, publicly declaring, "We want to use our money at home." How one would expect the heart of the white-ribboner to reach out to the unorganized community, yet a far distant call is often more cheerfully responded to than the needs of county or district. More hopeful is the unwisdom arising from lack of thought. It does not seem to occur to the unions generally how much better business sense might be exercised in the use of an organizer, when through their coöperation, one is employed. A district organizer writes: "How have I reached towns in which no union existed? Not as I would have expected through the planning of adjacent unions. Generally, by getting somebody's address; often, of course, writing to the wrong person and so missing fire altogether. Strangely enough, more such appointments have been made by friendly ministers than through our own women!"

The women of neighboring villages have more or less personal acquaintance and knowledge of local conditions. How easily might the possessor of horse and carriage drive over, consult the necessary parties and arrange a date for the state, district or county worker in connection with the appointment in her own town, opening the way and trusting the Lord for results. Yet how seldom is this little service thought of. One much in the field reports just three such instances in a whole year of work. It is a frequent thing that the prosperous union perceives no obligation to serve as a stepping-stone from one mission point to another. The worker is just turned loose in the field to learn the ins and outs and do the best she can unaided, while she might be utilized with far better results.

Then, too, it is seldom made possible for the organizer to work to advantage. She makes her plea, the people are moved, the women give their names; next day she must move on; the interest dies out.

When we make systematic preparation for a revival of religion, we do not engage the evangelist for one night and if the mourner's bench is not filled at once say it is of no use to try. No, we work and wait patiently for weeks. Is it not more strange that unions should be organized in these one night dashes than that they should not?

You may say if those women were in earnest they would persevere; but the full understanding of woman's responsibility is not yet theirs as it is yours; they need to be kept face to face with this new sense of duty for a little space, to become familiar with it, until it shall be recognized as an imperative obligation from which conscience allows no escape. A little time is needed to lay out for them a practical plan of action, something to take hold of. These new recruits do not understand their own needs, nor are they likely to suggest such a plan. It is simply impossible for the worker to prolong her stay where she has only been expected to remain a day or two, where it is plain to perceive that the household program has been changed in her behalf and things are just waiting for her to go to resume their course. But the unions of the county should be prepared for this contingency, take a week's board for her if necessary—she could at least plan an early return—enabling her to do some visiting, to hold a children's meeting and a mothers' meeting, to get a few lines of work adopted, to instruct each superintendent separately, making her acquainted with the resources and supplies for her department, to meet the women in the church prayer-meeting, to get acquainted with the minister's family. The list of names given at the opening meeting would become a list of members. The district worker could soon adapt her plans to such a policy. Its adoption would mark a new era in our work. The prosperous union must not expect to "get its money back" in local advantage, but look for reward "when the roll is called."

A National Disgrace.

UNDER the above caption the Charities Review some months ago set forth the condition of a national jail at Muscogee, Indian Territory. A realistic account was given of it which revealed shocking conditions. Its shell-like insecurity, its cold in winter and heat in summer, its crowded condition, its herding together of whites, Indians and negroes of all ages without any attempt at classification or separation, its utter lack of all good sanitary or moral provisions, merits the condemnation of all thinking people everywhere.

The space over the upper tier of cells is open to the roof, and this affords an opportunity to place an armed guard at all hours of the day and night where he can overlook the prisoners. The writer says:

Looking down the guard sees a barnlike room with iron walls and floor and roof, unfurnished and lighted by seven barred openings, without sash or glass, the sills of which are eight feet from the floor, so that no prisoner can look out and no air circulate in the well beneath in which they are compelled to live. No guard is required to breathe this atmosphere for more than one hour at a time. . . . Except an unpainted, home-made barber chair, there is no other furniture in the room; no tables and no seats. There is an iron sink in one corner with a few tin washbasins, and near the door are some half barrels which do duty as latrines, and are known in prison parlance as 'mules.' This is all. Drinking water is brought in a barrel and dipped out with tin cups. There is neither ventilation, sewerage nor water supply.

When the men lie down their bodies carpet the entire floor from wall to wall. The jail is alive with vermin of every description. The occupants spend their time largely in gambling. The only stake which is forbidden is the clothing which they wear. Men are sentenced to jail for gambling and then allowed to gamble inside.

A "Kangaroo Court" is organized by the inmates, a self-constituted body which without the authority of law governs the prison and is composed of all the prisoners who pay one dollar as an initiation fee. It is a purely democratic government, winked at by the authorities because of its utility. The court has an elaborate criminal code and when a verdict of guilty is found, the fine must be paid within five minutes, or the prisoner is laid upon his face on the floor and the prescribed number of lashes are applied with a dry strap attached to a short, wooden handle. "It is in effect lynch-law within the sacred precincts of the federal court, since the court may be presumed to exercise jurisdiction over the jail, of which a United States marshal is the legal custodian."

The writer of the article is Frederick Howard Wines, secretary of the Illinois State Board of Charity, who in closing expresses the hope that the conscience of the United States Congress may be sufficiently stirred to induce it to take appropriate action in the premises, and that should it fail to do so popular agitation may accomplish the desired result.

In bringing the article to our notice the sentiment was expressed that after this exposure by the Charities Review it remains largely with the press of the country to determine whether United States prisoners of to-day shall continue to be stockaded in a manner scarcely exceeded during the Civil War.

Memorial Day.

SUNDAY, the 20th of March, was observed throughout England and in many parts of Scotland and Wales, as the day set apart in memory of the beloved Frances Willard. Lady Henry Somerset sent a personal invitation to every president and secretary of the seven hundred branches of the National British Women's Temperance Association, asking them to join in this solemn occasion fixed by the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union as the memorial day in every land.

From all quarters came loving and loyal responses, with assurances that meetings would be held for that purpose. From the returns at hand it is found that in numbers of places, clergymen of the Established Church, as well as ministers of the non-conformist places of worship, either had special meetings or made reference to Miss Willard's noble life and work in their pulpits.

In many places, the meetings were addressed entirely by women, and everywhere the members evinced most loving and tender zeal in carrying out the smallest details in connection with the arrangements. Miss Willard was greatly beloved throughout the British Women's Temperance Association, and in many places the special hymns which she cared for and the Crusade Psalm were used at the service, also memorial cards with loving reference to her life and work were circulated.

At Eastnor parish church, the rector (Rev. H. S. Sanders), conducted the service, the choir chanting the Crusade Psalm, and the sermon was preached on her life and work. Lady Henry Somerset was present.

Honolulu writes of a beautiful service and most touching and interesting reminiscences, and so, doubtless the world was belted.

What is said of England is also true of America. Thousands of pulpits were open to memorial services, and men and women alike paid tribute to the memory of our departed leader. It is pathetic to read of the loving care with which small unions in remote places wrought out beautiful and touching services. They write the details to THE UNION SIGNAL for the very love of it, when they know that we can not publish the account. There was a great demand for speakers which could not be met. On this account some churches deferred the memorial services to a subsequent Sabbath.

As the news comes in it will doubtless appear that there was universal observance of the day in all the lands where the W. C. T. U. is organized.

Hereafter Prohibition day will have not only the life and works of Neal Dow from which to draw the lessons, but a rich mine of material in the consideration of Miss Willard as a Prohibitionist.

Your Name Counts Here.

ONLY the unusual stress upon our space has prevented our making mention heretofore of the many duplicate petitions to Yale sent to this office. We hope no one has made the mistake of sending us the original. To obviate the added work of copying, which may deter some from working, the duplicating for THE UNION SIGNAL would better be omitted hereafter. Of those received we have one from New Haven, Conn., with 111 names; one from the First M. E. church, Pasadena, Cal., with a membership of over 1,100, unanimously voted, and attested by the pastor, Rev. Clark Crawford, and others which come well up to this. Dr. C. E. Latimer, who secured the one in New York says, "It makes my heart ache to have young men from our best families in my neighborhood, go to Yale, and return such specimens that I am forced to warn young lady patients to look out for them."

This is a case where the name of the mother counts, almost, if not quite, as much as that of the father. Legislators may withdraw to the lobbies or listen with contemptuous smiles and winks to the exceptionally fortunate petition which survives the committee room; mayors may ask with supercilious indifference how many of the eighty thousand petitioners are voters, but to the college faculty this makes no difference, the name of the mother of sons saying, "My boys will never be sent to your institutions until you protect them from the ruin of the saloon," sounds in their ears as the knell of doom. On these petitions your name for once, mother, counts one.

A Great Contrast.

OUR universities have been regarded as the crown of our advanced civilization. We have looked to their graduates to be the leaders of the nation in physical, moral and spiritual advancement. The late revelations have been a great shock and disappointment to the better portion of the nation. At the close of the Revolution, when all were rejoicing over the victory, a man started a suit against the government for some cattle, that he claimed had been taken by the army in one of its hours of need. At the trial the attorney for the government closed his argument by referring to the wonderful spectacle of a nation rejoicing, "but in this rejoicing there is," he said, "one discordant note." And then he pictured the plaintiff going up and down the country crying, "Beef, beef." So now when hosts are marshaling for the truth, we find some university men, professors and students, marching up and down, crying, as for the one great necessity of life before truth and righteousness, "Beer, beer." In contrast with this debauching of body and soul by the university, we find great social bodies and societies banishing liquor from their assemblies and some so-called soulless corporations enforcing prohibition. This is not only true in our own great country, but in the South American republics, which we sometimes call half-civilized and to which we are sending missionaries; there we find leading men doing with millions what President Patton declares he can not do with a thousand men. A concession granted by the Republic of Colombia of South America for the purpose of building a railroad that would employ several thousand men in its construction, provides that the party receiving the concession must not sell to the laborers any intoxicating liquors. So the government of one of the despised South American nations writes in capital letters on every tie and rail and spike of that railroad the word, "Prohibition," and thus guards its people from the destroyer. But the president of a great university whines of his inability to enforce prohibition, and so at banquet, college assembly and in Sabbath address practically defies the church and mocks at her appeal on behalf of her sons. On the one hand, a proud university provides the open door and free access to the saloon, and on the other the despised Republic of South America defends its people from the deadly foe. The fruits of one, drunken students parading their sin and shame, and of the other, the ignorant laborer toiling upward led on by the hand of "Prohibition."

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

In speaking of the West Side Chicago union's plan to secure a million pledged voters against the saloon for 1900, in a recent number of THE UNION SIGNAL, Mrs. Wilson's initials were not given correctly. All contributions and requests for pledges should be sent to Mrs. C. A. Wilson, 860 Western Ave., Chicago.

Mrs. Barney, our round-the-world missionary, sailed from Liverpool for Boston, Saturday, March 26, in the steamer Armenia, and arrived after a calm and comfortable journey, April 5. From Boston she went directly to her home in Providence, Rhode Island. We congratulate her on the great work she has been able to accomplish in her trip around the world, and warmly welcome her back to her native land again.

A card bearing the name Peder Figved, Stavanger, Norway, formerly Royal Norwegian Commercial Commissioner, was handed to Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, by a gentleman as he passed Miss Willard's casket in the procession at Willard Hall. She afterwards found penned upon the back of the card these words which were evidently addressed to Miss Willard: "Your great work in the cause of temperance has inspired Norway's women. They have profited greatly by your example as a Christian. The entire nation blesses your memory."

Miss Anna Downey says she lives on the trains and in the pulpits nowadays. She lately closed fourteen days of evangelistic work at Frankfort, Ind., under the auspices of the M. E. church and the W. C. T. U. She spoke to audiences of from 800 to 1,600 every night, and Sabbath night hundreds went away without being able to enter. The series of meetings paid for themselves. The last three nights were devoted to Christian citizenship and temperance, and the last two afternoons to practical Christian citizenship methods. There was a large increase in the W. C. T. U. membership.

"Mother" Thompson, of Hillsboro, wishes it made plain that the telegram in our memorial number, which was signed Eliza Ann Thompson, was from her, and should have read Eliza J. Thompson. It was sent immediately upon hearing of the death of our leader. The fault was with the telegrapher, as THE UNION SIGNAL copied from the original. Her husband, Judge Thompson, has been dangerously ill, and this prevented "Mother" Thompson attending the funeral obsequies of Miss Willard. That she could not be present occasioned a "mournful regret," she writes in a private letter and adds, "But I shall soon see her, dear soul, in all human calculation, when the winter has changed to eternal spring for me as it has for her." We are glad to learn that Judge Thompson is convalescing.

Marion A. MacBride, who often contributes articles to THE UNION SIGNAL, is director of the Department of Household Art and Domestic Science of the Twentieth Triennial Exhibition of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, Boston, Mass., to be held October 10 to December 3, 1898. This department will show the proper construction of the home, furnishings, and proper food for the family, prepared in the most scientific and healthful manner. Daily, there will be a housekeepers' conference and cooking lessons. Women's organizations will be represented, and Saturdays will be devoted to the school children, for whom "Nature Studies," cooking lessons and historical talks will be provided by prominent educators. Food products will be presented by leading food manufacturers, who believe in the maintenance of a high standard. Pure candy will come under the list of foods, as Boston produces about fifty tons of candy daily. The latest cooking methods will be presented by experts in the line of economic and scientific cooking, and student diet will be given especial attention.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Department Work Among the Y's.

IT is just as important and necessary that the Y's prosecute their work along department lines as for the W's. One beauty of the work of the W. C. T. U. is that the lines of work are so varied, that it is possible for every member to find something according to her liking.

No one has ever attended a National W. C. T. U. Convention without noticing the enthusiasm of each National superintendent in her own department. She believes in it; she has thought along that line; she has developed methods of work; she really believes hers to be the most important department of all. Only in this way can she successfully prosecute her work.

While it would not be practicable for every Y to take up all the departments, for all are not adapted to every community, nevertheless, before it can decide which ones are suited to its needs, opportunities and capabilities, a study of the Annual Leaflet ought to be made after the manner of the department drills recommended by Mrs. Benjamin, National superintendent of schools of methods. Let every member of the Y's learn the length and breadth and height and depth of the temperance work as included in the plan of our organization. Assign to the members certain departments for further study; learn for yourselves the methods proposed by the superintendents, then decide which are adapted to your work. Appoint superintendents of these departments, and it is well for each to have a little notebook in which to record all work done. Let a report be made each month and twice each year; put the superintendent in charge of a meeting. Let each superintendent faithfully report all work to her county, district or state superintendent of her department at the close of the year.

Of course the corresponding secretary of the Y, or the Y secretary, if there is a Y Branch, is to report to county, district or state Y secretary the general condition of the Y, the number of departments taken up and any work not included in department work. Let each Y not only appoint superintendents of departments, but let these superintendents immediately put themselves in communication with the superintendents of their department next higher in the W. C. T. U., and learn the best methods of work to advance the causes of temperance and purity. Then will Y work become more and more effective as it becomes more and more systematic.

ELLA A. BOOLE,
National General Secretary.

Y's at Work.

OHIO.

MISS ELIZABETH OLDHAM, the president of Zanesville Y, sends good news. "When I wrote you last, we were in debt over fifty dollars and expected to have to give up the 'Noon Rest Room.' Since that time we have paid the debt and secured the rent of our room for the next six months, and have also paid state, district and county dues for thirty members. On the 9th of December we held an all-day sale of useful and fancy articles, and in the evening a ten-cent social, at which we cleared twenty-nine dollars. We now feel that we are ready for more aggressive work and we would be glad to hear from you in regard to the various needs of the work and hope we will be able to help each."

From Miss Lulu Poston, corresponding secretary of Nelsonville Y, comes word that they have adopted the department of purity, and Miss Della Wise is superintendent.

Miss Gertrude Matthews, president of the Jackson Y, sends this cheering report: "Although most of our interested members are overworked school teachers or engaged in other exacting employment, yet we try to do what we can. We keep a good column in one of our papers, our press superintendent being a semi-invalid, but an enthusiastic Y. We are now arranging for a medal contest. Through our superintendent of scientific temperance instruction we lately requested our school board to subscribe for Mrs. Hunt's journal for the teachers. We also open to the public, on stated days, our library of over 300 books, the only public library in town."

Surely a good report for busy young women.

Miss Town, corresponding secretary of the West Side Y, Cleveland, reports this ever active Union as in good condition and planning largely for another year.

Miss Cobbs, secretary of Damascus Y, reports that they have twenty-three members and are arranging for a contest to secure funds for work.

The plan of Miss Mabel Leach, the able secretary of Cuyahoga county, O., Y's, deserves special mention. She has arranged for Sabbath night services under auspices of county Y's in a number of the churches of Cleveland. The program has been participated in by both honorary and active members and has greatly interested the large audiences and increased knowledge of our work.

Athens Y recently enjoyed a fine lecture from Miss Marie C. Brehm. The active and honorary members tendered her a delightful banquet before the lecture.

Ohio honoraries can now vote on all local questions and serve as superintendents of departments.

FRANCES H. ENSIGN,
Madison. State Y Secretary.

World's W. C. T. U.

DEAR COMRADES:—March 20 was observed all over the world as a great memorial day to Frances Willard, our dearly loved leader. The cable has carried you this news ere now. Never was the death of a woman more widely mourned than hers; she had won the admiration and affection of millions all over the world. Our B. W. T. A. Branches arranged for the day to be generally observed in the churches and by special meetings.

I have now on sale a special edition of Miss Willard's address at Toronto, which many of us think her finest effort; her best and latest picture is included and is the best printed reproduction I have ever seen. Price fourteen cents or sevenpence each post free, or ten dollars or two pounds per hundred. Please make this widely known, as we hope every white-ribboner will possess a copy.

The National B. W. T. A., a large number of the branches separately, Dean Farrar, Canon Wilberforce, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the president of the Methodist conference, the Irish W. C. T. U., a large number of American and Canadian friends and unions, the Australasian W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Nicholls' cable, the Wesleyan Conference temperance committee, the sisters of the West London Mission, and hosts of British friends, have sent expressions of sympathy with the World's W. C. T. U. in the loss sustained by the death of our unequaled leader.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens will be the acting president until the next Convention of the National. As she is the dearest friend I have ever known I feel I cannot write of her here, only to say that she is fully worthy in all ways to succeed even Miss Willard. All white-ribboners will sympathize with her in the great responsibilities to which she is called.

CANADA: Mr. Ramsay has sent us pictures of the beautiful banner he so generously presented to us at Toronto, and which Japan won. The next post brought a letter from Miss Mitami, of Japan, saying how delighted they were with the banner. I wonder which country will carry off this trophy at the next Convention.

Our all-round-the-world missionaries, the Misses Vincent and Cummins, are doing capital work in Canada. They have organized two unions and as a result of their mission among the Indians on Georgina Island, a union was formed there for the Indians. These two diligent women will shortly go to Newfoundland to help our brave Mrs. Peters. Mrs. Ardill and Miss Murcutt have also been most successful, so the seed sowing resulting from the World's Convention progresses. Two hundred new members have joined the Toronto union.

AUSTRALIA: Mrs. Nicholls is to be congratulated on the first number of the Federation, the organ of the Australasian W. C. T. U. It is written in such a breezy, inspiring style and gives a complete grasp of our work on that vast continent, which our leader would have visited had she lived to go to sunny Australia to greet our loyal sisters there. Mrs. Barney's visit has given an all round impetus to the white-ribbon movement in the Colonies; all the countries she has touched have been encouraged, including a new organization in Ceylon. Victoria has welcomed home its capable secretary, Mrs. Kirk. New South Wales recently presented a silver plated tea service to Mrs. Nolan, as a small recognition of her wise leadership as president. Miss Pemell has sent out a flower mission circular which should make every country realize the importance of that department.

NEW ZEALAND: Mrs. Hewett and Mrs. Brittan have been winning new additions among the Maoris. Mrs. Shepherd keeps the White Ribbon well to the front on women's questions and our own particular work.

AFRICA: Miss Moody has recently given two lectures in Johannesburg on scientific temperance instruction. Mrs. Barney, in January, spent a week in Cairo, Egypt, and much encouraged our workers there. Miss Thompson has sent us, on behalf of the Cairo union, a most sympathetic letter.

INDIA: Mrs. Phillips writes that the three conventions for the Oudh, Allahabad and Bombay divisions have been so splendidly successful they "took away her breath." In Bombay the white-ribbon cause is going ahead by leaps and bounds; 1,700 rupees have been collected for a temperance hospital. Arrangements are being made for a site for a coffee house and an exchange for women. Mrs. H. Hoskins, World's superintendent, has written me fully from Cawnpoor and says how much interest the unions have taken in our World's Convention. It is not unlikely if India goes ahead as she is doing now that some day a World's Convention may be held there.

JAPAN: On April 2, the national convention was held, and the banner won by Japan proudly floated aloft as a beautiful emblem of our unity and of Japan's victory. Three National meetings have been held since January with a view to strengthening the temperance work. We rejoice with Clara Parrish at the wide awake condition of Japan.

PALESTINE: In a wonderful way our Father ordered that Mrs. Barney should be organizing in the Holy Land as our leader left us, and the day she was called home a W. C. T. U. was organized in Jerusalem. This seems peculiarly fitting. She knows of it now and is rejoicing with us. We made a little beginning in Beyrout recently, so now Syria is well under way.

IRELAND: The Dublin, Athy and Lisburn W. C. T. U's have sent most sisterly resolutions of sympathy.

We rejoice to know the World's W. C. T. U. is stronger now by far than ever; the gains the last two years have been steady and constant, and everywhere the organization is attracting more attention and enthusiasm than ever before. Our leader was greatly delighted at this.

Lady Henry Somerset, our new acting president, is feeling anxious about our progress, and I earnestly hope every woman who loved her dearest friend, Frances Willard, will now rally round her, and I ask for your renewed effort in making the World's W. C. T. U. a greater force than ever. She has gone, but she is still with us. Her work can never die; no good ever dies but goes on growing under the care of the loving Father; so her work lives and will live and develop more and more.

With affectionate heartfelt sympathy, I am your comrade in a great bond of sorrow,

AGNES E. SLACK,
Secretary of the World's W. C. T. U.

SPECIAL interest attended the memorial services held for Miss Willard at Preston, England, because of the fact that the temperance movement in Great Britain was started at Preston. The people there sent Miss Agnes Slack a bouquet of white orchids and azalias as a token of sympathy, which she in turn presented to the Preston Hospital "in memory of Miss Willard."

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Mississippi.

A pressure of private affairs, and not any inclination to "shirk" reporting, has caused my long silence. Sacred duties, which could neither be delegated nor postponed, claimed my attention and took all my time.

Our district (seventh) conference, which was to have been held in October, met early in December, and Rev. Mr. Mellen preached a splendid sermon before the large assembly at Wesson for our cause from the very texts our enemies have tried to use against us, viz., I Cor. 14:34, 35 and I Tim. 2:11, 12. He was so prejudiced against W. C. T. U. methods in 1882 as to avoid an introduction to Miss Willard, and, as a member of the legislature, would not hear her speak in the hall of the house of representatives of Mississippi. But this "Saul" has now become a "Paul," and "lets his light shine" in extending our leader's influence and power over the earth!

Next came Miss Ackermann's fine address before our state legislature (at their request), February 3, wherein much good seed was sown to blossom and bear fruit, we trust, to all eternity! Sickness in our governor's family prevented Miss Ackermann's being entertained there, but she was welcomed to "beautiful Belhaven" College, and left her impress for good on all there from the appreciative wife of its president down to the youngest pupil. At Meridian, largest city in East Mississippi, the Rev. Dr. Featherstun gave up his pulpit for eleven o'clock service on Sunday for Miss Ackermann, and Meridian, New Orleans and Jackson papers all highly commended her work among us.

This last legislature took a brave stand for truth, sobriety and righteousness, which, we hope, will be supplemented by other good laws, now needed, when its members assemble in regular session again.

A gold medal contest was recently held here by our ever active, zealous district president, Mrs. Hollensbe, in which a young lady from Dover, Yazoo county, took the prize; much enthusiasm for the cause among families of resident W. C. T. U. people was engendered.

Mrs. Unruh has done a magnificent work in the three districts she visited, organizing fourteen new unions, reviving old ones and adding 378 active and 129 honorary members to the cause; speaking in Sunday-schools, factories, colleges and Epworth Leagues. Having preached a convention sermon in a Baptist church, one of the deacons afterward said, "Why not invite her to remain and fill the pastorate?" Miss Anna Brown, Alabama state organizer, has also done some good work for us.

Beautiful memorial services have been held over the state for our beloved Chieftain, for she was dearly loved and appreciated here. In Meridian, the largest city in the state, no church would hold the crowd at memorial services, so the city hall was used. The most beautiful decorations ever seen there were used, among them palms given by an engineer, who gathered them in a distant state. One enthusiastic temperance union on the coast will hold memorial services this month.

Miss Kearney has always a warm welcome awaiting her on her native heath, for we are very proud of "our Belle," and believe she will do much good in the world.

(MRS.) ELLEN E. HEBRON,
State Reporter, Jackson.

"A PERFECT FOOD—as Wholesome as it is Delicious."

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
BREAKFAST COCOA
"Has stood the test of more than 100 years' use among all classes, and for purity and honest worth is unequalled."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.
Costs less than ONE CENT a Cup.
Trade-Mark on Every Package.
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.,
TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Georgia.

UPON Georgia white-ribboners as elsewhere, the death of our beloved leader fell with crushing force. Every one of our band, probably every one of our great army the world over when the news first came, uttered involuntarily Anna Gordon's moan, "It cannot be true! I do not see how it can be true!" At first, too, it seemed as though the W. C. T. U. itself had been stricken down. Then we remembered that though "God buries the workers, He still carries on the work," and each woman reconsecrated herself with new devotion to the work to which Miss Willard gave her best thought and energy for twenty-four years, and for which at last she has laid down her life.

Atlanta, Augusta, Savannah and other places held appropriate memorial services.

Though we can not feel that it is well for the work that she should have fallen, yet it is the purpose of our little band in Georgia to so redouble their efforts that the cause which she loved so well shall go on in the face of opposition to ultimate victory. Thus best can we honor her memory.

ISABELLA WEBB PARKS,
State Reporter, South Atlanta.

Connecticut.

THE Middletown union completed its offering of one hundred dollars to the Temple recently. So far as known this is the first hundred dollar offering from Middlesex county. The name of Mary F. Burton will be chiseled in the marble corridor of Willard Hall. Miss Burton led the first of a series of meetings that resulted in the organization of the Middletown W. C. T. U., and served the union as its president for about thirteen years. This union has begun the new year by sending a small offering to Miss Cornelia Dow, for our precious Miss Willard's fund.

Abington union, in spite of being widely scattered, in spite of bad Connecticut roads and equally bad Connecticut weather, has worked royally this winter. The latest special work was a memorial meeting in honor of our Chieftain. The union is now planning for its free-will offering meeting. Efforts are being made to revive the Loyal Temperance Legion.

East Lyme, Niantic, Groton and Noank united with the New London union in a memorial service. The county president was in the chair and the tributes to our leader's memory were touching and beautiful. Connecticut mourns our loss, yet we wish, more earnestly than ever, to carry forward the work to which she was consecrated.

EVELYN P. BURCH,
State Reporter, New London.

Pennsylvania.

FROM the sacred silence of bereavement and sorrow in our great loss, we come with united voices to join with others in again pledging ourselves to follow on as our loved Chieftain would desire. All that seemingly could be said has been expressed in the finest, choicest language from hearts that loved and

(Continued on page 12.)

Growing Children.

THE HOME DOCTOR:

"Against the practice of giving tea and coffee to children, we cannot speak too strongly. Childhood is the period when the nervous activity is at its greatest. The brain is ever busy receiving new impressions. Reflex action, coördination of muscles, and the special senses are all under a special course of training. The nervous system is pushed to its utmost capacity, and long is the list of victims that follow its over-stimulation. In these little people nothing but harm can come from the use of such cerebral stimulants as tea or coffee. Bad, then, as this practice is, let us as physicians be aggressive in its prohibition. Do not be satisfied by answering 'No,' when asked as to its use, but let us teach the families with whom we come in contact that such practice is evil. We speak emphatically, because not only among the poor and uneducated, but among the rich, who should know better, this practice is marvelously prevalent."

A man who tried Postum Cereal Food Coffee said that it might be solid nourishment, but he didn't like its taste. He is now one of its most enthusiastic supporters, having discovered the secret of delicious Postum. After boiling commences, allow it to boil full 15 minutes. Not simply put it on the stove for 15 minutes, but count the 15 minutes after boiling commences. That brings out the food value and the delicious flavor. It certainly does make the children bright and healthy, and has proven a Godsend to many an adult whose daily ails were not understood until Postum took the place of Coffee.

* * * * *

Postum is the only cereal coffee yet discovered with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

Don't Put It Away on the Shelf.

You are right in using Wool Soap for woolens. All careful people must do that. But you are wrong in putting Wool Soap away until the next washing day. You lose nine-tenths of its value.

It is impure ingredients that make other soaps shrink woolens. But these do more than shrink wool. Used on fine goods of any kind, they eat the fabric. Used on the skin, they roughen it and redden it. Used on the face, they spoil the complexion.

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD.

Other makers of soap haven't our secret. All soaps except Wool Soap have some injurious ingredient—enough to shrink wool; enough to harm the skin.

Whenever soap touches the skin, or fine fabrics, or wool—there's where you need

WOOL SOAP

IT SWIMS.

"Wool Soap is an excellent article, and every woman will be benefited by using it."—

BREAD...

and Rolls made from the Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat as ground by the Franklin Mills are nourishing and strengthening; contain all the required elements for making.....

Brain, Bone, Nerve and Muscle.
Made of all that is nutritive of the entire wheat berry. Join the wide-awake, thinking folks—ask your grocer for it.

If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.

The genuine made only by the
FRANKLIN MILLS CO.,
Lockport, N. Y.
Booklet free for the asking.
Avoid substitutes esteemed her. But "the half has not been told" and never can be. "Now is the accepted time" for us to act our love and in deeds. The Keystone white-ribboners will keep her memory fragrant as the flowers she loved. We'll endeavor to keep our charge as faithfully as she did and be as true to God and humanity. Memorial services are being held in every vicinity.

Blair county is trying to keep in line with the work. Parlor socials have been held which strengthen the bond of union and give opportunity for those who do not "belong" to learn more of our work and add to treasuries. The semi-annual convention was held February 17 at Bellwood. A school of methods was conducted by Mrs. W. H. Wilson, of Tyrone, which proved to be a feast of good things.

Our energetic superintendent of contests sends this encouraging report: "From every county in the state come reports of contests held and not one since state convention but has met with the greatest success. The work is gaining rapidly and keeps me writing nearly all the time to keep apace with it. We have just held our mid-year convention of Columbia county, March 3 and 4, in Berwick, pronounced the best ever held in our county. A special feature was the minister's oratorical and musical gold medal contest. The minister winning the medal was Rev. Albert Smith, of Berwick. The second prize was given to Rev. M. M. Albach, of Melville. In the musical contest Miss Reece, of Berwick, won the first prize."

Mrs. Eves, corresponding secretary of county, also reported this successful convention, speaking gratefully of the help received from having Mesdames Hoffman, Chambers and Preston with them.

Lycoming county report comes from Mrs. K. E. Purvis: "Our county work goes smoothly and steadily forward. Mrs. J. C. Cheston, the faithful president, frequently visits the smaller unions and looks carefully after their interests, besides attending to her manifold duties as president of city union No. 1.

"We were greatly favored to have Mrs. Elma M. Preston with us the last week of February. Her delightful and instructive talks were a wonderful stimulus to our Loyal Temperance Legion, and resulted in the organization of one for the colored children. We are very proud of the work of our colored union (No. 4), especially in the line of mothers' meetings, of which the outcome has been the opening of a home for aged colored women."

Washington county reports a successful parlor social held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Dickson, South Canonsburg. The literary and musical program consisted of two parts, the first being devoted to scientific temperance instruction, and the second to a memorial service in memory of Miss Willard.

I wish for space to give as full an account of the conference of Wayne county, as the Independent so kindly issued. But the glimpses will assure all how zealously and "in earnest" are our workers there.

Two day and one evening sessions were held in the lecture room of the Honesdale M. E. church, March 3, Mrs. P. Tuttle, county president, presiding. Methods of work in the departments of press, literature and flower mission were discussed in suggestive papers.

Mrs. J. J. Rankin, of Hawley, beautifully interpreted the word "Rest" in her Bible reading, and Mrs. J. T. Rodman conducted the memorial for Miss Willard.

Mrs. W. B. Holmes, in an interesting paper, gave a résumé of temperance and its progress. The first temperance society was organized at Bethany in the spring of 1834, at which Mrs. C. B. Brown was present, being then a girl of fourteen.

The evening program was conducted by Rev. C. A. Benjamin. Revs. Swift, Leisz, Roderick, Thorpe and Benjamin made ten minute addresses upon the subject, "What Should be the Relation of the W. C. T. U. to the Church?"

From our faithful state superintendent of Sunday-school work, Mrs. F. D. B. Chase, comes an excellent program of suggestions to superintendents and helps from the National superintendent. We trust that our teachers in Sunday-school will aim to have every member pledged and the Honor Roll hung in every Sabbath-school in our state. Thus your correspondent could continue giving the well-doings of the busy, faithful workers. We have not space to note all here, but, beloved, hereafter we will find rare blossoms in eternity blooming from tiny seeds of "deeds done in the body," unseen except by the dear Lord for whom we are planting and working in happy, joyous service.

H. FRANCES JONES,
State Reporter, Philadelphia.

Missouri.

THE thirteenth district under the care of Mrs. M. E. Golladay, the president, is doing a grand work. In Warrensburg the union has invited Professor Norton, of the Normal, to deliver a series of lectures upon Child Culture, at their mothers' meetings. They hope for good results from these meetings. They have also offered prizes ranging from five to fifteen dollars to the normal student who shall prepare the best essay upon some phase of the subjects of "Effects of alcohol upon the human system," "Cost of the liquor traffic," "Who is responsible?" etc. Medal contests have lately been held in this district at Raymore, Austin, Gunn City, East Lynn and Holden, and others are in preparation. They expect to organize two new unions in Cass county as soon as the weather is more settled. Mrs. Nelle Burger will be with them for two weeks in May.

"If you see a thing too often, you no longer see it; if you hear a thing too often, you no longer hear it." Perhaps you've seen and heard so much of "Pearline" that it makes no impression upon you. Then it's time to wake up and look about and see what Pearline is doing for other women. Pearline gives the easiest, quickest, most economical washing and cleaning. 572

Millions NOW USE Pearline

The twenty-first district, with Mrs. M. M. S. Gillson as its leader, expects to have one of the very best districts at the state convention. Appleton City will hold the sixth annual convention in May or June. This union is an old-timer, stanch and true, and holds its gospel temperance meetings, had a number of parlor socials and one Sunday-school mass meeting. Montrose, of later date but none the less aggressive, has a fine corps of women, and have been moving forward in our warfare for "right over might." A unique and successful "carpet rag social" was held, each lady sewing a ball of carpet rags and concealing her name in it and the gentleman paying ten cents to rewind and find the lady whom he takes to supper, after which the union had a carpet for sale. Clinton union has arranged weekly temperance meetings, preparing interesting programs as a place of attraction other than the saloon, for both the young men and old. Jail and prison work also find a willing worker in Mr. Cowles, who gives this department his especial attention. Deepwater union expends most of its energies on a flourishing L. T. L., and mass temperance prayer meetings, which are held monthly and are a decided success. Osceola is in contest work; held one on March 29 and have held four parlor socials. It is thought Benton county will carry off the banner in L. T. L. contests and largest increase in membership. Contests have been held in Cole Camp, Lincoln, Warsaw and Fairfield. The first three unions also have flourishing L. T. L's. Mrs. Addie N. Fields will commence work April 9, and close May 1. Miss Carter will give two weeks work the last of May to work up an unorganized county and to visit new unions. Mrs. Ella Chamberlain of Tiffee will lecture in the interest of equal suffrage.

The second district can also boast of an enthusiastic president, Mrs. Sue Page. The Canton union gave the "White Queen's Court" at Opera House on March 10. They keep up a column in the Canton Press, whose editor is an honorary. The Gibbs union holds union temperance meetings twice a month; have given two socials; Mrs. Jennie Moore, of Palmyra, and Dr. Yaconbe, of La Belle, lectured for them, and Rev. S. R. Dillman preached one temperance sermon. This district will raise $100 to have their president's name put in the Temple.

The president of the sixth district, Mrs. Callie Howe, has returned from Arkansas, and is now in Iowa. Letters received by St. Joseph citizens from Arkansas friends show her work there to have been appreciated by the people very much.

The fourth district, which was the banner last year, will hold its annual convention at King City, May 20–23. They expect to have a fine program, and some of our best lecturers. Among the features there will be a "Daily," giving full particulars of the meetings. We suppose this will be the first "Daily" ever published especially for a district convention, and all who are anxious to receive it can get a copy of the three papers, one each day, by sending their name and ten cents to the state reporter.

Among the other unions in the state from whom we have received reports is Webster Grove, who to bring the work before the people, hold parlor and mothers' meetings, and the past year have maintained a reading room and kindergarten for the colored people, securing the necessary money by getting monthly subscriptions from their gentlemen friends. Huntsville union is "mothering" an L. T. L. of seventy-five members, and say they could have twice that number if they only had the teachers. Princeton union was very enthusiastic over the lectures by Mrs. Fields, and the papers of the town gave her splendid testimonials. She visited the schools and encouraged them to go on in the good work. At the Willard memorial services held by them they had the pleasure of having an evangelist, Rev. Guirie, who happened to be there that day, and who was a personal acquaintance of Miss Willard.

There is hardly a union in our state but what held memorial services for Miss Willard, and it would take up too much space to mention even parts of them, but Missouri mourns for our loved leader and is determined to work the harder to do as she would have them do could she have been spared. Many memorial offerings were taken and we hope to see the Temple free of debt as a memorial to the best friend the W. C. T. U. ever had.

ALICE BLACKBURN,
State Reporter, Bethany.

Official.

Coins, Curios and Relics For the Field.

DEAR COMRADES:—It was not my privilege to be present during all of the sessions of the Buffalo Convention, but before leaving, I had my last interview with our translated leader, and promised her, as I held her little hand in farewell, that I would be faithful to the work to which she called me, and I would turn neither to the right nor left until I had done all within my power to

(Continued on page 13.)

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

Enameline
The Modern STOVE POLISH.
Produces a JET BLACK enamel gloss. Dustless, Odorless, Labor Saving. 5 and 10 cent boxes. Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

raise a sum of money equal to the sending forth of trained workers to the fields that are pitifully calling for help.

On my return home from the lecture engagements that took me from the Convention, I found a note from her, written with a pencil, in her own hand, telling me of my re-election. God helping, I'll be true to the trust she gave me.

The two dollar plan for raising money for the field is familiar to you all. Miss Willard grasped the importance of such a fixed plan, and that if every union gave $2 each year for missionary work, it would mean $20,000 annually for the conquest of new territory.

At the next National Convention I shall propose that from this time forth, in January of every year, each union shall be asked to give $2 for field work, and that this shall be a perpetual, loving tax, in the name of Frances Willard, and that no per cent shall be returnable to any person or state, and that the fund shall be held inviolate for direct field work. With such a fund at hand, progress and victory would perch upon our banners and discouragement take to itself wings and fly away.

The coin, curio and relic collection looks up brighter from day to day. Good people speak well of it and if you will all help it will be the greatest collection in the world. If you will send me your gold, silver and copper coins of the United States until I have one of every issue from 1793 to this date, its value as a collection would be very great. These coins are in your homes, and are precious because of their relative dates. So far the coins received have been mostly copper, with only a few gold and silver pieces. Will you not, dear women, send gold and silver also? Will you not begin a search for them, a house-to-house canvass? Can you not see what it would mean, if three hundred thousand women would each donate one-half day to this effort?

I am searching for five dollar and ten dollar gold pieces from 1795 to the present time, and in order that the collection be perfect no date must be lacking. I am looking for silver dollars from 1794 to 1804, 1836 and 1838 and up to 1897; half-dollars from 1794 to 1796 and 1797, and particularly do I want several of 1836, 1838 and 1853. Then there must be a large number of dimes, half-dimes and quarters from 1802 until now. Will you help me to find half-cents from 1793 to 1857, and the flying eagle nickel cent of 1856 and other dates? Washington copper cents from 1785 to 1793, New York, Vermont, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Maryland pennies, and anything that is needed to make the United States arrangement complete.

Some Continental scrip and many Confederate bills have been received, but I ask you for many more. Do not refuse them, they cannot comfort you, they cannot speak to you, but in this way they can be made to waken glorious harmonies for God.

There must be silver trays for the gold and silver coins, and to this end will you consecrate your old solid silver plate, old broken silver spoons, mutilated coins, or anything that we can use in the making of these beautiful trays?

A lady gave me a fine china plate two hundred years old and without flaw. It is very lovely, and I will not be satisfied until there are nine hundred and ninety-nine other choice pieces to go with it, and when the number reaches one thousand, what a collection of rare old china it will be!

Dear women, lend me your hand. I am importunate. Do not wait, for to-morrow we may be far, far away from this.

CAUTION.—Send all coins in registered packages, to North Harvey, Cook county, Ill., and express packages to Harvey, Ill. Do not send them to any one else, and please send a postage stamp for reply. May God give us ready hands and willing hearts to dare, and give, and do.

Thine in His name,

MARION B. BAXTER,
Nat. W. C. T. U. Financial Agent.
North Harvey, Ill.

Literature.

DEAR STATE SUPERINTENDENTS: I offer here some recommendations and suggestions which may be helpful in carrying on your literature department. The work to be done is of twofold nature—to educate the worker, to educate public opinion. All helps that will bring about these conditions should be used. As fast as our local membership understand what the W. C. T. U. stands for in all of its departments, the stronger will the force be which can be used to carry on our great reform. Every union should have a depot of supplies as a fund from which to draw information. The tools which every member should have is: A copy of the National Minutes, the State Report, the National leaflet, THE UNION SIGNAL and state paper, if you have one. Please note that only superintendents who take THE UNION SIGNAL can have the twenty per cent discount on literature. Funds should be raised, so that literature can be purchased. The medal contest offers excellent opportunities of raising funds. Catalogues of the W. T. P. A. publications can be secured by sending one cent per copy for postage. The National Leaflet, a helpful document, should be ordered, price, one cent for two copies. Miss Willard's books are valuable as premiums for the greatest interest taken by a union in literature distribution.

I will give a copy of "A Great Mother," "Nineteen Beautiful Years" and "Woman and Temperance" to the state which, during this year, shows the following: The greatest number of subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL; the greatest number of leaflets distributed; and the largest number of local unions distributing literature. These three books are handsome and attractive, and should be in the library of every white-ribboner. The books will be sent after the reports of state superintendents are sent in, by October 1, 1898. I shall be glad to hear from you often. Let us keep in close touch one with another, and make this department a valuable factor in our great National union.

Yours in the cause,

HELEN L. HOOD,
Nat. Supt.
The Temple, Chicago.

Work Among Foreigners.

NOTICE.

The omission of the name of Mrs. Ulrikka F. Bruun from the list of assistants in the department of work among foreigners in the National Minutes was a mistake. Her name was suggested by Miss Willard, she was nominated by myself, the nomination confirmed by the executive committee and she was made assistant of Norwegian and Danish division. She is an excellent worker and a good speaker and those wishing work done among these people can not do better than to secure her services. She will go for collections and entertainment and will produce a good influence wherever she goes. Her address is Hope Mission, 173 North Halsted street, Chicago, Ill. The northwestern states, Wisconsin and Minnesota, where there are so many Scandinavians, ought by all means to call Mrs. Bruun and make good routes for her.

(MRS.) SOPHIE F. GRUBB,
Chanute, Kan. Nat. Supt.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

A hasty trip to Louisiana, to begin next week, is planned for your National corresponding secretary. I had not expected to do any field work this spring, but so urgent an appeal that I be with them in convention has come from our dear sisters in that beautiful state, that after consulting with Mrs. Stevens, who will not be able to give her customary month to the southern work, it has seemed best for me to go. I shall attend the convention of the district over which Mrs. H. C. Pharr is president, and be her guest during that time in her beautiful home. I shall go immediately from there to the state convention, which is to be held in Shreveport, returning to New Orleans to attend the convention of the newly-organized colored union. Important letters sent me here will be forwarded, or I may be reached at any time by directing in care of Mrs. Alice M. Zable, 1224 Constantinople Street, New Orleans. I trust you will not fail to ask God's blessing upon the work that I shall try to do in His name.

Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair writes from Nebraska where she has been spending the winter: "Last Saturday a farmer's wife called to ask if I would not come out and organize a union, adding, 'I have belonged to a union till I came here and my boys took an interest and helped in our meetings. Now I find one of my boys has been in a saloon and I will not bring them up in a town where there is no union.' In the afternoon another farmer's wife from another part of the town, who did not know that the other had called, came with the same request, so though almost sick I said I would go."

It is good when this hungering for the word of God, as embodied in practical work for humanity, takes possession of the people. It is good when our children serve as incentives in our work. A minister's wife said to me only the other day, "There was no union in this town when I came here and I thought I would set about organizing one at once, but there were so many things to do that I kept putting it off until my boy began to ask, 'Aren't you going to have a W. C. T. U. here?' and then I thought it was high time I got at it." The results are a flourishing union, a flourishing L. T. L. and a vigorous no-license campaign carried on in a town in which, heretofore, there had been very little active temperance work.

Mrs. Jessie Morgan Pickop, who a few years ago as Jessie Morgan served the National W. C. T. U. so well in the capacity of National organizer, writes from Syracuse, N. Y., that a Frances E. Willard Memorial Union has just been organized on University Hill.

From Minnesota comes the cheering news that the state has set as the goal of its ambition nothing less than a gain of five hundred in membership. The president is in the field most of the time, and the results are most encouraging. The work among the Swedes and Norwegians is also being pushed vigorously in that state, and Mrs. Ulrikka Bruun, one of Mrs. Grubb's associates, is waging valiant war for her people in Wisconsin. She writes: "I have held nearly fifty meetings among the Norwegian Lutherans, and the way is being prepared for woman's work. The newspaper mentions Mrs. Bruun's addresses most appreciatively.

Friday the Christian world will in heart and thought go down into the grave with our crucified Redeemer to rise, we trust, into newness of life on the glorious Resurrection morning. Easter will hereafter have a new, an additional sacredness to white-ribbon hearts, because, on

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c.
All Druggists.

that day, we shall consign to its mother-earth the dust of our beloved leader. It was surely a special inspiration which led Miss Greenwood to select Good Friday as the day of prayer for National work and workers. I earnestly trust that the day may be generally observed, for we shall need the girdings of divine power for that last sad rite and for the weeks and months which are to follow. I shall be very glad if the unions which observe this day of prayer will write to me stating the fact. It will be manifestly impossible to report all in The Union Signal, but I should be glad to know personally.

May the Easter peace and the Easter sacred joy descend upon all our hearts.

Katharine Lente Stevenson.

Treasurer's Corner.

The question comes to the treasurer who can vote money out of the county treasury? Can a local union say how money shall be expended? In reply I would say that the county organization is in one sense an independent body, made up of several local unions. When money passes from an individual, or from a local into the county treasury, it passes entirely beyond their control. The constitution probably says, "The treasurer shall hold the money, paying it out only upon the order of the president and secretary." In the case of a county convention, made up of delegates from each local in the county the convention can vote to appropriate funds from the treasury, or the county executive committee can make the appropriation, subject to approval of the convention. In that case each local union has a voice according to its representation in the convention. No local can claim more authority than this; hence it is clear that members of a local union can not decide how the funds in the county treasury shall be used. The same rule applies to district, state and National. Each organization is a legal body, if incorporated, as every organization should be and must be if they are to hold real estate or do any financial business on a large scale.

The W. C. T. U. has been a wonderful school to our women in many ways. They have been versed in parliamentary usage more fully perhaps than any other society of women. They have been instructed in constitutional law, governing organizations. They have learned much of finance and general business principles in the last twenty-five years. But there is much still to be learned on all these lines, and practice of right principles helps greatly to perfection. Every local, county, district and state as well as National, should study to do its business after business methods and upon strict business principles. Our women are rapidly learning in this practical school. Of course we meet those who say, "Oh, never mind about red tape, just do it." But enough red tape (which means prescribed rules) is necessary to secure correct action. Our constitution and by-laws are often lacking in definite direction, and when this is found to be the case, a by-law carefully framed should be adopted that will prevent any trouble in the future. If our work was wholly sentimental and could be carried on with sentiment, that would be all right, but when money is needed then business and financial methods are indispensable. Sometimes we hear it said, "If it is the Lord's work He will send the money." Very true, but it will be in the "coin of the realm," and it will come through business channels and in a rational way. There is not a church in Christendom, nor a missionary society that would expect money to carry on their work if they did not resort to proper means to secure that money, all acting upon the old adage, "The Lord helps those who help themselves." Then let us do our work, whether financial or otherwise, in a thoroughly business way.

Helen M. Barker.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed, 10c, 25c, 50c.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

There was a full attendance at the regular monthly Hospital board meeting. Excellent reports, brighter days ahead, harmonious chords with plenty to do, were the echoes heard above the din of routine work, and smiling faces everywhere. "A strong pull and a pull all together" is beginning to tell. Now if each lady will make herself a committee of one to see that the five cents per member is collected from all and sent at once to our treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 West Adams Street, Chicago, our hospital will soon pass out from under the awful strain it has been under for more than two years. Dear sisters, let the first of May, 1898, show what we can do for the great principle of non-alcoholic medication. The hospital these days seems like a beehive with activity, every available room doing duty, and calls for more accommodations for patients. We believe that the way will open whereby we may safely take thought how "to spread out a bit more." This was what our own departed president said in my last talk with her about the hospital. The following resolutions were adopted by the board:

Whereas, Our Father in His infinite wisdom has removed from our sight our beloved leader, Frances E. Willard, translating her and calling her to richer and heavenly ministries, and,

Whereas, Her life in all its unselfishness, purity and faithfulness to God and mankind has been and is such an inspiration to us all. Therefore

Resolved, That we, the board of managers of the National Temperance Hospital, while we mourn with unfeigned grief, that we during our earthly sojourn shall see her face no more, never again hear that blessed voice whose every cadence spoke such volumes to us, never again feel the pressure of the dear hands now folded until the resurrection morn, yet we rejoice that she has found in reality "how beautiful it is to be with God," and now knows the blessedness of all the Father's leadings for her.

Resolved, That we bear testimony to her Christian character and beautiful life, her self-sacrificing efforts for the uplift of the enslaved and oppressed, either in the spiritual, mental or physical realms, for which cause she gave her life. While we join with our comrades in our own and all lands in sorrow for the loss we have sustained, may the white-ribbon bow which has been honored by her life and loyalty be an enduring bond standing for high ideals and noble endeavor.

Mrs. Elizabeth D. B. Brown,
Mrs. Watson Thatcher,
Committee on Resolutions.
Mrs. Margaret Inglehart.

What to Ask of Congress and How.

Let every church and every other society devoted to social welfare adopt at an early day, some or all of the following petitions, all of which call for bills pending in present Congress.

Resolved, That the pastor of this congregation (or the president and secretary of this society) is hereby authorized in our behalf to sign and send petitions in duplicate to the two houses of Congress, through our congressman and one of our senators, requesting the passage of bills:

1. To forbid the sale of liquors in the National Capitol and in all government buildings.
2. To prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.
3. To raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen years in the District of Columbia and the territories.
4. To protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the same.
5. To prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or kindred devices.
6. And also the interstate and mail circulation of extended newspaper descriptions of such fights.
7. To substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes.
8. To protect state anti-cigaret laws by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

Please write your congressmen and senators in behalf of the above.

PETITION PATTERN.

Having voted the petitions preceding, make a separate petition for each request on large square sheets, as follows: "To the U. S. Senate: The undersigned hereby petition your honorable body to———. The above was approved by a vote of —— persons at a meeting of —— in —— on —— Attest:——Presiding." Then make duplicate addressed, "To the U. S. House of Representatives." Fold petition once and back it, "Petition from — for—." Send the petitions for the House to your own congressman; the one for the Senate to one of your senators. Let us keep up a steady snowstorm of petitions and letters for the whole two years of this Congress, beginning early and winning surely.

Announcement.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Indian Territory will hold their yearly convention at Atoka, I. T., May 11 and 12, 1898.

Mrs. Clara McBride, Atoka,
(for Mrs. Ratcliff,) Pres.
Allenette Cook, Vinita,
Cor. Sec.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

March 20, 1898, on her way to attend memorial services for Miss Willard, Mrs. Lewis Childs, of Henniker, N. H., was suddenly called home. A faithful W. C. T. U. worker has gone to receive her reward. She was loved by all her comrades.

***

Died, March 9, 1898, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Reed, 647 E. Sixty-third St., Chicago, Ill., Mrs. Lois D. Smith, aged eighty-five years. Mrs. Smith was a "Mother in Israel," a lovely Christian character and a devoted member of the W. C. T. U.

MURAT HALSTEAD'S
GREAT WAR BOOK
The Great War Correspondent's Masterpiece.
"Our Country in War"
And Our Relations with Foreign Nations.
All about our army, navy, coast defences, the Maine Disaster, Spain, her army, navy and defences. All about Cuba, her relations to the United States, and her defences. All about the Armies and Navies of all other Nations, and how they will act in Our Fight With Spain.
Over 500 pages. Magnificent illustrations, photographs, etc.
AGENTS WANTED.
One agent sold 89 in one day; others are making $2.00 to $39.00 per day. Most liberal terms guaranteed, 20 days credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 12 two-cent stamps to pay postage.
NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL UNION,
324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS
FOR MAN AND BEAST
THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
84-90 Beekman St. NEW YORK — 311-313 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.

Copyright, 1893, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

CANCER
I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

High Arm — Warranted Ten Years.
TRY IT FREE
for 30 days in your own home and save $10 to $25. No money in advance.
$60 Kenwood Machine for . $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for . $19.50
Standard Singers, $8.00, $11.50, $15.00
and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B-30, Chicago, Ills.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 308.

Trial Package Free.
If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 164 West Van Buren Street, B- 30, Chicago, Ill.
$18.00 Carriages for $9.00
$12.00 " " $6.00
$5.00 " " $2.50

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample and valuable information. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

Our Library Table.

Frances E. Willard's Life.

Addition to Biographical Literature.

[From the Chicago Times-Herald.]

The book which lies before us, THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD, is a distinct addition to biographical literature. It is issued in behalf of the W. C. T. U., and this cause is to profit by its proceeds. Miss Gordon and her collaborators have prepared a volume which is not only a presentation of the individual character and life of Frances E. Willard, but it is a document of permanent human value, and this perhaps just as much as it is a presentation of one individual, without fear, and with much favor.

SPLENDID ARRAY OF CONTRIBUTORS.

The list of those who bring their offerings to the book is conspicuous for worth and literary ability. Few volumes have Dean Farrar, Archbishop Ireland, Lady Henry Somerset, Lyman Abbott, Dr. N. D. Hillis, President Henry Wade Rogers, Booker T. Washington, Dr. Bradley, Dr. Arthur Edwards, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps as contributors to their excellence; they are all here. Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's secretary, who was so much one with her that they were almost one woman in heart, thought and labor, and who, in a sense, is the book, has called to her help all the great leader's brilliant, efficient, faithful coworkers in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and quick has been the response.

The whole world knew of this one woman's work, and it is not astonishing therefore that the whole world should bring its spontaneous tribute, giving of its best, from the dean of Canterbury to the old colored woman on the street, who did not know her name, but had heard she was "a queen."

SUBSTANTIVE AS WELL AS ADJECTIVE.

Yet if this record of tributes were all, the work would be what Miss Willard called "a merely adjective book, not a substantive." There would be no virility in it. The whole world is interested in giving an account to itself of its own interest in this woman. It wants to know what furthered and what hindered her greatness; it wants to know what she was, what she was aiming at and how.

There is a chapter on her eloquence, treating of her preference for the clear Saxon phrase, transparent as air in its meaning, understood by the man at the plow, yet at every inspiration of thought winging its way direct as the flight of a lark into the heights.

Her cause gained always by the fact that an auditor was perfectly certain, in her case, that it was "only a woman" after all speaking. A gentlewoman of her size must always seem to depend upon the forces that neither bear down upon wrong with prodigious material strength nor outdazzle wickedness in its flaming audacity by spasmodic brilliance. When she pleaded for womanhood, the gentleness and quietness of her demeanor, the modesty of accent and sweetness of tone made woman's cause not less womanly than woman herself at her best. One of the boldest of the sons of Bacchus, himself an orator of no mean power, confessed that he believed "she could write a most captivating love letter."

HER STURDY ANCESTRY.

The careful study of her ancestry and the stock from which she sprang is not less eloquent.

Lying upon his deathbed the father counted himself an unfulfilled prophecy, and yet died the child of tranquillity and hope. For to him was given that courage of the future and that faith that enabled him to enter into his children's life career. Long after the devoted husband had passed away Madam Willard in hours of retrospection would say, "In Frances, the father being dead, still speaketh."

And of the mother it is wisely written: "All those who knew Madam Willard well will count her influence and memory as one of the richest treasures that God hath lent them. For she was a woman of extraordinary gifts and graces, of reason clear and sane, of wonderful depth of affection, with that courage that bade her daughter 'enter every open door,' with a tranquillity of spirit that was most charming, and an unchanging belief that God was round about her daughter for guidance and protection as the mountains were round about Jerusalem for bounty and beauty. Born of such parents, blessed with such gifts of nature and nurture, God trained Frances Willard for her life task and made her ready to help the pilgrim hosts with their sorrows, sufferings and sins."

MISS WILLARD'S EARLY LIFE.

The chapter on her childhood is full of practical hints, inspiring suggestions useful to mothers everywhere; and the delicate appreciation of her studious, energetic girlhood is full of amusing stories.

Another chapter is given to a fine study, evidently written by an expert in that field, of her educational ideals, methods and achievements, which no up-to-date teacher can afford to miss. Her travels are swiftly represented in a manner which will carry along boys and girls to the several chapters of marvelous chronicle concerning her characteristics and her history as an organizer and leader of the W. C. T. U. Miss Willard's work with Lady Henry Somerset is duly set forth, and the heroic woman's response, with her whole army of women, to Armenia's cry, strikes an epic note. The reader goes with her to the haunts and homes on earth which were connected with her life, and at last sees her "nearing her spiritual home."

All of these are entertaining, all have value, all go to answer the world's questions concerning this remarkable woman.

WHEREIN SHE WAS TRULY GREAT.

And when all is said and done, and the world takes account—behold, she came out of an ordinary home. Her growth was fostered most by the common conditions, and she was great, not because she stood upon the platform, but because she brought to it, and kept unspoiled in it, childlikeness of nature, obedience, levelheaded sense, ardent industry, outgoing devotion and the rejection of self-seeking, even in the good of her life. These are movements toward which the simplest home can begin in a girl's soul, and for which, in the fullness of its currents, the woman can find place, scope and reward in the poorest hut. Otherwise, there would be no hope for the whole rank and file of that very temperance movement whose leader she was.

But how, in the life of Frances E. Willard, one thing grew out of another, what preparation she had and how she used it, and how the woman herself showed through all her circumstances—this makes this story more than interesting—it is inspiring.—Monarch Book Co.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Publisher's Notes.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR APRIL.—"The Press," by Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, National superintendent of that department. Through the medium of questions and answers this reading sets forth, in most practical manner, the duties of press superintendents, state and local; how to approach the editor of a city daily and the editor in a small town; the kind of news to furnish; the needs of newspapers, secular and religious; gives information concerning "patent pages" and the Associated Press, and suggests how to help "elevate the press." It will be a great help, not only to press superintendents but to white-ribbon workers generally, and we predict a large demand for it.

BIBLE READING FOR APRIL.—"Rooted and Grounded," by Lilian F. Lewis. Based on Ephesians 3:7-21; pointing out the "secret of power," and emphasizing "boldness" and "access with confidence" in seeking guidance. To "know the love of Christ" is to take root downward; to be "filled with the fullness of God" is to bear fruit upward. The application of the lesson for white-ribboners is "If ye had faith ye might say to that Upas tree, the liquor traffic, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and it should obey you."

Official Picture of Miss Willard.

The National officers of the W. C. T. U. have arranged with a first-class engraver to produce a large etching of Miss Willard, which will be suitable for framing and will be the only official picture authorized by them. The W. T. P. A. will have it on sale within two months. Price $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASSN.,
The Temple.

Take Notice

that the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the only house that will publish the official memorial volume of Frances E. Willard. It will be sold through the leading subscription book houses throughout the country. If subscription book houses claim they are the only publishers, please send to them the above statement.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader,

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and co-worker,

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on sale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single pictures, each, -	$ .50
3, to one address, - -	1.00
12, or more, to one address, per dozen, - -	3.00

A beautiful picture of "REST COTTAGE," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the
W. T. P. A., The Temple,
or by
MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treas.,
539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

Signal Notes.

Female apothecaries are legalized in Russia, but only one can be employed in one drug store.

A silk factory in which only women are employed, has been opened in a suburb of London.

Russia is making extensive arrangements for people of Siberia to put millions of acres under cultivation and to build great factories along the line of the new railroad.

The Russian government has ordered that all sardine boxes be opened by the custom officers, because Nihilistic tracts were sent into the country packed in fish tins.

A well-known aeronaut has noticed that the voice of a woman is audible in a balloon at the height of about two miles, while that of a man has never reached higher than a mile.

The late H. L. Pierce, of Milton, Mass., left one hundred dollars to each and every one of the employés of the business firm of which he was a member. There were 125 of the beneficiaries.

The campaign against college drinking has struck Scotland. A proposal by Principal (President) Mackay to permit the sale of liquors in the Dundee University club rooms was voted down.

The peasantry of Spain have learned to make roosters hatch eggs and look after the chickens, while the hens, being at liberty, can and do lay more eggs than they would if hampered by maternal duties.

Major Lugard, the African explorer, declares that the liquor traffic in Africa is an unmitigated curse, and calls upon the governments of England, Germany and France to come to some agreement which will in time effectually prohibit the importation of liquors.

Thomas A. Edison declares women have more quickness and insight about machinery than men have, and he prefers to employ them in carrying out the details of his electrical inventions. He is credited with saying, "Women have more sense about machinery in a minute than men have in a lifetime," and he shows his faith in them by keeping 200 women on his pay roll

The Earl and Countess of Carlisle have cleared out all the liquor shops from their extensive estate. The advantage to the people, says the Alliance News, is very great. In one of the villages, before the public house was closed, a direct veto of the inhabitants was taken, and, by four to one, they decided that intoxicating drink should not be sold in their midst. The public house was forthwith transformed into a useful place of business. "Peace and prosperity now prevail in Hallbankgate."—The Scottish Reformer.

Recent experiments to demonstrate the effect of alcohol on animals, in which spirits were given regularly to one pair of dogs and withheld from another, "show," says Science, "that of the progeny of the alcoholic pair, twenty pups, born in three litters, eight were malformed and six born dead. The normal pair produced sixteen whelps in three litters, and not one of these was born dead, and only one was malformed. During an epidemic of distemper one of the alcoholized dogs died, and all save one were seriously affected; none of the other dogs exhibited any serious symptoms of disease."

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

The vegetable oils used in its manufacture make it the best for the hair and scalp.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

"CLEANLINESS IS NAE PRIDE, DIRT'S NAE HONESTY." COMMON SENSE DICTATES THE USE OF

SAPOLIO

Quality Rather Than Quantity.

President Eliot of Harvard University, says:
"The International is a wonderfully compact storehouse of accurate information."

The International is Scientific and Practical.

Words are easily found. Pronunciation is easily ascertained. Meanings are easily learned. The growth of words is easily traced, and excellence of quality rather than superfluity of quantity characterizes its every department.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

It is the School-Teacher of the Republic.

The International and its abridgments are in general use in the colleges and public and private schools. Should you not give the students access to the same Dictionary in the home that they use in the schoolroom?

Specimen pages and testimonials from eminent persons and publications sent on application.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is well known that a large number of Subscription Book Houses are selling the official Life of Miss Willard, and in order to give all an equal opportunity it was agreed that a uniform discount of 40 per ct. should be given. Especial inducements should not be offered and territory should not be restricted. We repeat these terms in order that White Ribboners who desire to become agents may read with care all circulars, and may avoid entering into arrangements with firms offering extra discounts.

OFFICIAL PUBLISHING HOUSE OF THE W.C.T.U.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicgao

LIFE SIZE PICTURE
...OF...
Miss Willard

Painted on porcelain and pronounced

A MASTERPIECE

by her friends. The fac simile of this painting will be executed by one of the very best companies in Chicago, and it will be difficult to distinguish it from the original. We did hope to be able to sell the picture for fifty cents, but the process of getting it up has been so costly we will have to charge $1.00 for it. We want agents to sell it in every town in the United States. We will pay a liberal per cent either to individuals or Unions who desire to act as agents.

The picture will soon be ready for delivery.

Send $1.00 AT ONCE for canvassing outfit.

Apply to

Mrs. MATILDA B. CARSE,

Room 1118 The Temple, Chicago

Why isn't the false bang on a lady's forehead a deadlock?

Why does the college year have its commencement at the end?

Why is the average doctor seldom inclined to leave well enough alone?

For Allaying Hoarseness and Irritation of the Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are wonderfully effective. Avoid imitations.

Why is the editor who enjoys good health always in a critical condition?

Why do they say streams run dry when everybody knows they run wet when they do run?

An Aberdeen landlord raised the rent of one of his houses because the walls bulged out, and therefore made the house larger.

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

He—"You women are forever talking about the saloons and the evils of drink; do you think it does any good?" "Certainly; the more they are men-shunned the better."

Money to Burn—Kickham—Fifteen dollars for an Easter bonnet! You must think I have money to burn, my dear! Mrs. Kickham. Well, haven't you? Another box of cigars came to-day.

All elevated trains on the Loop now stop at Nickel Plate Depot, Van Buren Street Station. Call up City Ticket Office, Telephone Main 3389, for lowest rates to all points East.

"You don't find me taking up with any of these isms," said the large man, who was rather red in tone. "Except," ventured the slender man with indications of a soured disposition, "perhaps alcoholism."

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 139 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

A Young Lady (hesitating for a word in describing a rejected suitor.) "He is not a tyrant, not exactly domineering, but—" "Dogmatic," suggested her friend. "No, he has not dignity enough for that. I think pupmatic would convey my meaning admirably."

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.

Send for free sample and literature.

A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 16. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, April 21, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
A Victory in South Dakota—Colored Voter's Appeal to Congress—Temperance—Educational—About Women—At Home—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Thy Will be Done. By M. A. C. Calef 3
Poem, William McKinley. By Emily Tolman 3
Food at the Door. By Sarah K. Bolton 3
In Princeton. By Rev. Alford Kelley 3
Juvenile Crimes and Curfew Chimes. By Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph. D 4
Intensive Cultivation. By Rev. W. Howatt Gardner . . 4
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Another Battle in the Text-Book War 5
A. W. C. T. U. in Jerusalem 5
From New South Wales 6
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, "Where's Mother?" 7
Pussy Willow Day. By Alice C. Hale 7
A Clever Pig 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
"Unto This Last" 8
An Opportunity for the Rank and File to be Heard . . 9
Incineration 9
Two Round-the-World Missionaries 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Chicago Y. P. C. T. U 10
A Letter From Spain 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
New South Wales 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Nebraska—Indian Territory—Florida—North Dakota—Massachusetts—Virginia—Western Washington . . . 10-13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Flower Mission—Medal Contest Work 14

Notes and Comments.

ON Sunday Miss Anna Gordon was summoned by wire to the bedside of her mother, in Castile, N. Y. Miss Elizabeth Gordon left on the Thursday previous, in response to a message announcing the illness of the beloved one, which, however, at that time was not considered serious. Thousands of loving hearts will be lifted to the Heavenly Father with earnest entreaty that the dear mother be spared to the daughters already so sorely bereft.

LATER.—Just as we go to press word is received that Mrs. Gordon is slightly better.

KNOWING how eagerly our women look for and with what acute sympathy they read every detail pertaining to the going away of their beloved leader, and that the carrying out of her own oft-repeated instructions regarding the "outgrown shell," is the subject oftenest these days in their hearts and upon their lips, we give space on this page to the letter from Miss Gordon, in which she admits the dear home circle of white-ribboners to the inmost sanctuary of her heart.

THE saloons of Chicago very generally complied with the law by closing their front doors on election day, consequently few arrests were made. It was no secret, however (at least, to newspaper reporters, whatever it may have been to the police), that side and rear doors were kept open for the accommodation of "regular patrons"! Just why some men should deliberately break a law which they themselves have made and why the authorities should wink at such law-breaking, are questions to be grappled with only by the "legal male mind."

THE Reform Bureau, calling to its aid the National W. C. T. U., the Anti-Saloon League and the National Temperance Society, has secured in the Senate the withdrawal of high license for Alaska by bringing Senators Gallinger, Frye and Hoar to the support of Senator Hansbrough. Senator Teller has also declared himself for prohibition. The decisive blow was Senator Hansbrough's point of order that revenue bills must originate in the House where the high license amendment is likely to be inserted, unless prevented by a hearing (which will be asked), supplemented by petitions and letters. Congressmen should be urged to speak at once to members of the House committee on territories. The "petition pattern" and instructions concerning signing will be found on page 16 of this issue.

PERHAPS no funeral was ever so marked by the absence of the trappings of woe as was that of our dear Miss Willard. It has been an object lesson and an education, not only to white-ribboners, but to the general public. In spite of the heavy burdens so suddenly rolled upon Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon and their infinite pains in discharging them, their first thought continued to be devoted to the things pertaining to St. Frances till there was nothing more that human hands or human love could do. Upon Mrs. Stevens fell the carrying out of details. The arching of the lovely palms over the casket at Graceland, the bower of bloom into which the chapel was converted, the entwining of the white bier with smilax, the stately palms of victory guarding the iron doors of the receptacle, and a thousand other particulars were not too small for her loving care and tender pains. Even her words have been carefully chosen during these sorrowful weeks that they might not jar harshly upon the one heart which above all others was pressed almost beyond the point of human endurance. Such thoughtful love is rare; such manifestations of it is rarer still.

The White Path.

MY DEAR WHITE-RIBBON SISTERS:—Many letters have come to me since Easter Sunday—letters sacred and significant, reaching my inmost spirit with the beauty and the bounty of their tenderness and affection.

Some of your hearts in their throb of human sympathy have almost thought the request Miss Willard made would have been left unsaid "had she only known." Ah, dear hearts, she knew more than most of us and for the message I rejoice to bring you now, I know her heart is glad.

The subject of "The White Path" had often been referred to by us both. When Miss Willard learned of the first building in this country containing a receiving room for incineration, she went to see it. This was many years ago, but even then she instinctively turned toward that method of disposition of the sacred caskets of our holy dead, and I believe wanted me to see it with her, hoping that from my more conservative mind its terrors might be dispelled. Here we first talked of the subject, and made the mutual promise, often renewed, that this method should be pursued for each by the one who should outlive the other, I freely admitting my conviction that it was a right thing to do for "humanity's sweet sake," but adding, "while I desire it for myself I can promise to carry out your wish only because I firmly believe that I shall not outlive you."

When the test came it was truly a "fiery trial," and for two months in my anguish I postponed the dread day. I shared the well nigh universal opinion that in carrying her "earthly garment" to Graceland chapel I would annihilate by my own hand all that remained of that most precious earthly treasure. Religion and philosophy, I said, will come to the rescue of heart and mind if nature, the inevitable, is allowed to do her work for this beloved one, but if I submit her form to the white heat of incineration how unbearably pitiful will be the result. It was the torture of the inquisition—nay, it was Gethsemane—but if every human being on this round earth had disapproved I still should have been true to this heroic friend's holy wish.

The incinerating room at Graceland is of purest white. On April 9, through dear Mrs. Steven's loving thought, it was a bower of drooping palms, and with my hand upon the silver gray casket, with its encircling white ribbon and its crown of Easter lilies, I walked to the open door through which it was gently passed on into the chamber of white light. Verily no flame kindled upon it, and after an instant's vision of it in this its last resting place, the separating slide was lowered—the doors were softly closed.

What was my experience when that noon hour had come and gone? Peace so ineffable that its description is beyond my power of speech. A fresh and infinite loneliness? Oh yes, yet an unutterable content, a heavenly ecstasy in the thought that the garment of such a white soul had forever escaped the touch of earthly corruption. I had lost the body terrestrial, but my tear-washed eyes at last beheld the body celestial, and I blessed God for the vision.

I pray that white-ribboners may not shrink from this most beautiful pure white path to the grave. I pray that none of us may hereafter hesitate to "follow that way" with those whom we love the best. The sacred white ashes are a fitting symbol to lay tenderly away in mother earth; the process of incineration is only the speedy action of the same elements that with agonizing slowness do their work in the heart-breaking grave. Let no one say she cannot make this request on account of pain she may give her family or friends, for I can testify that it will be revealed to those dear ones as it has been to me that its amenities amount almost to a benediction.

I long to comfort those who grieve; to bid them lift their eyes and behold the glorified body of our loved leader who now wears the "light as a garment," to believe that she is near us as a ministering spirit while we try to lift humanity toward the light and the love of God.

Yours, for the work she still leads and loves,

Anna A. Gordon

Current Events.

A Victory in South Dakota.

How the Students of One College "Registered an Opinion."

[Special Correspondence.]

Brookings, S. D., April 18, 1898.

As the readers of The Union Signal are aware South Dakota was for seven years a prohibition state, but in 1896 the people voted again on constitutional prohibition, and our state which had done so nobly took a backward step. After the state had declared against constitutional prohibition by a meager majority, our legislature enacted a statute providing for local option by towns. The question of a license in a town can be brought to a vote by a petition signed by twenty-five residents.

Last February a number of persons who had been selling liquor clandestinely, by what are known in our state as the "blind pig," "boot-leg" and drug store systems were prosecuted. This aroused the friends of the liquor business who declared that they would secure a license and open up the regular saloon and show the temperance cranks that they could not run the town. They had no difficulty in securing the necessary twenty-five names to the petition. For awhile the saloon men were very arrogant and boastful. The temperance men said very little, but were just as determined as the saloon men.

March 20, Mrs. Lenora Barry Lake, the first vice-president of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, delivered one of her characteristic and eloquent addresses, which made the temperance men still more determined that the legalized saloon should never exist in our town. The pastors of the various churches preached to and urged their congregations to stand by the right. The students of the State Agricultural College passed stirring resolutions, denouncing the saloon as something that no one had a right to tolerate. The local W. C. T. U. was not idle, and we trust helped some.

The saloon men thought it was fortunate for them that election day came during the college vacation, but forty of the students remained in town and under the leadership of Clay Lawrence they did work of which any college may be proud.

Election day came. The saloon men soon realized that they would have a harder fight to carry this town for rum than they had thought. The temperance men turned out with ten teams to carry voters to the polls, but there was little need of teams as nearly every voter was at the polls when they were opened.

When the votes were counted the whisky forces were routed by a vote of three to one. The temperance people were jubilant. In the evening the college students fired the cannons and paraded the streets with the drum corps, and giving the college yell.

We doubt if there is another college in the United States that can equal the South Dakota Agricultural College for manly students. Out of three hundred and seventy-six students but two could be found in favor of the saloon. We would like to have the record of our students compared with that of any of the eastern colleges.

Colored Voters Appeal to Congress.

A petition signed by prominent colored men of Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana has been presented to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, requesting the committee to extend its report on a recent Senate resolution particularly to the consideration of the franchise features of the completed constitutions of South Carolina and Mississippi now in force and the changes contemplated as to the suffrage in Louisiana. Attention is called to the fact that the reconstruction constitutions adopted by the states of Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana and ratified by Congress could never be altered or changed so as to abridge the right of suffrage to any citizen of the United States who was entitled to such suffrage by the terms of the constitutions.

Notwithstanding this express inhibition of change in the constitutions relative to the right of suffrage, the petition asserts that changes have already been made in the constitutions of Mississippi and South Carolina, and that a similar scheme for the disfranchisement of colored voters is now being considered by the Constitutional Convention of Louisiana. The committee is requested to report a measure favoring the investigation of the provisions proposed by the Louisiana convention and the present constitutions of Mississippi and South Carolina.—New York Tribune.

War Talk.

On Saturday the United States Senate, after a few days' debate, passed the resolutions recognizing the provisional republic of Cuba, demanding withdrawal of the Spanish forces and directing the President to use the army and navy to enforce the demand. The vote stood 67 to 21, every senator being present except one, who is critically ill. To-day (Monday) the House will act upon these resolutions.

Conservative members oppose the resolutions upon the following grounds: (1) that the present insurgent government is unstable; (2) that it is objected to by Great Britain; (3) that its recognition would establish a bad precedent; (4) that it is an invasion of the constitutional prerogatives of the President. Failure to reach an agreement will, it is claimed, lead to the reopening of negotiations.

The war department has adopted a plan of campaign, and the raising of an army of 118,000 men for the occupation of Cuba and the defense of our sea-coast has already been agreed upon. A war tariff bill is in readiness and in case of a concurrence by the House in the Senate resolutions, it will immediately be reported by the committee on ways and means.

Educational.

The contributions to the James Russell Lowell memorial fund in Boston now amount to $22,078.

Arthur Crumpler, a colored man of Boston, born a slave, and now seventy-four years old, is going to evening school.

The late Mrs. Julia W. James, of Boston, left nearly all her estate, valued at $542,069, to the Museum of Fine Arts and the Institute of Technology.

President McKinley has consented to deliver the oration at the unveiling of the Key monument in Frederick, Md., and, to insure his attendance, the date of the ceremony has been changed from June 14 to August 9 next.

A fellowship for women has just been created in the American School for Classical Studies at Athens, yielding an annual income of $1,000. It is founded in memory of Miss Agnes Clara Hoppin, by members of her family, and is to bear her name. The donors wish that the fellowship be awarded without competitive examination, and that a preference be given in the candidacy to those who have spent a year in Greece in connection with the school.

C. N. Millard, supervisor of the grammar grades in Buffalo, N. Y., has started a banking system in the eighth grade. The pass-books, check-books, deposit-pads, etc., have been furnished to the 2,500 pupils by the city bank, through its president, Mr. William C. Cornwell. Superintendent Emerson has had printed $50,000 in bills of various denominations up to $50. In the front of the bank-books are printed directions, in simple language, for keeping a bank account. These include full instructions about depositors, the making of checks, the conduct of the business, etc.

Temperance.

Mr. Morris Tekulsky, who as president of the New York Liquor Dealers' Association, has been greatly concerned for the last two or three years over the peril to personal liberty in consequence of the enforcement of laws restricting the sale of liquor to six days in the week, has turned reformer, and appeared before the governor at Albany recently, in favor of the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in bottles by department stores. The purpose of the bill is declared to be to put a stop to the drinking habit, which is on the increase among the women patrons of the department stores.

Justice Fursman, of the supreme court of New York, has handed down a novel decision on a point in the Raines law. According to the statute all excise cases must be tried forthwith. The grand jury has hitherto taken upon itself to dismiss or hand down cases to the district attorney, and it has been believed that the district attorney must then proceed with the trial. Justice Fursman decides, however, that the district attorney has the right and discretion to try or dismiss excise cases, the latter in case the evidence is not sufficient in his estimation to find a conviction. There are about four thousand excise cases pending in the district attorney's office.

The attitude of the faculty of Princeton College on the liquor question is again brought prominently before the public by the refusal of President Patton and Professors Duffield and Cameron to go as delegates to the Presbyterian General Assembly. The ground of the refusal of President Patton and his two colleagues to serve as delegates is that they expect the faculty of the college will be censured on account of the Princeton Inn trouble. The opinion is expressed that no explanation which they might offer would be accepted by the assembly, as Professor Shields' action in indorsing the application for the liquor license has been denounced formally in scathing terms by Presbyterian bodies in almost every state of the Union. President Patton's present course is held to indicate that, since war is to be declared between the church and the college, the college will begin it.

About Women.

Mrs. C. W. Preston, of Curtis, Neb., has been called to the pastorate of the Congregational church at Eustis, where she has acted as supply during the past six months.

A monument, designed by the Princess Louise, has just been placed over the grave of Mrs. Mary Ann Thurston, who nursed all the children of Queen Victoria from 1845 to 1867.

The officials of Hamilton White College, at Lebanon, Mo., have taken steps to secure a new brick college building, to be erected to the memory of Miss Willard, said building to be named and dedicated the "Frances E. Willard Hall."

Mrs. M. Kate Reed, wife of Col. Nate A. Reed, and associate editor with her husband of The Banner of Gold, died on April 15 at her home in Chicago. Mrs. Reed was an ardent temperance worker, an earnest journalist and a notable club woman.

Mrs. Mary C. Ninde, one of the "Rejected Five" from the General M. E. Conference, writes thus characteristically: "Crowned! glorified! Frances Willard had no trouble getting into the 'General Assembly of the Church of the First Born on High.' The first of the 'Rejected Five' to be admitted to the mansions."

One of the most important statements made by Hon. Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister of the Dominion of Canada, in his budget speech last week, was the amount received by the Dominion treasury from taxes on intoxicating liquors. Last year the country got $8,230,833 in this way, or one-fifth of the gross revenue of the Dominion.

Miss Anna Mitchener, of Ohio, is superintendent of the Tuscarawas Electric line, running between Canal Dover and Uhrichsville, a distance of thirteen miles. The line is owned by her father, who has turned over the entire affair to his daughter, confident in the light of past experience that the affairs of the road will be attended to in businesslike fashion.

Arrangements are being vigorously pushed forward in preparation for the National temperance fête, which is to be held at the Crystal Palace in London, England, on Wednesday, July 6. The arrangements are under the joint control of the National United Temperance Council and the National Temperance Choral Union. An agreement has been entered into on behalf of these bodies with the Crystal Palace Company, by which the palace will be at disposal for the fête on the day named, under the best possible conditions for the purpose in view, as the agreement fully secures that the liquor bars throughout the palace will be closed, and no intoxicating liquors whatever will be obtainable on that day.

Contributed.

Thy Will be Done.

BY M. A. C. CALEF.

HOW sweet to know as day by day,
We struggle on and try to say,
"Thy will be done,"
That He who has our pathway laid
Has surely no mistake e'er made!
"Thy will be done."

How much it rests our hearts each day,
'Mid labors hard and cares to say
"Thy will be done";
And with more ease to then go on
With such an Arm to rest upon!
"Thy will be done."

That One who knows our every need
Will surely hear us when we plead
"Thy will be done."
And He our inmost thoughts will read,
Aiding in plans that will succeed.
"Thy will be done."

Tilton, N. H.

William McKinley.

BY EMILY TOLMAN.

HE who 'mid bursting shells and battle's roar,
With lifeblood of her bravest saves the state,
Is crowned with highest honor evermore,
And all men count him great.

Yet he who calm amid a nation's din
Doth bid the dogs of war their clamor cease,
No less a hero is, though he doth win
A victory of peace.

—The Congregationalist.

Food At the Door.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

"DON'T feed him, because others will be sure to come."

The speaker was a handsome woman, who sat at dinner with her husband in one of the beautiful homes of C. She was dressed in a rich garnet satin, with a bunch of yellow chrysanthemums at her throat, which accorded with the dark garnet leather of the carved furniture.

All had gone well with Mrs. Heatherstone. Her husband, with hair prematurely gray from his hard financial struggles, had become rich, and his wife and only son were spending the money in fine clothes and stylish equipages.

A servant had just come in to say that an old man was at the door who had had nothing to eat all day, and to ask if she should give him a supper.

Mrs. Heatherstone reiterated her old rule, not to feed anybody at the door lest other poor people be told of it and the family be annoyed with tramps. "We never give anything at the door," she was wont to say, and so in process of time poor people generally passed by the Heatherstone mansion, and she was glad of it.

The poor old man of to-night caught a glimpse of the well-filled table as he passed the window, and he felt hurt and bitter at fate. He was not a drinking man, but he had lost his property by reverses, his wife and children were dead, he was unable to do hard labor, and he could rarely find work that was either light or heavy. There was not work enough for all, and more vigorous men obtained what there was.

The old man slept in a shed that night, and dreamed of the elegant home and the handsome lady in the garnet dress.

"I think you might have given him a supper," said Mark Heatherstone, a boy of sixteen, with a kind heart but lacking a strong will, and who had already caused his parents some solicitude.

"When once you begin, there is no end of it," said the mother. "Let him go to the Associated Charities or to some soup-house."

"But he will have a heavy heart to-night, besides being hungry," said the youth.

"I can't take care of all the suffering in the world, so I shut my eyes to it. We must enjoy ourselves, and leave some money for you also."

"I don't mind much about that," said the boy, who knew nothing of the hardships of life, "but I'd do a little good as I went along."

Mother and son did not think alike about many things, and after a time the lad left his home and disappeared from the town.

His parents were, of course, distressed beyond measure. They searched and searched in vain, Mrs. Heatherstone, with all her selfishness and lack of wisdom in rearing her son, was exceedingly fond of him. His absence aged her, and when after some years he did not return, the fine house and elegant clothes lost their attraction. The habit of giving, however, is usually a growth from early life, and closed hands do not unclose easily as we grow older.

Once away from his home Mark Heatherstone was too proud to go back, if indeed he ever wished to do so. He soon spent what money he had brought away with him and then learned the hard lessons of poverty. He looked for work, occasionally found it, but oftener was penniless, and like the old man who had besought alms at his father's house, slept in sheds or in barns. The increasing habit of drink fastened upon him, and exposure undermined his health.

Early a broken down man, he determined to go back to his native town, and perhaps seek again the home he had abandoned. He stole a ride on a freight train and reached the city just as the evening lamps were being lighted. A cold sleet was falling. He was faint from lack of food and excited with the thought of the old times of boyhood and a possible glad reception at his home. He found the house, passed it, and saw his father and mother at supper. He went up the street and then returned, going to the back door and asking for food.

"We never give anything at the door," said the well instructed servant, and shut it in his face. He walked away. The impulse was strong to go back and say that the long lost son had returned. He hesitated, turned his face back toward home, walked up the familiar pathway to the front door, raised his hand to ring the bell, became dizzy and fell heavily on the porch.

Mr. and Mrs. Heatherstone were startled at the sound. "What has happened, husband?" she said, and both hastened to the door. "Oh, Mark, Mark!" exclaimed the mother, as she gazed upon the face or her apparently dead son. He was carried into the best apartment and a physician summoned.

"It is a heart attack and he will rally," said the doctor, "but his living is only a question of time."

When Mark was partially restored to his former self he told of the struggles he had been through, of some kindness and much indifference and hardness, even of being turned away in the rain from his mother's door because he asked for food. "That nearly broke my heart, mother," he said. "Don't let man or dog or cat go away from your door hungry. Who knows but they will die upon somebody's doorstep?"

Mrs. Heatherstone grew tenderer with the coming months, and when Mark passed away she was a changed woman. She had been made unselfish through a great sorrow.

Cleveland, O.

In Princeton.

BY REV. ALFORD KELLEY.

NUMEROUS alumni have written of their experiences in Princeton, all tending to show the pure temperance atmosphere of the community. No article having appeared on the negative side, I feel that it would be well for me to present it, believing that my seven years' residence in Princeton, in university and seminary, enables me to be a capable witness.

I recently resurrected some temperance and prohibition notes, which had lain away among my Princeton bric-à-brac. I cannot tell why I wrote out the experiences of those days back in the eighties and put them in the darkness of my archives, unless the Lord intended that they should only come to the light "for such a time as this." In being thus reminiscent, there will be no need to draw upon either imagination or memory, which faculties may magnify or minify. I will write now what I wrote then, so that your readers may be sure my statements are accurate and at the same time, understand that the action of the trustees, requesting parents to assist in the enforcement of the temperance restrictions, was due to pressure from without, not to principle withinPrinceton, and that President Patton's voluntary New York alumni banquet "corkscrew" speech represents Princeton, rather than his trustee suggested "self-control" address in Marquand Chapel, inasmuch as "Princeton Inn" is the legitimate outcome of the influences that have for years been at work. The wave of prohibition sentiment, that swept over the country about ten years ago, eventually reached conservative, conventional Princeton. Its dimensions, however, were not so large, nor its force so great as in other localities, as though it had met some counteracting influence. And such was the case! An Anti-Liquor League was formed at the time for the purpose of securing the abolition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the township, except for medicinal, chemical or sacramental purposes. An executive committee was organized, composed of the pastors in the different churches in the town and one representative from each of the classes in the university and seminary, so that the entire town, of whatever creed or color, was united for the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

The sentiment was strong in town, university and seminary, and we won, but we had antagonism from unexpected quarters, the influence of which has caused the saloon to be fastened on Princeton ever since, and eventuated in the grill room of Princeton Inn. Then, as now, there was opposition from persons of prominence. Professors in the university and seminary opposed the movement. Not all, however. President McCosh, whose resignation seems to have brought so much anti-temperance evil into Princeton, was an ardent advocate of the reform, and through his invitation Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler addressed eight hundred persons in the Second Presbyterian church. Others were equally enthusiastic. Professor Macloskie was a friend of the cause, while Professors Johnston and Willson were officers of the league. One of the university professors, a doctor of divinity, was openly pronounced against the movement. At a contemporaneous meeting of the New Brunswick Presbytery, when a large number of the students were present from the seminary, a motion was made to request the faculties of university and seminary to exert their influence in the suppression of the public sale of liquors, and so remove a great temptation from the students. This professor arose and said: "Did not our Lord make wine? Did not our Lord drink wine? Did not our Lord give wine to others? Would you thus cast reproach upon the name of our Lord?"

Some of the professors went farther and offered intoxicating liquors to students. While in the university, I was offered three kinds of wine successively in the home of one of the professors. I wonder what the parents would think of such social customs! If the students should become faint and unsteady in their gait under such a burden, they were invited to have a consultation with the faculty, who then recommended a short vacation for the benefit of their constitutions. Teach a young man to acquire a taste for intoxicants and then discipline him because he had developed such a fondness! Why not instruct a student to become proficient in the laboratory and then expel him from the institution because of his knowledge and skill?

Possibly there is some consideration to be given to this state of affairs in the university, as the professors there are mainly of the laity, and not necessarily Christians. When, however, we consider the seminary faculty, in which every professor is not only a member of the church but a minister of the gospel, we naturally look for those who wish to avoid the very appearance of evil, and who would, for Christ's sake, sacrifice any necessity of life, much more a luxury, if by so doing they would avoid being a stumbling block or cause of offense to any of their fellow mortals. Unfortunately and unexpectedly such a condition of affairs was far from true of Princeton seminary. The professors of the seminary were canvassed, in the campaign mentioned, as to their position upon the subject of abolition and, while two or three were heartily in sympathy with the reform movement, the majority were either indifferent or directly opposed to it. One member of the faculty claimed that saloons were necessary, as the young men should not be deprived of "legitimate pleasure," "beer was not intoxicating," and beer drinking was an "innocent amusement." Two of the professors were said to have wine cellars and to serve wine at meals. One defined his position by the argumentum ad hominen that drinking was no more worthy of censure than smoking. Two wrongs, in his mind, make one right.

Another professor took an unique method of exhibiting his status upon the question. During the continuance of snow after one of the winter storms, some of the men threw snowballs and broke several panes of window glass, which they paid for, although the instructor seems not to have known of the settlement. This professor posted the following placard upon the seminary bulletin board in Stuart Hall: "You can not with a clear conscience take the glasses away from people until you have paid for those other glasses that you have broken." The notice was both a sarcastic ridiculing of the prohibition sentiment among the entire body of seminary students and a statement of the position of some of the faculty upon the movement. It showed to what straits the opposition was driven. They had no legitimate defense nor logical arguments against the movement—although every word in English could be used an hundred-fold in support of some theory in apologetics, and were driven, Ingersoll-like, to mere derision and buffoonery. That the present complexion of the faculty has not undergone much transformation is evident from the prominence taken by the younger professors at the last meeting of New Brunswick presbytery in support of Dr. Shields and against the resolution calling attention to the General Assembly's deliverance condemning license signing.

Frazer, Pa.

(Concluded next week.)

Juvenile Crimes and Curfew Chimes.

BY WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH. D.

Superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.

THE parents of more than three hundred towns and cities of the United States, moved by more than three hundred tragedies of juvenile crime, have recently ordained—acting cooperatively through their town and city councils—that their children shall come home at night at the signal of a so-called curfew bell, which usually rings at eight o'clock in winter, at nine in summer.

Those who argue against the revival of the "curfew" as a return to medievalism show ignorance of history or lack of poetry. The ancient curfew applied to old and young alike. The modern curfew has only the poetic resemblance of being an evening bell. As well object to modern uses of the words "chivalry" and "crusade," because the words in medieval times meant war. Those who argue that parents should regulate this matter, forget that government is but the coöperative act of parents, who need to act together in cities and villages. Nowhere can curfew be established except at the request of parents expressed in ballots and petitions. The law no more interferes with parental rights and personal liberty than the kindred laws on compulsory education and child labor now fully established in the most enlightened commonwealths. The school and the curfew bell are equally justified as necessary safeguards of public morals and prospective citizenship. Laws forbidding the sale of liquors and tobacco and corrupt literature to minors have long since illustrated the duty of the state to protect immature youth. Gladstone's great saying, that it is the chief purpose of law to make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right, applies permanently to laws for the protection of minors. No intelligent view of personal liberty justifies turning infants loose to play with poisons and razors. The most inspiring watchword of reform is, "Give the boys a chance." They have no chance if left upon the streets at night.

All the doleful prophecies of what the law could or could not do have been answered by ten years of history. The testimony of the cities which have rejected these shallow objections and tried the curfew is uniformly favorable. The law has not destroyed civil liberty, nor promoted communism; it has not proved to be incapable, not even difficult of enforcement, but has been well observed. It has decreased juvenile crime and vice. It has checked the alarming growth of hoodlumism. A chief of police who opposed the ordinance at first repented as he heard the steady patter of little feet, homeward bound, passing his office door, at each ringing of the bell.

The following are specimens of many testimonials from the cities that have given the law fullest trial. When the city of Lincoln, Neb., had been under a curfew law two years, Mayor Graham wrote: "The results of the ordinance in reducing crime were a complete surprise. There has been a decided improvement, socially and morally, of the youth and a pecuniary saving from the falling off in the number of arrests. This seems to be the strictly proper way of reducing crime among youths of the cities of the country."

The chief of police of Omaha, after a similar trial said: "We have had no occasion to make any arrests under its provision since it has been in force. When nine o'clock comes the children make it a point to go home. It is now an easy matter for parents to enforce home rule." Mayor MacVickar, of Des Moines, writes: "We consider the curfew ordinance a very wise law and wonder now how we ever got along without such a regulating ordinance. . . . The signal is respected by all classes." Similar testimonials might be quoted from Yankton, S. Dak., Denver, Kansas City, Leavenworth and many smaller towns.

The only further question is the best form of ordinance. The danger is too many exceptions. Some slight and occasional inconvenience must be borne in the case of any efficient law. No child under sixteen ought to be allowed on the streets after the curfew bell, who is not attended by parent or guardian, unless bearing as a password a newly written and dated statement of parent or guardian that it is on an emergency errand. The best curfew law the writer has seen is the Ontario Act given below. The matter comes fully within local police powers in American towns and cities, though suitable also for state legislalation.

Finally, we suggest that wherever there is a chime of bells, they should be used to ring out as the curfew call:

"Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so homely, there's no place like home."

WORDING OF THE ACT.

Ontario, 1892: 1. Municipal councils in cities, towns and incorporated villages shall have power to pass by-laws for the regulation of the time after which children shall not be in the streets at nightfall without proper guardianship, and the age, or apparent age, of boys and girls respectively, under which they shall be required to be in their homes at the hour appointed, and such municipal council shall in such case cause a bell or bells to be rung at or near the appointed time, as a warning, to be called the "Curfew bell" after which the children so required to be in their homes or off the streets, shall not be found upon the public streets except under proper control or guardianship or for some unavoidable cause.

2. Any child so found after the time appointed shall be liable to be warned by any constable or peace officer to go home, and if after such warning the child shall be found loitering on the streets such child may be taken by such constable to its home.

3. Any parent or guardian may be summoned for permitting his child to habitually break said by-law, after having been warned in writing, and may be fined for the first offense, one dollar, without costs, and for the second offense two dollars, and for a third, or any subsequent offense, five dollars.

For city ordinance substitute for (1) above the following:

1. Be it ordained by the city council of ——— that it shall be unlawful for any child or children under the age of sixteen years to be loitering on the streets or elsewhere out of doors in this city in the night season after the hour of 9 o'clock P. M., unless accompanied by parent or other adult guardian, or bearing a newly-written, signed and dated statement from such parent or guardian that he is on an emergency errand.

Then add (2) and (3) as above.

Washington, D. C.

Intensive Cultivation.

BY REV. W. HOWATT GARDNER.

EVERYWHERE in our common life there are grave responsibilities; on the farm and in the shop; in court chamber and legislative hall; in mart and in temple; but none can equal the responsibilities of the home. He who builds and maintains a well ordered home is laying the foundation for civil and social welfare. They who would become parents enter on a sacred office and in a divine service. In these days men discuss with animation the question of "rights" of property, labor, and of women—all important subjects—but we are yet to discuss enthusiastically the rights of children, and provide an organized movement to champion specifically their cause. The bulk of our laws are for the preservation of the so-called rights of property; labor and women are pleading before the bar of public opinion, but the claims of the children must be urged naturally with whatever is gained in recognition of a larger place for woman in the work of the world.

The great fundamental right of every child, it has been said, is the right to be well born. This can not be controverted. Thought, heart, and conscience should as thoroughly, yea, more thoroughly, enter into this service, as in any activity of mankind. But how far otherwise is the conception of the responsibility of parentage? Expert investigators in criminology, also the vicious and defective classes, are revealing the fact that social health will surely be promoted when such classes shall cease to become parents. It is quite firmly established that incurable diseases, excessive passions and debased appetites, imbecility, and even crime, ruinous to body and soul, are transmitted by heredity to offspring from generation to generation. An investigation of the antecedents of the recent boy murderer of Philadelphia, age fifteen, shows that his disposition is a direct and logical inheritance from the grandfather and father, each in his turn having killed another. It is scientifically demonstrable that "the iniquities of the fathers" are visited "upon the children unto the third and fourth generations." With authority from scientific data the power of the state will yet intervene in the interest of higher physical and social welfare to prevent defective, delinquent and abortive classes from reproducing their kind.

But, meantime, systematic instruction is needed for those who have the sincere purpose to enter in such service with intelligence. In these days universities of every sort are founded, from classic old Harvard to the budding, popular, cosmopolitan university. There is room for one more, or at least a department in each, where courses may be given bearing on the subject of scientific parentage; a preliminary course in hereditary laws and influences and prenatal culture; and for those able to pursue them, studies in embryology and the principles of biology; an advanced course in child culture, with a correlated study of the ethical relations involved in prenatal culture and child culture. It is gratifying that already a beginning has been made in German universities and in this country, as in the University of Indiana, in the study of child nature and care. But this work is as yet kept too closely within the secluded class-room. Already, too, the W. C. T. U. provides some excellent material, as announced in the annual catalogue, as aid in such study, and approaches nearest to a systematic organization for pressing the claims of childhood. To the large number of necessary departments, one more may, let us suppose, be devoted to correspondence study on subjects of such value not only to children individually, but also to the larger social life.

We hear much to-day of intensive gardening and farming. By the older method large tracts of land were required and dependence placed mainly on unaided nature to produce the crops. By the newer method a small tract of land will give successively large yields, and much is obtained because much is put in, but it requires greater intelligence to farm intensively, for thought must aid nature. Some children, like Topsy, "just growed," or "have come up." They are natural products never cultivated by parental thought, heart and conscience. The home is a garden of choice plants. The Psalmist likens then to "olive plants round about" one's table. What plant will repay more for cultivation than a well-born child? But such a plant must be reared intensively. The wise man spoke more wisely than we usually credit him with, when he said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." In quoting we most frequently emphasize "go," when the word of emphatic importance is "he," "in the way he should go." Not in the way one may arbitrarily mark out for the child, but in the way indicated by his natural aptitudes, inclinations, tastes and aspirations. The way of one will differ from the way of another. These aptitudes often manifest themselves early in the talks and plays of the child. In "The Story of My Life," Mrs. Mary A. Livermore relates that one of her most attractive plays was to preach to her playmates, or, if compelled to play alone, to arrange in the woodshed the sticks of wood in rows along the logs, and to preach to these quietly attentive auditors. All the world knows what a preacher of truth and righteousness she became in after life, though some of her hearers even to this date have continued as her woodshed auditors. To observe, to encourage and to guide the aptitudes, noblest thought and aspirations of a child, require wisdom, tact, patience and love, but it is a service which brings the richest reward.

Livingston, N. J.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

Gen. William Booth, of the Salvation Army, came to the noon meeting on Wednesday, March 30. He recounted some of the experiences in the work of the army, from its early beginnings, as well as some of recent date. He referred to the grand cause and work of the white-ribbon army, and paid beautiful tribute to our beloved Miss Willard.

. . . . . .

Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, of La Salle Avenue Baptist church, has been with us for two weeks. God has used him mightily to the saving of souls. We shall rejoice some day in witnessing the harvest from the seed-sowing of these days in Willard Hall.

. . . . . .

Scarcely a day passes but letters come bringing knowledge of heavy burdens resting upon the hearts of some of God's dear children. Our hearts respond quickly; faith lifts us to where we know He hears, and all is peace within.

. . . . . .

Evangelist David comes this week for another series of meetings. All are glad to welcome this Christian Hindoo and to learn of him of the life more abundant.

Abbie Frances B. Church,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

Another Battle in the Text-Book War.

Dear Union Signal:—No great campaigns for new or stronger temperance education laws have called the National superintendent into the legislative field in person this past winter, but there has never been a season calling for more intense activity for the defense of total abstinence truth for the children and youth of our country than this has been.

We will not attempt to decide whether the triumphs of our movement over quasi critics and foes, or some other cause, has led to the past months being an era of efforts at temperance text-book making; but such an era we are passing through for the first time in almost seventeen years. The determination of some of the would-be authors in favor of an evasive and uncertain teaching has reminded us of the same spirit always met in legislative battles which has fought with desperation against measures, insuring that every child in the state shall be taught the dangers that lurk in beer, wine and cider drinking!

Never has there been a time when the interests of total abstinence teaching have needed more constant and more skillful watching than now. Fasten the drink habit upon a boy, and his future money-earning power is thereby mortgaged to the brewer and distiller. That these pecuniarily interested parties will strive in every possible way to avert the loss to their future gains, sure to follow if we educate the boys to shun all alcoholic drinks, is only what we may expect.

We are facing a shrewd and mighty foe before whom we should quail if God were not at the helm guiding our course. The following is a sample of the present phase of the conflict which we will further report as it progresses.

It had been a long, hard day in New York city, of conferences with an author and publishers over a text-book on physiology, which was confessedly written to meet the views of both friends and critics of temperance education in the public schools. The descriptions in this book of wine and beer do not in that connection contain the warning as to the subtle and dangerous character of these beverages which both science and experience warrant, while the book tacitly invites to their use, in a paragraph which says: "These drinks by many are supposed to act as beneficial foods, giving strength to the body and power and joy to the mind."

To the plea for indorsement for such teaching I could only promise the organized opposition of the motherhood of the land as found in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at the same time stating that nothing that might be said or not said in this book elsewhere, could mitigate the omissions and commissions in the two instances cited.

As this contest continued for another day, a physician of large hospital and private practice, who knew of the pending question, came to urge my going, with a party of lady physicians, to a hospital where I would see the ultimate physical ruin following a course of wrong, begun frequently in the thoughtless use of wine by young girls ignorant of its fatal power to deaden the finer sensibilities, and therefore to become the turning point in a career which otherwise might have been one of virtue.

"I do not believe," was urged, "that you half realize as the physician does, the necessity of your work and of your standing firmly for total abstinence teaching for girls as well as boys in our public schools."

I replied, "While intemperance has not entered my immediate family, my study of the miseries and degradation it entails upon the individual and of its menace to the nation, has been so great that it has guided, girded and goaded the efforts that have carried the temperance education movement to its present state of progress. A deeper realization would unfit me for the burden of work for this cause that is constantly mine."

Nothing could induce me to indorse a book that minimizes in the least the full warning that the truth warrants and our times demand for the children and youth of our land against these drinks which Gladstone said, "have slain more than war, famine and pestilence combined." If we would save our children from these combined evils we must watch to see that the books put into their hands in the schools teach no emasculated gospel of temperance.

Has the book here referred to been revised? Not yet, the battle is still being waged.

Mary H. Hunt.

23 Trull St., Boston, Mass.

A W. C. T. U. in Jerusalem.

Dear Union Signal:—I am so far on my return trip and must now wait the arrival of the Orient steamer, Oroya. In another week my year will be up and I am a long way from home, but I could not have hastened without leaving some things undone which were down in the itinerary, and which clearly seemed given me to do. I have thoroughly enjoyed my Palestine visit, and what is more to the point, have left a real earnest company of white-ribboners in Jerusalem. The way this came about seems as divinely ordered as the meeting of Philip and the eunuch on the desert way. I had been up to Mount Calvary, and returning, paused to take in the wondrous scene spread out before me. Below the street at the right was a garden where two ladies were slowly moving along. Had either party been a moment earlier or later we must have missed each other. They looked up and as our eyes met, one said smilingly, "I think you are an American," and as I replied, I noticed one said to the other, "She has on a white ribbon," and in the conversation which followed they asked my name. Over both faces there came such glad looks of recognition. "Oh, Mrs. Barney, the prisoners' friend, why I corresponded with you many years ago in regard to prison and rescue work." My friend proved to be Miss Josephine Cowgill, a former worker in New Orleans, and her companion, who had accosted me, Mrs. Ryerson, of Paterson, N. J., both Christian workers in Jerusalem. An invitation to hold meetings followed, and the pleasant drawing-room at the Bethel Mission was put at our disposal by Miss Dunn, superintendent of the Christian Alliance in Palestine. Rev. Mr. Wallace, the American consul, gave not only advice, but the help of his presence and prayers. Thus the interest increased, and without any urgency on my part, it was decided by the friends that the right time had come for a commencement to be made in our work. The Wallaces are leaving soon, and so few are known to be total abstainers, that I had asked of the Lord six names, if it was His will for me to go on; six who would in a measure be responsible for the work. It was like Him to move twelve to hand me their names. Mrs. Wallace kindly consented to be president during her brief stay, thus giving a social prestige to the movement. Rev. Selah Merrill, a former consul, will resume the consulship in about two months, and we are hoping that Mrs. Merrill, who is well known and loved, may be induced to take the office. Miss Lovell (English), founder of Mission Home for blind girls, is vice-president. Mrs. Day (also English), who is connected with her husband's mission school, recording secretary; Mrs. M. Ryerson, of the mission for lepers, corresponding secretary; and Miss Brown, of the Bethel Mission, treasurer. Thus the officers are divided between the American and English ladies, and we have some Syrian members—as ten more names came in at our next meeting. This surely was starting off right, and it was with a very thankful heart that I decorated the dear women with the white ribbon, and declared the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Jerusalem formally organized on the 18th of February.

I had written thus far when a friend came to my room, bringing a London paper of February 19, giving the telegraphic announcement concerning Frances Willard.

The birthday of our Jerusalem union must have been the date of our leader's promotion. While I was telling of her wishes and the great interest she would take in the work and workers, she must have been entering the eternal city, and while we knelt in the closing prayer, especially remembering our Chieftain, she must have been gathered to her dear ones and with them have taken up the victor's song.

There seems a solemn and wonderful significance in this coincidence and in the thought that she would receive our message from the angels. Surely our dear Jerusalem workers will hold the sacred trust, faithfully carrying on the work which would have appealed so strongly to her sympathy and which will always seem peculiarly her last earthly trophy.

I can not finish my story; my heart claims these hours for silence and quiet waiting upon God. I stand again beside her in that parting hour, feel again her kiss or handclasp, hear the tones of her voice as she sent me forth and asked God's blessing upon my "round-the-world mission." The last letter I received could not have been more full of sisterly comfort and sympathy if she had known it to be her parting message, and next to being a servant of Christ, I am proud to have thus been, what she graciously called, her representative this year.

My heart is almost broken with grief, and yet I am conscious of divine comfort in the thought of her exaltation. Here in this strange land I bow in prayer for our great membership, our world-wide company, that we may come up to her hope for us, that we may be absolutely true to our high commission. She has always beckoned us "up higher," and now in a still holier sense,

"Allures to brighter worlds, and leads the way."

Yours, dear comrades, in solemn grief, but holy hope, (Mrs.) J. K. Barney.

Port Said, March 3, 1898.

From New South Wales.

Dear Union Signal:—You American white-ribboners are constantly affording your Australian sisters delightful surprises, and this year is proving no exception to the rule. I esteem it a great honor to be added to your list of contributors, and shall feel great pleasure in supplying occasional items of news concerning our work, etc., which I think would be of general interest to your readers, but which our colonial reporter might omit.

I am very thankful to be able to tell you that white-ribbon sentiment is spreading and deepening in this colony, and we are not asked as frequently as formerly, what our little white bow means, and wherever we are entertained, wine, as a rule, is now banished from the menu.

Two charming girls, members of our local Y union, have just returned from doing crusade work all the world round. Their family went on a visit to England just before the Queen's Jubilee, and during those stirring scenes our two girlies were often asked the meaning of the little white bow which they faithfully wore. When inspecting the Tower of London they were questioned by their guide, and they spoke so earnestly about the W. C. T. U. that the good man said his two daughters should join their union, and was quite surprised and disappointed when he heard that it met monthly in a suburb of Sydney, the capital of Australasia.

After visiting the sights of London and other parts of the United Kingdom they spent some months with their Italian father's relatives in France, Switzerland and Italy, many of whom were greatly astonished at their persistent refusal to partake of the light wines of the country, even upon festive occasions. They bring back with them many pleasant memories and a delightful memento of their visit in a photo of themselves taken in a gondola at Venice, with their white bows beautifully conspicuous; and I feel perfectly certain they have also left behind them many pleasant memories and warm friends, and that the white bows with their meaning will not be easily forgotten.

Would that all our members were equally faithful to their vow "to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in all intoxicating liquors," and that all our girls would remember that the more gifted and attractive they are, the greater is their influence for good or evil, over all with whom they come in contact.

We are still feeling the refreshing and the impetus to our work which were given by the mission of our dear Sister Barney, and last week we were greatly aroused and encouraged by the visit of another notable American, a very different woman from "sweet Susan Barney," but one who is doing noble work on our white-ribbon lines in the face of many and great difficulties. I refer to Mrs. Dr. Mansell, who took her degrees of M. A. and M. D. as Naimie Montelle, New York city, and who has been working as a medical missionary in India nearly twenty-five years. She came here on account of her health, and only remained until the return steamer, but she visited several of our unions during the nine days of her stay, and gave some most interesting addresses, doing my heart much good, by declaring over and over again that alcohol was not necessary in medicine, and naming several good substitutes. She came here a stranger to us all, but I remembered having read in The Union Signal the account of her work recorded at the first World's Convention at Boston in 1891, and hastened to pay her the attention which I consider is due to every white-ribboner from a World's superintendent. I am glad to say she left us greatly benefited by the change, full of love for our beautiful city, and declaring that her life henceforth will be the richer and happier for her short stay among us. Looking out for the next arrival, and hoping ere long to be able to offer a glad welcome to our beloved Hon. National president, known throughout Australasia as "brave Jessie Ackermann." I am

Yours in greatest admiration and esteem,

Amelia J. Pemell.

New Town, Sydney, N. S. W., Australia.

Local Union.

Miss Emma Page, of Olympia, Wash., sends this question and answer.

Q.—What does the Local Union most need? Is it greater interest within and without? Is it new members? Is it an enlarged exchequer? Is it successful means of educating the public in the great principles of our many allied reforms?

A.—Oh, ambitious president, cause-loving, therefore, money-seeking treasurer, progressive superintendent, the contest but awaits your faithful leadership to satisfy your need with liberal hand, even beyond your fondest hopes. With a few exceptions, our women have never made a tithe, nay, a hundredth part the use of this practical force they might.

How can we teach the people? How can we win supporters unless ears be opened to hear and hearts to understand? Addresses of great power and wisdom are often given to empty benches, or to an unsympathetic audience; sacrifice that only God can measure, misses its mark.

Not so with the youthful speakers or the matrons or the fathers coming from the homes of the community, trained for days and weeks in the midst of their respective families till their friends have every great principle of the oration by heart, yet are not so tired of it but they are eager to hear the contest. These speakers draw old and young, the friendly, the indifferent, the opposed, even though the skies lower. And no one puts up his barriers against the arguments of these novice persuaders, and searching Truth makes her way to the inner chamber and finds hospitable room.

"We contest for truth." This is a motto worthy to enlist ardent young souls, middle-aged and gray-haired lovers of their kind all round the world, and touch their tongues with burning eloquence such as men have scarce heard since the days when Paul so splendidly stood for Christ and Him crucified. Only a soul kindled with love for a great cause can be truly eloquent. In the destruction of the liquor traffic and the lifting of men and women up to the single standard of strength and purity that in Christ Jesus we have a cause that must fire the zeal of every lover of humanity, a cause to bring out the gift of tongues among the babes and the unlettered as well as among the wisest and most cultured. Wherever there are minds to understand and hearts to feel, there must be a yearning desire to stay the reckless waste of life and love and hope that has been for so long a part of the financial policy of so many cities and states. Such can not keep still. Like the martyred Lovejoy, though they die, they must speak the truth.

Prejudice, indifference and selfishness stand in our way. The children and the mothers and fathers are strong to break down these barriers. Let us enlist them in every city and hamlet and country neighborhood, set them against this opposition with their weapons of truth. They will make their way to victory.

If it is prohibition, anti-narcotics, purity, franchise, mercy or peace you want to advance, organize a contest class for it, drill thoroughly, lift every contestant up to the plane of the National motto, "We contest for truth," so that it shall indeed be to them a contest for the establishment of truth in the minds of their hearers, and the cause will run forward. Do the work as thoroughly as possible with your gifts and resources, then rest on God, doubting nothing. Make the most of every help at hand to complete the attractiveness of your program; music, drills, tableaux, concert exercises with the wee, wee ones, etc., and your entertainment will draw well; rich and poor, for the most part, will find the ten or fifteen cents for admission. Your speakers, too, will measure up to the occasion, the greatness of the theme begets power, and "words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

This is education that you may bring to the door of every Christian, every voter, every thinker, and it will prepare the ground for your speakers from abroad as nothing else can.

Sisters, will you not prove the strength of the contest idea this year as never before, and make the now latent forces of the homes about you, active "for God and home and native land?"

There is a difference between coming out of sorrow merely thankful for relief, and coming out of sorrow full of sympathy with and trust in Him who has released us.—Phillips Brooks.

Temperance Temple Items

By Matilda B. Carse.

In everything ye are enriched by Him. He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?—1 Cor. 1:5; Rom. 8:32

Only a little over two months left in which to complete raising the $300,000 to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds. July 1 will soon be here. Mr. Field, it will be remembered, extended his offer of $50,000 until July 1, 1898, conditioned on the entire $300,000 being raised by that time. It was to work for the consumation of this much desired end, that our beloved Chieftain went to New York in January. She was just in the midst of making her plans when the dread summons came. In these days of dark bereavement it is well to ponder the words she wrote before she left us. In the memorable letter about the Temple, written three weeks before her departure, she says:

"I do not believe we can overestimate what it would be to have the Temple pass into the hands of the brewers, as they have vowed it should, and that they would make of Willard Hall a beer tunnel. Knowing that faith without works is dead, I have already given the birthday fund, of $3,000, presented me by white-ribbon women, and have publicly put my home in jeopardy for the payment of the bonds. I have consecrated this, my fifty-ninth year, to try to help clear off the $300,000 worth of Temple Bonds, so as to have the record of our white-ribbon women worthy of the successors of those Crusade mothers, whom history will hold in hallowed remembrance."

✠

In view of this her dying message, how every woman in our great organization should be up and at work to help pay off this, our honorable debt on the "House Beautiful," and thus make ourselves "worthy successors of these Crusade mothers" and of such a leader as Frances Willard. A little help just now from each white-ribboner will do the work. The Temple Trustees appeal to white-ribboners asking that each give at least one dollar toward the Temple as a monument to Miss Willard, and also to carry out her last wish to have the Temple Trust Bonds paid off (about $100,000 more will do this). If, as we know, there are white-ribboners who have not this much to give, let them send for some of our collection cards or Temple Wheels and they can, through their use, readily secure the desired amount.

✠

Mrs. Fred De La Maty, Fremont, Neb., writes in behalf of the rank and file, suggesting the following admirable plan, that the National officers ask, through the state president, one dollar per member for the Temple as a monument to Miss Willard, and they transmit to the district, county and local presidents the request, asking that each union appoint a superintendent of "Willard Monument Fund" to collect the above amount. If some are unable to pay, the Temple superintendent is to raise it outside the union. Mrs. De La Maty adds: "The Grant monument subscription dragged along many years through lack of personal appeals and the failure of the people to respond to a general call. It seems this is a work which is a privilege of Miss Willard's devoted followers, and the members of the W. C. T. U. are surely the ones to do it." We heartily recommend the plan as outlined above. The Temple Trustees sent a letter to all the state presidents some time ago, asking that they unite in such a call, but as Mrs. De La Maty truly says, "The manner of carrying the plan out may make all the difference between success and failure."

✠

Dr. Sarah H. Morris, Buffalo, N. Y., is a fine speaker. She will speak Sunday afternoons or evenings within sixty miles of Buffalo for the collections, which she will devote to the Temple.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

"Where's Mother?"

BURSTING in from school or play,
This is what the children say;
Trooping, crowding, big and small,
On the threshold, in the hall—
Joining in the constant cry,
Ever as the days go by,
"Where's mother?"

From the weary bed of pain
This same question comes again;
From the boy with sparkling eyes,
Bearing home his earliest prize;
From the bronzed and bearded son,
Perils past and honors won—
"Where's mother?"

Burdened with a lonely task,
One day we may vainly ask
For the comfort of her face,
For the rest of her embrace;
Let us love her while we may,
Well for us that we can say,
"Where's mother?"

Pussy Willow Day.

BY ALICE C. HALE.

DURING Saturday's walk along the river bank, Miss M.'s class discovered that the willows had put out their gray, furry buds from the brown coverings, and were swaying lazily to and fro on the budding twigs. Ready hands soon gathered a large bunch, for the children knew that Miss M. had been waiting some days for the willow buds to be brought in.

Just a few days before she had said: "Children, we ought to have some pussy-willows by this time." So all were on the lookout for them, and felt sure that the day Miss M. set for the pussy-willows would be of more than usual interest and pleasure.

Every Monday morning Miss M. had a pretty drawing of the willow buds in one corner of the blackboard, and on the opposite board was a bunch of twigs, with veritable little pussy-cat's climbing up the stems, ears, paws, tails, complete as if the furry little buds had turned into kittens in some mysterious way. Such funny little pussies, too! thoughtful, gay, sleepy, mischievous, just ready to spring from their slender perches on some unsuspecting mouse, and yet enough like pussy-willows to be recognized directly by the bright-eyed class of seven-year-olds, assembled in Miss M.'s sunny rooms.

The pussy-willows from the river bank were in a tall, brown jar on the table, and after the opening exercises, each child was given a branch with several soft buds on it, and a nice sheet of paper, and were told to put on the paper a picture of the twig they each had. Each one was busy at once making a drawing of his particular twig and buds.

After the drawings were completed, Miss M. collected them, that she might select some of the best to be colored at a subsequent lesson, for the children were often allowed to color drawings that showed careful and thoughtful work.

Then the children all told of something they could see or knew about the willow twigs they held, and some of the best statements were written on the blackboard for a reading lesson later in the day. One told of the way the buds grew on the stem; another, of the color and hard brown coverings of the buds that protected them all the cold winter. And another discovered that these were like the buds of the horse-chestnut tree they had examined a few days before. By looking closely, the children were able to see the faint, yellow tinge underneath the gray, furry covering, and discovered they were looking at flower buds.

When the children had finished their talk, Miss M. had a story for them, which she said would be reproduced for a reading lesson, and she told them the story of Pussy-willow's Hood, which she had found in Miss Pratt's "Little Flower Talks."

PUSSY-WILLOW'S HOOD.

Pussy-willow had been shut up in her house by the brook all winter, but one morning she opened her door and stepped out and found that spring had come. None of the flowers were up yet; the brook, the birds, the buds and a few green grass blades were all the friends she saw.

"Why, whom have we here?" asked the brook, in surprise. "Mistress Pussy-willow, as I live! Good-morning, Pussy; you are up bright and early; but why do you wear that fur hood? Summer is coming, and every day the sun gets warmer!"

"Oh," said Pussy-willow, "Mother Nature told me to keep it on, lest I get a toothache."

Everybody was glad to see Pussy. They all had something to say to her, but they were all curious to know why she had on that fur hood.

Poor Pussy! She was tempted to take it off, they all said so much about it; but she didn't.

To make matters worse, Mr. Robin whispered some sly things to Pussy's friends, and the next morning, when Pussy came out, the birds, the buds, the grass and the brook began to shout, "Baldhead! baldhead! Pussy-willow has to wear a hood because she has no hair! Pussy-willow is a cheat!"

Pussy felt very bad, but all she said was, "Wait and see."

One morning, not long after this, every one had a surprise.

There was Pussy-willow with no fur hood on her head, but bright, golden curls dancing in the breeze.

"Pussy is not a baldhead; she has long, golden curls!" cried all her friends, and mischief-making Mr. Robin went and hid his head for shame.

When the story was finished, Miss M. had the language class write what they could remember of it, and the number class had pussy-willow problems and pussy-willow twigs to measure and compare.

Then the geography class had a lesson about the river where the willows grow.

"Pussy-willow day is the nicest day we have had this spring," said Mollie, as she bade her teacher good-night.—The School Journal.

A Clever Pig.

WHEN Jack entered the sitting-room the other day and found Mary on the floor with her farmyard toys arranged in orderly array before her, he bethought himself of a story he had read. Said he:

"Molly, that fat pig reminds me of a very clever one that got the best of a big dog on shipboard."

"Tell me about it," said Mary.

"Yes, I will. I read it only yesterday. This pig and dog were once passengers on the same ship, and became quite good friends. They used to eat their cold victuals off the same tin platter. They never quarreled or fought, and the only thing that made any trouble between them was the dog's kennel. Mr. Piggy did not understand why the dog should have a warm, sheltered house to creep into out of the cold and wet, while he should have to slip about on the deck in the cold.

"The kennel was not large enough to hold both, and piggy seemed to think that if he could get first possession of it at night, it should belong to him. If the dog found piggy in it, he would growl and show his teeth, but piggy would not come out.

"One wet afternoon the dog concluded to retire early, so he went to his kennel and curled down for a snooze. Piggy had the same mind; but, when he got to the kennel, he found it already occupied. He gave a grunt of dissatisfaction. A bright idea came into his mind. He would play a trick on doggy. Trudging off to the place where their dinner plate was lying, he pushed it to a part of the deck where the dog could see it. Turning his back to the kennel, piggy began to rattle the empty plate, and munch as though he had a good meal before him. That was too much for doggy! Piggy having a feast and he not there to enjoy it? Never! Out he ran to the plate, and he had no sooner got his nose in it than piggy was off like a shot and safe inside the kennel. Wasn't that cute of him?"

"Yes, indeed. Did doggy get him out?"

"No, indeed; he could not make piggy budge. That night he had to sleep on the soft side of a board, while piggy had his house all to himself."
—Youth's Temperance Banner.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I want to tell you about something I saw the other day, and it made me blush and at the same time feel very sorry.

I was passing by a beer saloon in the city and I noticed over the sign "Lager Beer," kept by a German, that he had the American eagle and the Ameriean flag and the German flag. It looked as if the keeper wished to say, Don't you see that my business and my saloon are protected by the flag of the United States government and the American eagle! That was what made me blush, to think that he had a right to keep a saloon where many men were enticed to spend their money for that which was not bread.

You and I, my dear boys and girls, are going to work and never give up until the saloons shall have to go, and our own dear country's flag no longer be disgraced by protecting a drinking place. Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—This is our second letter to the Cozy Corner. We are eleven and ten years old. We belong to the L. T. L. Our L. T. L. led the Blue Ribbon Club. We have about forty members. We like it very much. Our papa and mamma are Prohibitionists and our mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. We have two saloons in our town and two drug stores. Your loving nieces, ELEANOR AND DYER LEMON.

Dillsboro, Ind.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl ten years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I always read the Cozy Corner. My papa is a Prohibitionist. I have a little brother seven years old. We have no L. T. L. here. I belong to the Junior Endeavor. My mamma is a member of the the W. C. T. U.

Your loving niece,

Kingsville, Mo. MARY EVANS.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I have just been reading Cozy Corner and I thought I would write a letter, too. I belong to the Humane Society and the Junior Endeavor Society. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and my papa is a Prohibitionist. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and we always read it. I am nine years of age and I am in the fourth reader, and I am going into the fifth. This is my first letter to the Cozy Corner. EVA R. SMITH.

Mantorville, Minn.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to be one of your nieces. You have a great many nephews and nieces, but I think you will let me be one, too. I am eleven years old and I have no brothers or sisters. Of course, I can say like the rest of the cousins, papa is a prohibition worker, and mamma is a W. C. T. U. woman and worker, and I am a little temperance girl. There is no L. T. L. here. I like to read THE UNION SIGNAL and I enjoy the Cozy Corner best of all, I think. Please may I be your niece?

East Aurora, N. Y. ETHEL BOWEN.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

ENIGMA.

15.

I am composed of 13 letters.
My 4 and 5 is an article.
My 7, 2, 8 and 9 is a relative.
My 6, 2 and 13 is something you do in town.
My 9, 11 and 12 is the largest weight.
My 6, 7, 1 and 3 is a kind of fish.
My 10, 2 and 9 is a dwelling.
My whole is a renowned woman.

West Union, Ill. LENA HAMILL.

Correct answers to No. 11 were sent by Ethel C. Watts, New York city; to No. 13 by Francis Wright, Sterling, Kan.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED APRIL 14.

14. The Evangelist.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

Organ of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—Frances E. Willard.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—Lady Henry Somerset.
MANAGING EDITOR—Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—Mrs. Clara C. Chapin.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres.
Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Treas. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Sec'y.
Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Me.
Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill.
Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago.
Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Burlington, Ia.
Mrs. Evalyn Graham, Newark, O.
Mrs. Eliza H. Gage Cutter, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—Mrs. F. E. Beauchamp, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for The Union Signal or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your Union Signal and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

"Unto This Last."

OUR readers will remember that the last public funeral service for our beloved and now sainted leader was held at Evanston on the 24th of February, at the close of which the precious casket was placed in the vault at Rosehill.

"Ever since that day," wrote Anna Gordon, on the 6th of April, "my selfish, desolate heart has sent into the distance the day when we must transfer the loved casket to 'the low green tent whose curtain never outward swings.' On Saturday last, as I renewed the fragrant 'lily censers' at her feet, she seemed almost to chide me gently and to say, 'Why do you leave me here in the cold and the dark away from my own? The glad Easter comes! Will not that hallowed day of resurrection help you take me through the promised white path of pure refining fire to the quiet mound where I can "creep in with mother" and be with "my four"?' My heart stood still for the pain it held while I reverently renewed the covenant made with her many times in life, 'It shall be just as you think right, dearest. I will be true "even unto this last." ' "

Strength was given for the carrying out of the wishes of her who even in dying remembered the to-morrows of the world.

On Saturday morning the 9th of April, a sorrowful little group gathered at Anna Gordon's request in an "upper chamber" for a brief prayer service in which Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson voiced the thought of all: "We bring to Thee who art the Healer our broken hearts. We know that we shall receive comfort from Him who hath Himself trodden a via dolorosa sadder than our own, and borne for love's sake even a heavier cross than ours."

An hour later the nearest friends and relatives gathered in the beautiful chapel at Graceland cemetery, three miles from Rosehill. Here the casket rested midst palms and fragrant flowers.

The loving group about it included Anna Gordon, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Elizabeth Gordon, Mary Powderly, and the following relatives: Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar F. Crandall, Prof. and Mrs. James H. Norton, Miss Rilla Norton and Mr. and Mrs. George Brace.

The brief, impressive service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Milton L. Terry, of the Garrett Biblical Institute, at Evanston. He read from Isaiah: "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee," and other appropriate Scripture. Through the tender, comforting prayer ran an undertone of grateful praise that such a soul had dwelt among us and was living still to bless.

The friends followed the casket to the door of the little inner sanctuary below the chapel, whose white walls gleamed through a greenery of palms. "Never before was this room so beautiful," said the tender-hearted official in charge. "Foliage and flowers were placed here to-day to do honor to the greatest woman in the world."

Nowhere about the sacred place, nor in any of the preparations, was there one dread shadow of death or one hint of decay.

The casket was tenderly borne to its final resting place through the pathway of palms, which bent lovingly over it, as Anna Gordon walked for the last time beside the cherished form. "Open the door very gently," said the director to his assistants, as the casket was placed where no flames touched it, but where in the white inner chamber through the long hours of the day and night was wrought upon the precious form within it the change that lifted it beyond the touch of decay.

Who can doubt that through the solemn midnight and on to the Easter dawn the angels watched and waited there, though no eye saw the vision? Surely in more than one heart was heard a voice saying, "She is not here; she is risen."

On Sunday afternoon, amid the Easter sunshine, a hushed and reverent company gathered at the Willard lot in Rosehill Cemetery. Anna Gordon had received the ashes at Graceland—where they had passed through the white heat of purification—and had carried them to Rosehill. The grave of Madam Willard was opened, the sides lined with evergreens, the mound of earth also hidden by green boughs. As the sacred ashes were literally committed to the precious dust beneath them, they mingled with exquisite roses, above which were placed sprays of evergreen, sent from the birthplaces of Miss Willard's parents, of her brother and sister and of herself, from Forest Home and from Rest Cottage; then all was made radiant with bright blossoms, emblems of the glorious springtime. A moss-covered box, fragrant with lilies of the valley and pansies, and which had held a precious inner box of purest white, was placed over the mother's heart. Surrounding the whole in beauty and fragrance, were the floral tributes of friends, and thus she "crept in with mother."

The whole scene was a picture never to be forgotten. Anna Gordon kneeled at the head of the grave; close to her were the relatives, Woman's Christian Temperance Union officers and leaders and a circling throng of earnest, tearful neighbors and friends.

The white silk banner which had draped the casket nestled close to the stone which bore the name of "St. Courageous." The soft gray clouds drifting across the blue of an April sky, seemed to pause, hovering over that open grave. High above it swung the bough of an old oak, from which fluttered down a few brown and wrinkled leaves, as if eager to share the Easter bloom. A maple, mossy with bursting buds, and a soft wind sighing in the leaves of a solemn pine, seemed each to whisper a promise to guard the sacred spot. Upon the blessed hush broke the soft music of the hymn so often sung at Rest Cottage,

> "There is a land of pure delight,
> Where saints immortal dwell."

Rev. Dr. Waters, pastor of the Emmanual church of Evanston, repeated the twenty-third psalm, and offered a simple, heartfelt prayer. Then again the music rose:

> "There are lonely hearts to cherish,
> While the days are going by."

The hymn went on until

> "Let your face be like the morning,
> While the days are going by,"

floated out above the rustle of the last year's leaves and the whisper of the pines. And more than one bowed face was lifted with the look of high resolve that showed the breaking of the morning on the soul.

Rev. Dr. Terry of the Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, prefaced the beautiful burial service with the following tender and appropriate address:

It has seemed fitting and beautiful to select the holy Easter day on which to discharge the last office of affection and duty to our honored dead. And inasmuch as it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take to Himself the spirit of our beloved sister, we bring that which was mortal to the hallowed spot where the loved forms of her father and mother and sister and brother have been peacefully waiting for her coming. We do here recall how she told us, while she was with us in her mortal form, that since the far June day when her sister Mary went to dwell with God, the world invisible had been to her the only real world. Now has she herself passed on to see and know the things invisible.

So on this blessed day of the springtide, when the birds are singing and the flowers she loved are bursting into bloom, we bring the sacred treasure of her dust and place it by the fond mother, to whom she was wont to cling—not in childhood only at Forest Home, but also in life's serene meridian, when she was giving all her strength to repeat her sister's message to the world, and tell everybody to be good. She wandered far, and her voice has been heard by thousands of thousands in distant lands, and now at last, worn out with many toils in loyal service to the best friend that woman ever knew, she hath lain down to sleep as if nestling once more in the bosom of the mother, whom she trusted as the guardian angel of her early and her later life.

We are tearful at her tomb, but we comfort one another with the thought that our Lord Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus, where Mary and Martha were wont to go and weep; and like all those who know the power of His resurrection, we sorrow not as others sorrow who have no hope. For we know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we do not look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

After the Gloria Patria and the benediction, which was pronounced by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Bradley, of the Theological Seminary, Evanston, and the gentle covering of mother and daughter in the soft, warm garment of friendly earth, the friends came one by one and spread over it their gifts of flowers until the precious mound was one fragrant mantle of Easter bloom. At its foot Miss Gordon laid her offering of field daisies, whose white, pure faces and golden hearts reminded one of the friend now out of sight. Near the grave stood three lovely palms, one for the father, one for the brother, one for the sister, thus giving them a share in welcoming to their quiet resting place the last dear member of the now unbroken family. Late and long the people lingered, as if reluctant to leave the spot where this Easter day their loved leader had silently testified to her unswerving loyalty to her own soul's view of right and given her last great lesson to the world.

An Opportunity for the Rank and File to be Heard.

Dear Ten Thousand and more Local Unions:—We have often coveted an expression on your part concerning The Union Signal, that we might possibly make it more helpful to you. It exists for your benefit and we have often wondered if many of you think of it as "a dear letter from home," as our Saint Frances used to call it.

It is a great thing to try to bring something helpful to all the countries represented in the World's W. C. T. U., and to our own forty departments, and at the same time to preserve the relation of all of the parts to the whole—the correlation of the kindred lines of thought and work to each other and to the ultimate end and aim of all our labors, and we are sure that an expression from the local unions all over the world would be helpful to us. We have letters in The Union Signal from the different countries and states, and now we would like to hear from the individual unions in answer to the following QUESTIONS.

1. What per cent of the members of your union subscribe for The Union Signal?
2. What part of the paper is most interesting?
3. What part of the paper is most helpful and why?
4. What subject would you like to have exploited more largely in our columns than has been done heretofore?
5. What proportion of the subscribers would approve of returning to the former price, $1.50 per year, to secure the use of a better grade of paper, and other improvements?

RULES GOVERNING THE VOTE ON THE QUESTIONS.

(a) Only members subscribing for The Union Signal should vote, but this may include those taking a paper together.

(b) Only such unions are asked to reply as can secure a majority vote of the subscribers on one or more of the questions.

(c) Questions upon which such majority vote can not be obtained are not to be mentioned in the reply to The Union Signal.

(d) Each answer should be numbered the same as the question to which it refers is numbered.

Question 5 is not for publication, but for our own information.

Announce this plan at your first regular meeting after this is received, and if possible take the votes at the following meeting, or at as early a date as a good representation of the members can be secured.

If majority votes cannot be secured at one meeting try it at subsequent meetings.

The limit of time for receiving replies will be announced later.

Report as soon as possible after the union has voted. Sign the name of the union and the state. Write only on one side of the paper and address The Union Signal, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Hoping to hear from you at an early date, we remain expectantly,

Your Servants and Co-laborers in the work,

The Editors.

Incineration.

The practice of incinerating or reducing to ashes the mortal part of man was general among ancient people. Egypt, Judæa and China were the exceptional countries. In Greece only certain people were denied the privilege, and one of the Twelve Tables of Rome makes mention of the custom. It was common till the end of the fourth Christian century. While opposition lingers in the minds of some, others, as Rev. Haweis, of London, have taken a prominent part in the modern reforming movement, and Lord Salisbury disposed of the objections from a Christian point of view by asking, "What would in such a case become of the Christian martyrs?" Science has shown that heat merely produces quickly what otherwise would take a long time to accomplish, and from a sanitary point of view this method is greatly to be desired.

It is less repulsive than burial and more beautiful. It has in it more that is suggestive of the refining power that fits the soul to be the bride of Christ, and more that speaks of the glory of the celestial body, the spiritual body, the image of the heavenly, immortality. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, speaking of the services for Miss Willard, called it "the bright and shining way, by which only the dross is destroyed and the essence of the body is purified and freed."

The wonderful white heat that through the long hours of a day and a night work out, without the presence of flame in contact with the body, a transformation that can never give place to corruption, brings us close to the thought of Paul, "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Two Round-the-World Missionaries.

Most remarkable successes have attended the labors of our round-the-world missionaries, Mrs. Barney and Miss Parrish. The great gatherings eager to hear, the official recognition given them, the providential opportunities, the prepared soil waiting for the seed, the ready adoption of methods, the beseechings from afar for information—all these conspire to verify what our secretaries write from many lands, "There were never such opportunities before, never such an awakening. The way in which it came about that unions were organized in Jerusalem and at Port Said by Mrs. Barney, are instances of many just as unexpected and providential happenings to her in her journey around the world. Her letters, so simple, straightforward and plain, have a dynamic power which speaks of God. We hope no one has failed to read them. Although Mrs. Barney has reached home, one of her letters remains to be published. She has done a great and wonderful work with her four or five hundred services—not prevented from keeping a single appointment—and two great National unions added. No wonder that she closes her last letter, as you will see, with a note of triumph worthy of the archangel Gabriel.

Then there is dear Miss Parrish in Japan, with work enough appealing to her to overwhelm a half dozen women, yet undaunted and untiring, it would seem, she labors on. But those of us who get the bright, but often pathetic little personal notes, know the awful burdens she is bearing and the nervous power it takes to attack the wrong as she does. To speak to large audiences, to students and before learned men, and through interpreters, and when so much depends upon every sentence, every plan, is a burden but few can realize. Added to this public work is the preparation of literature for the country, and personal instruction so taxing, so wearing, as those of us who have drilled new recruits in this country realize somewhat. How we should appreciate her letters to The Union Signal, so perfect in diction that they seldom require the change of a single word or point—and her private correspondence. Let no one exact the last named, and let all pray that her strength fail not as the hot days come on and the long journeys she is to undertake. What an opportunity the Y's have in this educated young woman, pure, sweet and strong, prosecuting the work in the schools in Japan, and how they ought to lighten all the burdens possible for her. She seems to have a wide outlook; to be a true general. America has sent her and America must respond to her calls and hold up her hands. God bless Miss Parrish and Mrs. Barney, and give us more like them.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Johansdottir, W. C. T. U. president of Iceland, spoke for the District of Columbia Easter Sabbath.

One from the District of Columbia says: "I cannot speak too much in praise of the work of Mrs. Ellis. She always seems to know what to do, to say, and how to do or say it. She is a first-class, all-around woman."

The following telegram signed by the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. was sent to President McKinley in reply to his letter:

"Peace hath her victory as well as war. Please accept the thanks of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

The department of scientific temperance instruction, through its superintendent, Mrs. Hunt, petitioned the United States Congress "to seek earnestly for freedom for Cuba by the way of peace," and that "our sons might not be called to the horrors of a war that diplomatic statesmanship can avert with honor to our nation and still discharge its highest obligations."

Miss Agnes Slack writes April 1: "The Rev. Mr. Haweis, author of 'Music and Morals,' one of the most cultured Church of English clergymen, preached last Sunday morning for fifty minutes on 'The Life of Frances Willard.' I consider this event a great step in advance." She also says, "My correspondence is increasing rapidly and the work has just now the most wonderful opening."

The American Home-Finding Association, has, since September last, placed in carefully selected family homes, an average of nearly one person each week day. The Association is organized for the purpose of finding home-life for children, boys and girls, mother and child without separation, also ex-prisoners. Families who would give a home to any of the classes named, should address the American Home-Finding Association, 167 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

The summer session of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute is approaching. Dr. Gray, one of the best Bible teachers ever at Northfield, will have charge of Bible Introduction, Christian Evidence and Homiletics at 9 o'clock A. M. for the four months, about five weeks being given to each in the order named. The eleven o'clock hour will be devoted to the synthetic study of the Scriptures. Dr. R. A. Torrey and Mr. W. R. Newell will also teach in the regular work of the Institute, and courses in music will be furnished. Those interested should address D. L. Moody, The Bible Institute, Chicago.

The Vacant Lot Committee of New York city announce that for the fourth year the cultivation of vacant lots by the unemployed will be continued. They have secured an additional tract of 321 acres, and call for aid to pay for the plowing, seed, fertilizers, tools, etc. The treasurer is Jacob H. Schiff, 27 Pine street, New York city. Agricultural instruction is given, and it is claimed that at the end of the season many of the planters are willing and anxious to go to the country because they know how to do farm work. In the distribution preference is given to men with families. The land will be divided into half acre farms. Particular gratification is expressed in that superannuated and partially crippled men are able to support themselves by their labor and that tenement house people thus have a chance to help themselves without destroying their self-respect. The committe believe that if the large plots of vacant land were freely offered the plan could be made self-supporting in every large city in the United States.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Chicago Y. P. C. T. U.

MUCH interest centers in the progress of the movement among the Chicago young people to lend impetus and inspiration to their work by the magic power of song. Weekly rehearsals of the great temperance chorus are going steadily forward under the direction of Professor Bilhorn and the membership, which is expected to reach one thousand one hundred, grows apace. In connection with this line of work, the following song has been written, words and music by two of the members, has been copyrighted and is on sale for the benefit of the society. Price, etc., will be found in the regular advertisement of the same in The Union Signal.

A SONG OF THE MAINE.

Sad is the tale, the heart grows cold,
For sailors the sea was a bier.
The woe of the Maine in sorrow is told;
But what of those perishing here?

Chorus—
Hark! to the Goddess of Liberty;
Hasten the call to obey:
"Honor the brave who sank 'neath the wave,
But save the boys drowning to-day!"

O'er the dark waters their torturing groans,
E'en now fall clear on the ear;
But we're deaf to the cries and the pitiful moans
Of those who are dying so near.

"What of the Maine?" the question we ask,
With tremor and bated breath;
But to no court yet is given the task
How drunkards come to their death!

Ye who love country, and bravely would fight,
Our country is calling for you;
'Tis Alcohol's treachery! Dark is the night;
To the rescue! O brothers, be true!

A Letter From Spain.

ONE of the most interested and interesting delegates to our great conventions last year was Miss Esther Alonso Lopez, president of the Columbian Y. The following letter from her will be enjoyed by all white-ribboners, particularly the Y's:

Dear Y Editor:—Believing it might interest all of white-ribboners to know a little about our common work here in this beautiful city of San Sebastian, Spain, among the students of the international institute, I will write to you the best I may.

Since I returned from America last December, after visiting the World's and National Conventions of the W. C. T. U., I have been planning to write a little about the work here. I have noticed lately more desire to know something about the principal persons in the temperance movement. I have told them all about the convention and of those I met there. Many of my companions have asked me frequently when we are going to have a visit from some of you.

Last night we had a most interesting meeting on temperance. The Christian Endeavor Society holds its weekly meeting Wednesday evening. In the topics for this month, we found for last Wednesday, 23d of March, "Every kind of Intemperance." We thought to make it a memorial service for our beloved Miss Willard.

The chapel was very simply decorated. On the platform Miss Willard's photograph was placed on an easel, and above her picture hung a pretty crown of laurel, ivy and primroses tied with a large bow of white ribbon, the work of the temperance committee. Beside it and on a little table was placed a globe and around it the white ribbon and the golden Y that the Y's gave me at the convention at Buffalo. The front of the organ was covered with a white veil with golden stars.

We sang some of the hymns Miss Willard loved best and read her biography and many articles about her, some that she had written, and others about the character and the wonderful life she lived while she was among us. We closed the meeting with the beautiful hymn, "God be with you till meet again."

After the service was over, everyone went to the picture and silently looked at her for a moment; even the little girls of our college went to see, and kneeling down kissed her and called her "dear and lovable." Our hearts overflowed with the sadness that we felt at the loss of such a great friend and help to the world. Yes, we went out of the room sad and silent, but with a greater desire to imitate her and to be to others what she was to humanity.

I am sincerely yours,
Esther Alonso Lopez,
Avenida, 40, San Sebastian, Spain.
March 24, 1898.

World's W. C. T. U.

New South Wales.

THE work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in New South Wales is steadily progressing, the various unions still holding on their way, although some in the more distant parts of the colony have great difficulties to encounter; yet they hold bravely on, upheld by the prayers of their sisters in more favored localities.

The Colonial executive meet regularly once a month for the transaction of business under the presidency of Mrs. J. E. Nolan, Colonial president. At one of these meetings held at the W. C. T. U. headquarters, a pleasing incident took place, viz., the presentation of an elegant silver tea service and salver, upon which was engraved a suitable inscription expressing the love and esteem of the W. C. T. U. women of the colony for their leader. The Sydney union also presented to their president, Mrs. Courtney Smith, a beautifully bound Teacher's Bible as a token of their love and affection.

Several receptions and drawing-room meetings have been held to welcome notable visitors, among whom may be mentioned Mrs. Kirk, of Victoria; Mrs. Stark, Grafton, New South Wales; Mrs. Moore, Angledool, New South Wales; Mrs. Foggett, Coolgardie, Western Australia; Mrs. Mansell, M. A., M. D., Himalaya Mountains, India, and the Rev. J. A. Mackelvey, Chicago. At the last meeting of the colonial executive it was unanimonsly resolved to invite Mrs. Harrison Lee to hold a two months' mission in New South Wales.

When the sad news was flashed over the wires of the death of our beloved leader, Miss Frances Willard, every heart was touched. The white-ribboners in this far-off land feel that they have indeed lost a friend, as well as their leader. At a meeting of the Colonial executive, held at headquarters in Sydney, N. S. W., it was resolved that all white-ribboners should wear a tie of black ribbon with their white bow for six months. Many of our prominent women are wearing mourning, and everywhere the question is asked, "Who will fill her place?" Memorial services have been held in some of the city churches, and in several of the local unions. On Tuesday, March 1, a special memorial service was held by the Colonial W. C. T. U. in the Pitt Street Congregational church. The pulpit was draped in black, and suspended in front of the rostrum was the beautiful banner of the union, made of rich white moire silk, with gold letters, and across this was a large black cross, with the inscription, "We mourn our Chieftain now at rest." Miss Willard's portrait was placed under the pulpit, encased in a wreath of laurel leaves and surmounted by a crown of beautiful white flowers. Underneath this was a black banner, with the words, "Gone home," traced in pure white flowers. There was also numerous wreaths and baskets of flowers around the rostrum, the whole gracefully set off by the stars and stripes. Colonel Bell, American consul, presided, and there was with him on the platform Mrs. J. E. Nolan, Colonial president; Mrs. Courtney Smith, Sydney president; Mrs. Masterman, Colonial corresponding secretary; Miss Pemell, World's superintendent of flower missions; the Hon. J. S. Larke, Canada; the Rev. Tremayne Dunstan, the Rev. F. Boyer, Mr. E. F. H. Knapp, the members of the Colonial executive, and representatives from the I. O. G. T., the I. O. Rechabites, the Local Option League and other kindred societies. Speeches were delivered by the chairman, Colonel Bell, and others.

At a meeting of the Colonial executive it was resolved "That all white-ribboners in New South Wales be invited to contribute to a fund toward paying the debt off the Temple in Chicago, to be called the Frances Willard Memorial Fund." All subscriptions to be sent to Miss Marwick, treasurer, who has kindly undertaken to forward the same to Mrs. Carse.

A special memorial service was also held at St. John's Presbyterian church, Oxford St., Paddington, by the Paddington union, on Tuesday, March 1. Memorial services were also held in some of the city churches; on February 26 at St. Paul's, Redfern, Rev. F. B. Boyce, and also on Sunday, the 27th, at the Pitt Street church, Rev. E. Tremayne Dunstan.

E. J. Ward,
Official Reporter, New South Wales.

News from the Field.

Nebraska.

THE deep sorrow and love for our fallen leader, has found expression in Nebraska as in other states, in memorial meetings in many places where the beautiful life of Frances Willard has been dwelt upon by those who loved her and the lesson of her good deeds for humanity presented to the public in such an impressive way that high thoughts and good resolves have been born in the hearts of multitudes. These meetings have been largely attended, and as a rule, participated in by all the pastors who have gladly united with our unions in honoring a noble woman.

At Fremont the service was conducted by pastors, the union attending in a body. At Beatrice the service was conducted by the union. Rev. C. S. Dudley, who had an acquaintance with Miss Willard in her home town, gave an eloquent tribute to her memory. Rev. G. W. Crofts, the poet preacher, known throughout the United States by his poems on Armenia, read a beautiful poem written for the occasion, embodying the earnest motto of Miss Willard, "My Life is a Vow."

Your reporter, having been present all day in Willard Hall when that wonderful scene of a city—yes, a nation—paying sorrowful homage to "the foremost woman of the world" was enacted, gave an account of the interesting features of the day. A collection of $10.62 was taken for the Temple. Pawnee held two services and raised about ten dollars for the Temple fund. Agents selling "The Beautiful Life of Frances Willard," are donating ten per cent of the proceeds to the same fund. The union at St. Paul, composed of twenty members, has raised and sent to the Temple fund over seventeen dollars in the last six months.

The work of scientific temperance instruction is enjoying quite a revival of interest, owing to the good work done in the past two years by the efficient state superintendent, Mrs. Nickell. A committee of ladies from the East Lincoln union, Mrs. C. E. Bentley, superintendent, visited the four schools in their locality. They found but little attention being paid to the required study of narcotics, no books being used except in the seventh and eighth grades, and these not the indorsed physiologies. A visit to the city superintendent of schools, Professor Saylor, with the request that one-half hour be given to this subject three times a week, was very satisfactory, as he promised to place it in the new course of study he was preparing and has done so. Copies of the indorsed physiologies were shown the board and their action in the matter is awaited. A reception was given to the board of education and public school teachers at the commodious home of Mrs. Dr. Peebles, where the following topics were discussed: "What is the law of scientific temperance instruction?" by state superintendent of public instruction, Mr. Jackson; "Scientific temperance instruction in our city schools, methods and text-books used, and work in different grades," by superintendent Saylor; "The duty of the school board in providing text-books and inforcing in the different grades a full compliance with this law," by Mrs. S. C. O. Upton, a former member of the school board; "What has been accomplished in scientific temperance instruction and how," Miss Mary Watson; "Is it economy to the state to teach scientific temperance instruction?" by Hon. A. G. Wolfenbarger; "How can parents and teachers cooperate to instill temperance habits in the children?" by Mr. Allen, a member of the school board. This lengthy program was listened to with interest, after which a social hour was enjoyed and refreshments served.

Professor Saylor very soon after contributed to the State Journal a fine article on "Woman's Influence in Education," in which the work of the W. C. T. U. and woman's club was highly commended.

State superintendent Jackson also sent out a circular letter to county superintendents asking to what extent the law regarding stimulants and narcotics was carried out in each county. The replies were most encouraging, the reports running as follows: "Every teacher complying;" "Taught in all grades;" "Rigidly complied with;" "Almost universally;" and "As well, if not better taught than any other subject."

Superintendent Jackson is of the opinion that the law is quite fully complied with in Nebraska. He is a warm friend of the W. C. T. U. and we rejoice in the assurance of "a friend at court."

The activity and success of some of the country unions is remarkable. The Surprise union recently celebrated its eleventh anniversary by a pleasant gathering, where the exercises consisted of addresses by some of the constituent members, the reading of a temperance story in six chapters, its composite authorship being the Surprise union.

The original membership was eleven, the present is forty. This union has always kept in the front rank of workers, and has sent out into more active labors its first president, now Nebraska's state president, Mrs. Walker; its first honorary member, Rev. C. E. Bentley, late nominee for president of the Liberty party, and Mrs. Persis Bentley, president East Lincoln union and state superintendent of unfermented wine. Public meetings were also arranged for three evenings, one being held in Bethesda church, where Rev. Mr. Bentley has been pastor for eighteen years, one at Pleasant Lawn church and the Sunday evening meeting which was a Temple rally in Surprise.

Other country unions especially successful are Pleasant Plain and Summit. The latter union asked the ladies of Burchard, its nearest town, where the union has disbanded, to entertain the Pawnee county convention, which they willingly did. The features of the convention were a debate the first evening and a married woman's contest for the second evening. "Resolved that the world is growing better," was the subject of the debate, Mrs. Nesbitt in the affirmative and Mrs. McLoughlin in the negative. A Temple spoon was presented to Mrs. Frances J. Wallis, the winner in the contest, which is spoken of as being very entertaining. Summit union recently invited the husbands of the members to dinner with the neighboring ministers and had a pleasant, social time.

A very encouraging report comes from all over the fifth district. Harvard union makes a speciality of literature and scientific temperance instruction; Hebron's thirty-two members all take The Union Worker. It has nineteen departments. Inland, one year old, has done mercy and relief work and will soon have headquarters. Dorchester has gospel meetings and raises money by birthday teas. Spring Ranch, with a population of a dozen families, has an active union of twenty-seven members. Carleton has as many departments of work as it has members; Sutton, as the home of Clay county's able president, Mrs. Moon, is doing good work. Exeter, with nine members, has the evil effects of alcohol and tobacco taught in the Christian Endeavor meetings and the Sunday-schools and has Bands of Mercy in the schools; Fairfield, though suffering from removals, has held an L. T. L. contest, also a Temple program, which brought ten dollars for the Temple fund. Mothers' meetings are held in many places. Mrs. Welton is the efficient president of the fifth district.

Nebraska has been favored for a short period with the services of Mrs. Baxter who has done much good. We hope to have her again. Mrs. L. G. Johnson is now speaking in the state and is greatly liked. Mrs. Unruh is to come later. Everywhere she spoke on her last visit she is wanted again.

DORA V. WHEELOCK,
State Reporter, Beatrice.

Indian Territory.

OUR unions are so far apart tnat it is difficult to collect material for a report. However, what few reports I have received show that our workers have not been idle.

Juvenile work under the leadership of Mrs. Ella Haynes, of Afton, is flourishing. The Afton L. T. L. is just making its first bow to the public by way of an entertainment. The L. T. L. of Tahlequah has been recently reorganized, with a membership of about fifty, and a young gentleman as juvenile president. They are preparing for a debate.

The department of social purity, through the efforts of the territorial superintendent, Mrs. Minnie Stretch, of Vinita, is receiving more attention than formerly.

Colgate has a thriving union of twenty-three members and six honoraries. This union was organized last June by Miss Mulnix, and has already held nine public meetings. They rejoice in the fact that they have been able to assist the officers in closing the beer joints and gambling dens of the town. They are also giving aid to five orphan children. Mrs. A. J. Jahn is the wide-awake corresponding secretary of this union. Muscogee union is keeping up the usual lines of work. Tahlequah union holds quarterly temperance meetings, in which all the churches unite, furnishes material for a W. C. T. U. column in one of the papers, distributes literature at the National jail, conducts an L. T. L., aids in conducting mothers' meetings and White Shield meetings and have distributed fifty copies of the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL. They hope soon to raise something for the Temple fund. Vinita has had a busy winter, caring for the poor and sick and raising funds for the work. They have recently held four public meetings. A matrons' contest was well received. The secretary writes: "We had two addresses from the Rev. Mary E. Kuhl; her words were inspiring, and her Christ religion seemed to influence all who heard her."

All the unions have aided in various ways the enforcing of the prohibitory law. This requires a constant expense and watchfulness that cannot be understood by one living outside the territory. In explanation I send a clipping from our paper of March 12. Though we can not say the "W. C. T. U. did it" in this case, yet the women did. The W. C. T. U. began the work at Tahlequah, Claremore and other places.

INDIAN TERRITORY SALOON RAIDED.

The marshals raided the liquor sellers again at Ardmore Saturday, and arrested the proprietors of twenty establishments and confiscated all intoxicating liquors found. The prisoners gave bonds in the sum of five hundred dollars each for their appearance, and have been released. This is the second raid in the last two months. About one hundred and forty barrels of malt liquor were seized, and were piled in front of the marshal's office in the care of a watchman awaiting orders from the Attorney-General at Washington. The raid is the result of a petition prepared by women of Ardmore and addressed to the Attorney-General at Washington, asking that he enforce the laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages in the Indian Territory. Government Inspector Brewster, of Washington, was sent by the department to secure evidence. He was assisted by Professor Debarr, a government chemist of Norman, Okla. They claim to have evidence sufficient to convict. The Oklahoma officer says he has purchased intoxicants at three drug stores, and at one establishment pure whisky.

As soon as the sad news of the death of our National president reached here, our territorial president sent notices to all unions to hold memorial services on the 27th, which was generally observed, the various churches uniting with the W. C. T. U. in the service. The churches were crowded to their utmost capacity, many standing quietly throughout the service.

We of the Indian Territory feel the loss of Frances Willard in a special manner. She always showed our weak little union the greatest kindness and sympathy, besides having always spoken a word in favor of our people when opportunity allowed. We feel that the evil she fought (alcohol) has been the greatest hindrance to our progress as a nation.

White-ribboners throughout the territory are made sad and anxious over the ill-health of our territorial president, Mrs. E. N. Ratcliff. She has resigned her position as president and gone to a southern clime. All hearts pray that she may soon be restored to us in health and strength.

(MRS.) T. M. FULLER,
Official Reporter, Tahlequah.

Florida.

LAST year, in convention at Pensacola, we were few in number, and as we looked out over vast fields, white to the harvest, the burden of our cry was, with one of old, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." But we planned largely, and went forth with faith and courage to the seed-sowing.

Sanford, "the Gate City," midway between Tampa and Jacksonville, welcomed the gathering white-ribboners this year. More delegates were in attendance than at any annual meeting since the disastrous freeze of 1895. The First Methodist church, kindly offered for our use, was prettily decorated. The first evening a royal welcome from the mayor, Hon. E. F. Barnes, for the city; from Rev. Chas. Campbell, the clergy; Hon. T. J. Appleyard, the press; Mrs. A. C. Brown, the local union, were most happily responded to by Mrs. Anna E. Rainey, president of St. Augustine union. The president's annual address, replete with gems of thought and good, wholesome advice, fitly closed a pleasant evening.

The second evening we were given a unique greeting from the school children of Sanford, numbering almost two hundred. Led by their principal, Mr. S. M. Tucker, and the school choir, they sang their stirring songs, and two little girls recited. Principal Tucker's address was an earnest appeal for ethical teaching in public schools. Mrs. Sullivan, president of St. Petersburg union, brought the exercises to a successful close by a happy, impromptu talk to the children along L. T. L. lines.

The routine business of day sessions was pleasantly relieved by physical culture exercises under the skilled guidance ot Mrs. A. B. Lowell, of the public school. Also by the reading of papers; four excellent ones were read at intervals.

Four executive sessions were brimful of business, and practical work was laid out for the ensuing year.

Satisfactory results have been attained the past year, as was evidenced by the reports of superintendents of departments and corresponding secretaries.

To the twenty-two departments already adopted were added three others, "Systematic and Proportionate Giving," "Non-Alcoholic Medication" and "The Temple." Of the latter. Mrs. Mattie J. Crippen, Fort Reed, was appointed superintendent. She immediately went to work, appointing local superintendents and organizing her department.

Since the strong, yet tender hands of our leader have been relieved of this self-appointed task of lifting the debt on our "House Beautiful," we feel it more than ever before our duty to lend our aid toward its final perfecting.

Greeting was sent to the Florida G. A. R. encamped at Gainesville: "We are loyal to all veterans. Let us join hands to protect our homes."

Memorial services were held for the promoted sisters of ou. immediate ranks, and on Sunday afternoon for our dear Miss Willard.

Sunday evening Rev. H. W. Little, of DeLand, delivered an earnest and persuasive address before an appreciative audience.

The time for convention hereafter will be early in April. The place for next year has not yet been decided upon.

The general officers remain the same as they were last year: President, Mrs. M. E. L. Webb, Markham; vice-president, Mrs. A. C. Brown, Ft. Reed; corresponding secretary, Miss Minnie E. Neal, DeLand; recording secretary, Mrs. Sara J. Glenn, Tampa; treasurer, Mrs. Flora G. LeBorveau, Jax.

Sixteen new workers were presented to the convention who were there for the first time in Florida, while some of the faces, so familiar grown they seem "part and parcel" of the yearly meeting, were sadly missed. Mrs. Dr. Lewis, of Kissimmee, long a useful and beloved member, bade us goodby at this convention, as she is leaving the state permanently. To recompense us we were given the pleasure of welcoming back Mrs. Mattie J. Crippen, former treasurer, who has been absent two years from the state.

The Tampa union has enjoyed a visit this winter from one of Mississippi's grandest W. C. T. U. women, Mrs. M. J. Trice, of Okolana, a pioneer in reform work in her native town. Her earnestness and faith strengthened and encouraged her Florida sisters.

A Warning to Users of Alum Baking Powders.

CASES OF POISONING IN INDIANA.

The following appeared in the Logansport, Indiana, Times :—

Dr. Souder was summoned by telegraph last Sunday night to attend the family of Braden Harper, living southwest of Logansport. Four of the family were poisoned from eating dumplings. The father and one child, who had not partaken of the dumplings, were well, while the mother and three children were in a serious condition. It is probable that had not vomiting ensued, emptying the stomach, the four would have died from the effects. It is supposed the poison was caused from the baking powder used in making the dumplings. The wife probably added a larger amount than she usually did, which in the greater quantity proved a noxious poison. The baking powder used was branded the * * * *, manufactured by the * * * * This should be a warning in using cheap baking powders, which flood the country. People buy them because they are cheap, and the merchant buys them because he can sell them for a profit. In many stores one can not purchase a standard brand. You have to purchase the cheap stuff or do without. We are of the opinion that most of the prize baking powders belong to this class.

The highest authorities in chemical science pronounce alum injurious to health and a destroyer of digestion.

Here is explicit evidence that it is a noxious poison.

Alum baking powders likewise coagulate the blood rapidly, interfering with its ready course through the arteries and valves of the heart, predisposing to heart-failure.

The laws of Minnesota and Wisconsin prohibit the sale of alum baking powders, unless they are branded as a warning to the public.

By the laws of England it is a crime to put alum in bread in any form.

NOTE. The Royal Baking Powder Co. publish the above facts because they are facts of great importance, and to say that while alum baking powders are sold cheap they have little strength, and are dear at half price, to say nothing of their effect upon the health, and the bitter taste they impart to the food.

The Royal Baking Powder is far above question as regards its quality and healthfulness, because it is made of cream of tartar derived only from grapes. No other article has ever received such high praise for its quality.

Consumers may use the Royal with full assurance that they not only get the worth of their money, but that they also get the best cream of tartar baking powder that can be had.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

FROM TAVARES.

I give to Sister Julia L. Newell, corresponding secretary, credit for the first news sent me since the close of convention; may others do likewise. Mrs. Newell writes: "A good report of convention has been given; well liked; a memorial service held in memory of Miss Willard; one dollar sent to help pay for publication of Minutes; can see no reason why Tavares union can not do well this year, and think they deserve consideration from our state reporter."

They certainly do, and I thank the good sister for her promptitude in reporting. News has reached me of the death after long illness, of Prof. J. Q. A. Oliver, husband of Florida's W. C. T. U. evangelist, Rev. E. Springer Oliver, whose home is in Leesburg. The tenderest sympathy goes out to our sister in her bereavement.

Sara J. Glenn,
State Reporter, Tampa.

North Dakota.

NO one need suppose that the North Dakota W. C. T. U. has been asleep or idle because no report has been made of its activities. Perhaps never before have the unions so vied with each other in original plans for usefulness and in their striving to live up to their high ideals. The prohibition law was never better enforced. More medal contests have been held, according to population, than in any other state. The medals worn by matrons, proclaim developed talent in many a hitherto silent member. We confidently expect to have a silver-gray grand gold medal contest at our next state convention. Space fails me to tell of the excellent contests of Cogswell, Harlem, Elliott, Fairview, Minot, Park River, Fairmount, Milton, Reynolds, Inkster, Joliette, Thompson and others.

The foreign population has been delighted with Miss Johansdottir's lectures and the English hearers were equally charmed by her inspiring addresses.

Mr. Rankin is constantly speaking, and our President Preston is everywhere lecturing, encouraging, deepening interest and increasing membership.

Our winsome Y's have been making efforts to win temperance sentiment among young people and they have been successful, particularly in Larimore and Drayton, in adding large numbers to their unions, thereby increasing the responsibility of the older members to lead them along the higher ways.

Through Mrs. Pierson's guidance and Miss Parrish's letters, a goodly sum will be sent to Miss Larimore, custodian of the Japanese fund.

Father Preston is enriching his fourscore years by giving lectures on Christian citizenship in many places, notably in La Moure, Leonard and Hunter.

After Mr. Rankin's lectures in Cooperstown, they boasted all the blind piggers had gone out of that business. Their evangelistic work in visiting from house to house resulted in large accessions to the union.

Grafton pledges another $100 to the Temple. Mrs. Mott, the president, is also state superintendent of Temple work. Her unflagging energy compels no mean help toward that work.

Casselton assisted Mrs. Bartlett, their superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, in giving a very pleasant reception to the teachers and school board and their wives to show their appreciation of the work done in the public schools, and the distribution of Mrs. Hunt's literature has been a stimulus to scholars and teachers ever since.

Maza reported last fall five new baby boys in their union, and thought that an excuse from much state work, but those boys must have been an inspiration, for they have had a general revival in interesting meetings, contests and all that goes to make better the environment for those dear sons as they grow up.

Baldwin gave tangible proof of sympathy for Mr. Moffit, that heroic editor, who dared oppose the whisky gang in Bismarck.

Langdon and Amenia have had Klondike socials for an L. T. L.

Tower City has always had a large L. T. L., consequently a public speaker could make this strong comparison "as impossible as to sell liquor in Tower City, it cannot be done." That is the home of our own Miss Preston. Worthy of notice from their last report is this: "We have carefully prepared programs for each meeting, and we find we are paid for our trouble by the increased interest and good attendance."

Grand Forks has organized a Scandinavian union, and are doing everything, impelled by enthusiastic meetings.

Fargo union, ever busy, has the care of Florence Crittenton Home. God bless and help that faithful home board in their difficult ceaseless labors.

Those tireless workers in Leonard union, Mrs. Watts and Mrs. Horne, will receive their reward from Him who notices the cups of cold water given His little ones, the sick and the afflicted.

The new unions at Havana and Kenmare are creating sentiment in those new regions.

Knox is not dead. Milnor has awakened to new life. The local papers note the "helpful and very interesting gospel meetings." Park River also does not neglect these and Lisbon continues them as has been every month for years. Steele and Drayton "prepare programs that attract the honoraries and keep young people from card playing." Crary's expressed "need of spirit baptized men and women to come up to the help of the Lord" is the need of every union, and their prayer will be answered.

St. Thomas, Page, Mosellee, Dawson, Durbin, Devil's Lake, Lakota, Minto, with their "earnest Christian women struggling to overthrow the evils in their midst," will make their influence a power to that end.

Most of the unions adopt the plan of sending five cents per month per member to sustain the Home, not forgetting extra barrels of necessaries.

Mrs. Ellis says she is up to her eyes in petitions. North Dakota helped to do that.

Minto and other unions give a reception to new members and gentlemen signers of pledge (and suggestion is made if the treasurer with great tact asks for the dues some time thereabouts there would be fewer fall out from active membership).

Without our peerless leader we are like motherless children. But with tender hearts the unions draw closer together under the sheltering care of the beloved Miss Preston, who has been growing like unto our sainted Miss Willard, for several years. We want to be like her—Christlike—embodying love.

Emma F. Vail,
Reporter.

Muscular Food....

The peasantry of Europe in general, prefer their bread made from the whole meal, because of its nutritive value. The nutritive salts of meat and of wheat are phosphates. These phosphates are indispensible to the nutrition of all higher organizations. They enter into and constitute a part of, not only the bones, but every muscle, every nerve tissue; and in each secretory organ there seems to be a special accumulation.

FRANKLIN MILLS FLOUR
A FINE FLOUR OF THE ENTIRE WHEAT

as ground by the Franklin Mills Co., is exceptionally rich in nitrogenous and phosphatic elements necessary as the sustaining force in all labor.

If your grocer does not keep Franklin Mills Flour, have him order some for you or send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.

The genuine made only by the

Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y.

THE W. C. T. U. of LaFargeville, N. Y., has during the past few months increased its membership more than one-half. Mrs. Ella Boole gave an address March 7, and much enthusiasm was manifest. Twenty-five came forward and joined the union. The young people evinced much interest, and will organize a Y in the near future.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed, 10c, 25c, 50c.

A Perfect Infant Food

Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

A PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR MOTHERS MILK. FOR 40 YEARS THE LEADING BRAND.

"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE.

N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK.

Massachusetts.

"THIS is no the day for mony words, but there's juist ae heart in Drumtochty, and it's sair." And it's true in Massachusetts. The name of Frances Willard stands for all that is noble, pure and good in ideal womanhood, in the hearts of the white-ribboners of the old Bay state. Memorial services all over the state, participated in by pastors of all denominations; by representatives of Women's clubs and other organizations; by leaders in all the philanthropic and reform movements throughout the commonwealth, testify to the universal love and esteem of those outside our own ranks for her who was our own. In nearly twenty of these services did our state president, Mrs. Fessenden, bear a part. The most beautiful of all was when in old historic King's Chapel, at Boston, on March 16, were gathered from all over the state, those who would do honor to her who has gone where "there shall be no more death."

Tender tribute and personal reminiscences of the Chieftain were given by Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Livermore, Rev. F. E. (Father Endeavorer) Clark, Rev. L. B. Bates, Dr. Louise C. Purington and others. The meeting was made especially impressive by the presence of Pundita Ramabai, who referred to the temple in India which shall live forever to the memory of Miss Willard. "Living temples, three hundred and eighty of them."

Massachusetts honors the memory of Frances Willard, and is proud when she remembers that one of life's best gifts came from within her borders, Anna Gordon, and she says from her heart, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." But the heart "is sair" just the same.

Arrangements are progressing for the silver anniversary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., in Tremont Temple, Boston, October 11–14.

The executive committee have accepted a most generous offer from the Household Publishing Co. to aid the Temple fund, which you will hear of.

The lease for the beautiful headquarters on Tremont street has been renewed. Hearings on Sunday entertainment bill, woman's suffrage and license suffrage have been attended. National petitions are being circulated. The annual agony with the farcial local option law has been endured. No license rallies have been held. The W. C. T. U. of Cambridge have sent to every public library in the state this jubilee volume issued after ten years of no-license. Forty young men in Hinsdale have formed a Willard division of the Sons of Temperance. (God bless them!) The system of official visits to every union in the state works well and puts the workers in touch with each other. Our state has lost a valued worker by the death of Mrs. A. E. A. Livesey, state superintendent of work among sailors. Notwithstanding her more than eighty years her work was so efficient as to bring the prize banner to Massachusetts in 1896. New members are reported all along the line, and the personal visits to the unions of our loved state president has contributed largely to this result.

Considerable study is being given by many unions to non-alcoholic medication and to the patent medicines which contain alcohol, opium, cocaine, etc. and our women are increasing in knowlege and are displaying the danger signal to others. The standards upheld so long by Miss Willard, are the standards of righteousness, and are dear to Massachusetts women, and so the "sair hearts" go on with the work and are lovingly striving to "make the world better."

H. E. SAWYER,
State Reporter.

Virginia.

RICHMOND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The following excellent report comes from Mrs. A. E. Wait, district press superintendent:

"The quarterly convention of the Richmond district W. C. T. U. was held at the Friends Meeting House, Richmond, March 3, Central union, the mother union of the city, entertaining it. Mrs. Wm. H. Pleasants conducted the devotional exercises, Mrs. George Hooper led the singing.

"Mrs. Otis H. Russell, president of Central union, gave a brief but very cordial welcome, to which Miss Julia B. Bickers, vice-president of the Church Hill Y, responded in an equally short but happy manner.

"Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson, district president, presided, and the business was dispatched with the usual prompitude. The reports from the local unions read by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. B. Clements, showed activity and increasing interest, the new unions growing rapidly, while the older ones are holding their own or growing slowly but steadily. One new union, the Winn, of Hanover county, had been organized by Mrs. Ricks, president of the Reedy union. The same union has recently organized a flourishing L. T. L.—company A, first division, Caroline county.

"At twelve o'clock a memorial service was held to Miss Willard, conducted by Mrs. M. B. Lee, our state evangelist. Sister Lee closed the service with an earnest plea that a strong effort be made for the Temple as a monument to Miss Willard, as her last exertions were made in its behalf.

"The afternoon session was largely taken up with a silver medal contest. Miss Julia B. Bickers was the successful contestant. Miss Cora Jones, of the Ensign Y, received the second prize.

"The White Cross Society of the Laurel Reformatory, having notified the district of its desire to hold a medal contest and its inability to procure a medal, Mrs. B. H. Spiers, of the Petersburg union, generously offered to give one.

"There were fifty-one members of the convention present, including general officers and superintendents of the district, and officers and delegates from the local unions, also a large attendance of friends.

"The letter announcing the fact that the state union had accepted the invitation of the district to hold the annual convention in Richmond, was read by Mrs. Clements and received with enthusiasm by the convention.

"Papers on the work of the purity department were read by Miss Bettie Pace, district superintendent, and Miss Mary A. Tefft, of Central union, and both were considered of such value that the convention voted to have them printed in leaflet form for circulation. Miss Pace reported that three of the W unions had adopted the purity pledge.

"The convention will hold its annual meeting in June with the Richmond East End union."

M. C. FAVILLE,
State Reporter, Norfolk.

Western Washington.

THE work here goes steadily on. Our unspeakable loss has driven us anew to Him who is the source of all comfort, as well as of strength and courage for the work. From all sides come expressions of determination to take up the sacred legacy which has been left to us.

Everett is the only union which has sent in account of memorial services, having held them February 27, because of the presence in their midst of that wonderful woman, Amanda Smith, a white-ribbon comrade and dear friend of our Chieftain. When asked with some hesitancy whether she would pause in her revival work long enough for such a service, she replied decisively, "Yes, there will never be such another occasion. Frances Willard will never die but once." Clergymen of many denominations sat upon the platform with the white-ribbon women, and eloquent appeals were made in behalf of the cause which this greatest of women represented.

At the recent meeting of the state executive committee it was decided to hold the next state convention in Everett, but so pressing an invitation has later come from Centralia, that Everett has withdrawn in her favor. Resolutions expressing loyalty and hearty support to our National acting president, Mrs. Stevens, were passed. Arrangements were made for the meeting of the National Officers' Conference in Tacoma.

From Fremont and Vancouver, from Kamilche, Little Rock and Satsop comes news of good work done in many directions, all going to prove that a large membership is not always necessary to usefulness, if among the few "there be first a willing mind." I cannot help feeling proud of those unions which write, "so many changes have come"—the population of this state is an ever-shifting one—"that there are only two of us left," and then go on in the most unconscious manner to tell of contests, parlor meetings, money raised for the Temple, etc.

Mrs. Bertrand, who is the Olequa union, works steadily on. The Lord bless her and keep her courage up!

Seattle Central has the Klondike excitement to wrestle with. So many of the members have dear ones gone or going to that land of gold and cold, that it is hard for them to think of much else. But they are working up the Sunday-school department well. They have given a supper to the Sunday-school superintendents, which was very successful, also a reception to the sister unions of the city, at which interesting addresses were made by Rev. Mrs. Bailey and Mrs. Dr. Merrill, a missionary from India.

Tacoma Central is making a vigorous and much needed effort in purity reform, including literature and art.

Seattle Lake union—the banner union of the state—has been doing more than there is room to tell of; has several members who distribute 700 or 800 pages of literature at a time—don't leave it all for the superintendent to do. One nice thing they do is to send to hospitals, jails and the county farm, "rolls"—being newspaper clippings, pictures and a letter, rolled in bright-colored tissue paper, with fringed ends, a la "motto candy." Another thing worth mentioning was their Temple "experience social." (They are raising $100 for the Temple.) Each member was to raise two dollars and tell in poetry how she had obtained it. "This," they write, "made the meeting very delightful and profitable." They also had an "encouragement and discouragement social." Sides were chosen, and both phases ably dealt with. Much grand work is done by superintendents whom God has called to special lines of service, and, as in every consecrated band, "much of the best work of all is that of which the sacredness would be destroyed in the telling."

LAVEINE ROBERTSON SHERWOOD,
State Reporter, Everett.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Where Our Speakers Are.

MISS CARRIE LEE CARTER is now in the fourth district of Missouri, where she will be engaged for six weeks. She will be in the twelfth and twenty-first districts during the month of June. Her permanent address is Dexter, Mo.

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

Official.

Flower Mission.

DEAR COMRADES:—Springtime is here, and I know every true-hearted flower missioner is anxious to expand her lungs in the fresh, God-given air. I know no better way than to lay out a flower mission garden and plant therein seeds for our 9th of June celebration. Every W. C. T. U. woman can devote a little space of her garden for flower mission work and sow seeds that will rejoice the hearts of those who are less fortunate than herself—those who are lying on beds of pain and suffering. Let us christen the flower mission gardens for Miss Jennie Casseday, whose sweet Christian life still pervades and inspires us to greater activity in our beautiful ministry of flowers.

Since I last wrote you, my dear mother has joined the ranks of the redeemed ones above. Her life is ever an inspiration to me, and my heart is doubly sad when I realize that never on earth shall I hear her voice encouraging me in the work I love so well. But I am comforted knowing she is at rest, "Safe in the arms of Jesus." She was always interested in the flower mission work, and the 9th of June found her busy cutting and arranging the beautiful roses that she loved to cultivate in fair California. It is said that the perfume of the rose is its dying breath. I wonder if we, as flower missioners, are giving our perfume of talents, time, and opportunities for the service of our dear Master whom we all love to serve!

We have a dear W. C. T. U. woman in California, who has donated an orange tree to the flower mission work. All of the proceeds of the fruit is turned over to the local superintendent of flower missions to purchase ribbons and text-cards for local work. This is a suggestion for those who are inquiring how they can provide a way to make money to carry on their work. I would also suggest to the same inquirers to set apart a hen and her chickens, if you live on a ranch. You will be surprised to note how quick they will multiply.

In arranging our flower beds let us remember that it is the old-fashioned flower that is most highly prized by the "shut-in" ones. It is the fragrance of the mignonette, gillyflower, daisy, sweet william, phlox, violet, verbena, and nasturtium that calls to mind the home and dear ones, and brings to the memory scenes of departed days when life was all sunshine and joy. After our flower beds are attended to, let us interest those who are not members of the W. C. T. U., in our mission. Have certain days set apart for cut flowers, and invite the "outsiders" to add to our contributions, telling them of the sick ones we are about to visit, and explain how the Scripture text acts like a genuine little sermon to the weary and discouraged ones of our Lord's people on earth.

We can also have a bed of flowers, such as chrysanthemums, dahlias, asters, etc., to use in our fall work; and be sure to lay in a large supply of potted plants for the winter work. In my experience I have found that potted plants are the most acceptable gift. The sick one loves to watch the buds open. Do not omit from your bed the sunflower, which is said to represent the source of all life. And, dear fellow-workers, let us earnestly ask and pray the dear Father that we may be richly endowed with the life that comes only through one source—service for our dear Master.

Lovingly yours,
ALICE L. SUDDUTH,
Lake Forest, Ill. Nat. Supt.

Medal Contest Work.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS:—I send you a few suggestions and recommendations which I hope may be helpful to you in pushing the contest work:

1. Ask that a local superintendent be appointed in every union in your state, and that each hold at least one contest this year. It is sometimes advisable to work in connection with the young people of the different church societies, dividing profits and labors. Many of the public schools and colleges will hold contests in connection with their commencement exercises. See if the work cannot be introduced in the schools of your state.

2. Ask the superintendent of the departments of suffrage, narcotics, mercy and mothers meetings to hold contests as benefit entertainments, using medals designed for them. L. T. L. contests should be held in every legion. The season of the year is approaching for district and county conventions, institutes, summer assemblies, etc. Try to have papers read at these meetings, followed by discussion on this work and a contest in the evening.

Have you asked for an evening at your state convention for a contest? If not will you not do so at once? Hold a diamond medal contest if possible. If not, a grand gold or a gold contest. Sixteen were held last year, every one a financial success. The superintendent of California writes the work has increased in interest since the issue of the contest number of their state paper. Try this method of arousement. Six months of the year are still left, and it is during the summer season that most of our contests are held. Shall we all work for good report at the National Convention?

As another incentive to the work, I will give to the state superintendent who sends in the best report, a gold medal; decision to be given by competent judges. Besides this the banner won last year by Missouri will go to the state which holds the largest number of contests in proportion to membership.

An article will be found in the Local Union column, written by Miss Emma Page, associate superintendent of medal contests, for the contest number of The Pacific Ensign, the California white-ribbon paper, but reached us too late for insertion therein. We are pleased to give it this wider circulation in the hope that it will inspire all local workers to renewed energy.

The Responsive Reading published last December is being revised. Send to the W. T. P. A. for copies, and mail them to unions and all other organizations that hold entertainments for raising money to carry on their work. State superintendents should keep on hand a supply of books, medals, etc. In states having no medal contest superintendent, local unions should order such supplies of the National superintendent.

(MRS.) A. E. CARMEN,
Nat. Supt.
The Temple, Chicago.

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR FRIENDS AT HOME AND AFIELD:—As I write the tears will fall even though we know our peerless leader has passed to the rest beyond, where there is never a pain, a grief, a tear. There comes the wish to my heart, as to yours, that our work may become more and more as she would have it. Who can say "I am not interested," when they study her life?

In organizing new unions I have aimed as far as possible to secure young women for officers. We need them now in our work, and later they must take the places being left vacant, as one by one the leaders pass beyond. One young woman is needed at once to prepare herself that she may go over her county interesting the people in our work and opening the way for organization. Where I do not find it possible to interest the unions in L. T. L. work, I urge the presenting of the pledge to the boys and girls. They can be counted as pledged members, who do not pay dues, but help in our work, and thus foundation will be laid for workers of the future.

In Kansas City at a most delightful reception tendered your organizer by the unions in the county, the wife of the mayor, together with several prominent ladies, were added to our membership. I have organized twenty-seven new unions since the National Convention, and Kansas state W. C. T. U. treasury will certainly be fuller for these new unions, and the increased membership to the old ones, at the September paying of dues. Many honoraries have been added. If county and district presidents will do their best to get in touch with these new unions, and when they lag in their zeal—as new unions often do, because they do not have all in attendance, or results do not follow as they hoped—send them helpful letters of encouragement if they can not visit them, I am sure they will not drop out.

An all-day meeting, with a basket lunch, held with each union in the county by the county officers and representatives from other unions, will be one means of getting our work before the people and of thoroughly fixing the completeness of the W. C. T. U. in the minds of our new workers. With THE UNION SIGNAL and state paper read by them it is certain we shall not lose ground.

I suggest to each new union the holding of a monthly meeting in the evening, that the honoraries may be in attendance. The pledged members can thus be made to feel they are a needed force and eventually will become our actives or honoraries. Give the honoraries places on committees and as superintendents and they will have a new interest in our general work.

I am in the fourth district, Kansas, from April 16 to May 15, and in the sixth district May 17 for two months. The month of August is to be given to Oklahoma.

Your comrade,
HELEN DICKINSON HARFORD.
En route in Kansas.

DEAR SISTERS:—I wrote you soon after beginning work in Arkansas, and now I want to drop you a second line as I leave the state and speed on to other fields. I think it is usually the "unexpected" that happens. Be that as it may, I believe I never enjoyed a month's work more than the one just finished in Arkansas. I see no reason why that state should not

Drinking Fountains
FOR
MAN and BEAST
Manufactured by
The J. L. Mott Iron Works
84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.
311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.
Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing
DRINKING FOUNTAINS
on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.
Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.
J. W. FISKE, Mf'r.
39-41 Park Pl., N. Y.

1898 High Grade BICYCLES

for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models.
$75 'Oakwood' for $32.50
$60 'Arlington' " $24.50
Others at $15, $17 and $20
Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50
No Money in Advance. WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits
Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 80, Chicago, Ills.

PARLOR ORGANS At a Big Reduction.
To sharply reduce stock, we offer unprecedented values. Fine Organs, formerly bringing $75, now $47.50. Used Organs from $15. Don't fail to write at once for catalogue. The world-wide reputation of this house is a guarantee of the quality of the Lyon & Healy Organ. Address, LYON & HEALY, Wabash Ave. and Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 306.

(Trade Mark Registered.)
GLUTEN FLOUR
For Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diabetes and Obesity.
Unlike all other Flours, because it contains no bran and little starch—which cause acidity and flatulence. Nutritious and palatable in highest degree. Unrivalled in America or Europe.
PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.
Write to FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y.

Trial Package Free.
If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will gladly send free a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which has cured thousands of so-called hopeless cases, even some of over 40 years' standing. Address JOHN A. SMITH, Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.
Send for free sample and literature.
A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

EUROPEAN TOURS.
16th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by Dr. & Mrs. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample and valuable information. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

stand in the front ranks in a few years. They have just as capable, gifted and true-hearted women as any state in the Union, and just as hearty support from the "brethren." Never did I work in a state where the gentlemen were more willing to help by their presence, their means and co-operation; and the churches were ever ready to "hold up my hands"; in but the one town, mentioned in my last letter, was this lacking, and I call that a No. 1 record. The kindness and cordiality that greeted me throughout the journey fell like a sunbeam into a tired little woman's life. I found the hospitality all that the poets have painted it to be. In fact, it was a long-to-be-remembered month spent in the state of Arkansas. Time will not efface the ties of friendship that bind my heart to so many good people there. God keep us "till we meet again."

CALLIE H. HOWE.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Announcements.

WISCONSIN.

The twenty-fifth convention of the Wisconsin Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at Chippewa Falls, Wis., May 24, 25, 26, 27, 1898. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Mrs. Caroline F. Grow are to be present.

VIE H. CAMPBELL,
President.
MRS. W. A. LAWSON,
Cor. Sec.

INDIAN TER., Atoka, May 11, 12.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but all regular reports must come through the state Field reporter.]

THE Mills union, of Louisville, Ky., organized by Miss Willard, has been re-named the Memorial union. The special work of this union is along the lines of purity.

INDIANA W. C. T. U. has been greatly encouraged lately by two magnificent donations for their Hadley Industrial School for Girls. A fine farm of 107 acres, valued at $4,000, and a check for $800.

(Continued on page 16.)

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

Publisher's Notes.

Special Offer to Union Signal Subscribers—$2 for $1.30.

Arrangements have been effected with the Good Health Publishing Company which permit us to offer a year's subscription to Good Health and THE UNION SIGNAL for $.130.

All W. C. T. U. leaders, and certainly the great majority of members of the union, are in thorough sympathy with hygienic reform. Good Health is the oldest, the largest, and the most reliable health journal published at the present time. For more than thirty years it has stood stanchly for the principles of healthful living. It is filled with original matter pertaining to important questions relating to health, prepared by the most able and reliable writers on these subjects.

A SIXTY-FOUR PAGE MONTHLY

The journal is edited by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, well known in this country and Europe as an authority on all questions pertaining to health, sanitarium and temperance reform. Good Health is a practical journal for the home, and is just what our W. C. T. U. women need to make them thoroughly acquainted with the great vital questions of the day, "What shall we eat, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?"

The May number, in addition to the usual interesting table of contents, will devote considerable space to an historical sketch of the work done by the W. T. C. U. in sanitary reform, through its department of health, heredity, social purity, etc. Articles will appear from the pens of numerous notable persons. Bishop John H. Vincent will contribute a eulogy on Miss Willard, which will appear in no other journal. There will also be contributions from Jane Addams, Anthony Comstock, Senator Henry W. Blair, Katharine Lente Stevenson, Clara C. Hoffman. Helen M. Barker and Dr. Milton S. Terry; and portraits of Dr. Louise C. Purington, Dr. Annette Shaw, Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Miss Anna Gordon and Mrs. Ella E. Kellogg.

Each number of the journal is profusely illustrated with fine original engravings.

For sample copy, address Good Health, Battle Creek, Mich.

Send subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Official Picture of Miss Willard.

The National officers of the W. C. T. U. have arranged with a first-class engraver to produce a large etching of Miss Willard, which will be suitable for framing and will be the only official picture authorized by them. The W. T. P. A. will have it on sale within two months. Price $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASSN.,
The Temple.

Take Notice

that the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the only house that will publish the official memorial volume of Frances E. Willard. It will be sold through the leading subscription book houses throughout the country. If subscription book houses claim they are the only publishers, please send to them the above statement.

The latest and greatest success is that sweetest of songs, "A Withered Rose from Father's Grave." Dedicated to the W. C. T. U's. Words and music by C. H. Addison. Price 40 cents.

The following extracts from letters received from United States Senators show how very popular this song is destined to become:

"A beautiful tribute."—Hon. A. E. Stevenson, ex-Vice-President, United States.

"I appreciate the verses."—Hon. H. C. Lodge, United States Senator, Massachusetts.

"The piece is very beautiful."—Hon. G. G. Vest, United States Senator, Missouri.

"A sweet little song."—Hon. Wm. B. Bate, United States Senator, Tennessee.

"Expresses noble sentiments in impressive language."—Hon. F. M. Cockrell, United States Senator, Missouri.

Price, to white-ribboners only 15 cents. Standard Music Co., Danville, Va.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR APRIL.—"The Press," by Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, National superintendent of that department. Through the medium of questions and answers this reading sets forth, in most practical manner, the duties of press superintendents, state and local; how to approach the editor of a city daily and the editor in a small town; the kind of news to furnish; the needs of newspapers, secular and religious; gives information concerning "patent pages" and the Associated Press, and suggests how to help "elevate the press." It will be a great help, not only to press superintendents but to white-ribbon workers generally, and we predict a large demand for it.

BIBLE READING FOR APRIL.—"Rooted and Grounded," by Lilian F. Lewis. Based on Ephesians 3: 7–21; pointing out the "secret of power," and emphasizing "boldness" and "access with confidence" in seeking guidance. To "know the love of Christ" is to take root downward; to be "filled with the fullness of God" is to bear fruit upward. The application of the lesson for white-ribboners is "If ye had faith ye might say to that Upas tree, the liquor traffic, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and it should obey you."

THE RECORDING SECRETARY'S MINUTE BOOK. By Mrs. E. R. Auten. Suitable for W. C. T. U's, missionary societies, L. T. L's and others. The Blank Forms, space for business notes, marginal index, calendars and instructions are an invaluable aid. One-third work done for the secretary. Use the book instead of scratch paper in the meeting and complete notes can be taken. Sixty pages. Price, 25 cts.

W. T. P. A., THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlement of all accounts.

A book of programs for entertainments, suitable for evening socials by local unions, church societies, etc., has been issued by Mrs. H. E. Kramer, 132 Ash St., Akron, O. Price 50 cents.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader,

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and co-worker,

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on ale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single pictures, each, -	$ .50
3, to one address, - -	1.00
12, or more, to one address, per dozen, - -	3.00

A beautiful picture of "REST COTTAGE," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the

W. T. P. A., The Temple,

or by

MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treas.,
539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

(Continued from page 15.)

Major Hilton did grand work for the W. C. T. U. in Watsonville, Cal. Through his earnest labors one hundred new members and thirty-four honoraries were added to the union.

The first "musical medal contest" held in Missouri was given in connection with a matron's contest at Lamar. Although the weather was almost impassible, the receipts were nine dollars. Both medals were fairly won and highly appreciated.

The work of the department of soldiers and sailors has been actively taken up by Washington white-ribboners. Mrs. Thacher's recent visit there may have helped bring it about. Meetings are being held at the Soldiers' Home, and socials given for soldiers and sailors.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter organized four unions in Missouri this month, also the twenty-eighth district. At Naylor she spoke to a packed house, and sixty persons signed the pledge. At Morley she organized a union with forty active and twenty-eight honorary members.

A working woman's tea is the latest venture of the Laramie, Wyo., union, and bids fair to be as successful as it is philanthropic. Practical talks on subjects of interest to the women are given, and the president of the union gives two afternoons of each week to receive applicants for work.

Announcement.

On Monday evening at 8 p. m., April 25, in Willard Hall, Oliver Stewart, ex-state president C. E. Society, will appeal to Chicago young people to respond to the call of their church and their country's flag against the liquor traffic. Everybody welcome to hear this young Wendell Phillips among Illinois Prohibitionists. Collection.

What to Ask of Congress and How.

Let every church and every other society devoted to social welfare adopt at an early day, some or all of the following petitions, all of which call for bills pending in present Congress.

Resolved, That the pastor of this congregation (or the president and secretary of this society) is hereby authorized in our behalf to sign and send petitions in duplicate to the two houses of Congress, through our congressman and one of our senators, requesting the passage of bills:

1. To forbid the sale of liquors in the National Capitol and in all government buildings.
2. To prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.
3. To raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen years in the District of Columbia and the territories.
4. To protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the same.
5. To prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or kindred devices.
6. And also the interstate and mail circulation of extended newspaper descriptions of such fights.
7. To substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes.
8. To protect state anti-cigaret laws by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

Please write your congressmen and senators in behalf of the above.

PETITION PATTERN.

Having voted the petitions preceding, make a separate petition for each request on large square sheets, as follows: "To the U. S. Senate: The undersigned hereby petition your honorable body to———. The above was approved by a vote of —— persons at a meeting of —— in —— on —— Attest:——Presiding." Then make duplicate addressed, "To the U. S. House of Representatives." Fold petition once and back it, "Petition from — for—." Send the petitions for the House to your own congressman; the one for the Senate to one of your senators. Let us keep up a steady snowstorm of petitions and letters for the whole two years of this Congress, beginning early and winning surely.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

The vegetable oils used in its manufacture make it the best for the hair and scalp.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is well known that a large number of Subscription Book Houses are selling the official Life of Miss Willard, and in order to give all an equal opportunity it was agreed that a uniform discount of 40 per ct. should be given. Especial inducements should not be offered and territory should not be restricted. We repeat these terms in order that White Ribboners who desire to become agents may read with care all circulars, and may avoid entering into arrangements with firms offering extra discounts.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicgao

Murat Halstead's Great War Book.

The great War Correspondent's masterpiece.

"Our Country in War."

AND RELATIONS WITH ALL NATIONS.

All about the armies, navies and coast defences of the U. S., Spain and all nations. All about Cuba, Spain, Maine Disaster. Over 500 pages. Magnificently illustrated.

Agents Wanted Quick.

One agent sold 89 in one day; others are making $39 per day. Most liberal terms guaranteed, 20 days credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 12 two-cent stamps to pay postage.

EDUCATIONAL UNION, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

A SONG OF THE MAINE

A TEMPERANCE SONG

Sheet Music...Octavo Size

Sold for Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union.

PRICE 15C.

ADA JENKS

1119 The Temple CHICAGO

LIFE SIZE PICTURE

...OF...

Miss Willard

Painted on porcelain and pronounced

A MASTERPIECE

by her friends. The fac simile of this painting will be executed by one of the very best companies in Chicago, and it will be difficult to distinguish it from the original. We did hope to be able to sell the picture for fifty cents, but the process of getting it up has been so costly we will have to charge $1.00 for it We want agents to sell it in every town in the United States. We will pay a liberal per cent either to individuals or Unions who desire to act as agents.

The picture will soon be ready for delivery.

Send $1.00 AT ONCE for canvassing outfit.

Apply to

Mrs. MATILDA B. CARSE,

Room 1118 The Temple, Chicago

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Kernels.

The reason some men can't make both ends meet is because they are too busy making one end drink.

Visitor—"Does mamma give you anything for being a good boy?" Tommy—"No; she gives it to me when I ain't."

Attention is called to the seed advertisement of John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, New York, that has appeared regularly in these columns for a number of years. He issues a 160-page catalogue containing 12 magnificent large colored plates which will be mailed free to all Union Signal readers.

Not in Boston—"Now, Bobby," said the teacher in the natural history class, "what is a panther?" "A man that makth panth," lisped Bobbie.

"Bridget, have you cracked those nuts for the dessert I want to make?" "Yis, ma'am; all but thim big walnuts, an' it'll take stronger jaws than mine to manage them; but I got troo wid de others all roight, ma'am."

DON'T MISS YOUR TRAIN.

All passenger trains on Nickel Plate Road now arrive and depart from Van Buren Street Station, near Clark Street, Chicago. Lowest rates to all points East. Solid trains to New York. City Ticket Office, 111 Adams Street. Telephone Main 3389.

"I'm worried about our landlord; he seems to be going crazy." "What has he done?" "Repapered our house from top to bottom."

Mamma—Dorothy, do you know who ate my raisins? Dorothy (turning over the leaves of her book more rapidly): Mamma, you told me yesterday some things are better left unsaid. Isn't that one of them?

For Hoarseness, Coughs, Asthma, and Bronchial Troubles, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. Avoid imitations.

"What is your line of business?" whispered the editor to a man he was about to introduce to northern capitalists. "I hauls furniture," huskily came the reply. "Here, gentlemen," continued the editor, "is Mr. Jones, one of the moving spirits of our city."

Authorship in Georgia—A Georgia author wrote to a New York publisher: "What could you do with a story of say 65,000 words?" The publisher replied briefly: "If the express company would undertake it we could send it back to you immediately."

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Mike—"How old are you, Pat?" Pat—"Thirty-sivin next mont'." Mike—"Yez must be older than that. When were yez born?" Pat—"In 1861." Mike—"I have yez now. Sure, yez told me the same date tin years ago."

A little girl was sent to school for the first time. On her return, her mother asked how she liked it. "I didn't like it a bit," the mite replied; "the teacher put me on a chair, and told me to sit there for the present, and I sat and sat, but she never gave me any present."

PLEASE TRY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC

REGULATE THE LIVER

10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 308.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 17. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, April 28, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
Temperance Victory at Maywood, Ill.—War is Declared. The Canadian Plebiscite—Temperance 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, One April Day. By Lettie S. Bigelow 3
Poem. Dropped Stitches. By Florence A. Jones 3
Jem's Mother. By Emily D. McBride 3
In Princeton. By Rev. Alford Kelley 4
The Poor Woman's Club. By George Milton Hammell 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
En Route for the Home Land 5
Abstinence in the Dutch Reformed Church 5
Delano Settlement 6
Sympathy From Tasmania 6
The "Do Everything Policy" 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, East Winds and South. By Annie Isabel Willis . 7
A Girl's Idea of Politics. By Cora Reynolds Hunt . . . 7
Elsie and Karl 7
Foolscap 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Ten No-License Years in Cambridge 8
Results of No-License in Cambridge 8
The Cuban Situation 9
The National Congress of Mothers 9
Mrs. Livermore on the W. C. T. U 9
Let the Battle Go On 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Australasian Y's 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U. 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Texas—West Virginia—Alabama—Arizona—Oklahoma 10-12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Sunday-school Work—Work Among Foreigners 12
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
WHERE OUR SPEAKERS ARE 14
CONVENTION CORNER 14
Obituaries 14
W. C. T. U. NEWS 14
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15

Questions for the Local Unions.

1. What per cent of the members of your union subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL?

2. What part of the paper is most interesting?

3. What part of the paper is most helpful and why?

4. What subject would you like to have exploited more largely in our columns than has been done heretofore?

5. What proportion of the subscribers would approve of returning to the former price, $1.50 per year, to secure the use of a better grade of paper, and other improvements?

RULES GOVERNING THE VOTE ON THE QUESTIONS.

(a) Only members subscribing for THE UNION SIGNAL should vote, but this may include those taking a paper together.

(b) Only such unions are asked to reply as can secure a majority vote of the subscribers on one or more of the questions.

(c) Questions upon which such majority vote can not be obtained are not to be mentioned in the reply to THE UNION SIGNAL.

(d) Each answer should be numbered the same as the question to which it refers is numbered.

Question 5 is not for publication, but for our own information.

Announce this plan at your first regular meeting after this is received, and if possible take the votes at the following meeting, or at as early a date as a good representation of the members can be secured.

If majority votes cannot be secured at one meeting try it at subsequent meetings.

The limit of time for receiving replies will be announced later.

Report as soon as possible after the union has voted. Sign the name of the union and the state. Write only on one side of the paper and address THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Notes and Comments.

IN order to emphasize the "opportunity for the rank and file to be heard" we reproduce on this page the questions given last week in the editorial letter to the ten thousand and more local unions. We trust that each society, no matter how small numerically, will consider this matter at its first regular meeting and take action upon it as soon as practicable. Some of them no doubt will have already done so before this number of the paper reaches them.

THE National officers have forwarded to the Exposition authorities at Omaha, an earnest protest against the sale of spirituous liquors on the Exposition grounds. They express the hearty accord of the white-ribbon organization with such movements as the trans-continental exposition, but say: "We feel that this particular branch of so-called industry does not deserve recognition at your hands, and beg that you will head our protest 'for God, and home and native land.'"

THE Twenty-second Annual Council of the British Women's Temperance Association will convene in London on May 9, Lady Henry Somerset presiding. The National executive will meet at Headquarters on Saturday, May 7. For Sunday, services are arranged all over London, to be conducted by white-ribbon leaders. Monday is devotional day, and meetings will be held morning and afternoon in St. Martin's Town Hall, "for thanksgiving, prayer and spiritual instruction." These will be presided over by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, and addressed by Lady Henry Somerset, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. B. F. Meyer and others. On Monday night the great annual mass-meeting of the B. W. T. A. will be held in Queen's Hall.

THROUGHOUT the white-ribbon organization the feeling is general that because of special interests pending, the National Convention should be held this year in some city more centrally located than is Los Angeles, where the gathering would of necessity be smaller than usual. The women of California were among the first to recognize the wisdom of a reconsideration and some weeks ago very generously relinquished their claim. Invitations have been received from Omaha and Lincoln, Neb., Louisville, Ky., Columbus, O., Chicago and St. Paul. No formal decision has, at the present writing, been made by the National officers, but in all probability before this paper is off the press the invitation of St. Paul will have been accepted and the news will have reached most of our readers through the general press.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS leaves Chicago May 2 for her home in Maine, going by way of Canada in order to speak at Ottawa upon the occasion of the presentation of the Polyglot Petition to the Dominion government, May 3. Ever since Miss Willard's funeral Mrs. Stevens has been in Chicago. Twice she has arranged to leave and both times the exigencies of the work have detained her. She will remain at home until her presence again becomes necessary at National Headquarters.

WE are happy to announce that Mrs. Gordon is improving. Miss Anna Gordon returned to Chicago last Thursday to complete the biography of Miss Willard upon which she has been engaged night and day almost for the past few weeks. The book is now all in the hands of the printers, and Miss Gordon left for Castile again on Tuesday. If her mother is well enough she will sail from New York April 30, on the Cunard steamship Umbria, to attend the annual Council of the British Women's Temperance Association. She will be the guest while in England of Lady Henry Somerset and later of Miss Agnes Slack, and will also visit Mrs. Mary B. Willard in Berlin, Germany. Miss Mary Powderly will accompany her.

THE only claim brought forward by the defenders of the Princeton Inn is the one so familiar to the public as the stock argument of high license advocates, that "respectable saloons promote temperance." On the same theory the saloons around the campus at Yale University and the "swell" drinking places which cater to Cornell students, are considered "necessary evils." In order to ascertain if this were the commonly accepted opinion among leading educators, The Voice sent the following question to all college presidents whose names appear in the World's Almanac: "Are you of the opinion that an elaborately furnished and attractive drinking place for students, under the patronage and direction of professors and trustees of a college, serves to lessen the evils of intemperance among students by keeping them away from less reputable saloons, or in any other way?" The result is tabulated in its issue of April 14. Of the 238 replies received, 215 answered emphatically, no; twenty were noncommittal, and two answered, yes. These two are, John Fehrenback, Ph.D., of St. Mary's College, St. Mary's, Ky., and F. H. Snow, LL.D., of the University of Kansas, the number of pupils at present under their jurisdiction being 75 and 895 respectively. We regret that any college president should be found standing for the gilded saloon as a moral factor in student life, but rejoice that, following the law of the "survival of the fittest," the type is fast becoming extinct.

Current Events.

Temperance Victory at Maywood, Ill.

[Special Correspondence.]

RUM cursed as Chicago is there are prohibition breathing spots. In one or another of these there is usually a good-sized fight being waged with the power that looks upon these districts as a constant menace to the perpetuity of its rule. Harvey fighting its way in the courts for protection through its title deeds, Evanston with its special charter shutting saloons out within a four-mile limit of its great University, and Hyde Park making a magnificent stand against "blind pigs," have in turn had their share of attention in THE UNION SIGNAL columns, and its readers have rejoiced over the splendid victories gained for the right.

The storm center this spring has been Chicago's beautiful prohibition suburb, Maywood. In its twenty-four years of existence it has never been invaded by saloons and largely because of this it is sought as a desirable place of residence.

Mutterings of an effort to license saloons have been heard from time to time, but the first organized and determined effort was made this year. After the regular ticket of representative business men, headed by Henry F. Akin, was in the field, a license ticket was sprung with a published platform in which it was claimed that Maywood lacked only saloons to add to "our peculiar advantages regarding perfect drainage, the purity and abundance of our drinking water, the high standard of our public schools, the perfection and growth of our shade trees, the public spirit and morality of our citizens and the number and variety of our churches, all of which superior advantages we possess in an eminent degree." The fact that this is a manufacturing town, and that the illegal sale of liquor was allowed, and the need of revenues were the arguments used in this most remarkable document. The regular nominees immediately met the issue with the following ringing manifesto:

We are unalterably opposed to the sale of intoxicating liquors in any way—licensed or unlicensed.

We pledge ourselves, if elected, to prevent the licensing of saloons and to suppress the illicit sale of liquor.

We resent the slander upon the character of our citizens as contained in the circular of the liquor party.

We admit that this is a manufacturing town, but until informed by the circular of the liquor party, we had not supposed that saloons were a necessity to the laboring man, or a desirable acquisition for his family, ranking in value with good schools and churches.

We brand their proposition to RAISE REVENUE by rumselling as an insult to the intelligence of this generation. As a financial measure, it has proven a rank fallacy.

HENRY F. AKIN,
WILLIAM S. CUTLER,
JAMES M. STIMPSON,
JOHN E. HAYHURST,
CHARLES WESCOTT.

A most effective organization among the leading business men was formed and the coöperation of Maywood's women was asked. "With the help of the women we shall win in this fight; without it we shall be sure to fail," was the way a leading man expressed the feeling. The Maywood Twentieth Century Club, of which Miss Millie Buck is president, took the first step in a general enlistment of the women. The Maywood Woman's Club of the West End, Madam Hulbert, president, gave hearty coöperation and the little band of faithful white-ribboners, Mrs. Wood, president, joined joyfully in the active campaign. H. O. Cravens, chairman of the men's executive committee, was delegated to secure speakers for a great woman's mass-meeting.

Mrs. Ella S. Stewart and Miss Lucy Page Gaston found hundreds of women assembled, anxious to know what they could do to help. A Woman's Home Protection League was formed, pledged to work against the "licensing of saloons, the illegal sale of liquors and against all other evils that threaten our homes." Miss Gaston, whose experience in the Harvey saloon fight was thought to be helpful, was engaged to stay on the field till the votes were counted.

The contest was supposed to be a very close one and the overwhelming no-license majority of 306 out of a total vote of 821 was almost too good to be believed. Ringing bells and tooting whistles, a big bonfire and speech-making by everybody, served to help "let off steam" after the tremendous pressure of anxious days. Six half barrels of beer were returned to the brewer who donated them, with the government stamps unbroken. The result showed that hundreds of the shop men whose vote had been in doubt, had voted for the home.

Much credit belongs to the level-headed men who by wise practical arguments and systematic work did all in their power. These same men generously give much of the credit to the work done by the women whose watchword was "Maywood women have never been defeated yet." Lunch was served on election day convenient to the polls, and anxious wives and mothers went out in carriages to bring tardy ones to vote.

Some question arising as to the wisdom of a grand march of the children, Miss Gaston called a conference with those opposing the movement, for fear votes might be lost instead of gained. Mr. Akin settled the matter by saying: "If having the women and children on my side causes defeat, I am willing to go down with the ship." When the magnificent results were in, the "fearful and unbelieving" frankly confessed that their fears were groundless. "We don't want drunken fathers;" "Don't imperil our future;" "Protect our homes" and "Vote for us," were some of the numerous banners displayed among waving flags as several hundred children, headed by the Daily News band, paraded the streets. They met incoming trains, and were drawn up in line before the factories for the benefit of the shop men. The decided hit of the campaign was the song written by Mrs. C. S. Bullock, wife of one of the pastors, which was sung to the tune of "Yankee Doodle."

This victory is such as every community might have over the saloon and every preventable evil, if the same combination of forces could be secured. The part taken by the woman's clubs may well be followed by other bodies of influential women working for humanity's uplift.

War is Declared.

Active Hostilities Opened on April 22. Flying Squadron Blockades Havana.

HISTORY has been made rapidly during the past week, the long continued diplomatic negotiations having culminated in war between this country and Spain. The resolutions passed by the Senate which included the recognition of the Cuban republic were rejected in the House. After much debate and formal conference the matter was compromised, and resolutions which included a declaration that the "people of Cuba are and of right ought to be free," were passed, signed by the President, and proclaimed as the attitude of this government. Immediately following this action the Spanish minister at Washington asked for his passports, closed up the business of his official position and left for Canada.

The decision of this country on the Cuban question was duly set forth in an ultimatum to Spain requiring that the island be evacuated within forty-eight hours. Before this message was officially received, Minister Woodford was given his passports by the Spanish government, and all negotiations with this country declared closed.

The first hostile act was the seizure of a cargo of mules by the customs officials at New Orleans, that had been purchased for the use of the Spanish army in Cuba. On the same day two large freighters loaded with Spanish supplies were captured off Key West, one by the cruiser Nashville, the other by the flagship New York. The flying squadron sailed for Havana on April 21, and that port was formally blockaded by order of the President, who has called for 100,000 volunteers to maintain the position of this country. The formal declaration of war was made by Congress, at the President's request, on April 23. It is rumored that the island of Hawaii has been seized by the United States, to be used as a coaling station. Miss Clara Barton has returned to Cuba with twenty-five nurses, and will personally superintend the work of the Red Cross Society. The war will be prosecuted with every means at the command of this government and will cease only with its defeat or the complete freedom of Cuba.

THE statement is made that alcoholic candy is largely sold in Manchester and other English towns. It is said to be imported from Germany, and an analyst declares that it contains proportionately as much alcohol as does beer.

The Canadian Plebiscite.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Toronto, says: "The government caucus has almost unanimously decided to have the plebiscite bill for the straight issue of total prohibition, with no taxation rider. This has caused widespread temperance enthusiasm. A special prohibition conference will be held here next week and a Dominion convention on July 5 and 6, in this city. Principal Grant only withdrew his statistics, not his pro-license attitude."

Temperance.

GOVERNOR BLACK, of New York, has signed a bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in department stores.

THE Rev. Dr. Louis Albert Banks, of Cleveland, O., has opened a crusade against the gambling tolerated by the officials of that city.

A COMMITTEE of five representatives of the leading British temperance society has been in Southern California recently, studying the methods which prevail there for successfully excluding saloons.

JAILER WHITMAN, of the Cook county, Ill., bastile, has prohibited the use of cigarets in the jail, the order taking effect on April 25. The giving of cigarets to the boy prisoners contributed largely to influencing the action of the jail authorities.

THERE are 125,000 licensed liquor houses in England and Wales, including off-licenses. Public houses are the most numerous in the St. James division of London. In London licenses are granted to married women in all the divisions except Wandsworth.

THE Cook County, Ill., Prohibition Convention has been called to meet May 10, in Willard Hall, at 2 o'clock P. M., to elect 371 delegates to the state convention in Peoria, June 1, and for the organization of the new county central committee. The basis of apportionment makes a convention of 752 delegates, 615 from Chicago and 137 from the country towns.

THE Cleveland Presbytery, in session at Cleveland, O., on April 15, placed itself on record regarding college drinking by passing the following resolution:

"The presbytery asks the General Assembly to withhold its approval of all educational institutions whose officials lend influence to the support of the saloon."

THE two important cities of Southern California, Redlands and Riverside, held municipal elections April 11. Both gave overwhelming majorities for prohibition. Riverside gave a majority of 377 on a direct proposition of No or Yes. Redlands elected the mayor, the entire board of trustees and the city attorney. It will have no saloon for four years. The W. C. T. U. held an all-day prayer meeting on election day.

THE W. C. T. U., of St. Louis, Mo., is circulating the following petition:

To the Honorable President and Directors of School Board of the City of St. Louis:

We, the undersigned citizens and patrons of the public schools of the city of St. Louis, Mo., do hereby most respectfully ask your honorable body to refuse to allow beer, whisky, or other intoxicating drinks to be sold at any of the school picnics soon to be given under the auspices of the officers and teachers of the public schools of this city. We further ask that no permit of any character to sell or give intoxicants upon such occasions be granted or issued to any person.

THE French minister of public instruction issued last year a decree imposing on all schools, whether for boys or girls, the necessity of giving lessons on the evils of intemperance. Le Signal says that the policy of this decree has been actively forwarded by the University of Toulouse, which is at the head of education throughout a district which contains over 10,000 teachers. It has divided this district into forty sections, and summoned all the teachers in each to hear an address on temperance teaching. A university prize will be annually awarded to the schoolmaster most successful in his temperance lessons. Last year one schoolmaster at Toulouse, M. Jilbaut, enrolled as pledged abstainers 1,008 young folks between the ages of twelve and sixteen.

Contributed.

Dropped Stitches.

BY FLORENCE A. JONES.

I DROPPED a stitch in my knitting
As I sat at work one day,
And it seemed such a little matter
I sang as I worked away.
But lo, when my work was finished,
I saw with infinite pain,
The stitch I had missed in the morning
Had rendered it all in vain!
That all of my perfect stitches
Were useless because of one,
That one little flaw had cost me,
The loss of my heart's "Well done!"

Just so it is in our lives, dear,
But the stitches dropped, ah me!
Are part of the soul's own garment
We weave for eternity.
The stitch of unbridled passions,
Of an evil, bitter thought,
The stitch of neglected duties
Are into the pattern wrought!
The stitch of the first cigar, lad,
The stitch of your first strong drink,
And the work of your life is ruined—
Does it pay, dear, do you think?
Alas! for the stitch unheeded,
Ah me, for the mischief done,
For the glad hopes of the morning,
For heartache at set of sun!

Iowa Falls, Ia.

One April Day.

BY LETTIE S. BIGELOW.

A PEARL, lost from the rosary of June,
And set in this wintry world too soon.
I know it by its soft, blue skies—
Skies like a maiden's laughing eyes,
Confessing what her lip denies;
I guess it by the breezes rare,
Gently murmuring like a prayer,
The souls of roses in the air,
And songs of birds beyond the blue;
Ah, hear them now come floating through,
And, tell me, seems it June to you?

Holyoke, Mass.

Jem's Mother.

BY EMILY D. MCBRIDE.

"THE mail's a-coming."

"That ain't smoke, father, it's just a cloud."

"I think it's smoke," and both the old people with faces pressed close to the window peered wistfully at the thin gray film wavering above the trees of the distant grove.

"It is moving this way, mother."

"Like enough the breeze is in the east."

"There!" they both exclaimed as the faint sound of a whistle reached them. The rumble of the car wheels became distinct, but still they stood watching the shifting line of smoke as it came nearer and nearer. Neither moved until the long train rushed through the town, passing only a few rods from the windows where they were watching. Then Uncle Matt turned away and sat down in his old-fashioned splint rocker. His hands, bronzed and knotted with weather and work, were clasped over the head of his walking stick. He leaned forward, heavily resting his head on his hands.

"Aren't you goin' for the mail, father?"

"'Tain't any use. I've been every day for ten years, and never a word from Jem yet."

"But it might come to-day, and I couldn't stand it no ways to think maybe there was a letter and we didn't know it."

Uncle Matt rose slowly from his chair. "Seems 'zif I couldn't drag myself up to the postoffice many more times. This goin' and goin' every day, and watchin' and watchin' the letters popin' into the boxes here and there and everywhere, and thinkin' every time that the next one will fly into our box and it will be from Jem—but there, mother, I'm goin'. Maybe it will come to-day."

Aunt Betsey rocked back and forth crying softly, while Uncle Matt with labored effort moved around the room getting ready for his walk. He came and stood beside her as he buttoned his worn, faded coat snugly across his chest, then he patted her silvered hair with clumsy sympathy, saying, "There mother, there mother, I'm goin' now." Aunt Betsey nodded and tried to smile as he went out the door.

It was a snowy, tedious walk, but Uncle Matt trudged bravely on, the heroism of his wife's smile filling his loving old heart and urging forward his aged rheumatic limbs. Every one in the village knew him—knew the almost hopeless hope of his daily pilgrimages to the office. The group of idlers waiting to catch stray bits of gossip from those who were coming and going, smiled sympathetically when the postal clerk took a letter from the box and waved it at the old man as he entered the door.

"For me?" he asked. "Is it for me?"

The clerk nodded. "I hope it's all right," he ventured, noticing how the letter shook in the trembling hand that received it. But Uncle Matt could make no reply. He stumbled out into the street again, the precious letter crushed in his intense, eager grasp. He forgot all the heart-breaking anxiety of those long years. He forgot that Jem had left home in a drunken fury, without one word of farewell but sullen curses. He forgot the bitter cruelty of his unbroken silence during the long years. He remembered only that he was their son, their bright, beautiful winning boy. As he neared home he exulted in the thought of the happiness he was taking to his boy's mother. He knew he should find her sitting before the little open stove trying to knit. She had long since stopped asking if there were any mail, and this morning she did not even look up as he came in, lest he should see her too willing tears. He sat down by her and put the letter in her lap. There was no need to ask from whom it came. They had no thought at first whether the news were good or bad. It was enough for the moment that Jem was alive, that he had written to them.

"You open it, mother," Uncle Matt said at last. She lifted it from her lap, took hold of one corner with thumb and finger, but her hands refused to do her bidding.

"I can't, father. You open it."

He reached to take it, but all the sorrow and loneliness of those long years, all the disappointed pride and ambition, and all the possibilities of happiness or misery concealed by that common yellow envelope overwhelmed him. "No, mother, I can't," he faltered, and after a pause, "We'll take it to Lizy."

Lizy's home over on the next street was in plain sight across the open space. They went across the field by the footpath the school children had worn through the snow. Lizy saw them coming, carrying the letter between them, and opened the door as they turned into the yard.

"You open it," Aunt Betsey said, by way of greeting, holding the letter toward her sister.

Lizy was a plump, comfortable woman, with much sense and little sentiment. "Lost your glasses?" she asked, running her scissors along the edge. "Why! It's from Jem! Now you let me set right down between you and I'll read it out loud."

"Wait a minute, Lizy," Aunt Betsey pleaded, content at first to see the letter unfolded in her sister's hand. Lizy talked in easy commonplaces until her sister said, "Now commence, read every word."

"Dear Father and Mother"—Aunt Betsey put out a detaining hand. "Wait a minute, Lizy, read that over again. You see he hasn't forgotten; he says, 'dear father and mother.' Now go on." And so the letter was read with many interruptions and comments.

When once more they were at home, sitting side by side before the fire, they discussed Jem's letter from beginning to end, over and over, until both were nodding in drowsy happiness. Aunt Betsey was the first to start up.

"Do you know, father," she began, with a little break in her voice, "I've always blamed myself for Jem's goin' away. He just had common store stockings that winter. You mind? My hands were lame and I couldn't knit him any. 'N I've thought sometimes if he'd had on stockings that I knit those boys couldn't have led him into the saloons so easily, and all these years of sorrow might have been different."

"Don't, mother, don't blame yourself. It was all because Jem was too anxious to please everybody." The old man rambled on, fumbling for excuses for his profligate son. "'Twasn't because he was bad at heart. He was too good-hearted. Wasn't that it, mother? He couldn't offend anyone."

Aunt Betsey nodded. "If I only could send him stockings that I knit, maybe they'd help to keep his feet from paths of destruction."

Uncle Matt brightened up. "Do, mother! Of course it would help him." Then he stopped in dismay, for his wife was crying again. "What's wrong? Haven't you the yarn?"

She shook her head, holding up the cylindrical strip she was working on. "The last bit is in these wristers, 'n if I raveled them out there wouldn't be more than enough to begin a pair of stockings."

Uncle Matt's hand instinctively sought his pocket and searched hopelessly for the money he knew was not there. Then he went to the book shelf and drew from behind the books the well-worn purse. With a desponding glance he replaced it. "There ain't anything we could sell?" he suggested, brightening.

"No, nothing. Everything was gone long ago. The spinning wheels went first and then the old clock; everything has been sold but—"

"Have you sold the foot stove?"

Aunt Betsey caught her breath. "It's the only thing that's left of mother's."

"Is that so? I wouldn't have said anything if I'd known that."

There was little sleep for the anxious mother that night, but with the morning her spirits rose. After breakfast she wrapped up the old-fashioned foot stove and put the package in her husband's hands. "You take that up to Mis' Deering. She said she'd give me five dollars for it if I ever wanted to sell it. Then go on up to the store and get me some yarn; they know what kind I buy. Go quick before I change my mind."

Uncle Matt made no remonstrance, for he knew the mother rejoiced in the sacrifice she was making for their son. The pang of parting with her treasured relic would be forgotten long before the stitches for the first stocking were cast on the shining needles. Oh, the warmth from that little old foot stove and the strength of the hardy pioneer lives it had made comfortable must have been woven into those sturdy blue woolen hose! When they were finished, the mother spread them in a row on her bed, and with her face bowed on its patchwork cover, prayed heaven to make them in some way instrumental in saving her dear son. Then, with a letter full of sweet mother-love, she sent them on their way.

Uncle Matt resumed his daily visits to the office. Gradually Jem's letter was worn thin from much reading. The folds cracked and the pieces were held together by zigzig stitches. Many nights during that long, cold winter Jem's letter was tucked under his mother's pillow, while she looked forward with loving certainty to the time when another should come. And one day in the early spring the letter came.

"I was coming home, mother," he wrote. "I've been a long time on the way. I had saved a little money, and I wanted to bring it to you. It is only a little bit, but I will send it, for I can't come now. They say I can't live, but mother, I want you to know that I have not touched a drop of the stuff that ruined me since I got your package. I couldn't walk up to a bar with stockings on that I knew you had woven so many prayers into. Then, too, your letter was in my pocket, and your love seemed more real to me than it ever had when I was at home."

Here the shaky, uncertain writing broke off, the pen had fallen from Jem's exhausted hand. The nurse wrote in explanation. Jem was in hospital in Chicago. He had saved a little child from injury by a half-drunken cart driver, but he himself had been knocked down. His injuries were not serious of themselves, but his very life had been burned out by alcohol. His few weeks of abstinence was in his favor, but his recovery was doubtful. Then she forgot that her patient was simply a "case"—one of hundreds—and told with tender sympathy of the manly heroism of Jem's conduct.

Aunt Betsey arose when they had finished reading the letter and put on her bonnet and shawl. There were no tears and sighs now, but a resolute preparation for the inevitable. "I'm goin' over to Mis' Deering's," she said quietly, and carried the letter with her. The few crises in the lives of these humble people had been met by the prompt action of the gentle, submissive wife, and Uncle Matt was more than content to leave the matter in her hands. Nor was he greatly surprised when they found themselves on the Chicago express traveling toward Jem. They gave no thought to danger or fatigue or to the possible failure to find him. He was there, they must see him.

These two old people, so innocent, so genuine, so trustful, won the kindliest services of the big, good-natured conductor. At another time the breakneck speed at which the carriage in which he placed them was driven, would have made them faint with terror, but now they only thought, in a dazed way, how kind the driver was to hurry so for them.

When the afternoon began to wane, the nurse by Jem's bedside gave place to a little woman in a rusty black dress. She sat by him scarcely breathing until he stirred uneasily, then she put her hand on his forehead. She stroked his cheek and patted it as she had been used to do when he came in his little white "nightie" to say his prayers by her knee. Her touch seemed to turn back the stained, blotted leaves of his life to the pure pages of youth. He smiled and murmured, "Now I lay—me—down—to sleep," and then, "No, mother, I have not touched a drop since I got your letter."

Toward midnight he roused, but with the calmness of one to whom death has drawn near, he showed no surprise at seeing his loved ones near him. "Tell the boys, mother, that I wasted my life. Tell them"—his words were coming more slowly now as the ebbing tide carried his soul out toward the dark waters. "Tell them I tried to stop drinking, but I forgot to say 'Our Father.'"

There was an empty cot in that ward in the morning. There was a little procession that wound its way in mute sadness through the noise of the city. There were two sorrow-laden old people who returned to the lonely home in Brushville.

Jem's life had been a record of time wasted, talents abused and honor tarnished. But at the setting of the sun of his life the golden glory of one honest effort and one deed of noble heroism shone through the clouds of wrong-doing that had darkened his day.

Ravenna, O.

In Princeton.

BY REV. ALFORD KELLEY.

(Concluded.)

ABOUT this same time the ladies of Princeton were approached in regard to forming a branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Plymouth, but they demurred, stating that such an organization could not be formed until the seminary and college professors ceased having wine upon their tables at meals.

Some of the tipplers of the town, who were unable to keep a supply of beverages in their cellars, were bitterly incensed at the reform movement, saying that they, being poor, would be deprived of their wine and beer, while the professors, being rich, would still be able to keep an abundant supply in their cellars and drink as much as they pleased at and between meals.

The world at large looks for university graduates to be models of sobriety. How can they be such under these influences? The church expects the young ministers who come from the seminaries to be sound upon, not only doctrinal, but moral questions as well, and to be earnest in advocating the right and opposing the wrong. Living in such an atmosphere, it is not surprising that some of our ministers are behind the laymen in raising their voices and lowering their votes for the annihilation of the drink traffic.

King Alcohol would have been dethroned and Kings Total Abstinence and Prohibition would have jointly and harmoniously reigned in Princeton and elsewhere long ago, had there not been so many influential antagonists. Such sentiments being entertained by the professors in university and seminary, it is not surprising that liquor is always an accompaniment of the senior class of suppers at graduation, when some Christian men find the current so strong that, although they have never taken intoxicants during the entire undergraduate course, they will then drink, even become drunk, and yet subsequently matriculate as ministerial students in the theological seminary.

No liquor is served at the alumni dinner by the university during commencement week, but it is found at the reunions and banquets of the separate classes, though often served only to those paying for it personally. I have never attended a class dinner and have been at only one alumni banquet, which was held in central Pennsylvania. To it one man came drunk, and at it many others became drunk. The drinkers were at one end of the table, the non-drinkers at the other. The faculty representative present spoke unconcernedly of his drinking habits, and during the evening some of the drinkers perpetrated the joke (?) of having the waiter pass the whisky decanter among the ministers and other non-drinkers.

A recent experience in connection with our class decennial illustrates Princeton's present temperance atmosphere. For the expenses of the reunion, not including the supper, each man was previously assessed five dollars. Wondering how three or four hundred dollars from the sixty or eighty men expected to be present could be spent for "badges, printing, headquarters, etc.," I withheld my money. The explanation of the extravagance came later. The headquarters were in a room formerly used as a saloon. The proprietor's reputation for keeping a disreputable place had prevented the renewal of his license, but the class officers had rented the room for commencement week with bar fixtures and bartender included. The latter was employed in distributing to alumni, undergraduates and town friends, free beer, which was paid for out of the five dollar contributions of the class.

It is quite the thing now for the graduates to have their reunion headquarters where free beer is served. How natural, then, that a recent class, to be in touch with their older brothers, should have as their class emblem a beer bottle and mug, pipe and cards; and that the seniors and juniors should continue or learn to drink in the small grill-room of the inn, while the sophomores and freshmen, deprived of the privilege of drinking temperately at a "respectable" place, should learn to drink intemperately at a disreputable place.

Seniors and juniors were kept from the "low places," and urged instead to go to the grill-room, "in the interest of temperance," and, at the same time, the sophomores and freshmen, refused permission to go to the grill-room, were compelled to go to the "low places," "in the interest of temperance." After graduating from a dive they were fit to enter the aristocratic inn! And yet, Princeton is a place where logic is a prominent feature of the curriculum. How Satan must shout with glee at this applied logic! And, if good fellowship is promoted by drinking during the ordinary study days, how much more should the jolly companionship felt after an athletic victory or the kindred feeling of misery following a defeat be expressed over deep potations from the flowing bowl! Hence, drunken sprees after the various games are an essential part of the contests to both victors and vanquished.

It has always been accepted as axiomatic in Princeton that Harvard and heresy are synonymous terms. Whatever may be the status on questions of speculative theology, Harvard, as a prohibition community, is superior to Princeton on this subject of practical morality, and, since "by their fruits ye shall know them," it may be a problem, uniting doctrine and duty, as to which has the right to claim supremacy.

Recently, in the city of Wilmington, Del., two presents were given to the United States gunboat, Wilmington. The children of the schools gave a $300 Bible, and the older citizens contributed a $1,500 punch bowl! A scholar from one of the schools made the Bible presentation speech, and former Ambassador Thomas F. Bayard was the orator in presenting the punch bowl.

How would it do for the gunboat Princeton to receive similar recognition from some of the residents of New Jersey's university town? The sophomores and freshmen—who, from the Princeton inn standpoint, are boys, though twenty years old—might join the public school children in presenting the good ship with a fine Bible. The grill-room seniors and juniors—who, by the aforesaid criterion, are men, though only nineteen—might unite with the sympathizing older citizens in giving an elaborate punch bowl. A freshman might make the address when the Bible is given, and Professor Shields, one of Princeton's most distinguished citizens, might be the orator to present the punch bowl, proposing the proper toast in the words of the old song:

Here's to Princeton gunboat,
She's the bonniest boat afloat.
Drink her down, drink her down.

Frazer, Pa.

The Poor Woman's Club.

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

OUR "dram shop"—damned by the supreme court of the United States as a source of crime and misery—is the "poor man's club." Its doors are open at all hours of the day (in spite of the midnight closing law) and on all days of the week (in spite of the Sunday closing law). There are, it is true, dram shops to which the poor man is not welcome; the drinks come too high, and the social amenities cost too much. But there are dram shops and there are saloons. The institution is unchanged, whether named dram shop, or saloon, or sample-room, or The Gold Dollar or The Mecca—but there are grades of dram shops. Some most "respectable," with certain civilities of service at the bar, and certain proprieties of legal observance (the proprietors paying United States special tax, or Dow tax, or high license, or other fee for the protection of the police power), while others are very unrespectable, with gross incivilities of speech, profanities, obscenities and other disorders, the proprietors evading tax and license, and only keeping in with the police by judicious gifts of free drinks to the roundsmen on the beat.

The saloon, however, it is said, is "the poor man's club," and certain politicians, being in need of the votes that they can get, and having no thought of the poor man's wife, who can't vote, and of the poor man's children, who can't vote, plead in set and solemn speech at dinner parties and on the stump in favor of it. Eloquently do they describe the horrors of the poor man's home, the evils to which he is exposed, because his wife can not cook well; the unattractiveness of his rooms in the tenement, because his wife can not decorate the walls with fine pictures; the general squalor of the establishment of which he is head and husband, because his wife is deficient in energy. Eloquently do they lament the sad status of the poor, poor man, and as eloquently do they plead for him the need of a club—some genial place, where he meets his fellowmen and chats in cheerful atmosphere to the music of glasses and the ribald rhyme of tipsy voters, drunk on the candidates' "corn"; some bright and beautiful place, sawdust on the floor, tobacco fumes in the air, profanity, obscenity, dirty walls, foul faces peering out from vile canvases, a villainous hand peddling drink at five cents a glass until the drinker is drunk, and then thrusting him out into the street.

The poor man's club! Legislatures probe their troubled heads to provide against its evils, invent laws to regulate it, impose taxes to put upon it its due share of the burdens that it imposes upon society—oh, a noble institution is the poor man's club! Murders are committed in it; plots are forwarded there whose execution means robbery of virtue and the throttling of innocence; schemes are fostered there that mean the thwarting of the public will, but it must be protected or the "poor man" will not have blood enough to nourish the brewery and the distillery.

In the meantime we hear nothing from the smug defenders of the poor woman's club. Where is her retreat from the wretchedness of her flat in the tenement? Where is the beautiful saloon whither she may hie when the children cry, and the air of the summer night burns like the breath of the desert? Where is the genial saloon in which she may meet other women of the ward, and have a good time at the candidates' cost? Her club is the flat in the tenement where children breed in poverty and shame; where she washes clothes for a living six days in a week; where, on nothing a week but what she earns, she furnishes a poor table for the man who demands "something to eat" three times a day, and goes to the saloon every evening for "something to drink."

Once on a time, an observer of social customs, stood near the desk of a cashier in a great factory as the men came up for their money. Near the desk there stood the collector for a saloon—the poor man's club; and as the men appeared, he presented his claim, which was promptly met, while the balance was handed the men. One man received five cents as his share of the earnings. With that in pocket he started home. Just outside the factory yard is a saloon (there is always a saloon near the factory); perhaps he stopped there; perhaps he went home to the poor woman's club. Yes, he went home—where his wife was at work on her third wash!

I met a man at the church door one night who asked for a nickel—the price of a lodging at "The Silver Moon." "Do you drink?" "Yes." "Have you a wife?" "Yes." "Does she drink?" "No, she washes!"

The poor woman's club is a room in which she washes, irons, cooks, cares for children, sleeps, works—perhaps she has two rooms. There is no music, there are no pictures on the wall, there is no cheer, no gracious companionship between husband and wife.

When the husband comes home from his "club" he is like Mrs. Ford's husband as Mrs. Page describes him in "The Merry Wives of Windsor": "Any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility and patience, to this, his distemper, he is in now." For the man is mad, poisoned by beer, whisky, rum, drinks straight, drinks mixed. The woman has been at her club. She is not drunk, but she is tired and worn—and her husband has been to the "poor man's club."

Cincinnati, O.

Correspondence.

En Route for the Home Land.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—My pen dropped at Port Said when word concerning the dear Chieftain came suddenly upon me. The last message had been so cheery and plans for the future so clearly defined, that I had lost sight of my fears for her, and was wholly unprepared for the blow. How I longed to be with those who mourned, and the prospect of waiting two or three days in the most dismal and uninteresting of ports seemed almost unbearable. All unknown to me God was preparing comfort in the form of work. When I landed at Port Said prior to the Cairo visit, I had been oppressed by what I had seen and heard, the unchecked evil on every side, and I had prayed very earnestly and definitely for two consecrated young men to undertake the work. Now I was to find my prayers answered by two consecrated young women, American girls, called of God and wonderfully equipped by the Holy Spirit, who had made a grand beginning of work among the natives. Living with Mansard Daud and his wife, native workers, who have endured great persecution for Christ's sake, they are mastering the Syrian language, and have already opened both day and Sunday-school and taken into their care some girls who needed shelter. The possibilities of the work are great if financial aid is supplied. Syrian and Mohammedan children are turned away almost daily for lack of room.

In the same building is located the Seamen's Rest, where earnest Christian work is carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Locke (English), and together these friends make a little colony for God, whose efforts in many directions are like a spiritual breakwater in this port of evil. Meetings are held every night and an invitation came for us to help. Some of our party went, I felt I might take the one day alone with my grief and the Comforter, but sent word I would speak the following evening. Then I found the place packed and it was a blessed service with God's power to save manifestly with us. One of the girls said, "Oh, your white ribbon appeals to me for my mother is a white-ribboner in California." This led to a quiet personal talk the next day, when the two girls decided to become "members-at-large," and I decorated them with our badge. The next day I spoke in their Sunday-school, through an interpreter, and after careful explanation, asked all to rise who would take a life-long pledge of total abstinence. All stood, both children and adults, and held up their right hands, while with solemn words and earnest prayer the vows were made to God.

It was soon decided that with such work demanding immediate attention it was best to organize the W. C. T. U. We had been notified that our ship had entered the canal and would be due in a few hours, so there was no time to lose. At 2 P. M. we came together, the crusade psalm was read in Arabic, our work was further explained, several prayers were offered and the organization perfected, with Miss Anna Vansant for president, Miss May Watson, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Locke (English), treasurer, and a Syrian sister for recording secretary. It was a time of solemn gladness, and those dear friends, with hands already full, accepted these new responsibilities as sacred trusts, and thus became linked to our world wide work "for God and home and every land." How our dear Chieftain would have rejoiced over these new unions and their "open door of usefulness." What loving greetings would have been forwarded with dispatch, and constant reminders would have been sent of her love and care. They are so far away from kindred workers, and all our methods are new to them, and they are our youngest sisters; will not numbers of our women, especially the dear Y members, send words of greeting, not looking for replies, but adding helps in various lines. Make the friends feel that they belong to a big sisterhood with generous loving hearts. Address Seaman's Rest, Port Said, Egypt. See other letters in UNION SIGNAL for addresses in Syria and Palestine.

That evening I spoke again to an overflowing audience when pledges were taken and the Gospel message given. At three o'clock the next morning there came quick raps on our doors, "Ship's in; get up," and we hurriedly made ready for embarking. Our new friends came to see us off, and we left with a very different feeling from our former visit, for had we not set up our banner in the name of the Lord, and might we not claim Port Said as belonging to our parish, to be girdled by prayer and held daily before Him who is able not only to give the uttermost parts of the earth as a possession, but also to make this "highway of the nations" a recruiting place for His service? Before sailing, messages were sent to Cairo, Jerusalem and Beyrout, knowing the friends would rejoice over our latest acquisition and promptly send cheer. Thus "the tie that binds" would be felt at once.

Three and a half days on the Oroya, and then grim old Vesuvius with his smoking cap, and soon the beautiful bay and harbor at Naples. I had received messages which promised welcome, and among the first to board our ship was a bright-faced young English evangelist looking for me. He came for Rev. Mr. Burrows, superintendent of the Sailors' Rest, which is the center of temperance work. Madame Menricoffre, whose name appears in our World's list, is president of our society, and I had a very pleasant interview with her. She is sister to Mrs. Butler, and an earnest worker in lines of rescue and reform. "Why, no, I have never worn the white ribbon, but I will if you think it important," was her sisterly response to my words in calling her attention to this "silent witness" for total abstinence and purity. My visit there and at Rome was necessarily brief, and I was unfit for work. Letters of inquiry had decided me not to stop in Paris, for I am fully convinced that if we are to accomplish any real good in Italy or France, someone must devote months to laying good foundations, after careful study of the situation and habits of the people. The time is ripe for such effort. The drink question is being handled as never before, and the nations are all waking up to the great economical, social and scientific problems which must be faced at once. I believe our woman's work would appeal to them if rightly presented, and that two great national unions might thus be added to our World's forces. May God give wisdom in the appointment of workers, and His people money for the establishment of the work.

Hurrying on to England I began to have a home feeling as I neared her shores, and though I was worn and weary beyond words, my heart grew comforted for I was near friends, dear comrades in blessed service. Previous to our deep sorrow I had received words concerning a welcome from my English sisters, but we could not think of it now. Mrs. Smith (our "Hannah") came to me at once with just the same trustful spirit, and certainty that "Heavenly Father knows what is best for us all." There was a bright little visit with the Osbornes, and a brief consultation with dear Lady Henry, who came up to Oxford to meet me, whose pale face and deep grief touched me sorely, but her earnest purpose to carry on the work was inspiring. She will not fail us and we will not fail her. God help us not to disappoint the Master in this crisis hour of our history. Ah, as the now sainted Chieftain said, "Let's love one another," and may that thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians come out in words and deeds. The world's keen eyes are upon us, and the enemy prophesies disruption and laughs at our "tie that binds." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." Let us stand up and be counted by this test, and my heart claims every woman who has ever donned the white ribbon, or taken our motto, "For God and Home and Every Land."

Four letters have come to me from the Chieftain since she passed on. At Naples, Rome, Paris and London, strong, loving messages, so full of meaning. It seemed natural to read them, and I doubt if she would care to have changed them, even from the heights to which she has ascended, for she knew better than any one else what this trip has been and what I have tried to do. Now the year, with its thirteen months, is over, and I am indeed homeward bound. It is a long way "round the world," and I have not kept a very direct course, but I have tried faithfully to carry out the plans and also to improve upon them when it has been possible. Many unexpected opportunities have opened for work, of which I have gladly availed myself. Especially was this true of Ramallah, nine miles from Jerusalem, where Mr. and Mrs. Hussey, of Maine, have inaugurated a blessed work for native girls. They gave me a glimpse of home in their welcome and care for me. Then there was the visit to Galilee and a never-to-be-forgotten Sunday at Nazareth. At many points it was a time of seed-sowing, with promise of correspondence and helps to be forwarded later. In all, I have had between four and five hundred services of different kinds, and have not been prevented from keeping a single appointment. God has been very gracious unto me, and whatever has been accomplished I lay at the feet of the Master, as my whole being takes up the refrain,

"Praise Him! Praise Him! Jesus, our blessed Redeemer!
Sing, O earth, His wonderful love proclaim!
Hail Him! Hail Him! Highest archangels in glory,
Strength and honor give to His holy name!"

To the dear friends whom I have met during these months, and to the dear friends to whom I return, I send a message of love, love to all, and may His peace, peace unspeakable, and His love, unfailing and unmeasurable, abide with us and be manifest in our daily life and ministry.

Very truly yours in best of bonds,

MRS. J. K. BARNEY.

S. S. Armenian, April 3, 1898.

Abstinence in the Dutch Reformed Church.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have been very much grieved to see a statement in THE UNION SIGNAL of December 2, which only recently reached me, in regard to an "action of the Dutch Reformed Church" toward abstinence. Wherever the statement originated it is not true. The Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church meets only once in three years. At two of the meetings since I first came to the colony sixteen years ago, the temperance question has come up for discussion and the resolution put on record has been "There is nothing contrary to Scripture in total abstinence." At the meeting of the last Synod the question was not brought up at all. Perhaps a few facts as to the position of the Dutch Reformed Church may make our present position plain.

In the theological seminary where our ministers are trained we have as senior professor, Rev. Professor Hofmeyer, who for many years has been an aggressive abstainer, and has suffered much because of his freely expressed principles. In a recent interview he told me of those who had most bitterly resented his efforts to awaken the conscience in regard to abstinence, that they had come to him and with tears begged his pardon for the anger they had shown; of others who had written asking him to send them the pledge to sign; that friends of his early days, who for years would not listen to his preaching, were coming back again, and that he felt that "great moral victory had been won." The other professors are also total abstainers. Among the young men who go out from this seminary there is an increasingly large number who go out as pledged abstainers. Some of the present students are aggressive temperance workers. Among the presidents of our local unions we have the wives of two of our ministers and the daughter of a third. The wife of Rev. Andrew Murray, whom you all know and love through his writings, is the superintendent of our purity department. Among the membership there is a larger number from the Dutch Reformed Church than from any other.

There is a steadily growing sentiment in favor of total abstinence, and many of our wine farmers are not only willing that their children should sign the pledge, but some have even sent their sons to me with the request that I would allow them to sign my pledge book. I fully believe that the day is at hand when our church will take the lead in the colony in this question of total abstinence. When I look back over the years I have spent in the colony and see how the feeling has changed in regard to temperance, I can only say, "Behold what God hath wrought."

Yours in the Master's service,

THERESA M. CAMPBELL,
W. C. T. U. President of Cape Colony.

Huguenot College, Murray Hall, Wellington, March 8, 1898.

Delano Settlement.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Often the question is asked, "What is a Settlement? What do you do?" A Settlement is a home center for all uplifting agencies, a home, situated where most needed as a social, educational and moral force. In it is carried on any and all kinds of work that can, in any way, benefit individuals or communities. A family makes this their real and only home. They cultivate the acquaintance of the neighborhood, and come into individual lives by tact and love, to comfort, strengthen and build up. They feed and clothe the body, if necessary; feed the mind, cultivate the heart, and, in short, do as Christ would do in so far as the human can reflect the divine. They never stoop, but live on a level with all. And their effort is to continually raise the level.

In Delano Settlement we are every day extending the line of our influence. I should enjoy writing a whole page about "our boys." They are in our hearts to stay—at least, about twenty of them. They have conquered us, and now we hope the good will conquer them. This is my first work with boys. I always shunned them, but here they are, and the fascination of the battle royal between good and evil is strong upon me, and the good will triumph. Already, after one year's work, we see results and signs of more to follow. This I have learned, that boys are just human—like us all—only intensified. The great underlying desire of their hearts is the social longing. I see so much of them that I know they are at home only to eat and sleep, and I asked one of them why they never stay at home, and he said, "Oh, we like to be where all the kids are." These "kids" ages range from fifteen to twenty-one. So to our Settlement home they come, every day and any time, to find the boys. Here they meet, here they spend their spare time, for they care much less what they do than for being together; and here comes the opportunity to help them spend the time. They talk, read, play games, sing and play the piano. Nearly all smoke; some drink. Some have told me they cannot quit smoking, have tried and failed. A sober, honest confession, and what a warning to boys never to learn! They attend our Sunday-school, gospel meetings and prayer service.

All Settlements do not have the gospel work, but our women can not easily forget Crusade days and do not well know how to work outside the old harness. Some persons are shocked when our boys whisper and smile while we pray, but those who see the undercurrent know it is not irreverence, but a human effort to cover the soul's response to the Spirit's call. Monday nights the boys' club meets, Tuesday and Thursday evenings the night school. Friday evenings are devoted to socials and lectures. Saturday evenings to Delsarte for girls and young women. We have mothers' meetings and a free kindergarten, and through these have, in a quiet way, assisted families with food and clothing. Just now the mothers are sewing for our Cuban neighbors, making and repairing garments here at the Settlement, gathered from those of us who from little could yet spare something for those in greater need. We have over twenty non-resident workers, some of them students from Northwestern University. This work is all free except that of kindergarten teachers. The financial committee secures support by monthly pledges and donations. The last public lecture given by Miss Willard in Evanston was for our benefit, and the "rainbow arch" was brought to us from the church the Sunday following the funeral, by request of Miss Anna Gordon. The flowers have all been given away to those who cared for a remembrance of that "last day."

Each Settlement works in its own way, adapting the life of the residents to the needs of the community. They are conducted by individuals, churches, colleges and societies, by the one to whom the call comes. We have an organization known as the Delano Settlement Association, composed mostly of W. C. T. U. women.

And still there is much, so much that never can be told. You must find it out for yourselves.

MARY Z. C. MAIN.
Delano Settlement, Evanston, Ill.

Sympathy From Tasmania.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As Tasmanian correspondent to your valuable pages, let me convey to you the loving and tender sympathy that I know our women here bear for you in the great loss that our organization has sustained through the transition from life mortal to life immortal of our beloved Chieftain, Miss Frances Willard. To our American sisters who have known her always, and who have been favored with her beautiful presence since the inception of the W. C. T. U., the grief will be great. In a wide sense our loss is a common one, and our sorrow is a common one, and we can but say in words similar to those expressed by one of Ian Maclaren's characters, "There is but one heart in our organized womanhood today and that is sair." Her earnest, loving written words that have come to us through THE UNION SIGNAL, have done us more good than we can tell; above all her saintly, womanly life has been an inspiration to us and our work. She has told us that "we have been brought up together," learning the same lessons of faith, hope and charity. Some day we shall all live together in the Father's many-mansioned house, where, freed from all the imperfections of time and sense and sin, we shall serve together through the endless ages of eternity.

Till then we shall with you "look up" and permit the influence of all that dear Miss Willard has done, of all that she was in herself, to inspire us to more devoted service for humanity and greater love one for the other.

With tender sympathy and loving greetings from your Tasmanian sisters, I am yours in the King's service,

JESSIE S. ROOKE,
Colonial Correspondent.

Emu Bay, Tasmania, Feb. 22, 1898.

The "Do Everything Policy."

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I have been thinking what the most distinctive characteristic of Miss Willard was next to her surpassing "might of gentleness." I think it was her "do everything policy." Reformers had nearly all been "one idea" people, who treated some one particular reform as a panacea, exaggerating its importance and failing to appreciate its need of coöperating moral forces. With her great heart she saw that all reforms were but fragments of one reform, the Christianizing of society. Dr. Joseph Cook, Dr. Josiah Strong and a few others, have since recognized this fraternity of reforms, but Miss Willard was the pioneer of this well-rounded, ethical application of Christianity. In the W. C. T. U. is retained all that was valuable in the specialist plan, for each union with its many superintendents is a union of specialists, who are personally broadened by sympathetic knowledge of each other's work.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1898.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Abraham believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness.—Gen. 15:6.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform.—Rom. 4:20, 21.

REV. WM. BURGESS, pastor of the Congregational church of Desplaines, Ill., sent a letter to the editor of THE UNION SIGNAL and simultaneously to several Chicago daily papers, in which it was published. We are glad to give it place in the Temple column, even at the sacrifice of other important matter. We return warm thanks to Mr. Burgess for the noble and brotherly way he champions our cause. We want to assure him and all other friends of the Temple that the financial part of the enterprise managed by the Temple Trustees could not have been conducted in a more judicious manner than they were, considering the appalling condition of the financial world for the last five years. This was the joint decision of a committee of leading business men of Chicago called for counsel, among whom was numbered the honored Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Lyman J. Gage. The following is a copy of Mr. Burgess' letter:

✠

May I ask space in your columns to offer a few words in support of the appeal which the W. C. T. U. have issued in the name of Frances E. Willard, for the Temple?

It seems to me that the Christian men of America can not afford to see that splendid building pass out of control of its promoters; for the following among other reasons:

1. The very conception and erection of the Temple is the most magnificent monumental example of Christian courage and faith in America, if not in the world.

2. It expresses more true loyalty to our country than perhaps any other building in America. Every stone in its walls is cemented with the prayers and self-sacrifice of the noble army of women-workers "For God, and Home and Native Land." It is entirely free from the elements of speculation for individual gain and stands only for the spirit of this exalted loyal motto.

3. It stands alone in all the United States, the one Temple voicing the sentiment and prayers of the organized women of America against the organized forces of lust and liquor.

4. No monument of metal or marble could be too costly to fitly memorialize the noble, self-sacrificing life of the gifted and inspired woman, who, "being dead yet speaketh," and no monument, though it cost millions, would express the indebtedness of the nation to Frances E. Willard if it left the Temple to pass from the control and purposes of those who created it.

Whether or not the finances of the enterprise have been handled in the most judicious way possible, whether or not, under some less ardent and more world-wise management, the funds could have been better expended is not the question. Here is the "House Beautiful" in which these noble women have invested their toil and prayers and gifts—a temple of architectural art and a fit home for that organization of women who "through faith have wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouth of lions, out of weakness were made strong."

A single check which any of our millionaires might send them would give these women the control of the temple.

Would it not be an eternal disgrace to our country if history should record that we who build our churches by thousands and our costly palaces of art and literature by hundreds and numerous temples of secret societies, yet lacked the gallantry and loyalty to our mothers and wives and sisters, to stand by them in this one supreme effort to secure for their great humanitarian cause a National home; and also lacked the good sense to perpetuate an object lesson at once so striking and so valuable as the "Willard Temple"?

✠

Millionaires as a class have little sympathy with the reform we are engaged in. Our reliance is in the little gifts of those who love our Lord, who are not richly dowered with this world's wealth. We are receiving daily a large number of such gifts, from a dollar up, our receipts averaging from $100 to $200 daily, largely from the fifty-cent subscription cards, of which we have over 400,000 out. This, of course, does not include Miss Dow's receipts. Oh, that our women would feel the need of seeing to it at once that four subscription cards are filled and sent without delay. Two months more and July will be upon us.

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

East Winds and South.

BY ANNIE ISABEL WILLIS.

DOROTHY DILWORTH and Kendrick Van Pelt
Visited often together,
And just how they did and just how they felt
Seemed to depend on the weather.
For if they were cross, and things went awry,
And they could not agree in their play,
Their mammas would look at each other and cry,
"I think the wind's due east to-day!"

But Kendrick and Dorothy sometimes were good,
And played very sweetly together,
And then, as before, their temper and mood
Were laid to the state of the weather.
For their mammas would smile when things went aright,
And, kissing each dimpled mouth,
Would say to each other, "The sun s shining bright,
And the wind is right straight from the south!"

A Girl's Idea of Politics.

BY CORA REYNOLDS HUNT.

THERE was great excitement at the Lawson school. Groups were gathered here and there and shouts of "There goes a republican," "Oh, she's a democrat," and "I wouldn't be a prohi," greeted the ears of the passer-by, almost leading him to think that he had struck a combination political caucus.

But such was not the case. The fact was that the teacher of the Lawson school had inaugurated a plan for giving the scholars a lesson in practical citizenship.

It was on the eve of the presidential election, and the whole school was to vote for the favored candidates by ballot after a patriotic program. Each party was to have a representative who would set forth its claims in an essay or speech, and they were to discover the strongest possible arguments. They had the privilege of asking their fathers and older brothers, who were supposed to have these reasons at their tongues' end.

Mollie Furman had been chosen to set forth the peculiar doctrines of the little group that boldly proclaimed themselves prohibitionists. She was only a little girl of ten, but she had decided opinions and set to work to prepare her speech unaided, for she felt that her arguments were so crushing that she needed no suggestions from older heads.

The excitement in the school rose to fever heat. Those scholars who were "on the fence" politically, were importuned to join this or that party.

Jennie Barton said "My papa is a republican, and he's going to march in the parade, but I don't care. Hattie Gray is going to be a democrat, and she's my best friend, and so am I."

There were dark rumors that Jack White had inveigled Bert Bliss behind the schoolhouse, and shown him surreptitiously a jack-knife that once had four blades and now had one.

The next day Bert had announced that he was going to be a republican. He thought that side was right anyhow. His deserted democratic brethren and sisters loudly charged bribery, when Bert was seen whittling at recess with Jack's knife, but Jack only said, "Guess I can lend my knife to him if I want to," and that silenced open comments, though the dark belief still rankled in the hearts of the democrats.

At last the eventful day came, and the stump speakers plumed themselves for the one great oratorical flight of their lives. Both the republican and democratic leaders were sturdy boys, and presented their views with much high-flown language and talk about tariff and free trade (culled from the newspapers) that they did not themselves understand. Finally came the turn of the prohibitionists, and Mollie rose, trembling and yet firm in the conviction that her cause was just. The school listened with bated breath as she read:

"I am a prohibenist, because prohibenists do not believe in smoking and chewing; and the best thing of all, they don't believe in drinking intoxicated drinks. I think the prohibenist party is the only party that does not have any men in it that drink intoxicated drinks. Some of the democrats say in my school they are democrats because Cleveland is the richest man. But I do not vote for the richest man. I vote for the best. A good many of the democrats drinks. I don't think so many of the republicans do. I think most of the prohibenists are the best class of people. I will close now, but when the boys of our school grow up, I hope they will vote the prohibenist ticket."

The vote went against Mollie, as it often does those who stand on moral principle in real life, but who shall say that she was not in the right after all?

Laconia, N. H.

Elsie and Karl.

KARL came home from school one day and found his little sister in tears.

"What's the matter, Elsie?" he called out cheerily.

"Father's been drinking again," said the child. "He could hardly get home at all, his legs wobbled so. An' the boys made fun of him all along the street and one of them threw a stone which mos' hit him. He's asleep now, but he'll be awful cross when he wakes up. He always is, you know."

Karl put his arm around Elsie's neck.

"Don't feel bad," he said. "I know why whisky makes people tumble down, and go to sleep when they oughtn't to, and be cross. We learned about it in school to-day and we'll tell father when he wakes up and maybe he won't drink any more."

"Whisky hurts people, 'cause there's a poison in it."

"What poison?" said Elsie with wide-open eyes.

"Alcohol," continued Karl. "There's lots of it in whisky and rum and gin, and that's why they make people drunk. If they should drink enough 'twould kill 'em right off quick, and it always hurts 'em."

"There's alcohol in beer, too," Miss White said, "and in wine and cider. Not so much, you know, but enough to hurt you, and make you want more. I'm not going to drink any more beer for breakfast after this, and you mustn't either, Elsie. We don't want to get to be cross and trembly, you know."

"No, let's not," said Elsie, and they ran off to play.

You will be glad to know that Elsie and Karl kept their promise to each other and that they grew up tall, and straight and healthy.

They told their father what they had learned about the poison alcohol, and begged him not to drink any more whisky.

"If I had known all this when I was your age," he said, "I shouldn't be such a poor, miserable creature, but it's too late now to stop drinking. I should die if I didn't have it."

But he did try, to please Elsie and Karl.

Whisky, gin, beer and all such drinks hurt people, because they contain a poison, alcohol.

Boys and girls who want to grow tall and strong must not take any drink which has alcohol in it.—School Physiology Journal.

Foolscap.

EVERYONE knows what foolscap paper is, but not everyone knows why it was so-called. An exchange ventures to remark that not one in a hundred that daily use it can answer the question. The following will tell you how the term originated:

When Oliver Cromwell became Protector, after the execution of Charles I., he caused the stamp of liberty to be placed upon the paper used by the English government. Soon after the restoration of Charles II., having occasion to use some paper for dispatches, some of this government paper was brought to him.

On looking at it, and discovering the stamp, he inquired the meaning of it, and, on being told, he said:

"Take it away; I have nothing to do with a fool's cap."

The term "foolscap" has since been applied to a certain size of glazed writing paper.—Morning Star.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—You could never guess all the delightful things that have been happening to me lately! Aunt Mary has been "found out," and who do you think found her? A little niece named Gertrude Selden, who came all the way from North Dakota to Chicago, and wanted to see as well as hear from the Cozy Corner auntie. She has now gone to Toronto, Canada, to live, and perhaps she will write to us again from her new home.

Then three dear little girls who live at Glen Ellyn, Ill., Dee, Ruth and Charlotte Garrison, sent me two boxes of lovely wild flowers, that were as fragrant as the sweet, green woods from whence they came; and little Bessie Leech sent me flowers in a letter from Fairhope, Ala. They brought a beautiful breath of spring, that is very refreshing to one shut in by the brick walls of a great city, but more than all else, they brought the assurance that the little nieces think lovingly of

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little boy eight years old. My mother belongs to the W. C. T. U. I signed the pledge when I was four years old. I live in a valley, with mountains all around me.

Yours truly,
C. LEE GOULD.

Franconia, N. H.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join your Cozy Corner and be one of your nieces. I am eleven years old; my mother goes to the W. C. T. U., and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like to read the Children's page.

Lovingly yours,
LUCY M. DEAN.

North Ferrisburg, Vt.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I am nearly fourteen years old, and am the treasurer of our Loyal Temperance Legion. Our superintendent is Miss Lilah Williams, and our motto is, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up." I would like to have some of the members of the Cozy Corner write to me. My mamma is a member of the W. C. T. U., and she takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like to crack your soft-shelled nuts.

Your niece,
EDNA MARIE HODGIN.

Carnegie, Pa.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I am eight years old. I vote for the pink rose. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U., and I am a temperance boy. Good-by. DOUGLAS ROBERTS.

North Chili, N. Y.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

16.

AN ENIGMA.

Spaces to be filled by names that represent members of a well-known "family."

Our little dog, a regular (1), we call (2), after a French philosopher. When (3) and I started for the (4) the dog began turning a (5). This was his way of teasing to go with us, and (6) said we must take him, which we did.

We wanted to go the (7), stopping at the pond for a little (8) as appetizers for our thin slices of (9) bread, (10) and cakes shaped by a (11) into hearts.

Coming home through one of the (12) we met (13) and (14).

MRS. H. S. RUSSELL.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED APRIL 21.

15. Susan B. Anthony.

Correct answer to No. 12 was sent by H. Lela B. Johnson, Waltonville, Ill.; to No. 14 by Ruth Rogers, Farina, Ill.; Tirzah May Dinsdale, Soldiers' Grove, Wis., and Ethel C. Watts, New York City; to No. 13, by Clifton Lake, Pleasantville, N. J.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON. MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Ten No-License Years in Cambridge.

THE history of ten no-license years in Cambridge, Mass., from 1887 to 1897, has been put into permanent form and furnished to every public library in the state of Massachusetts by the generosity of the W. C. T. Unions of Cambridge. The book is a valuable contribution to reform knowledge, because it is an authentic and precise history of the methods, principles and results of the no-license movement in Cambridge. One express object is to inform outside communities how success was brought about and has been maintained. It is unique and worthy of study by all citizens, and especially by those in local option territory.

The successes of the movement were brought prominently to view last year by the great May day festivals. Many facts were stated in the various addresses made at that time, but the chief value of the book lies in the history of the movement year by year, which includes the defeats from 1881, as well as the victories.

It is worthy of note that all of the methods used were simple, were confined to the one question of license or no-license and were kept distinct from politics and party tickets. The Cambridge Home Protection League, organized in 1881, took the lead, and was followed by the Law and Order League, and that by the Citizens' Law Enforcement Association. A paper, called The Frozen Truth, was launched in 1886, and played a most important part in the victories won. Of it we expect to have something to say at a future time.

Mr. Frank Foxcroft, president of the league, and literary editor of The Frozen Truth, sets forth the general principles which were adopted in the campaigns, not as formally determined upon, but tacitly accepted at the beginning and steadily adhered to. The importance of a single vote was constantly emphasized. The first victory was gained by six votes, and thereafter no matter how ample the margin of the previous year, the efforts of the committtee were directed to getting every no-license voter to the polls. Records were kept of those who failed to vote, and the next year courteous reminders were sent that their vote was needed. Printed appeals and personal labor played a part, and on election day men were stationed at the polls to check the names of all voting no-license, and early in the afternoon all who had not appeared were sent special reminder cards, signed by the local committee, asking them to vote as soon as possible. These were sent by messengers with carriages. Mr. Foxcroft remarks: "If not more than ten or a dozen votes on the average are saved at each precinct by these methods, the total is enough to make all the difference between success and defeat at a close election."

In the second place, the no-license cause was kept distinct from all other issues, and from all questions of municipal parties and candidates. A third principle kept constantly in mind was the avoidance of all extravagance. The appeals were made in a moderate way and without vituperation. The unconvinced were treated as open to conviction, and year by year a number of them were gained for no-license. "The good humor which characterized the campaigns and the absence of any bitterness of attack, made it easy for reasonable men to change their minds, when the evidence of the practical advantages of no-license is strong and cumlative." The importance of this can hardly be estimated, yet the opposite condition is the one most common.

Mr. Foxcroft regards the most important principle observed to have been that the platform was always broad enough to hold any man who simply did not want the saloon back in Cambridge. No political, social or religious differences were suffered to separate no-license workers. General politics were never discussed, and even less, were that possible, did religious differences count. Inquiries were not made as to a man's theories upon temperance legislation, nor whether he was an abstainer or not. The issue was and is kept narrowed down to the one single matter of keeping the saloon out of Cambridge. These general principles are respectfully commended by Mr. Foxcroft to other communities attempting to drive out the saloon.

Results of No-License in Cambridge.

SOME of the results of the ten no-license years in Cambridge can be picked out of a chapter of reminiscences given in the history of the movement. All classes have been brought close together. The college graduate has served on the campaign committee with the day laborer; wealth and leisure have served with the poorest and least educated man. One of the most valued members of the committee for many years was in the employ of the city driving a cart. His interest and attendance never flagged and his honesty and sincerity won many converts. In 1887 on election day an Irish woman deposited fifty dollars in the Cambridge Savings Bank, declaring, "There is my 'No' vote." Her husband, she explained, had been a drinking man and they had not saved anything until the city voted no-license when he took the pledge, and she was making that first deposit while he went to the polls to vote "No." Five years later this couple had paid for their home and were buying a second house.

Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer says she asked a seamstress what the young workingwomen thought of no-license. The girl replied that under license, any room that she could afford to hire was in a section of the city where saloons were common and where she was liable to insult from street rowdies as she went to and from work. Since the saloons were closed she was not in danger from rowdyism. Mrs. Palmer asked her washerwoman, a widow with small children, what she thought of no-license, and the woman replied, "Oh, Mrs. Palmer, when the saloons were here, I did not dare to let my Johnny [her eldest] go out of the house when I was away from home at my day's work, and when he became too old to be locked in, I sometimes gave him a dose of salts to keep him at home." A truant officer said that a few years ago when he went out to hunt up children he found them picking over ash heaps for bits of coal, and parents said they must have the coal and begged for the time of the children. Nowadays he doesn't meet that so much, for parents have the coal in the coal bin now. A kindergarten teacher said her entries against at least thirty of her children had been "intemperate father," or "intemperate mother," but after a year or two of no-license these entries became rare. After a few years of no-license one man of drinking propensities was heard to remark that he intended to vote for no-license because he could go to Boston and get what he wanted, but with no saloons in Cambridge, "the old woman couldn't get any." These incidents speak volumes of heartaches and heartbreaks, and give volumes of argument against the saloon.

But the practical results as obtained by a comparison of the ten no-license years with the previous ten license years gives an equally satisfactory test in figures. The population of Cambridge during the decade from 1875 to 1885, the license years, increased 11,820, or at the rate of 1,182 per annum; during the next ten years under no-licence, it increased 21,985 or 2,198 per annum. In other words the rate of increase very near doubled. The conclusion is that a city without saloons is better to live in than one with them, and people find it out and move in.

The number of houses in the license decade rose from 7,882 to 9,398; in the no-license decade succeeding, the number rose from 9,398 to 12,728, a gain of only 1,516 during ten saloon years and a gain of 3,325 during ten no-saloon years, making twice the rate of gain in no-license years as compared with the license years.

The valuation of property is even more sti ing. During the license years the valuation of property fell from $62,636,453 to $59,445,670, a shrinkage of more than three million dollars. During the next ten years under no-license, the valuation rose from $59,445,670 to $83,147,700, a gain of $23,702,030. "On this increased valuation the city collects annually several times as much money as it could get from license fees, if it were to call the saloons back." It is true, therefore, that the old cry of "revenue" from the saloon is killed in Cambridge, as it would be any other place where the saloon was dispensed with long enough to make a fair test.

It is also stated that the average tax rate during the ten no-license years, when the city dispensed with the saloon fees, was lower than during the ten preceding years.

The savings banks tell the same story. During the ten license years, the average net annual increase in savings bank deposits was only $155,-333.75. During the ten no-license years the average net annual increase was $366,654.42. These were the savings of the people, it is to be remembered, and not the deposits of the rich. More than two-thirds of them were in sums of $50 or less. The savings bank in East Cambridge, which is the chief center of the industrial population of the city, have increased more than those of the other banks, and are now running at about four times the rate of the license years.

Cambridge has thus furnished incontrovertible facts in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and what is even better, she has told all towns and cities similarly circumstanced how to do it.

The Cuban Situation.

IN dismissing Minister Woodford Spain has taken the initiative, and war is at hand. If Spain fights it will be on the pretense of sacrificing her life rather than her honor; the real reason being that the present dynasty knows that to accede to our demands would mean its own overthrow and the accession of the Carlists to the throne. She has abandoned all hope of help from other European powers. The utmost that the ambassadors of the five great European powers in Washington could be prevailed upon to do was to present the mildest kind of a memorandum expressing the hope, on humanitarian grounds, that war would be avoided if possible. The English ambassador would not join in this until he knew positively from our government that such an action on the part of the powers would not be offensive to the United States. The Russian ambassador did not feel free to join until a telegram from his own government in response to one signed by the ambassadors of the other four powers asking it, gave him permission to do so.

For this position of the European states we have our President chiefly to thank. He has made good his pledge that war should not, with his consent, be entered upon except for causes which would commend themselves as just to other nations, to our own citizens and to Almighty God. Were this not true, war with Spain would be on our part the act of a cowardly bully. There is nothing brave in a nation of 70,000,000 people, of limitless resources and unbounded credit attacking a nation of 17,000,000 whose resources are exhausted and credit gone. But we are taking advantage of our superior strength not to rob a weak and defenseless neighbor, but to shield a still more helpless neighbor from savage barbarities. Our cause is just.

For half a century Spanish misrule in Cuba has been a blot upon civilization. Insurrection after insurrection has devastated the unhappy island. During the last one, which raged ten years, ending in 1878, it became too evident for dispute that lasting peace under Spanish rule was not possible, and President Grant expressed the opinion that the time would come when the United States would be forced to interfere. The present dreadful contest has been waged for three years, and neither side is any nearer a decisive victory than when the conflict began. The war has been conducted in a method which defied all rules of so-called "civilized" warfare, and which outraged every sentiment of humanity. Our citizens resident in Cuba have suffered great loss, our commerce has sustained serious injury, and our government has been put to vast expense to maintain its neutrality. So serious and hopeless had the struggle become, even during President Cleveland's administration, that he felt constrained to tender his good offices to secure peace. His offer was rejected as unwarranted interference. Since then the conditions in Cuba have grown steadily worse. Unable to put down the insurrection by the aforesaid "civilized" methods of warfare, Spain at last adopted what may truthfully be called the starvation system, by which the death of 200,000 helpless people, mostly women and children, has been compassed.

In view of these facts, our government undertook to bring the warfare to an end. Many of our people, outraged by the conditions in Cuba, became impatient of the delay incident to negotiation, and demanded that we drive the unspeakable Spaniard from this continent by force of arms. Firmly, patiently, calmly, in the midst of noisy clamor, threats and personal abuse, President McKinley has worked to reach the end by peaceful measures. Patiently and calmly the mass of the people has stood by him. The explosion of our great battleship in the harbor of Havana under very suspicious circumstances, increased the tension to a degree that would have driven a less self-controlled people into war at once. In compliance with Captain Sigsbee's telegram, our people suspended judgment until the report of the investigating committee removed all doubt that the explosion was due to external causes. The statements of Captain Sigsbee and Consul General Lee later dispersed whatever other doubt had existed that the mine was fired with at least the connivance of the Spanish authorities. It is safe to say that this incident was the final factor in the action of Congress.

But though the immediate result is war, the events of the past few months are a prophecy of peace. Never before has any nation with so many provocations to war and with so little to fear from it, sought so persistently for a peaceful settlement of difficulties. It proves beyond a doubt that the day when nations will settle their differences by arbitration is at hand.

The National Congress of Mothers.

THE Second National Congress of Mothers will meet in Washington, D. C., May 2, and will continue through May 7. The meetings will be held in the Grand Opera House.

It will be remembered that it was explained last year that W. C. T. Unions were included in the term "club," and doubtless that is the intention this year. The announcement arrived too late, however, for THE UNION SIGNAL to make definite inquiry. So much interest was manifested at the first congress, that there is every reason to expect the second to be a great success.

The following information is sent out through the public press:

Each club of not less than five members will be entitled to a delegate. Clubs of twenty members or more will be entitled to two.

Special railroad rates have been secured over the main roads throughout the country—one and one-third fare for the round trip on the certificate plan. These are to be presented to Mrs. Louisa H. Earll at the meeting.

The hotel headquarters during the congress will be at the Ebbitt House, Fourteenth and F streets, N. W. Uniform rate, $3 per day.

There are to be in all, during the six days the congress is in session, between fifty and sixty addresses from men and women well known throughout the country.

Address all communications, National Congress of Mothers, Loan and Trust Building Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Livermore on the W. C. T. U.

IN a late article in the Congregationalist, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore writes upon "The Future of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." An editorial introduction speaks of her as one who has been before the public for more than thirty years, and as having used her remarkable gifts of oratory to advance temperance and other reforms, and as especially well fitted to write on this subject from her intimate connection with the W. C. T. U. and long acquaintance with Miss Wiliard.

It was natural that she should first speak of Miss Willard and what she did for the organization, of how she "vitalized it with her own thought and purpose, and left it the largest, most thoroughly organized and best equipped body of women in the world, and that it ought not to disintegrate because its leader has dropped on the march;" she says "we have a right to expect it will continue along the lines of work it has followed for so many years, until good reasons arise for changes in the plans and methods of its activities." Mrs. Livermore characterizes Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens as the counterpart of Miss Willard in fundamentals of character, but as unlike her in temperament and in the gifts of oratory and literary skill. "Strong mentally and physically, she is always self-poised, never stampeded by the wildest enthusiasm or the bitterest opposition of an audience, and knows how to carry her point without antagonizing those who differ from her. She may be called a conservative radical, for she will 'make haste slowly,' in her presentation of advanced views rather than imperil an organization or provoke within it an acrimonious controversy." She speaks of Miss Anna Gordon's name as indissolubly linked with Miss Willard's, and of her as another woman who may be reckoned as an important factor in the future history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. "Cautious and somewhat conservative, she is sure to exert a more potential influence in the councils of the white-ribbon women in the future than she has in the past."

Of Lady Henry Somerset she says: "Whether she will again visit the W. C. T. U. of our country remains to be seen. The star of the West which drew her hither has gone down below our earthly horizon to shine more resplendent in another sky. But the friendship between the women of the American union, who are large enough to pardon an error of judgment, and Lady Henry Somerset remains unbroken, if one can judge from recent indications."

Mrs. Livermore indirectly defends the forty departments, disarms the fears that the organization is to be pushed into socialism, asks the question of whether the women of the churches will continue to stand aloof from the W. C. T. U., says there are no indications of any immediate or abrupt changes in the union, and in closing uses these words: "All the while there burns within me the conviction that never again in our country, or any country, will there be lacking a woman's organization pledged to the extirpation of drunkenness until that reform is accomplished."

Let the Battle Go On.

FLAVEL S. THOMAS, M. D., LL.D., Hanson, Mass., says in one of our exchanges:

If you would read "Harvard Stories" and "Harvard Epistles," you would conclude that Harvard is no better than Yale and Princeton. The "Harvard Graduates" magazine devotes page after page to advertising beer, wines and whisky. The liquor-dealers must find it a paying advertising medium, or they would not patronize it so well. It is getting to be a very serious question, whether the present college education does not do more harm than good.

This reminds us that a university professor of wide knowledge of schools wrote us lately to this effect:

The strictures of the W. C. T. U. on Princeton are undoubtedly well founded. Those of Yale are also. But to those of us who know the inside, the apparent approval of Harvard makes us wonder how some can be so blind. You must not repeat this as coming from me, and it did not come to me in view of the current discussion at all, but I have a letter on my desk from a graduate of mine who is there [at Harvard] who says after the seminar he attends, some dainties, including bottles of beer, are set up; and at another seminar, in another department, they waived any formality and brought the keg itself in. This man says he was the only one who did not drink at the first mentioned, and all, I believe, except another friend of mine, tapped the barrel at the other seminar—professors and all, in each instance. I m sorry to say that from information I get from divers sources, our colleges have, and are, going down hill on this matter, all "goody-goody" reports to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole. West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

DEAR Y's:—As it always gives us courage to hear what others are doing, I am going to tell you what a dear young Y president in Massachusetts accomplished lately.

When on her way to Boston she had her suspicions aroused by the conduct of the train boy who entered into frequent whispered conversations with the young men and boy passengers. Finally as he was going through the train with papers he stopped at the seat directly in front of our Y, and began whispering to a fifteen-year-old lad sitting there. After a moment the train boy drew a book from under his papers and seemed to be trying to sell it. The Y got right up, leaned over the boys and saw the book and its name. It was a vile book, the kind that is a constant assault upon the citadel of purity.

Very quietly she took down all the necessary items, such as number of train, conductor's name, etc., and upon arriving at her destination went direct to one of the managers of the road and informed him of what she had seen. A detective was put upon that train for a few days who watched the train boy and found he was regularly offering printed poison for sale. The railroad company at once discharged him and withdrew his privilege of selling upon their road. This proves the readiness of the good men in authority in public places to coöperate in the promotion of purity, and shows the power a Y has when armed with determination and righteous indignation.

MABEL L. CONKLIN.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Australasian Y's.

THE South Australian Y superintendent, Miss Marsh, hopes to visit the Y unions in her colony during this year, and to form new unions in different places.

Singleton Y's, N. S. W., in conjunction with the W's and L. T. L., rent a large skating rink for coffee rooms and boys' brigade. This work has been in existence about three years.

Victoria hopes soon to have a Colonial superintendent for the Y's, and then we expect to hear of great strides in this department in that colony.

Bendigo Y's, Victoria, shared in the pleasure and help of a recent visit from Mrs. Pearce, of Hawthorn, whose address to the Y's was on "Grace, Grit and Gumption."

Tasmania expects to come into line soon, and some of those delegates who attended the last triennial convention promised to work up interest among the girls in order to try and form Y unions.

A new Y has been organized at West Maitland, N. S. W., with twenty-nine active and ten honorary members, the superintendent being Mrs. Fairfax, one of the first members of the Brisbane Y's.

Queensland has nine Y unions, with a membership of 158, and they held 184 meetings last year.

The Australasian delegates to the World's Convention are loud in their praises of Mrs. Barnes, World's Y secretary, who is described as one whom it is a pleasure and blessing to know, for her gentle courtesy and warm love for the girls.

Western Australia has two Y unions. The one at Leederville carries on native mission work, and has circulated five petitions against the granting of any hotel licenses.

Brisbane Y's (Queensland) recently gave a tea and evening at the Girls' Club, which is a successful department of their "mother union," the Central W. C. T. U.

South Brisbane Y's presented the "Scenic White Queen's Court," and it was afterward successfully given at Mount Gambier, S. Aus.

FLORA B. HARRIS,
Australasian Y Supt.

Brisbane, Queensland.

World's W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Last night's mail brought me Australian letters written as soon as the sad news reached there. Mrs. Nicholls wrote from Launceston, Tamania, "Our hearts and eyes are full of tears." Miss Stone, corresponding secretary Western Australia, wrote: "The executive wish me to convey their very deep sympathy with all the sisters of the World's Union." Miss Lockwood, corresponding secretary Australasian union, wrote: "Our hearts are sad and we are all anxiously looking forward to receiving particulars about our Chieftain's going home." Mrs. Nolan, president New South Wales, said: "The loss to our union is not to be estimated, though we never saw her face or clasped her hand." Miss Campbell says: "Your cablegram filled me with consternation (the news had not appeared in South Africa as in Australia). That beautiful bright life, it does not seem real she has gone." Mrs. Smart, Funchal, Madeira, writes: "We are feeling deeply the loss of Miss Willard." From Halifax, Nova Scotia, the W. C. T. U. sent a loving tribute from "the little white city by the sea." Letters from the United States of America, from Canada and other countries are coming in by every mail, all telling the same heartfelt grief and noble heart-warming sympathy. The National officers of Norway have written most loyally and lovingly of their Chieftain. These letters coming from all parts of the world, all breathing so much love to her and so much loyal-hearted devotion to our World's W. C. T. U., have cheered us and given us a great renewed hope; never have we realized as we do now how strong our white-ribbon ties are, and we have all come nearer to each other than ever before.

B. W. T. Associations are also sending touching resolutions, realizing the great familyhood she taught us all.

I would like to publish in full all these most beautiful letters, but space is limited and I am only sending a line taken from each. Lady Henry has received many loving letters of sympathy, and white-ribboners who loved Frances Willard are thinking of her with tender affection and loyalty.

Miss Bleby, the new superintendent of our World's department for systematic giving, is likely to make her mark as one of our most successful superintendents. She has already made a good beginning and collected several sums as a result of her methodic plans. Her old servant received a legacy the other day of fifty dollars, and promptly gave Miss Bleby five dollars towards the work. We shall be glad to know of others doing the same.

I have to-day received an urgent appeal to organize a W. C. T. U. in Bermuda. Last week I received an earnest letter from the Norwegian National officers, asking for one of our white-ribbon missionaries. We want the money, then we can respond, also to the appeal of Burma, where the resident missionaries have offered to pay half the expenses of one of our missionaries; we have a gifted woman waiting to go to Burma as soon as our funds will allow. We are hoping as a practical memorial to our unequaled leader many white-ribboners and others will feel moved to become subscribers of from fifty cents upward to our World's W. C. T. U., and then we can have additional missionaries to carry on the great work which the organization is doing.

We are anxiously looking forward to Anna Gordon's life of Miss Willard.

AGNES E. SLACK,
Hon. Sec. W. W. C. T. U.

Ripley, Derbyshire, April 1, 1898.

News from the Field.

Texas.

AN excellent program was arranged for the meetings of the state executive board at Houston, in February, but the sudden illness of our state president, Mrs. Stoddard, made it impossible to carry them out in full. A brief meeting was held at her bedside for the purpose of transacting such business as was necessary, and the evening set apart for her lecture was filled by Mrs. Belle Flowers, of Dallas, state superintendent of narcotics and non-alcoholic medication, who spoke on the work of her department. The luncheon at the tea room, and an open meeting of the W. C. T. U. to which all the women's clubs of the city were invited, were made as interesting as possible, and the parliamentary drill was conducted by Mrs. Pugh, president of the Central union. After a season of prayer for the recovery of our beloved president and others who were named, we adjourned feeling that our meeting had not been without profit.

I have received a complete and most encouraging report from Miss Lizzie F. Mason, press superintendent of the ninth district, recently appointed, who is also state superintennent of Temple work, showing the work of the Austin union, No. 1.: "Have induced one druggist to give up the sale of liquor, as it was found he was doing more harm than the open saloon. Have sent ninety-six letters to members of Congress soliciting their vote on bills now pending, relating to W. C. T. U. interests in this state. Willard memorial services were held February 28. Seven churches use unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper. Scientific temperance is taught in the public schools." Three state superintendents are members of this Austin union. They send the White Ribbon to the superintendents of city and county schools. Are conducting thirteen departments. Mrs. Vredenburg delivered an address on "Purity" before the "mothers' congress" of colored women, and one on "Evil Habits and Purity" before the students of Tillotson's College, numbering two hundred young colored men; seventy of them have taken the total abstinence pledge. Seven ministers are honorary members of this union and wear the white ribbon.

Mrs. Lucy A. Thurman has again been in our state organizing. From Mrs. C. H. Kidd, state superintendent of colored work, I learn that the work among that race is steadily advancing; dues to the National have been sent for one hundred members. They have decided to hold a state meeting in June at Galveston, just at the close of the teachers' state association. They will date their annual meeting from that time. The officers of the state W. C. T. U., colored, are: President, Mrs. Fannie L. Chase, 422 Pearl street, Dallas; corresponding secretary, Miss Maggie Robert, Paul Quinn University, Waco; recording secretary, Miss Susie Adams, Corsicana; treasurer, Mrs. Carrie Dodson, Crockett. A state organizer is the greatest need of the colored women.

Mothers' meetings have received an impetus through the state Federation of Women's Clubs and the superintendents of our public schools who have been incited to action in this direction. Mrs. Irma Jones, of Lansing, Mich., has been in our state during the last month holding congresses of mothers, under the auspices of the federation. Many W. C. T. U. women are members. The topics were the same used in our mothers' meetings and were most helpful. Several thousand pages of W. C. T. U. leaflets were distributed at these meetings in Houston, an opportunity not often presented. They were welcomed and the cry was more! more! Mrs. J. N. Porter is state superintendent of this department. Universal temperance Sunday has been observed in many localities.

The first convention of the ninth district was held at Smithville, March 1–3. Mrs. A. A. Boone, president, Smithville; Miss Lucy Campbell, vice-president, Austin; Mrs. J. D. Campbell, recording secretary, Brenham; Mrs. M. E. Maney, Smithville, treasurer. Mrs. Stoddard's illness prevented her from attending. Mrs. Kuhl of Champaign, Ill., was present and made herself generally useful, addressing the meeting on two occasions. A Willard memorial service concluded the first convention held in the ninth congressional district. The reported proceedings show it to have been a time of both seed sowing and harvest.

It is a difficult undertaking to write a letter to THE UNION SIGNAL of things relating only to our state work, when it has seemed as though the end of the organization had come. When the news came flashing over the wires that "Frances E. Willard died at twelve o'clock last night," waves of unbelief rolled over us. It seemed impossible that such a calamity could have befallen the world; but as the days went by the conviction was forced upon us, that what we hoped would prove a mistake was sadly true. Our first im-

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

pulse took us to the bedside of our stricken leader, and amid tears the story was told, all we then knew. "I must get well. We must be up and doing. This is the time for action. It will take us all to carry out her plans," was her comment, and from that moment she began to convalesce; directed a telegram to be sent to Chicago, ordering a floral design for the funeral at the Temple, urging us to arrange for a memorial service, and in a few days she was on her way home by easy stages, accompanied as far as Ft. Worth by Mrs. Schureman. Since then she has sent mimeograph letters to every union in the state, urging upon the hosts the necessity of increasing membership, holding memorial services, advising all to take advantage of the offers made by three reliable firms to increase our revenues and assist the Temple. Many of our women have adopted this plan. I quote from Mrs. Stoddard's last letter, "The greatest affliction that has ever befallen us as a society now rests upon us. Our great leader is gone, but the truth for which she wrought, is not yet written in the lives of the people, nor graven into the laws of our land; until this shall be accomplished our work and our duty is plain."

On Sunday afternoon, March 10, Willard memorial service was held in Houston, at Shearn M. E. church, all the leading pastors taking part. Indications in this state are that Miss Willard will accomplish more "among the Gentiles" by her death than in her life. Shearn church is made memorable by being the one wherein Miss Willard, while on her Southern tour in 1880, accompanied by Miss Anna Gordon, organized the first W. C. T. Union in Houston, now known as the Central.

We have achieved a notable victory recently. Mrs. Schureman learned that a little orphan child was being ill-treated by the woman in whose care she was. After finding the leading facts in the case, it was decided to bring the strong arm of the law to the rescue. The W. C. T. U. were out in full force, and as the White Ribbon says: "Mrs. Schureman sat at the lawyer's right hand, and exhibited the consummate skill and acuteness of an experienced barrister at law in the prosecution of the case! A strong fight was made by the respondent in the case, but the decision of the judge gave the custody of the child to the W. C. T. U. A vigorous Chautauqua salute attested the satisfaction of our women. As it was the day and hour for our regular meeting, we repaired to the Central church and held a thanksgiving service."

(Mrs.) Elisabeth Strong Tracy,
State Reporter, Houston.

The Great Test
Of a pure soap is—will it shrink wool? If so, there's something injurious in it. For toilet—for bath—for washing dainty articles, use a soap so pure that it won't shrink wool. That's

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD
WOOL SOAP
IT SWIMS.

West Virginia.

In response to a call from our state officers, February 24 was observed by the unions of West Virginia as a day of prayer for the National officers, especially our dear Mrs. Stevens, upon whom so great a responsibility rests.

Memorial services were held by all the local unions, some on Neal Dow's birthday, others earlier. These services were everywhere attended by large crowds of people, and were most impressive. We feel assured that the many loving words, prayers and songs will tend more than anything else to unite our women and draw them closer still in our great and holy cause, with more love for humanity and for each other. Our translated leader had no more loyal comrades and devoted friends than our state president, Mrs. Morrow, and her constituency.

The White Ribbon, our state paper, edited and published by our faithful and untiring president, Mrs. Morrow, which has already been enlarged to meet the demands of the work, is proving marvelously helpful in arousing our women to greater activity. We trust that ere long every woman in our state may become a subscriber to this valuable paper.

Nearly all the unions are reporting a gain in membership; the unions reporting largest gains are Mannington, Weston, Parkersburg, Fairmount, Palatine, Pickens and Grafton. There are a few new unions being organized also, one of which is Morgantown, in which the leading women of the town are interested, the wife of the university president being a loyal white-ribboner, and President Raymond himself heartily supporting the work. Medal contest work is being carried on with increased activity, Piedmont, Keyser and Palatine unions leading. The president of Buckhannon union has waged a lively and successful war on the illicit sale of liquor in her town. The Fairmount union holds a musical the last Saturday of every month, seeking in this the threefold purpose of interesting young people, developing musical and literary talent and putting money into the local treasury; an admission of ten cents is charged.

Charleston Y's have reorganized and have a large and earnest band of workers.

The last state convention took an advance step when it decided to raise one hundred dollars to help keep an organizer at work a portion of the time in the state.

The local unions are taking up more departments of work and are showing greater interest than ever before. With such fair prospects we do hope to be able to send to the National Convention the best reports ever sent from our state.

V. E. Mohler,
State Reporter, St. Albans.

"A PERFECT FOOD—as Wholesome as it is Delicious."

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
BREAKFAST COCOA
"Has stood the test of more than 100 years' use among all classes, and for purity and honest worth is unequalled."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.
Costs less than ONE CENT a Cup.
Trade-Mark on Every Package.
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.,
TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Alabama.

Almost three months have passed since convention, yet the enthusiasm has not waned, only deepened. There is a stronger determination than ever to make our state motto, "I surmount all difficulties," a veritable fact. Here, as well as elsewhere, the "going home" of our leader has impressed upon us that we, too, have "a charge to keep" that will "all our powers engage."

Memorial services for Miss Willard were held by most of the unions throughout the state. A program was prepared by the state officers and on March 20, Memorial day, the same hymns were sung, the same beautiful words of the Master, so precious to her, were read; the same thoughts of appreciation and admiration were expressed in different words, but always with the same pathos of tender love.

Alabama union sent our own state emblem, magnolia boughs, tied with elegant white ribbon, with the message, "We loved her well, but Jesus loved her best." To many of us who seldom or never saw or heard her, she is "not gone," she will still speak to us in the thousand quaint sayings, helpful suggestions and gems of thought, hitherto untold, but brought forward now by loving coworkers to help and comfort us all. I would well love to tell you of all the services held and beautiful tributes given, but obedient to The Signal's wishes, I will drop the veil o'er all and tell you something of the home work.

Florence union held public and private memorial services for Miss Willard, and put a eulogy in their local paper. They gave quite a new kind of a reception recently, one to the editors and ministers of the city; the membership was out in full, and a number of invited guests were present. The hours from three to six were spent in a pleasant social way, together with refreshments for those who desired to partake, closing with songs and short speeches, appropriate to the occasion. Reading the complimentary speeches of some of the ministers, comparing the workers to Esther and the coworkers of Paul, we think they have secured a strong ally in their work. Perhaps some other union will "go and do likewise." Huntsville was wonderfully blessed in having Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, the evangelist, to take part in their first memorial service. On memorial day they held another, many ministers as well as their own members bearing tribute to Miss Willard's worth. The president says, "It was all so beautiful, it will never be forgotten."

That is the secret of it all. We believe that many have learned more of the real work and workers through these gatherings than ever before. The very fact that such a gifted woman gave up everything else to push this temperance reform, arrests the thought and prepares the ground for seed-sowing. Birmingham as headquarters, works through its officers all over the state. Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. Jeffries, sends out loads of letters, every one of which helps somebody, somewhere. Our treasurer is full of plans to increase our resources, and keeps us all working.

Our president urges all the unions to take agencies for "The Beautiful Life of Miss Willard," by Miss Gordon, believing that it will be a powerful incentive to renewed efforts and consecration to all who read it. Though the Alabama W. C. T. U. is few in numbers and feeble in strength, we should grow amazingly if we carried out the work planned for us. Our L. T. L. superintendent, Miss Anna Brown, has already started on her rounds through the state, after organizing and putting in splendid condition one at her own home, Fairhope, on Mobile Bay. Bridgeport sometimes gets discouraged but will never give up, its greatest drawback having been for several years the loss of so many of

(Continued on page 12.)

Correct Brain Cells.

There come times in one's life when it well repays to take a personal inventory to see what is necessary to make life more of a success. It is frequently found that some physical disability stands in the way and robs us of the exercise of our powers. This is particularly true of the brain, whose delicate mechanism is easily affected by certain habits of food or drink. Coffee, for instance is a peculiar narcotic drug, and directly affects heart, stomach, and brain in a detrimental manner, as any skilled physician will attest.

The delicate brain cells upon which we depend for skillful thinking and planning, can not proceed properly with their work if interfered with and improperly nourished. Postum Food Coffee furnishes the food elements needed to rebuild the grey matter in brain and nerve cells. If it is properly boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences it is delicious. Persons who decline to leave off the use of coffee entirely will find much benefit arise from using half Postum in their coffee, and are generally won over to Postum entirely, when the result in bodily and mental vigor is observed.

The market is flooded with imitations composed of various things, and a percentage of cheap coffee to give taste. Care should be observed in regard to what goes into the human stomach.

No soap can be any better than an absolutely pure soap. The most expensive toilet soaps are not better than Wool Soap. A soap that won't ink wool st be absolutely pure—absolutely free from injurious ingredients. THE BEST SOAP FOR ANY PURPOSE IS

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD

WOOL SOAP

IT SWIMS.

"Wool Soap is an excellent article, and every woman will be benefited by using it."

its best members by removal, whose places can not be filled. Our memorial service was an opportunity for us, for we have not many chances to put ourselves before the public.

The best work we do for the state is through the superintendents of scientific temperance instruction and purity departments. The petition sent out by Miss Willard to bombard Yale College with, was circulated by our superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, several societies indorsing it with their vote, and passing resolutions also to forward. Though the faculty refused to receive it and ignored Miss Willard's own letter, the petiton has fulfilled its mission in part, by creating much agitation and discussion, and Bridgeport union with much satisfaction has helped "stir the pudding."

Now dear sisters all over the state, while we admire modesty and humility in its right place, we beg of you not to exercise much of it in this work. Do something, be it ever so little, and then tell me about it so I can sound the trumpet. We cannot be electric lights or gas burners, like some of the states, but if we are only a rush-light or tallow candle, we have no right to "put it under a bushel." Let your light shine that others seeing it may take courage and lift the light higher and still higher.

(Mrs.) Maria R. Douglass,
State Reporter, Bridgeport.

Arizona.

THE Arizona unions have "pursued the even tenor of their ways" so effectually that I have had no item of interest to chronicle for a long time. Nothing reported from any of the unions, so for a double reason I send an account of the memorial service for our dear leader, held by Florence union, Sunday evening, March 20. Our own sense of the fitness of things told us that it was appropriate, and to this was added the encomiums of our friends. The music was exceptionally good, mostly rendered by the members of the Christian Endeavor Society. Several of Miss Willard's hymns were sung, quotations from her writings were given by several members of the union. Mrs. Browning's beautiful poem, "He giveth his beloved sleep," was read in a most impressive manner. A eulogy and biographical sketch of Miss Willard was delivered, and the meeting closed with that touching hymn, "God be with you till we meet again." The collection, amounting to five dollars, was, at the next meeting of the union, voted to swell the memorial fund, and is sent at this time for that purpose. I have seen newspaper mention of several other memorial meetings held in the territory, but have no items in regard to them. The annual territorial convention will be held in Phoenix, Thursday and Friday, April 28 and 29. I hope to be present and learn something of interest from which to build up a letter for The Union Signal.

(Mrs.) Lauretta A. Reppy,
Territorial Reporter, Florence.

Oklahoma.

"God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform," is the thought uppermost in the sad hearts of the Oklahoma white-ribboners as they prepare and carry forward memorials for the beloved Chieftain. Perry union held a three hours' service, taken part in by all classes of people. The singing was by the Catholic choir, male and ladies' quartettes. The decorations were white and violet, with white doves hovering over them. Colonel Yates represented the press, contributing a poem.

El Reno services were exceedingly impressive, with a large concourse of people in attendance, and new members added to the union. A very comprehensive service was arranged at Clifton by Mrs. A. C. Stevens, and interest aroused in Miss Willard and her work. The minister chose for his text, "She did what she could," and many who knew little of Miss Willard were made aware of the fact how closely a woman can follow in the footsteps of the Master and live a life where precept and example go together. Old men wept as they listened. An old veteran, a hard drinker, cried like a child; little children gazed with wonder on the calm face of Miss Willard as it smiled down on them beneath loops of white ribbon.

Guthrie has had five memorial services; the public schools have also had appropriate exercises in memory of our Chieftain. The union memorial service was perhaps the most notable. The M. E. church was decorated in white and green, roses, violets and carnations in profusion. A white dove with a white ribbon in its mouth was poised above the flowers. The choir sang "Peace, sweet peace," as the union marched in preceded by the superintendents of public schools and teachers. Many of the ministers took part in the service. The Hon. Frank Grier, editor of The State Capitol, gave an address on "Frances Willard and the Press." Hon. Roy Hoffman, editor of the Daily Leader, spoke of "Miss Willard as an Orator." Superintendent L. H. Baxter paid a tribute to "Miss Willard as an Educator."

The Neal Dow union held services in a small country schoolhouse, unaccompanied by decoration; but Miss Willard looked down upon the audience from the wall, and a sweet serene spirit prevailed. A sketch of Miss Willard's early life, taken from "Glimpses," was read by a young girl, Mabel Brown, superintendent of L. T. L. work. Reminiscences and characterizations were brought out by others. The W. C. T. U. membership has been increased by these meetings, and dear Mrs. Carse will hear that God in removing her best Temple ally from earth to Heaven has roused the hearts of her Oklahoma sisters to help pay for the "House Beautiful."

(Mrs.) Sue Uhl Brown,
Territorial Reporter, Oklahoma City.

Official.

Sunday-School Work.

Dear Sunday-school Workers:—Another temperance Sunday is at hand. The quarterly temperance lesson appears May 15; subject "Watchfulness." Lesson text, Matt. 25:42–51. The temperance lesson may not be designated as such in your journal or quarterly. The official schedule of lessons prepared by the International Lesson Committee designates the temperance lessons and we must endeavor to have each one well taught and the temperance applications made. In many cases this will not be done unless our workers attend to it. This fact but emphasizes the importance of having temperance secretaries in every Sunday-school who will coöperate in securing a thorough teaching of the temperance lesson and help you to carry out your plans for other temperance work in the schools. For suggestions, temperance teaching points, helpful hints for teachers, I refer you to the Crusader Supplement for May. Send for copies sufficient to place in the hands of every Sunday-school teacher in your town. Use them at the teachers' meetings, which you should attend.

Our coming Temperance Sunday can be well observed by holding a May temperance rally. Prepare a good program if you do not wish to use Rally Program No. 2, and interest teachers and parents to attend. These large gatherings of Sunday-schools are productive of much good in the awakening of teachers to the importance of Bible temperance teaching. At the May rally or in every Sunday-school secure pledge links for your Sunday-school pledge chain. (See Plan of Work leaflet for directions concerning pledge chain.) If you have not already secured the signatures of pastors and Sunday-school officers and teachers to the resolution favoring the continuance of the quarterly temperance lesson in the International Lesson series please attend to this work at once and send all signatures to me. Printed copies will be sent to you for the postage, at the rate of five cents per one hundred. We hope through this work to make a powerful appeal at the next International Sunday-school convention and hold our temperance lesson. To strengthen this appeal we ask that state and county superintendents of Sunday-school work will present the following resolution at their respective Sunday-school conventions and report result to me.

Whereas, The evil of intemperance is alarmingly on the increase in our land, and

Whereas, The church has a duty to perform in keeping youth unsullied by such evil; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the wish of this convention that no change shall he made in providing the quarterly temperance lesson.

Signed..... ... President.
..... Secretary.
.....Sunday-school Convention.
City..... State ..... Date.....
Number of delegates.....

Now a few suggestive questions: Have you studied carefully our Plan of Work for 1898? It will answer many questions which you ask in your letters to me. Have you placed statistical blanks in your Sunday-schools this year? Have you ordered report blanks sufficient for your workers? Have you secured any co-workers for the department this year? This effort will bring you funds for your work. (See Plan of Work leaflet.) Have you commenced to make the pledge chain for your town, county or state? Have you held a parlor meeting in the interest of this department this year? In these and many other ways you could advance our work.

Praying always for you, I am yours in service,

(Mrs.) Stella B. Irvine,
Nat'l Supt.
St. Paul, Minn.

There is as Much.....
.....difference in wheat as in potatoes.
The wheat used in the manufacture of

WHEATLET

is not selected from its looks—it's analyzed.
We don't guess at its health-giving qualities, we test it.
Everybody likes it because it is palatable and satisfying.
If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.
Made only by the
FRANKLIN MILLS CO.,
Lockport, N. Y.

Work Among Foreigners.

I am sure many of the rank and file of the women, as well as the superintendents, would like to know what our department is doing. We send our reports annually, but only a very small proportion of our women see these in the National Minutes, and very many of those who ought to be interested are absolutely void of any knowledge of the work of the department. So I propose to tell the dear good women how we are getting on. My National associates are Miss Kate Lunden, Flemington, N. J. (for Swedish work in the East); Mrs. Josephine Princell, Franconia, Minn. (also Swedish); Mrs. Ulrikka Bruun, 173 Halsted St., Chicago (Norwegian and Danish); Mrs. Van Olenda, Holland, Mich. (Dutch); Miss Rena Mosher, North East, Pa. (German); Mrs. E. J. Harwood, Albuquerque, New Mexico (Spanish); Mrs. M. H. Fields, California (Chinese); Miss M. L. Orr, missionary at the port of New York. The states of Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Washington, D. C., Tennessee, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, South Dakota, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon, Iowa, Missouri and North and South California have superintendents. Only fifteen of these reported last year, but these were the most systematic reports I have ever received.

Miss Lunden's illness both last year and this has greatly hindered

(Continued on page 13.)

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed. 10c, 25c, 50c.

Enameline

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

Produces a JET BLACK enamel gloss. Dustless, Odorless, Labor Saving. 5 and 10 cent boxes. Try it on your Cycle Chain.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

her work. She has been made lecturer for New Jersey, and is working in that state very acceptably. Mrs. Princell is in Illinois, doing excellent work. She is a very intelligent Swedish woman, and will go to towns and speak both to the Swedes and to the English for five dollars, railroad fare from last point and entertainment, and do excellent work. I hope a route can be made for her in every state where there are Swedes. Mrs. Bruun, our indefatigable Norwegian woman, is a most excellent worker; she will go for collections (large or small) and entertainment, and ought to be kept busy all the time. Miss Rhena Mosher will speak either in German churches or to the young people who understand English. She is a National lecturer, is young herself, and can do splendid work in interesting the young people of German churches. Her terms are very moderate. She can be communicated with at North East, Pa. Mrs. Harwood is doing good work among the Spanish speaking people in New Mexico, as is also Mrs. Annie J. Darley, of Pueblo, in Colorado. I have not heard from our new Chinese superintendent, Mrs. M. H. Fields, but as she was recommended by the state officers for that work, no doubt she will be efficient.

Sophie F. Grubb,
Chanute, Kan. Nat. Supt.

Organizers' Corner.

Thanks to White-Ribboners.

"Blest be the tie that binds." How many times during my long and very serious illness (caused by a street car accident) have I thanked God for these precious words. Yes, blest be the tie that binds white-ribboners together to work for humanity and the protection of the home. I wish here to thank you one and all for your letters of tender sympathy as well as your prayers, and for the beautiful resolutions of unions so dear to me. Not only from my own state, but from different parts of the United States have come these messages of love, and when strong enough I shall acknowledge them all personally with my pen.

I see you all in memory's mirror with your kind, earnest faces as you have welcomed me to your hearts and homes. I see you on whom I have pinned our precious white badge of purity and loyalty for the first time, and there is an indefinable tie of Christlike love and kinship which binds us together as a Christian family. It was this same spirit so wonderfully manifested toward all humanity which made our beloved Frances Willard the heroine of this century and the best loved woman in the world. It is this spirit which holds us together to-day stronger in purpose than before our Father so sorely chastened us. God bless and keep you all and make us braver and truer than ever. I am gaining strength daily and will soon resume my work, cautiously seeking rest between engagements. I go to New Jersey in May and Maine in June. I can accept a few more calls in or near these states, and will you please note my change of address which in the future will be 955 College Avenue, Elmira, N. Y., instead of Davis Street.

Gratefully yours in white-ribbon bonds, Helen L. Bullock.

L. T. L. Work.

Dear Organizers:—I am glad to note a growing interest in the Loyal Temperance Legion. Young people's church societies are eager to have the work of the Senior League explained. In fact, I sometimes wonder if those outside our ranks are not more quick to see the importance of the L. T. L. than are our white-ribboners. From no outside organization comes such a question as this: "Since we have scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, can we not discontinue the L. T. L.?"

Instead, I have from as many different organizations, a dozen or more queries such as this: "We believe the W. C. T. U. is right when it begins with the children. Can you tell us how to organize a Legion?

I shall devote the space allotted me in the Organizer's column to those two questions. The first will never be asked when we grasp the scope of the Loyal Temperance Legon; we will realize that no other training can be substituted, for its object is not alone to teach the physical effects of alcohol, but to so set forth the moral side of the question, that understanding the awful sin of a legalized liquor traffic, our youth shall cast a ballot for prohibition, and thoroughly versed in the teaching of the Bible the legioner, as a Christian, will be on the right side of the temperance question. Yes, with scientific temperance in the public school, the Legion is more than ever needed. As in a factory, the article manufactured is passed on to expert hands that give it the polish and finish which enhances its value, so the L. T. L. takes the total abstainers, L. T. L. makes and gives them the enthusiasm, zeal and practical knowledge which will make them valued workers in the temperance army.

How organize a Legion? First, send to the W. T. P. A. for an L. T. L. organizer's outfit, sample copies of The Young Crusader and an L. T. L. catalogue. Put these in the hands of the woman you wish to so interest in the Legion that she will be its leader. Issue a call for a children's meeting, to be held at some central place or adjacent to the public school. Advertise this meeting well in the public and Sunday-schools. Visit each Sunday-school superintendent and the principal and teachers of the public schools, if possible; secure the privilege of explaining L. T. L. work and methods at the teachers' meetings. It will be strange if you do not win in some helpers.

Bring to the meeting for organization, "Questions Answered," the L. T. L. constitution of your state, senior and junior badges, pledge card, membership and seal certificates, diploma, pens, ink and a bolt of blue ribbon. Have the company rule engrossed on legal cap paper. Open with lively music. In your talk upon the L. T. T. read the pledge, show the badges, explaining that only pledged members can wear badges, but do not ask to have the pledge signed at the first meeting. It will assure attendance atsubsequent meetings, if they can look forward to gaining a badge and membership certificate, by attendance at six consecutive meetings. Exhibit seal certificate and diploma, explaining the course of study necessary to secure each. Make it plain, that whether he has violated any part of the pledge or not, any one can and is urged to become an enlisted member by signing company rule.

Have a motion for organization made and standing vote taken. It is not always wise to elect juvenile officers till later; you will have to decide this. But always grade into three divisions—primary, junior and senior, and divide into platoons. Form your diploma and seal classes and appoint teachers, who should be present at this first meeting. As the company rule is signed, tie the blue ribbon on each member. Adjourn to meet at stated time. Use much tact, vivacity and enthusiasm.

Margaret Wintringer.
Austin, Ill.

From the General Secretary of White Cross Societies.

Dear Co-workers:—This, my first year as a member of your charmed circle, has been a very busy one, and I am glad to be able to report successes. From the National Convention I went into Pennsylvania for two weeks, then to New Hampshire, where I remained until Christmas. During that time I organized two Y's in Pennsylvania, with fifty-one members and fifteen members, respectively, and one Y in New Hampshire, with twenty-six members. After the holidays, I was one week in Pennsylvania, where I organized another union, with fifty-seven active and eighteen honorary members. One week in Rochester, N. Y., proved a veritable crusade. Crowded houses every night, the hearty coöperation of the pastors, the presence of reporters at every meeting, who gave us liberal space and reliable reports, and above all, the systematic and well advertised arrangements, which were under the direction of the Central W. C. T. U. board, all combined to win many new friends and members to our cause.

I was called to Indiana for two days' work under the auspices of the White Shield girls, February 6. I conducted the morning services at the state penitentiary of New Jersey. Eleven hundred men are confined there, but owing to the small chapel, only a few hundred can attend at one service. February, March and April have been spent in New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. One more union, with ten members and 590 paid up members taken in, completes my report of work done since the National Convention. Every Sunday, except two, I have spoken in a Y. M. C. A. meeting, and as a result I have organized several White Cross Societies, and hundreds of men have taken the White Cross pledge. At Springfield, Mass., Y. M. C. A., March 20, 115 men took the pledge at the door of the meetings.

I shall be in the field until the middle of July, then, with the exception of Chautauqua Assembly engagements, shall rest until September 1.

Mabel L. Conklin.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

In the East.

Dear Union Signal:—Since the Buffalo Convention I have made three trips in Pennsylvania, one in New Jersey and several in my own state. In Pennsylvania my work was in Bucks county, which I had the privilege of organizing fourteen years ago, when there was not a white-ribboner so known in the county. Now, under the wise generalship of the two county presidents, who have served during its organization, Mrs. Cynthia Holcomb and Miss Elizabeth Lloyd, it is one of the strong counties of the state, well up on all aggressive lines. I organized one new union, visited twenty unions, giving twenty-nine addresses, speaking twice on Peace and Arbitration; addressed High schools, Sabbath-schools, Christian Endeavor societies and parlor meetings, securing forty new members and several subscribers to the National and state papers. In New Jersey I spoke at Trenton, in Library Hall, a building owned by the W. C. T. U., whose zeal is dauntless. They surely have "hearts for any fate." I also spoke on Peace and Arbitration in the Friends meeting house to a large audience. A trip of ten days in Queen's county, N. Y., under the careful management of Mrs.

(Continued on page 14.)

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

The Alum Heart.

Many people are suffering from some form of heart disease who have no idea of the cause of it.

Any disturbance of the digestive organs affects the heart's action, and therefore every food which interferes with digestion is responsible where there are troubles of this character.

It has been discovered that the use of baking powder made from burnt alum coagulates the blood very rapidly, which interferes with its free flow through the arteries and valves of that organ. Formerly alum was used as a specific for children's croup, but owing to its tendency from the causes named to produce heart failure, physicians no longer employ it.

In face of such facts and in view of the overwhelming testimony of scientists as to the poisonous character of this drug when used for food purposes, can there be any excuse for the ignorance or unconcern which permits any one to take from the grocer a package of alum baking powder, simply for the sake of saving a few cents in price?

It is a healthful sign that many states are limiting by law the sale of the alum baking powder. Very soon it will be prohibited in all states, or treated as a poison, as it should be. But for such laws, how are the alum powders to be known by consumers?

Where alum powders are not branded as such, nor their sale prohibited by law, it is better to avoid the use of any new or doubtful brand until it has been analyzed. The purity of all powders may be suspected if they are sold at a price lower than the price of the best standard brands. We know the Royal to be a first-class cream of tartar powder, and if consumers insist upon having that brand, they will be sure of a pure, healthful article. In view of a recently reported case of poisoning of a whole family living near Logansport, Indiana, from the use of alum powder, it behooves every one to use extraordinary care in purchasing their supplies. We do not hesitate to recommend the Royal to all who are in doubt as to the powder they have been using, as the United States Government tests placed that brand at the head of all the tartrate powders.

(Continued from page 13.)

Julia D. Phelps, county corresponding secretary, resulted in the foundation of one new union, thirty new members, fourteen addresses and several subscribers to state and National papers.

A trip in Suffolk county, N. Y., arranged by Mrs. Mary H. Stackpole, county vice-president, was a vigorous no-license campaign, resulting in success in some towns. I gave twelve addresses, secured twenty new members and several honorary members. In the beginning of this trip my heart was saddened by the death of our beloved leader and dear friend, Frances E. Willard. For over twenty-five years her sweet, pure life and wise counsel has inspired me to greater purposes. The weeks that followed have been full of sadness; but as she comforted, cheered and strengthened and made the weak even stronger, so may we whom she loved and trusted, carry on the work which her undaunted energy inspired, and make her memorial a moral object lesson, when not only Willard Hall will have her name, but the Temple itself be her monument.

Lovingly yours,
EMELIE UNDERHILL BURGESS.

Where Our Speakers Are.

Miss E. W. Greenwood, World's evangelistic superintendent, has accepted an invitation to give the annual sermon at the National Congress of Mothers in Washington, D. C., May 1. Unions en route desiring lectures, Bible expositions or sermons can secure them at very reasonable terms. May 8 and 22 she will fill engagements in Connecticut. Address her at 59 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Convention Corner.

Announcements.

MISSISSIPPI.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. will be held at Yazoo City, May 14 to 18.

(MRS.) ANNIE E. HARPER,
Rec. Sec. Mississippi W. C. T. U.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The sixteenth annual state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Southern California, will be held at Pasadena, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 31, and June 1, 2 and 3, 1898.

MARY A. KENNEY,
President.
GABRELLA T. STICKNEY,
Corresponding Secretary.

TEXAS.

The sixteenth annual convention of the state W. C. T. U. of Texas will be held in the city of Fort Worth, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 17, 18 and 19. It is hoped to be the best of our history.

(MRS.) HELEN M. STODDARD,
State President, Dallas.
(MRS.) MINNIE KIRTLAND,
State Cor. Sec., Lawrence.

INDIAN TERRITORY, Atoka, May 11 and 12.

MISSISSIPPI, Yazoo City, May, 14 to 18.

TEXAS, Fort Worth, May 17 to 19.

WISCONSIN, Chippewa Falls, May 24 to 27.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, Pasadena, May 31 and June 1, 2 and 3.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

The Y's of Leesville College, at Leesville, S. C., mourn the loss of one of their most active members, MISS SADIE M. HERBERT. The resolutions of sympathy tendered her family express the determination of her comrades to profit by her example in carrying on the work she loved.

***

Died, at her home near Grand Junction, Col., April 2, 1898, MRS. EMMA H. BULKLEY, aged forty-eight years. Mrs. Bulkley was a charter member of the local W. C. T. U., for many years its treasurer and a most faithful and devoted worker.

***

Died, April 8, 1898, at her home in Keedysville, Md., MRS. A. E. BAKER, a faithful and devoted member of the W. C. T. U.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to the state reporter.]

THE W. C. T. U., of Detroit, Mich., has gained a signal victory for purity. They secured the revoking of the license of the Capitol Square theater. A committee of three women attended the performance at the theater, and reported what they saw to the mayor, who revoked the license. The women were ably seconded by the pastors of the churches, and by the evidence of reporters of the Evening News.

THE Willard union of Frankfort, Ind., testifies to the ability and helpfulness to the work of Miss Anna Downey, who has recently given two weeks to revival work in that city. Scores were led to Christ, and there was a noticeable spiritual uplift throughout the community.

REV. FRANCES E. TOWNSLEY, pastor of Baptist church at Vassar, Mich., and National evangelist of W. C. T. U., lectured before club women and the W. C. T. U., in Saginaw, Thursday afternoon, April 7, on "What an Ancient Sampler says to a Modern Woman." Miss Townsley's address till September 1 is Vassar, Mich.

THE W. C. T. U. of Albany county, N. Y., voted that resolutions of thanks be sent to Mr. George W. Aldridge, state superintendent of public works, on the carving of the head of Miss Willard on the Capitol stairway at Albany. A very pleasant note was received from the superintendent in response to this official action.

THE Edgar county, Illinois, W. C. T. U. convention at Garland, was well attended and of great interest. Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton gave a very helpful talk at one of the sessions. A silver-gray contest was a fine feature of the convention. Mrs. Stamiford, of Chrisman, received the medal. Mrs. Leggett, of the same place, came in second.

THE union at Medas, S. D., is very much interested in the memorial to Miss Willard. They have a little church dedicated over a year ago, and named at that time Willard church. Memorial services were held in honor of Miss Willard and the special day of prayer observed, to which some of the elderly members walked three miles to be present. Each member is pledged to raise one dollar for the Willard Temple fund to be paid by the middle of June.

WHILE Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, superintendent of the department of soldiers and sailors, was in the South to attend the cold water christening of the Kentucky, she organized a union of seventy members at the National Soldiers' Home of Virginia. The union now numbers 100. It is called the Thacher union. There are 4,300 men in the home, about 600 of them sick in the hospital; the average death rate is over one per day; more than $4,800 spent last year for beer. Mrs. Thacher writes that it is a heartrending sight to see them marching in and out of the beer hall by the hundreds in a steady line from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. every day. May the temperance work there be blessed of God.

(Continued on page 16.)

"Sanitas" Means Health.

By use of proper disinfectants homes can be kept entirely free from germs of the most dreaded infectious diseases.

How to have thoroughly sanitary surroundings is told in a pamphlet by Kingzett, the eminent English chemist. Price 10 cents. Every household should contain this little help to comfortable living. It will be sent FREE to subscribers of this paper. Write

THE SANITAS CO. (Ltd.),
636 to 642 West 55th Street, New York City.

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS

This is the head of a Pearline woman. "There are others." And if the others don't look cheerful, it's no wonder. You've got to work hard, if you do your washing and cleaning with soap, and you've got to work a long time over it, and you're wearing things out with your rubbing. Pearline makes the work easy and quick; saves rubbing. The wonder is that any woman who has to do soap's hard work can look pleasant. Still, some of them do, in spite of it. 544

Millions NOW USE Pearline

Splendid Success.

Agents are obtaining remarkable results in canvassing for the "Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard." One reports 58 orders taken her first week, giving her a profit of $61.70. Another sold over 40 copies in four days. Another 16 in three afternoons. Another 17 in a few spare hours. And so they come from every State in the Union. As one lady writes us, "The book sells itself. I have only to show it and the order is taken." There are thousands of agents at work, but there is room for more. If you have even a few spare hours, write us for terms. You can make money and do good by selling this book.

P. W. Ziegler & Co.
215 Locust St., Philadelphia, Pa. 324 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS
FOR MAN AND BEAST
THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
84-90 BEEKMAN ST. NEW YORK 311-313 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.

Copyright, 1898, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.
J. W. FISKE, Mf'r.
39-41 Park Pl., N. Y.

PLEASE TRY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 306

DYSPEPSIA And Constipation Positively CURED.
Send for free sample and literature.
A. S. MILLER & CO., - Box 231, Milwaukee, Wis.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR APRIL.—"The Press," by Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, National superintendent of that department. Through the medium of questions and answers this reading sets forth, in most practical manner, the duties of press superintendents, state and local; how to approach the editor of a city daily and the editor in a small town; the kind of news to furnish; the needs of newspapers, secular and religious; gives information concerning "patent pages" and the Associated Press, and suggests how to help "elevate the press." It will be a great help, not only to press superintendents but to white-ribbon workers generally, and we predict a large demand for it.

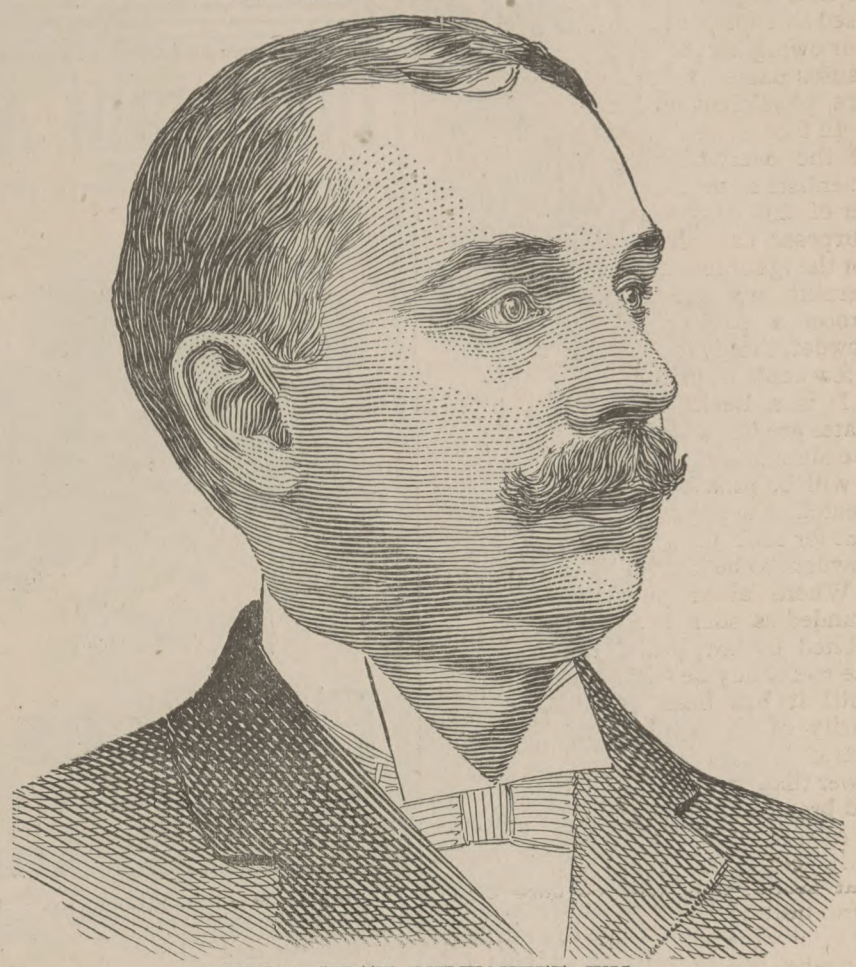
BIBLE READING FOR APRIL.—"Rooted and Grounded," by Lilian F. Lewis. Based on Ephesians 3: 7–21; pointing out the "secret of power," and emphasizing "boldness" and "access with confidence" in seeking guidance. To "know the love of Christ" is to take root downward; to be "filled with the fullness of God" is to bear fruit upward. The application of the lesson for white-ribboners is "If ye had faith ye might say to that Upas tree, the liquor traffic, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and it should obey you."

Our Library Table.

The many mothers who are interested in child culture in its numerous phases and were unable to attend the National Congress of Mothers, held at Washington, D. C., will find the "next best" thing in the printed report of the proceedings. It is complete in every detail, address, discussions, etc., and gives excellent portraits of the general officers and the women who made the congress such a notable success. Price postpaid, in cloth, $1.15; paper, 35c. Address, Sec. Nat. Congress of Mothers, Washington Loan and Trust Bldg., Washington, D. C.

THE HOLY GRAIL: The Silent Teacher, by Mary Hanford Ford, is one of a series of most interesting and valuable books, grouped together under the name of "Message of the Mystics." The other books are "Goethe's Faust" and "Balzac's Seraphita." Mrs. Ford is not excelled by any living author as an interpreter of these three literary masterpieces. Though their mysticism serves to connect the three works into a group, each of Mrs. Ford's studies of them is quite independent of the others, and each book is sold separately, as well as the three together in a box.

Price $1 each. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 277 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.



An entirely new and remarkable phase of Walter A. Wyckoff's experiences as a day laborer is begun in the March SCRIBNER'S with "The Workers—The West." A certain idyllic quality was never far distant from even his most sordid experiences in the rural regions which made the first division of this narrative the most talked-of serial feature of the year. But in this new experiment he plunges into the "heart of a congested labor market"—Chicago, before the World's Fair. He does not believe that we are on the eve of a "Social Revolution," and this narrative will be the best answer to alarmists. It is not an economic discussion, however, but an absorbing—often dramatic and pathetic—account of actual people and experiences. These are facts of life presented with amazing literary skill.

THE WAY OF THE CROSS. A Series of Devotional Studies, Based on the History of Our Lord's Passion, and Prepared for Use in the Lenten Season. By Rev. C. Armand Miller, Pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran church of the Holy Trinity, New York. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

The purpose of this book is to furnish devout Christians with a helpful guide to the profitable observance of Lent. There has been, heretofore, no work in the English language offering a daily portion for the whole of the Lenten season, prepared for the use of the Lutherans. In important respects, the book offers what is not to be found in other communions which observe Lent. A Scripture lesson, from the Passion History, a practical, suggestive meditation, and a prayer, make up the portion assigned for each day. The plan and purpose of the book have been cordially commended by leading ministers in the church.

Costs Nothing to Try.

A LIBERAL WAY TO PROVE THAT GLORIA TONIC CURES RHEUMATISM—THOUSANDS OF SUFFERERS HAVE BEEN PERMANENTLY CURED.—A FREE TRIAL PACKAGE MAILED TO ALL WHO APPLY.

JOHN A. SMITH, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

It is safe to say that nearly everybody who has rheumatic pains has doctored till they are discouraged. They are disgusted with remedies that cost money and won't try another unless it is proven to be a specific for the disease and not a mere drug to sell. This is why John A. Smith, who discovered a remarkable cure for rheumatism, sends free to all a trial of his remedy so that the sufferer may know positively that Gloria Tonic cures the disease.

This is the proper way to get people to try the remedy, as it is then used entirely upon its merits and is not subject to the mere claims of other people. It is usual, in making public the virtues of a remedy, to rely on testimonials, but Mr. Smith believes that it is a better plan to let people try it and first learn for themselves what the remedy will do for their particular case. There are many people who are afraid to try even this free sample package, fearing that it may contain something harmful. But all such are assured that Gloria Tonic is entirely safe and cannot harm even a baby. The justice of the peace of Cape Island, N. S., Joe C. Atkinson, sent for a trial package for his son, Moses Atkinson, who was in a critical condition. Arrangements had already been completed to move him to Halifax Hospital for an operation when the sample of Gloria Tonic arrived. This gave relief and they tried a full size box, with the result that the Hospital was cheated of a patient and the son got well. This was a remarkable result, but there are hundreds of others equally interesting reported from other places. Mrs. Sarah A. Archibald, of Lowell, Henry Co., Ind., cured herself of chronic rheumatism, and so thankful was she to be free from such a frightful affliction that she is known as a good samaritan by all the folks roundabout, having been instrumental in curing many another sufferer in the county. Joseph Hoskins, of Dodgeville, Wis., suffered intensely for three months and could scarcely move. A single package of Gloria Tonic cured him completely.

In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexauer, who suffered for 33 years. He used everything he heard of, besides employing aeven physicians in Vincennes, Ind. At No. 30 Oak Street it cured Miss Emma Callender, who walked on crutches. This young lady wrote the maker of Gloria Tonic as follows: "Oh how thankful I am to Gloria Tonic for rescuing me from the clutches of rheumatism. I am so glad I saw the advertisement in Christian Advocate for the physicians with whom I doctored and with whom I spent over $500 in six months, had given me up to die. Of course I was not afraid of death and am ready when the Lord calls me home, but I have an aged father and mother who I must comfort in their old age, and I feel so thankful that Gloria Tonic cured me." Mr. J. Schroder, of Laporte, Ind., writes: "My rheumatism was so severe that it disabled me from doing any work, but thanks to Gloria Tonic it completely cured me." Mrs. Mina Scott, of Marion, Ohio, a reader of a Cincinnati Methodist paper, writes that she used to be as helpless as a child, walked on crutches, and was obliged to use morphine to enable her to endure the pain; she used Gloria Tonic; it completely cured her. She then cured an old lady who was also afflicted, and who was 82 years old. Mr. H. Buchholz, a gentleman of Norborne, Mo., was cured after suffering for 25 years.

It will be interesting to note that Mr. Smith was himself an invalid as a result of rheumatism. His feet were so swollen at times that he was confined to his bed, and at other times was completely prostrated by the intense rheumatic pains.

He discovered Gloria Tonic by a fortunate chance, and ever since has devoted all his time to making the remedy known He finds sending free samples to all who apply a very expensive drain on his finances, but some day he expects to have the remedy thoroughly known everywhere as the one true, unfailing cure for all forms of rheumatism.

Write for a free sample to-day. If you have a friend who suffers ask him to write, and if you know anyone in another town who suffers, send his name to Mr. Smith, so that every person afflicted with rhenmatism may be releosed from the terrible pains of this ruthless disease.

Address Mr. John A. Smith, 426 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis,. and he will send a free trial package of Gloria Tonic by return mail, postpaid.

USE YOUR INFLUENCE FOR TEMPERANCE IN YOUR HOME.

Do you want to make money in an easy, honorable way? You can do so by selling our Non-Alcoholic Flavoring Powders. They are cheaper and stronger than the liquids, as they are made from the natural fruit or flower which each flavor represents; are so economical that from one to seven different flavors can be sold at every house for flavoring cakes, ice creams, custards, etc. They are guaranteed to be pure, and sell wherever tried. A good agent never makes less than $3.00 a day, and often twice that amount. If you want to make money fast, write the Eureka Novelty Co., Dept. 72, No. 376 Ridge Avenue, Allegheny, Pa., and they will give you particulars and tell you how to succeed.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 161 West Van Buren Street, B- 30, Chicago, Ill.

$18.00 Carriages for $9.00
$12.00 " " $6.00
$5.00 " " $2.50

PLEASE TRY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC REGULATE THE LIVER

10c. 25c. 50c. All Druggists. 888.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home Law College. Lima. O

(Continued from page 14.)

THE Hyattsville, Mo., union gave a successful valentine tea. It was the union's first effort in this line and the results were very gratifying. A program of music and recitations was followed by tea, which consisted of cake, sandwiches, tea and coffee. A souvenir was given with each ticket.

MAJOR E. T. SCOTT, under the direction of the Colorado W. C. T.U., has had remarkable success in that state. Crowded houses have invariably greeted him in every place. At Mosca he added twenty-four members to the union. At Alamosa, Pueblo, Longmout, Fort Collins and Canon City, the largest auditoriums were packed with people anxious to hear our California brother-helper.

SOME hint may be had of the hindrances of our work in the west by hearing of memorial day as helped by Mrs. Martin, president of Utah W. C. T. U. There was a ride of twenty-eight miles in a cart, a service with three ministers and a fine program for an audience of twenty people. At night another service, where only twenty-five people were in attendance, but the collection for the Temple was over five dollars.

THE Indiana state work is to be vigorously pushed in all the counties by a systematic arrangement of institute work. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds was recently in the state, and helped them along this line. At the state executive a form of petition to the General Assembly was adopted, striking out the word male in the constitution, thus granting women the right of complete suffrage. The committee indorsed a petition to members of the faculties of Indiana colleges and universities against laxity in temperance.

LOCKHART, Texas, has a local union which, still young, is among the most active of the state. It was organized by Mrs. Stoddard a year ago, and has nearly doubled its membership. Arrangements have been made with the pastors of the different churches to hold union services the first Sunday night of each month for the purpose of discussing the temperance question, the union arranging the program. Mrs. Maude L. Greene, and Miss Hattie Henderson visited Lockhart and gave them four days of work—practical lectures in the afternoon with the popular "chalk-talk" in the evening.

THE union at Thomas Ware church, in Butler county, Nebraska, recently held a meeting for the benefit of the Temple. Mrs. C. M. Woodward, Temple Trustee, and Mrs. Anna M. Bunting, Trans-Mississippi representative for the Temple, were the speakers. The attentive audience at the close of the addresses gave $13.92, which was to be increased by other gifts. Following the meeting the local union, of but eleven members, assisted by kind-hearted neighbors, spread a delicious supper in the parlor of the little church "out upon the prairie," and with excellent music and true western sociability, the entire evening was a delight. This meeting was several miles from any town or village.

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

The vegetable oils used in its manufacture make it the best for the hair and scalp.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is well known that a large number of Subscription Book Houses are selling the official Life of Miss Willard, and in order to give all an equal opportunity it was agreed that a uniform discount of 40 per ct. should be given. Especial inducements should not be offered and territory should not be restricted. We repeat these terms in order that White Ribboners who desire to become agents may read with care all circulars, and may avoid entering into arrangements with firms offering extra discounts.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicgao

LIFE SIZE PICTURE

...OF...

Miss Willard

Painted on porcelain and pronounced

A MASTERPIECE

by her friends. The fac simile of this painting will be executed by one of the very best companies in Chicago, and it will be difficult to distinguish it from the original. We did hope to be able to sell the picture for fifty cents but the process of getting it up has been so costly we will have to charge 1.00 for it. We want agents to sell it in every town in the United States. We will pay a liberal per cent either to individuals or Unions who desire to act as agents.

The picture will soon be ready for delivery.

Send $1.00 AT ONCE for canvassing outfit.

Apply to

Mrs. MATILDA B. CARSE.

Room 1118 The Temple, Chicago

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader,

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and co-worker,

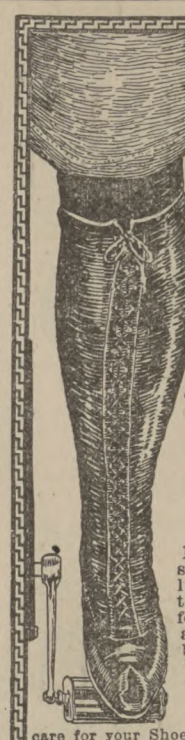
MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on sale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single pictures, each, -	$ .50
3, to one address, - -	1.00
12, or more, to one address, per dozen, - -	3.00



A beautiful picture of "REST COTTAGE," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the

W. T. P. A., The Temple,

or by

MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treas., 539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

A Bicycle Boot

travel stained, mud splattered, gray with dust and shabby looking, can be made to look as good as new with a little

VICI

Leather Dressing

Polishes leather and softens it. Gives it the lustre it had when it left the makers' hands. Good for any kind of leather, any kind of shoes. Sold by all dealers. Made by the makers of the famous Vici Kid.

An illustrated book of instruction—"How to buy and care for your Shoes," mailed free.

ROBERT H. FOERDERER, Philadelphia.

TEACHER—"What is velocity?" Pupil—"Velocity is what a man puts a hot plate down with."

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD

Changed time and also depots March 6, 1898. All trains now arrive and depart from Van Buren Street Station, near Clark Street, Chicago. All trains on "L" Loop stop at Nickel Plate Depot. City Ticket Offices, 111 Adams Street and Auditorium Annex. Telephone Main 3389.

"WELL, I see that Messrs. McKinley and Laurier are likely to come to an understanding over the seal question." "Yes; that's where Messrs. McKinley and Laurier differ from me and my wife."

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

IT was the first time Stewart had seen any very small chickens, and he did not understand that the smooth patches on the sides were wings. When one of the chicks tried to spread his wings Stewart cried, "See, he's opening his pockets and there isn't anything in them."

After a Hard Day's Work

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It makes a delicious drink, and relieves fatigue and depression. A grateful tonic.

EVEN Sir Boyle Roche could hardly have perpetrated a better bull than that of a prominent southern man who, at a certain interstate affair, hoped that "the occasion might be an entering wedge which would bring about a more perfect unity between the north and the south."

NO SAFER OR MORE EFFICACIOUS REMEDY can be had for Coughs, or any trouble of the throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

A VERY small boy during his papa's severe illness, heard a great deal said about nervous prostration. Feeling ill one day, he threw himself upon the sofa, exclaiming, "Oh, dear, I'm 'fraid I'm going to have nervous prospects!"

A GLENS FALLS teacher was trying to impress on the class the lessons of Washington's birthday, and among other questions she asked: "If the Southern Confederacy had succeeded, what would Washington have been the father of?" "Twins," was the prompt reply of one of the boys."

UNION SIGNAL

AND WHITE RIBBON

WORLD'S

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 18. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, May 5, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
The Spanish-American War—War Notes—Temperance Educational—About Women—At Home 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, From the Depths. By M. Craft Cobern 3
"God's Errands Never Fail." Chap. I. By Emma E. Page 3, 4
The Two-Wine Theory. By V. A. Lewis 5
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Temperance Zeal in Japan 5
Humane Treatment of Speakers 5
From a Veteran Prohibitionist 6
A Glorious Harvest 6
Sympathy from the Australasian President 6
Our Iceland Guest 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 7
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Rain Coach 7
Look Out For Number One 7
The Autobiography of a Dime. By Florence Turpie . . 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Art of Encouragement 8
Miss Willard and Wine 8
The Jewel, Consistency 8
An Indian's Plea for Prohibition 9
The Gothenburg System at Home 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Y's at Work 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Tasmanian Notes 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
New York—Missouri—Minnesota—North Dakota 10-12
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Soldiers and Sailors—The Willard Fund for the Temple 13
W. C. T. U. NEWS 13
CONVENTION CORNER 14
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15

Notes and Comments.

NEWS which will sadden the hearts of white-ribbon comrades all along the line was received at this office on Friday morning. Our dear sister, Miss Lodie E. Reed, died in Urbana, O., on Tuesday morning, April 26. The funeral services were held at Indianapolis, her home, on Saturday, April 30. Miss Reed was for some years National superintendent of press work and editor of the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin, and at the time of her death was World's superintendent of that department. A more extended sketch of her life and work will be given later.

THE National W. C. T. U., through its General Officers, have accepted the invitation of St. Paul, Minn., and will hold its next Annual Convention in that city next November. Besides the local W. C. T. U. presidents, state and county officers, the names of the following societies and prominent persons are appended to the invitation: Gov. David Clough, Archbishop John Ireland, Daughters of American Revolution, Catholic Sacred Thirst Ladies' Society, Presbytery of St. Paul, Twin City M. E. Church Association, Pastors and Citizens League, Federated Temperance Organizations, Good Templars, Prohibitionists, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavors, Catholic Sacred Thirst and Total Abstinence Societies and the daily press of St. Paul. The women say that if they had had more time many more names could have been added. So it will be seen the Convention is already assured of a warm reception in the capital city of the North Star state, "where many waters play."

MOTHER STEWART celebrated her eighty-second birthday anniversary on April 25 at her home at Appletree Place, Springfield, O. In answer to a letter from a friend inquiring as to the condition of her health at this time and of how she passes the time from day to day, this aged saint responded promptly with twelve pages of letter paper closely written with her own hand. We pass on to our readers a brief extract, wishing we had space for the entire letter: "I had positively forbidden any sort of demonstration on my birthday, and was simple enough to suppose that for once I was being minded . . . The Mother Stewart W. C. T. U. very secretly arranged to come and give me a reception, so that proves what a woman's authority is worth when she gets to be eighty-two years old."

ANOTHER of the "brightest and best" among the names of white-ribbon leaders has been added to the rapidly lengthening list of the promoted. On Friday, April 29, the following telegram dated New York was received at National headquarters from Miss Anna Gordon: "Mrs. Burt very ill; will soon greet our beloved leader." And on Saturday morning this message came: "Mrs. Burt went home 11:30. Happy, blessed woman." As most white-ribboners know, Mrs. Burt's health has been gradually failing for some years, and her going, while a severe blow to New York and to the work at large, is a welcome change for her. Like our other "Marys" who preceded her to the better world, she was one of the best loved women of the organization, and was for nineteen years president of New York W. C. T. U.—the oldest state president in point of service except Mrs. Stevens, of Maine.

CONCERNING the progress of prohibition legislation for Alaska, word comes from one of our representatives in the "third House" at Washington that Governor Bradley has arrived and has gone over to the enemy. After saying in his report that prohibition can be enforced in the territory, he is now recommending high license, which has only been advocated on the plea that prohibition can not be enforced. As the governor will doubtless labor to get the House committee on territories to put high license in the bill, letters from voters should pour in upon the members of that committee. They are: W. S. Knox, Massachusetts; P. B. Low, New York; C. Broderick, Kansas; L. Fletcher, Minnesota; M. Griffin, Wisconsin; W. T. Foote, Jr., New York; J. A. Hemmenway, Indiana; W. S. Mesick, Michigan; W. McAleer, Pennsylvania; A. J. Hunter, Illinois; J. A. Moon, Tennessee; J. W. Crawford, Texas; J. M. Griggs, Georgia; M. A. Smith, Arizona; H. B. Ferguson, New Mexico.

THE National officers have written to President McKinley and to Gen. Nelson A. Miles, urging them to prohibit the establishment of "canteens" in camps where troops are assembled. Letters have been sent by the W. C. T. U. department of legislation to the presidents of state unions where these camps are located, asking that they also write to these authorities, since each state is sending its quota of men in response to the demand made by the government. "Every W. C. T. U. president should write to them," says Mrs. Ellis, "yes, and every mother. It would ease a little of the heart-ache could American mothers be assured that protection of this kind would be given their sons."

MR. MOODY says he has got through singing "Hold the fort." Christians have been doing that long enough; they need now to get outside the fort and wage the war there. There is no sense, he declares, in building beautiful churches and keeping them locked up six days of the week. And we quite agree with him. An aggressive Christianity touching every human interest is what the Master demands of the church to-day. To anyone who has followed the experiences of Walter A. Wyckoff as recorded in "The Workers," a series of articles now being published in Scribner's, the question naturally arises, what part has the church in solving the great industrial problem? And this in turn suggests to professed followers of Christ that other question so earnestly and practically set forth in that widely read little book, "In His Steps"—"What would Jesus do?"

MISS AGNES SLACK writes that she "opens her newspapers day by day with the greatest anxiety to know how the United States is dealing with Spain," and she asks us to pass on to American women this message from their "English sister": "I am full of sympathy with the United States in the most difficult position in which it is placed by Spain. As neighbors of Cuba I can not see how the people of America could allow the Cubans to continue to suffer so much from Spanish rule, for a time comes when a nation forfeits by misrule the right to manage its own affairs, when oppression reaches such a climax that a neighboring country has to harbor refugees from that nation's tyranny. Mr. McKinley's calm statesmanship and his reluctance to commit his country to the cruelties of war must have raised him as a great ruler in the eyes of every one. I send this little message to my American sisters as an Englishwoman who loves and honors the American people and fully sympathizes with them in their determination to end the sufferings of the oppressed Cubans. I shall never forget the Cuban women whom I saw and talked with when I was in Florida."

Current Events.

The Spanish-American War.

Troops Mobilized—Matanzas Bombarded—The Pacific Squadron at Manila. Preparations for Aggressive Warfare.

ON April 25 President McKinley sent a message to Congress recommending a formal declaration of war between the United States and the kingdom of Spain, such action being needed, it was stated, in order to define this country's international status. A joint resolution was accordingly, promptly adopted by Congress declaring a state of war to exist, and fixing the date of the opening of hostilities as April 21. The war department immediately called on the governors of the different states for their quota in the volunteer army and the work of mobilization began.

The 10,000 men of the regular army encamped upon the historic battlefield of Chickamauga, and the citizen soldiery massed at points in the several states, are alike impatiently waiting orders to move. The first actual engagement took place on Wednesday, April 27, when three of Admiral Sampson's ships bombarded the forts of Matanzas, a city fifty miles east of Havana, destroying in half an hour the batteries in course of erection. No damage was done to the attacking forces. While the war department is reticent concerning its plans, this step is believed to be an indication of an aggressive policy on the part of our government.

Lieutenant Rowan, of the Nineteenth Infantry, who went to Jamaica under orders from the government, was landed with Cuban guides near Santiago on the Cuban coast April 25. He is on his way to the camp of General Garcia to arrange for the coöperation of the insurgents in the invasion of eastern Cuba—a most dangerous mission. His first dispatches are expected to reach Washington some time this week.

On Wednesday, April 27, the Pacific squadron, under Commodore Dewey, sailed from Hongkong, bound for Manila (Philippine Islands), either to blockade or bombard that city. The American war vessels aided by the rebel forces will, it is understood, compel the withdrawal of the Spanish fleet from the Philippines. The Spaniards are hastily erecting fortifications and mounting guns, and the citizens are fleeing from the island to Hongkong in large numbers.

At the present writing (April 30), preparations for the immediate invasion of Cuba are going actively forward, and the troops are expected to move within twenty-four hours. Tampa, Fla., has been made the base of operations in this country, and the indications are that the United States forces will soon take possession of a Cuban port (probably Matanzas), for occupation as a base for land operations in the island.

War Notes.

AMERICAN interests in Spain are being watched over by the British Embassy.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN is the first prominent man of the nation to volunteer as a private.

THE purchase April 28 by the war department of a number of transports is considered significant.

CLARA BARTON has left Tampa for Cuba to care for the starving, sick and wounded, irrespective of nationality.

SPANISH residents in Mexico have cabled the government in Madrid, offering to send the necessaries of life to the Cubans.

MANY of the state militiamen will be ordered home, as the number in camp greatly exceeds that called for by the government.

TWENTY thousand Spanish republicans have declared themselves ready to support Senor Castelar if he will proclaim a republic in Spain.

BY an order issued by the Postmaster-General, all postmasters throughout the country are instructed to forward to the department at Washington, all letters and packages addressed to persons in Spain.

THE Red Cross steamer, which is at Key West, will carry food and medicines to the reconcentrados, independently of the army assistance to be offered Gomez and his force.

THERE have been over 600,000 volunteers up to date, and the applications for appointments as major-generals, brigadier-generals and staff positions have been sufficient for an army of 4,000,000.

THE government has up to present writing been officially advised of the neutrality of Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands, Colombia and Portugal.

THE capture of the Spanish steamer Guido by the United States monitor, Terror, was attended by the first bloodshed of the war, eight Spaniards having been wounded by splinters from the Guido's shattered pilot house.

THE American liner, Paris, concerning which much apprehension has been felt, reached port in New York harbor, April 30, having successfully eluded any Spanish gunboats or cruisers which might have been waiting to intercept her.

Among the patriotic citizens who have written to President McKinley offering large sums of money for the defense of the nation, is Miss Helen Gould. She offers her check for $100,000, and if more is needed will make it $200,000. Her contribution has been accepted.

THE hero of the hour in Washington is John C. Fremont, son of the "Pathfinder," first republican candidate for the presidency. He is a navy lieuteuant, commanding the torpedo boat Porter, and under orders from Admiral Sampson he landed in Havana, delivered to the Cubans the plans for their coöperation in the campaign and obtained information valuable to the blockading squadron.

Temperance.

THE Illinois State Prohibition Convention will meet in Peoria, June 1 and 2.

F. H. LLOYDE, a stanch prohibitionist, was elected alderman in Champaign, Ill.

CANADA is credited with having the lightest drink rate and the lowest death rate of all Christian countries.

CINCINNATI spends $10,0000,000 for beer; $1,161,721.99 for public schools. There are 11,301 saloons in Ohio.

THE saloons in New York city are giving free drinks to any one wearing a uniform of the United States navy or army.

FRIENDS of temperance in Scotland are jubilant over the fact that the Duke of Fife is refusing to grant sites for distilleries on his estates.

A German chemist, on analyzing some milk, found that it contained alcohol. The cows had been fed on the waste at a distillery.

THE clergy of Aurora, Ill., are heading a determined effort to secure the passage of an ordinance forbidding wine-rooms in saloons.

SALE of intoxicating liquors is prohibited throughout the entire Congo Free State, with the exception of certain districts west of the Inkissi, on the Lower Congo, where trade was established long before the Congo Free State was in existence.

THE local option election at New Haven, Conn., resulted in a heavy vote for license, though the plurality was decreased by 1,009 votes over the last election. Ten ministers out of eighty-nine preached no-license the Sabbath previous. The W. C. T. U. held a meeting which was addressed by Mrs. Lenora B. Lake.

Educational.

PRESIDENT J. E. PEAIRS, of the Kansas Teachers' Associations, urges the creation of a department of education, whose head shall be a member of the President's cabinet.

THE professors of Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y., have planned a new scheme, arranging for the correspondence between school children of the North and South. The superintendent of schools in Texas favors the scheme.

SUPERINTENDENT SKINNER, of New York, has handed down a decision overruling the board of education of a school district in the city of Corning, where certain teachers are employed in one of the public schools who wear the distinguishing dress or garb of a religious order to which they belong. He holds that the school board has no right to lease for school purposes a building belonging to the Roman Catholic church so connected with the church property as to bring the school under sectarian influence.

About Women.

MISS HELEN GOULD has endowed the school of engineering, University of New York, with an additional $10,000, which brings her benefactions to a total of $60,000.

THE judge par excellence of St. Bernard dogs in this country is said to be Miss Anna H. Whitney, of Lancaster, Mass. She is a farmer and a member of the school board in her own town.

PROFESSOR MARY A. WILCOX, of the zoölogy department of Wellesley College, who has been studying abroad for the last two years, has obtained the degree Ph. D. from Zurich University, with highest honors.

MISS RELLA C. HARBER, of Trenton, Mo., state organizer for the Good Roads and Public Improvement Association, has had such great success with her work that the association is more than pleased with her.

MISS FLORENCE HIGGINS, professor of elocution and rhetoric at the Northern Indiana Normal College, has accepted the chair of elocution and oratory in the Northern Indiana College of Law at Valparaiso. She is the youngest woman director of a school of oratory.

THE first woman to be elected president of a national bank in Maryland is Mrs. Evelyn Tome, of Baltimore, widow of Jacob Tome, the millionaire philanthropist. She is also one of the executors of her husband's will, and assumes the active management of an estate valued at $4,000,000. Jacob Tome founded the bank and was its president for many years.

THE Baltimore & Ohio railroad company has eighteen women in its employ as station agents, and the superintendents are much pleased with the way they perform their duties. They act as both freight and ticket agents, and it is said by the traveling auditors that their accounts are always perfectly straight. Their stations are kept neater and cleaner than those presided over by men.

At Home.

THE Twenty-seventh Annual Convention of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions of the Northwest met in Minneapolis last week, with 300 delegates in attendance.

THE legislature of Ohio has given trial juries the option of saying whether a first-degree murderer should be executed or imprisoned for life. The pardoning power is made operative only on proof of innocence beyond reasonable doubt.

THE powder mill near Santa Cruz, Cal., was wrecked by an explosion on the afternoon of April 26, causing a terrible loss of life. The plant was one of the heaviest producers of smokeless powder which is now in such demand for the use of the navy.

ON April 28 an explosion occurred in the Atlantic Powder Company's works near Dover, N. J., and the plant is now a mass of ruins. Six workmen were killed, and many others wounded. A large amount of ammunition, ordered by the government and stored ready for shipment, was destroyed with all other explosives.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary of State, handed in his resignation Monday morning, April 25. The venerable statesman finds his health so impaired that further activity is impossible. The President at once nominated to the vacant post Judge William R. Day, who has served as Assistant Secretary, having in fact for some time been responsible for the actual performance of the duties of the Secretary. J. P. Moore, of New York, has been made Assistant Secretary of State.

Contributed.

From the Depths.

BY E. CRAFT COBERN.

WHEN my heart was overwhelmed,
From the depths to God I cried,
Through the night blind hands out-stretching
In an agonized beseeching,
Lo! I touched Him; though I knew not,
Christ was standing at my side.

Then He whispered,—on me turning Eyes with love and pity yearning—
"Stormy heart, be still."
And my spirit's surging passion
'Neath His calm, serene compassion
Yielded to His will.

"Child," He said, "the love you cherished
And the life thy pain hath nourished
In my arms I bear.
'Twas in love thy heart was riven;
Lift thine eyes in faith to heaven,
For thine own is there.

"I have ta'en thine earthly blossom—
See! I wear it on my bosom—
That thine eyes may be,
When thou turnest sorrow laden
To thy loved one's peaceful Aden,
Drawn, my child, to Me."

Oft through pain the soul out-reaching
Finds through pain what God is teaching,
And life's Calvarys,
Pressed with weary feet and bleeding,
May be steeps that upward leading
End in paradise.

Denver, Col.

"God's Errands Never Fail."

In Two Chapters.

BY EMMA E. PAGE.

CHAPTER I.

"THE dear, dear evening hours that have become so peculiarly our own, you can spend writing to me, Howard. I will write to you at the same time, so we shall be talking to each other if not together, and shall be so near in spirit that we shan't feel far apart after all."

Corinne Fuller smiled admiringly upon the tall, handsome man beside her. She wanted to chase the grave look out of his face lest it should undermine her own courage, so she went on:

'It is fortunate you were cosmopolitan enough to close the mélange at six."

Mélange was Corinne's name for her husband's store, where he was obliged to keep in stock everything to eat and to wear, everything to eat with and work with, and it was postoffice besides; a funny caricature of a city bazaar.

"The cowboys and ranchmen, as well as the few dozen inhabitants of our borough, are as well supplied with daily necessities, as if you had kept open till ten, and we are much happier. We have had a chance to keep the home hearth warm. If, like some merchants, you lived at your store and kept up an establishment as a kind of lunch counter where you ran in occasionally with just twenty minutes for refreshments, I expect I should be as tearful as poor Mrs. Richman. As it is, the days are never long. I have six o'clock to look forward to and get ready for, when you are all my own for golden hours. While I am gone no one shall take my evenings away from you. Neither father nor mother, sister nor brother, friend nor fêtes, feasts nor fasts."

She got an answering smile this time, though it was a trifle forced, and in spite of the handbag, mailbag and portmanteau with which he was incumbered, Howard managed to press the daintily gloved fingers that rested on his arm for a moment.

"How the billets doux will fly between us," she continued. "It will surpass our pre-matrimonial days. I can write a much better love letter now than I could then. You will be glad to have me gone three months, just to see how a year has improved my style."

"Your pen can never match your tongue," he said, with a little bow.

"Howard," warningly, "that is an uncertain compliment."

"How am I to keep the home hearth warm alone?" he went on earnestly. "I shall freeze in three months and starve to death for a sight of you, besides," and he looked her over hungrily. She was as refreshing as a May morning in a blooming orchard. Grace and beauty seems to exhale from her as perfume from a flower.

"Starved and frozen," she quoted, imitating his accent. "Twice dead! A pity! All for the lack of a healthy imagination. Can't you sit before your pitchwood fire and see me in the chair beside you, or hear my voice as you read my letter? And," with mock severity, "recreant knight, where is the picture you used to carry in your vest pocket?"

"It is not thrown away, but do you expect me to be satisfied with a shadow, after I have enjoyed the substance? For all that, I am thoroughly glad you are going, Corinne. I can stand it, and you will have a delightful time. It will refresh you through and through, after being out of the world a twelvemonth in this barren, houseless, societyless, sidewalkless, depotless hamlet among the foothills of Wyoming."

"Howard, I had no idea you could invent so many descriptive adjectives! I am glad you said houseless instead of homeless, or I should think I had grievously failed in the very thing I had prided myself in. A cabin may be a home and a palace only a place to stay in."

"You could make a home in a hollow tree, but your gifts deserve a Windsor," he put in gallantly.

She smiled brightly and went on with gathering energy. This was a sore point with Howard, and she would like to heal it forever.

"Barren! Doesn't the goldenrod and penstemon bloom under our very feet?" And she held up some beautiful blue and yellow spikes she had snatched off in passing. "And what do we need with sidewalks on these hard, dry ways? I never soil my overshoes. As to the depot, you are an ingrate. Doesn't it continually hover on the horizon, a fine object lesson of the adage, 'pursuit is better than possession'? And don't say 'out of the world.' This is our very own new world, where we are to grow up with the country and make our fortune, so we may retire in peace and plenty, with a comfortable sense of well earned rest in the sunny afternoon of life. Howard," she walked nearer to him and her voice became tender, "for me, the best society would be dull without you. I want you to throw away every regret about bringing me into this wilderness, as you call it; if it is the place for you to work your way, it is the place for me. I have had a lovely year. There is so much that is new and interesting on every hand. The air, the sunshine, are utopian. The views are uplifting. See Laramie now, in her draperies of blue mists." Her face glowed and her voice thrilled with pleasure. "I like it, Howard, and I shall tell them all so when I get back to Chicago. Best of everything is our life together. I am beginning to be afraid that I shall find the city the wilderness without you. If they get me again soon, they will have to send a ticket for you as well as for me."

"Corinne, you are the pluckiest girl I ever saw!" he exclaimed impulsively.

They were nearing the platform where a group of men and boys were waiting with habitual eagerness, for the excitement of the incoming train. Mr. James, the minister, was with them, talking earnestly. At the approach of the Fullers he lost their attention.

"They were made for one another, if two people ever was," said Tom Bennett, with a jerk of his head toward the pair. "She's the purtiest bird that's ben in these parts. I reckon Fuller was the tickledest man in Ameriky when he snared her, 'n he ain't got over feelin' good about it yit."

"She's just as pleased with him," said John Hawley. "They say her family is rich and she had everything she wanted before she was married."

"'Pears like she has ev'rything she wants now," said a seedy looking fellow familiarly known as Long Bill.

"She is at least content with what she has," said the minister, quietly.

Corinne looked like a princess in her pretty traveling dress. Whatever she wore had an air of elegance. The Westerner, however rough, has a spontaneous courtesy for genuine womanhood, and in the presence of beauty and gentleness combined he is almost reverent. Every hat was lifted as the two stepped upon the platform. Corinne smiled and bowed cordially. She liked their hearty greetings; she was on friendly terms with the cowboys far and near.

"This is a good place to catch people," said the minister, advancing. "I came here to save steps, but I did not count on seeing you, Mrs. Fuller. Are you going to leave us?" He looked from her to the portmanteau.

"Yes, I have suddenly decided to visit my father and mother," she said, responding to his outstretched hand with her own. She liked the resolute, white-haired old man. His great, kindly heart softened his rugged features and made him handsome. He was zealous, too, and she liked zealous people, especially ministers. Love toward God and man filled the measure of his soul. With tireless energy he strove for the Christian advancement of his community. His abiding faith that God's errands never fail kept up his hope and courage; so, like Napoleon, he never knew when he was defeated. A failure was to him but a lesson. His very goodness seemed cause of offense with some. Was it the wide contrast his life made with theirs?

Howard and Corinne had felt drawn to him from the first. He greeted them with a paternal warmth now.

"Have you heard of the proposed saloon?" He included them both in his glance.

"Yes," and "No," came back in reply.

"Bentley was in the store this morning and said he was going to open up something of the kind," exclaimed Howard.

"Mr. Bentley!" ejaculated Corinne, in surprise. "He seems like a gentleman."

"He calls it the 'Cowboys' Rest'," said Howard, "and has high ideas as to the elevating atmosphere that shall pervade it." He smoothed out the paper that Mr. James had given him and held one corner out to Corinne. They read it together. A few strong sentences in the minister's best style set forth the evils of a saloon and prayed that Montville might be spared such a curse. It was full of the Christ spirit, hate for sin but love for the sinner.

John Hawley had advanced to the side of the minister. He was popularly believed to belong to that much talked of class among the cowboys known as "gentlemen's sons." He had an easy assurance as he spoke.

"Bentley has been on the roundups between the Laramies and the Black Hills for years, and knows the punchers straight through. He is a prime favorite and his 'Rest' will draw scores of them here for winter quarters. They will bring piles of money to the town and make lots of money for you, Fuller."

Corinne finished the reading and looked at her husband. She saw that he was vexed and troubled. Before Hawley had finished speaking she had summed up the argument. Her pulses quickened. She hated to be trammeled by the public. Howard was anxious, morbidly anxious, to get on in business. His pride, his love for her, the odds against him, were constant spurs. But he was a manly man, disposed to be fair with others as well as himself. He knew that his irritation arose from his unwillingness to face this question squarely and not from any injustice in Mr. James' appeal. He handed the petition back and said with straightforwardness:

"I can't sign it. If I did it would cut my profits down one-half, and that would mean bankruptcy." Then he walked quickly away to hang the mailbag, plainly unwilling to hear any argument.

Corinne saw the look of pain in the minister's face and it cut her to the heart, but clearly her first duty was to her husband. A wave of dislike for Hawley came over her and she wished him away. She hated the saloon as she hated everything coarse and bad, but she had never read any scientific temperance literature, and neither she nor Howard had any idea of individual responsibility for the liquor traffic. She knew that twice before, in the brief history of the town, a saloon had been attempted and soon abandoned on account of Mr. James' strong influence and active work. She was glad of it and hoped he would succeed again. That was a minister's work, but Howard should not be expected to take up the moral cudgel. This was the most disagreeable thing she had faced in her new life.

"He's got his license," said Hawley, lightly. "He's got the law on his side. He has as much right to sell beer as Fuller has to sell flour."

The minister's eye kindled. "You are right," he said. "The law is on his side, but do you think God is on his side? Do you think his license makes it right for him to coarsen, deaden and destroy the bodies and souls of his fellowmen?"

"But," said Corinne, "Mr. Bentley is a gentleman; he won't allow drunkenness. Surely, it is better for him to occupy the field with a decent saloon than to leave it open for some mean fellow to put in a low dive and fill our streets with brawlers."

"She has struck the keynote," said Hawley triumphantly.

"No," cried Mr. James, "you can never make evil good with fine raiment. A serpent's egg when hatched is deadly, whether in a bed of lilies or on a barren rock; and 'woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink,' is as true of a gentleman as of a ruffian."

He laid his hand on Corinne's arm in his earnestness, as if to stay her farther speech. He saw the smile of approval run through the crowd at her specious argument, and saw how it influenced them, but she little dreamed that her words carried any special weight; she was talking for Howard. "The supreme hours unnoted come; unfelt the turning tide of doom."

The train rushed in, and with a hasty good-by and a sense of relief, she followed Howard into the car. It was empty, so they had the moment of parting to themselves. It was more than usually tender, perhaps because of the mental disturbance of both.

When the train puffed noisily away, Mr. James sought to interest the men in his petition again, but they scattered in different directions and he did not get a name.

"The leddy was right," said an old Englishman, as he shuffled away.

"She got ahead of the parson," declared Tom Barnett, as he sauntered along.

"I 'low Bentley's whisky'll have as many snakes in it as Sixshooter Jim's," said Long Bill, pulling his slouched, worn hat farther down over his eyes.

Mr. James walked away, looking careworn and old, as if ten years had been suddenly added to his threescore and ten. Going about with his petition in the days that followed, he found Corinne's poor little argument everywhere. He mentally compared it with a head of thistledown caught up by a breeze and scattered far and wide. Of course, it was expanded and transformed, abridged and supplemented, compounded and adapted to the thought and feeling of the various individuals, so that only an expert would recognize it as the leaven working through the entire community. He understood the untaught affection that prompted the speech, and thought with bitter pain of the fearful cost of ignorance. He got few signatures, much fewer than in his former effort; but with these and his masterful arguments and strong persuasions, he went to Mr. Bentley. That gentleman (?) plead an immediate engagement that called him away. He did not escape, however, without hearing enough to disturb his peace of mind. He struck the spurs deep into his horse's flanks—anger delights in cruelty, the poor creature leaped high in the air, and then dashed off on a wild run.

Mr. James went directly into the postoffice, took from his slender purse five dollars and made out a carefully selected list of books, papers and tracts on temperance.

"Sometimes the written word succeeds where the spoken word fails," he said, as he showed it to Howard.

"I will pay for half of this," said Howard, as he made out the order. The old man's self-sacrifice constrained him; he could not do less.

A few evenings later, as Howard was locking up, Bentley called him to come over and see his new furniture. Howard dreaded to go to his empty home, so he was not sorry to be detained.

"I want you to see this stained glass window," said Bentley. "It gives beautiful lights. I got the whole outfit for a song at —— deserted mine. The chandelier is dazzling when lighted up, but the finest thing of all is the billiard table. It is worth four times what I paid for it. I could not have fitted up so handsomely if I had bought at first hand."

Howard was knocking the balls about.

"You are skillful," observed Bentley. "Let's have a game."

"Father used to keep a table in palmier days," said Howard. "He played with us boys a good deal. He thought it good training."

"It is good training," declared Bentley. "I tell you, Fuller, I mean to keep as clean a room as any private gentleman keeps. You can play here with as much self-respect as at your father's table."

Howard glanced round. It was a pleasant apartment. Bentley saw the approval, and added:

"How much better this will be than the average cowboys' dull lodgings. They will have some sort of amusement, and it is a fine thing for them to have a decent place to resort to. Besides, they are bound to spend all their money before spring, anyway, and you and I may as well take it in as other men."

Howard did not exactly enjoy this association of the store and the saloon, but he was making a close game and played on with interest. The two were well matched.

Only a short lettter was written to Corinne that night. It was made up the next night, however, with a long account of some through herds that were camped round about and the liberal bills that had been made at the mélange A clerk had to be employed, and the profits were cheering.

Olympia, Wash.

The Two-Wine Theory.

BY V. A. LEWIS.

MANY complications arise from misunderstandings, and misunderstandings arise from wrong interpretations. Words are very peculiar in their shades of meaning, and these shades of meaning often depend upon association with other words. Because of these facts in translations from one language into another difficulties are caused. This is especially true of the dispute that has arisen in regard to what is known as the "two-wine theory" of the Bible. Most of the words that are translated from the Hebrew into the English in our Bible as "wine," by their root meaning in Hebrew decide the question of their interpretation, and although rendered into English by the word "wine," do not deceive the student. These words are comparatively few, and as presented, will fully explain the above statement.

The words chemer and chamar both mean a thick, sticky syrup, that was prepared by boiling and was diluted for use. The words yegeb and gath and purah refer simply to the vat or press into which the juice was gathered. In like manner the word asis refers only to the treading out of the juice, while the word enab has the meaning of the single round grape or the cake of the grape after the juice had been pressed out. The word mimsak means mixed liquors and the word sobe refers to the method of drinking—sucking up, while shemar means preserved liquor, and the word shekar refers to the satiating power of the drink. These are all the words in the Bible that are translated "wine" except the words tirosh and ayin, around which the contest has been waged as to the character of the "Bible wine" and as to the question of the two-wine theory of the Bible.

I wish to show that in the interpretation and translation of a language there must be taken into consideration the use and association of the word with other words in order to give a true and exact translation of the word. In doing this it will be found that the word tirosh refers to the fruit of the vine generically, not as a single grape, for which there is a special Hebrew word, nor for the clusters of grapes to be gathered, for which there is also a special Hebrew word, but for the grape as a fruit, and that the word ayin refers to the expressed juice of the grape, in whatever condition it may be, new, unfermented or fermented, and that its character and its use are to be determined by the context. The whole argument therefore turns on the verses in which the word in Hebrew is the word ayin thereby making the investigation a direct and simple one. The use of the one word "wine" to translate the two Hebrew words tirosh and ayin has been the source of conflict and error. If we follow the use of these two words, especially in their association with other words, we shall be convinced that they can not both mean the same thing. The word tirosh is always associated with the word dagan, meaning corn as grain in its natural state, and with the word yitshar, meaning the olive on the tree. On the other hand the word ayin is always used with the word lechem, meaning bread or food prepared from the grain, and with the word shemen, meaning the oil expressed from the olive. We have, therefore, two triads, the one tirosh, dagan and yitshar, referring to the grape, the corn and the olive in the natural state; and the other, ayin, lechem and shemen, these substances or natural productions as modified or prepared by man, as the articles called, wine, bread and oil. To fully demonstrate this we must examine the text. The process is a little wearisome but most satisfactory. The word tirosh occurs as follows: Genesis 27:28, 27:37, in connection with the word dagan, and should be translated "corn and grapes," not "corn and wine." In Numbers 18:12, tirosh occurs with yitshar and dagan, and the translation should be "grapes, corn and olives." In Deuteronomy 7:13, 11:14, 12:17, 14:23, 18:4 and 28:51, we find these three words conjoined and the translation should have been "corn, grapes and olives," not using the word "wine" as the translation of tirosh. In Deuteronomy 33:28, we find tirosh again joined with dagan, and translated "wine" instead of "grapes." In Judges 9:13 we find tirosh translated "wine" when the evident meaning is the fruit of the vine, the grape, as in the case of the olive and the fig trees referred to in the context. In II. Kings 18:32, II. Chronicles 31:5, 32:28, the word tirosh is joined with the words dagan and yitshar and while translated "wine" should be translated in the triad "corn, grapes and olives." In Nehemiah 5:11, 10:39, 34:5, and 13:12, tirosh is joined again with the other two words and should be translated with the triad "corn, grapes and olives," and not by the word "wine."

In Psalm 4:7 we have the same triad and the translation should be "grapes" and not "wine." In Proverbs 3:10, tirosh stands alone and is translated "new wine," while the translation following the above lead would be more correctly rendered "and thy presses shall burst out with grapes." The same is true of Isaiah 24:7, while in Isaiah 36:17 and 52:8, combined with dagan the word tirosh demands the translation not of "wine," but of "grapes." In Jeremiah 31:12 we find the same triad and the same mistranslation of tirosh as "wine" instead of "grapes." In Hosea 2:8, 2:9 and 2:22, we find the same triad and the same wrong translation of "corn, wine and oil" instead of "corn, grapes and olives." In Hosea 4:11 we have the only verse where the words ayin and tirosh are associated, and here the word tirosh is evidently used metaphorically for gluttony, this one exception emphasizing the rule we are following. In Hosea 7:14 and 9:2 we find the same association of words of the triad and tirosh should be translated "grapes," and not "wine." In Joel 1:10, 2:19 and 2:24 we find the same law of association requiring the translation to be "grapes," not "wine." In Micah 6:15, in Haggai 1:11, and in Zechariah 9:17 we have the same association of this triad of words carried to the end of the Old Testament and requiring as shown above that the word tirosh is not to be translated "wine" as it is translated in the English Bible, but by the word "grapes."

This simplifies the whole investigation of the wine question as far as the Bible is concerned. It places the word ayin as the generic word for "grape juice" in the Bible in the Old Testament, as the Greek word oinos is in the New Testament the generic word for "grape juice," leaving the condition and character of the article to be decided by the context and experience and the testimony of the literature of the past on this subject. Eliminating from the discussion in the Old Testament the tirosh texts where as we see the word should be in the English "grapes" and not "wine," we shall find it much more easy to see eye to eye, and to perceive that ayin or "grape juice" fermented is vastly different from "grape juice" unfermented, though designated by the same word.

Removing again the texts where the Hebrew word by its root meaning decides the character of the substance or liquor referred to, and there are comparatively few texts in which the Hebrew word is ayin, and which are in reality the "wine" texts of the Old Testament, which are to be studied in order to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the question under consideration. Having the one generic word setting before us the "juice of the grape" in different states, as it must appear in all grape countries, we are able to remove all seeming contradictions from the Bible teaching and to see that truth is ever consistent with itself in the facts of life. We can readily see that there could be the free use of the grape juice in its fresh unfermented state and as boiled for preservation for household use, while there would be the strongest condemnation of the use of the grape juice in its fermented and intoxicating state. We are also led thereby naturally to accept as the proper and original article for the celebration of the communion the fresh or unfermented juice of the grape, presenting an article with which the Jews were familiar, and which they accepted as the good gift of God, and as symbolizing life, not death, and proving its right by its beneficent effects on the body. We can readily see the consistency of the symbol as the Saviour took the cup of the unfermented juice of the grape and made it the symbol of His life-giving blood. As the unfermented juice of the grape the communion cup has in it every suggestion of good, while if the fermented wine be put in its place it fails as a true symbol, and proves in the evil results that it is not the "cup of blessing."

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Willard Hall Echoes.

A CONFERENCE on present day social problems in the light of the teachings of Jesus, was held in Willard Hall, April 16 and 18, under the auspices of the National Christian Citizenship League. Among the speakers who came to the platform during the sessions were Prof. Albion W. Small, of the University of Chicago, Mr. N. O. Nelson, of the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Company, St. Louis, President George A. Gates, Iowa College, Prof. Ernest D. Burton, of the University of Chicago, Prof. George D. Herron, of Iowa College, Prof. Graham Taylor, of Chicago Theological Seminary, Rev. Gustavus Tuckerman, of St. Stephen's Mission of St. Louis.

. . . . . .

Brother David was with us again from April 19 until Saturday, April 23, when he and Brother Staines, his companion in travel, went to Minneapolis, Minn. They expect to return to Chicago for the Pentecostal convention, to be held in the Tabernacle on Wabash avenue, beginning May 21, and continuing for two weeks.

. . . . . .

Rev. Sherrard Beatty, founder and manager of Rescue Mission and Home for Erring Women, at Cincinnati, Ohio, was with us for several days, and told us such things of his soul-saving work as rejoiced our hearts.

. . . . . .

Strangers are daily in Willard Hall and their words of cheer are an inspiration to every heart. More than five hundred letters have come to my hands upon this platform. Could I bring their burden into this column, every heart would cry to God in prayer for sorrowing mothers and friends. Many times, too, the postman brings letters of hope and cheer, which say, "The blessing sought has come to me and mine. The Lord bless you and the praying band in Willard Hall."

(MRS.) ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

A HEART unloving among kindred has no love towards God's saints and angels. If a little pain overcomes us, how could we endure a cross? If we have no tender, cheerful, affectionate love to those with whom our daily hours are spent, how should we feel the pulse and ardor of love to the unknown and the evil, the ungrateful and repulsive?—H. E. Manning.

Correspondence.

Temperance Zeal in Japan.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Through the kindness of Miss Lottie Wiggins, of Toronto, and Miss Hattie Jost, a new Canadian missionary, the banner arrived safely on February 14. Our valentine, we said. It is not to be exhibited until the convention, but the few who have seen it are loud in its praise. Nothing so large or so elaborate was expected.

The zeal of the temperance workers, as manifested during the first weeks of the new year has not yet abated in the least. The last days have been characterized by some of the largest local meetings that have ever been held in Japan, and plans are on foot for still greater ones. February 26 and 27, services were arranged especially for the students of the Imperial University, and these were attended by nearly a thousand young men each night, many of whom signed the pledge. Tokio workers were assisted in these meetings by Miss Frances Parmelee and Miss Tsune Yamada, of Maebashi. The latter sang again, "There's a shadow on the home." It is quite an innovation for a Japanese girl to go before an audience of the young men of her country, but they were perfectly respectful and the most critical could not have detected a single false note in the long and loud applause which rang out.

"It spoke volumes to me,
Of the better day that is to be."

Just after the large meeting at the Y. M. C. A., which I reported in my last UNION SIGNAL message, a missionary gentleman, teacher in one of the government schools, asked his pupils to write him an English letter. Those who attended the meeting took temperance for their theme. Some of these epistles fell into my hands, and I quote one to you, hoping that you may enjoy the Anglo-Japanese diction as much as I have enjoyed the sentiment:

"I am obliged to write a letter to you. This night I went to Mis Paris's Assiosiation, or temperance society Y. M. C. A. at Midoshiro-cho, and I wrote my name in the paper which was brought by a young man, to record the names of determined men, not so sensible with her reasonable argument and the interesting story by Mr. Ando, and the inciting ring by the music band, because I dislike wine.

"But there was a great eloquence when her face was flash with many thanks, and her left hand was over the head, and helped by the hand of chair, and the right hand was bring the whait hankachif near the eyes, especially she left the chair which she was setting with the unbearing interest. Truly she was an angel to my sight on this case. And this is a case, too, which I wrote my name in the paper. O, what is there so beautiful as a drop of tear! I am glad that I was entered into the temperance society as part of the salvation of the mankind."

Now you may be puzzled to decide whether this youth was converted to total abstinence, or whether he was already an abstainer, but you can not doubt that he signed the pledge for the speaker's sake.

To return to items of news: The regular monthly meetings in the various girls' schools have been more than ordinarily successful, and a large increase in membership is reported from every place. Fully 700 girls "belong" now in Japan. This means 700 homes where sake will not be used in cooking. It means a temperance home in scores of communities where perhaps no light has yet penetrated. I feel more and more that the educational work in the schools is of prime importance. Miss Mitani tells me that the reports that are coming in from the college Y's for the convention are most interesting. Some of the girls were strangely persecuted during vacation days; others found their mothers quite willing to try all sorts of new recipes, and banish liquors altogether from the table.

The friends of Madame Sakurai in America will be glad to hear that there is a regularly organized society now in her school.

One of the most important things that I have to tell you to-day is that at last we see our way clear to form a coalition of all the men's temperance societies. At the recent meeting of the National executive a committee was appointed to draw up a basis of union. Dr. Julius Soper, Mr. Ando, Mr. Ito, Mr. Hayashi and Mr. Anzai, with whose names our readers are familiar, compose this committee. With a National men's society, as well as a woman's, Japan has wonderful possibilities in the line of temperance reform. The organizing convention will soon be called. I think I told you that the magazines had been amalgamated.

Another very important thing is that the Rescue Home is to be moved to larger quarters at once, and is to be in charge of Mrs. E. Spencer Large, one of the finest business women I have ever known.

At least three conferences or schools of methods have been arranged for this summer in different parts of the Empire.

Convention plans are maturing nicely. My next letter will give a full account.

Yours in faith and love,
CLARA PARRISH.

Tokio, Japan, March 14, 1898.

Humane Treatment of Speakers.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There is no kind of work which women are accustomed to do more productive of mental and physical exhaustion than that of public speaking, and there are perhaps few things which the women who are not themselves public speakers so little appreciate or understand as this. It is indeed laudable to try to make the most of an opportunity and get, as some say, all the good they can from a speaker while she is within reach; but the dear women should ask themselves whether that may not also mean getting all the strength and nervous force out of her. When, for instance, a woman arrives tired from a journey, she does not want to find that her hostess has invited a number of friends to meet her because "it is such a privilege." What she does want is to go to a quiet room and rest, gathering up her forces for the work before her. A tired speaker can not, in the nature of things, do as strong, magnetic, telling work as she whose energies are refreshed and keen, and whose mind is collected; not wearied and distracted by listening to recitals of the numerous difficulties and problems of the local union, or possibly even to a confidential outpouring of family affairs.

And what shall be said of allowing a weary, travel-worn woman to walk a long distance, carrying—as speakers, like other people, need changes of clothing—a heavy bag. Those who are so thoughtless as to permit such a thing, should devote some time to the study of the Golden Rule, and ask themselves how they, if already fatigued by a journey, would like to be treated with such unkindness and discourtesy. It is well known that there are difficulties and inconveniences in most outlying places, but if it is worth while to have a speaker at all, it is also worth while to give her as few hardships as the circumstances will permit. The work itself imposes on our speakers the patient endurance of much that is wearing to the bravest spirit; therefore let the dear sisters who harbor but for a brief moment these birds of passage, strive to give them pleasant, grateful memories of kindly welcome, always remembering that plain or even humble entertainment with true Christian courtesy, is infinitely more grateful than style or splendor where it is lacking.

Bryn Mawr. MARY F. LOVELL.

From a Veteran Prohibitionist.

[Rev. Chauncey Hobart, D. D., and his wife, Mrs. Harriet A. Hobart, who passed away February 17, did much pioneer work for prohibition in Minnesota. Mrs. Hobart was state W. C. T. U. president for thirteen years, and the Doctor, now aged and feeble, is the author of considerable prohibition literature, and has been a contributor to THE UNION SIGNAL.—THE EDITORS.]

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—It is seldom that leaders in any of our great moral movements are called suddenly and unexpectedly to exchange the scenes and associations of toil and labor for the higher and holier environments and felicities of the glorified in heaven. But lately such has been the case with two of ours. No two women were more deeply interested and devoted, heart, life and soul, to the overthrow of the liquor traffic than were Miss Willard and Mrs. Hobart. And I will venture to say there are few in the grand army of our heroic living leaders who are better qualified by nature and culture to lead in this mighty effort than were they. Each had an extensive knowledge of the great evil she was combating, and an intuitive perception of the only efficient means by which it could be destroyed, and both richly earned the high encomiums bestowed upon them. Miss Willard was the best beloved woman in the Christian world, and it was said at Mrs. Hobart's funeral that there was no woman in the state of Minnesota so well known and so sincerely loved as was she. No one ever heard either of them speak an unkind word of anybody—friend or foe, associate or opponent.

My acquaintance with Miss Willard commenced in her childhood, in 1847, when presiding elder of the Racine district, Rock River Conference, now Wisconsin Conference. I held a quarterly meeting in Janesville, Wis., near where the Willard family resided. On Sabbath I preached to a large congregation from Deut. 32 : 31: "Their rock is not as our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges." Near the speaker sat the Willard family—father, mother, one son and two daughters, Miss Frank, a bright child of some nine summers. To this sermon Miss Willard attributed a life long influence, and nearly thirty years after, at a W. C. T. U. convention, she called me to the platform and announced to the thousands present that she "took great pleasure in introducing Rev. Dr. Chauncey Hobart as her first love." This unexpected honor took me by surprise, and is yet cherished as the highest and most unique compliment that I ever received. Subsequently the Willard children introduced preaching as a pastime, and Miss Frank's text was, "Their rock is not as our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges." Both these women are gone, and have borne away in themselves almost every grace that contributed to glorify our humanity, but while we realize the fact that we are the poorer, we also remember that heaven is the richer, and that the separation will be but short, if we improve the grace which our loving Lord so richly supplies.

CHAUNCEY HOBART.

Red Wing, Minn., March 28, 1898.

A Glorious Harvest.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

In these days, as we sit under the shadow of a great sorrow, because our beloved is with us no more in the flesh, it becomes necessary to double our zeal, increase our faith and enlarge our hope, remembering the battle was not hers, but the Lord's. "His arm is not shortened," neither is "His ear heavy," and, somehow, I can but feel that the great heart of the Eternal is touched because of our grief, and His listening ear hears, with increased tenderness, our mighty cry for help in this great extremity.

By reason of much toil and great loss of strength, I am "wounded on the field;" and far from the din of life, in the quietude of a calm retreat, I send out a word of cheer, that I hope will roll down the whole line of brave women who stand in battle array, undaunted by any foe.

In this time of forced rest, my heart has been made glad by the thought that God honors every honest effort. This was fully illustrated a few days ago in an experience that came to me with much joy and gladness.

When a young woman, the first such to go over the state of California, I was sent to a mountain town to hold a temperance meeting. In the house where I was entertained, was boarding a young man of no mean gifts, whom I met at the table. When he went out, I learned he was the saloon-keeper of the town, and forthwith I went to his place of business to invite him to the meeting. He promised to come, and closed his saloon to keep that promise. During the meeting he seemed deeply interested, and at the close we had a very serious talk, which led him to promise he would give up the business. Hearing I was on the Coast, he came yesterday to see me, and told the most remarkable story I have heard. Just eighteen months after he made that promise to me he was a full-fledged minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In relating to me the story, among other things, he said: "I was appointed superintendent of Midnight Missions in San Francisco, and during six weeks' preaching, 216 women were rescued from sin and saved to better lives." I was deeply touched, so much so that I could not keep back the tears, and while my heart said, "Praise ye the Lord," the message, "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not," was borne in upon me, and brave women, ye who stand with your fearless faces toward the foe, dry the streaming eyes, check the sigh, lay hold of the promise with a new faith, and in these sorrow-laden days faint not, faint not!

Yours, mighty in faith and large in hope,

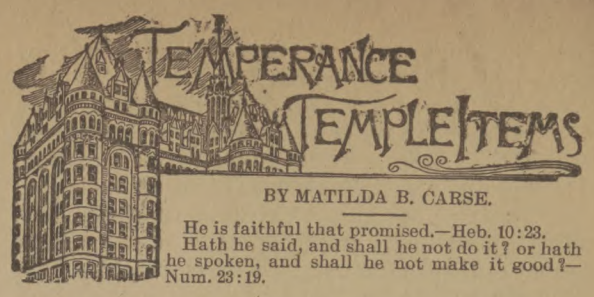
JESSIE ACKERMANN,
World's Missionary.

Sympathy from the Australasian President.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The news that has bowed the heads of our American sisters in sorrow has reached Australasia, and in common with our white-ribbon comrades the wide world over, we weep with them over the still frail form so lately vacated by the strong, loving spirit of our beloved Chieftain, and we realize that there was only one Frances Willard and can never be another.

Our deepest regret in this far off land is, that so few of us ever saw her face, and that now she can never come to us. How thankful we feel that we were able to send so full a delegation to the last World's Convention to catch the inspiration of her charming presence and loving spirit. Less than three weeks ago I received a letter from her and edited it for Our Federation. It was valued before, now it is a treasure indeed. Her offices must be taken by others who will dignify and ennoble them, but her place among us can never be filled by any other—nay, indeed, it is not vacant, for she lives and loves us still "from the heights." As, in imagination, we stand with you round her last earthly resting place, we draw closer together, and closing up our ranks solemnly pledge ourselves in renewed consecration to the cause she loved and for which she lived and died. Much as we grieve in other lands, we can but stand back in the outer circle of mourners and make room for her own countrywomen who knew her best and loved her first. To them we reverently and tenderly offer our sisterly sympathy, and yet venture to share their grief, for, as she told us, "we were brought up together." For dear Miss Anna Gordon and others who were admitted to the inner circle of love and friendship, we tenderly ask comfort from God Himself.

In our sweet white-ribbon bonds,



ELIZABETH W. NICHOLLS,
Australasian President.

Prospect, Adelaide, S. Australia.

Our Iceland Guest.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—On the 18th instant at 10 A. M. at the railroad station, Washington, several of us bade adieu to our little Iceland sister, Olafia Johansdöttir, World's representative of the W. C. T. U., bound for Philadelphia and Carlisle, who had been my guest for the past ten days. She had completely won all our hearts, had spoken very acceptably at a Sunday-school missionary anniversary, a woman's foreign missionary meeting at Metropolitan M. E. Church and at a W. C. T. U. mass meeting for the district presided over by Mrs. M. B. Platt, district president, on Sunday afternoon, and had met by special appointment Mrs. McKinley. Olafia seemed charmed with our capital, and especially with our broad and definitely designated streets, and was happily enthusiastic over Mt. Vernon, the new congressional library, and other public buildings. She was treated with especial courtesy by the United States Educational Bureau to which she was introduced by Mrs. W. F. Crafts. Commissioner Harris was greatly interested in her, and introduced her to many representatives of his important bureau, showing her many distinct and special courtesies. We loved her before she came, because she was held so tenderly dear to the heart of our sainted Frances, and because she had been so warmly welcomed by her to our shores; but when she left us we loved her for her own dear sake also, for she is the loyal and blessed child of nature and the loving subject of our King. (MRS.) SARAH D. LA FETRA.

Washington, D. C., April 21.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

He is faithful that promised.—Heb. 10:23. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?—Num. 23:19.

MISS WILLARD'S beautiful life-size picture, painted on porcelain in living tints, is a joy to look upon; especially is this so when we can no more behold the loved form on earth. We are delighted to be able to announce that all white-ribboners can have a part in this joy; they can secure a fac-similie of the beautiful painting, a proof of which reached us to-day. The reproduction is truly marvelous; placed side by side in the same style of frame, the five hundred dollar painting could not be distinguished from the one dollar copy. We could not have believed this if our own eyes had not beheld it.

✠

We are sorry to say so tedious is the work of reproduction that Miss Willard's picture will not be ready for delivery before another week. It will pay our friends, however, to wait for it, as it is like looking at her living self. All who desire an agency for selling the picture, for which a generous percentage will be paid, should apply at once. Remember the entire net profits go to the Temple—to make it her monument. We would be glad to have our friends order the picture direct from us, as in that case we save the per cent we would otherwise pay to agents.

✠

Margaret S. Organ, New York city, asks the following question: "What disposition will be made of the money contributed for the Temple fund in case the requisite amount is not raised to secure it to the W. C. T. U.?" As all know, we are aiming to pay off by July first the $300,000 Temple bonds, for which we are morally obligated; of this amount we yet lack about $100,000. No doubt if we should not be able to raise the entire amount by July first, Mr. Field would extend the time another six months, so there is no fear but we shall in time raise the desired sum, even in spite of the war, which is distracting every one's thought from deeds of peace and love. The building has increased its rent roll considerably over last year; and if the war had not come and checked business the improvement would have been much more marked.

✠

If the women would rise in their might and cast fear to the winds as godly women should, the Temple could be paid for in a year, and we would be receiving an income from it even at the present low rate of rentals. Those who are circulating the story that even if the building was paid for it would be a source of expense, ought to hide their heads in shame, as such statements are entirely untrue. The above is in reply to letters we have received, asking what truth there is in such reports.

✠

Mrs. Lucia B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill., a few weeks ago sent for two hundred fifty cent subscription cards. She has been sending them out to her friends with a return envelope with her address upon it. The consequence is she has already remitted to us sixty-five dollars, and says she will yet get the entire hundred dollars from the cards. Now if Mrs. Tyng can get such results, why can not all white-ribboners send out four cards at least. Poor in friends indeed must be the woman who can not find in the United States four friends to send cards to, to help pay for the House Beautiful, so that it may become Miss Willard's monument. We have now sent out at much expense about 500,000 fifty cent subscription cards to different unions throughout the country. See what a sum this would bring us if all did but send out four cards; enough money would be returned with what we have now subscribed to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds, and gives us possession of the entire capital stock of $600,000. Dear sisters, for the sake of our translated chief, take hold and do your part in this work.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

The Rain Coach.

SOME littte drops of water,
Whose home was in the sea,
To go upon a journey
Once happened to agree.
A cloud they had for a carriage,
Their horse a playful breeze,
And over land and country
They rode awhile at ease.

But, ah! they were so many
At last the carriage broke,
And to the ground came tumbling
These frightened little folk.
And through the moss and grasses
They were compelled to roam
Until a brooklet found them
And carried them all home.
—Northwestern Journal of Education.

Look Out For Number One.

"YOU'RE a great fellow to look out for Number One," said Rufus to Will, one day, a little scornfully.

The school was enjoying a picnic, and Rufus had seen Will give up his tennis racket to a smaller boy.

"What have I done?" asked Will.

"Why didn't you stick to your racket? I tried my best to get one, but there's such a lot of fellows here to-day, one gets no chance."

"Poor Jim Slade doesn't often get a chance to play tennis."

"And when we were starting out, you stood and packed all the little fellows into the band wagon, and then took a seat in that old rattling go-cart."

"The little chaps wanted to ride together," said Will, with a smile. "They had a jolly time."

"Then you gave your fishing-rod to Mike—when I know you were counting on fishing out here—and set him down just where that country boy told you the best fishing was."

"Poor Mike's lame," said Will. "He can't enjoy himself as we strong fellows do."

"Look out for Number One!" said Rufus.

"Oh, I always do," said Will.

"Yes, a lot you do! Haven't I watched you, and don't I know? You give up things to everybody and take second best—or rather ninth or tenth best—for yourself. Number One, indeed!"

"But you see," said Will, "I'm not my own Number One."

"What do you mean?"

"Just what I say," said Will, with a laugh at his companion's expression. "Other people are my Number One."

"What nonsense!" said Rufus, impatiently.

"No," said Will, a little more soberly. "The only difference between us, Rufus, is that I have a lot of Number Ones and you have only one. Now this is how it works—mother's my first Number One, then the rest of the people at home, then the fellows at school."

"Then you must come in about number two hundred or so," said Rufus, unable to restrain a smile at Will's whimsical way of putting it.

"I haven't just counted it up," said Will, smiling at him. "But—"

The two had strayed by themselves along the border of the little stream. With a backward glance they could catch sight of the lame boy enjoying the good fishing place. The shouts of their companions were softening in the distance, and before them were the deep, quiet shadows of the woods.

Boys are not given to talking seriously with each other, and Will was by no means inclined to preaching. But just in that place it seemed easier to say what was on his mind.

"But," he resumed, after a long pause, "I've just been trying something that somebody said to me about looking at this Number One business in a new way, and I find it works pretty well."

It might have been a feeling that his own way was not working to his full satisfaction that led Rufus to listen with respect as Will went on.

"It was about the wideness of God's world, and how He loves His creatures all alike—and that not one of them has a bit of right to set himself up for better things than the others; that those who look out only for themselves are narrowed, narrowed, narrowed down to next to nothing; that is, just to one—their own self; while the fellow that does the other thing reaches out, and out, and out, till the whole world is his—his by doing for every one in it what he can—and—hurrah! Mike's caught a fish, and the poor little fellow doesn't know how to get it out."

With a bound and a shout, Will dashed down the side of the stream to the cripple's help, while Rufus slowly followed him, doing more thinking than ever before in his life.—Condensed from a London Paper.

The Autobiography of a Dime.

BY FLORENCE TURPIE.

[Aged Fourteen Years.]

I LEFT the mint on the twelfth day of April. It was a rainy day, but the rain did not harm me, for I was protected by a large leather sack. My brother and I were in a sack with some other money, which was larger than we were, but we all got along well together, for we did not have much room to move.

Our journey seemed very long, but at last it came to an end, and we were taken from the train to a large wagon, and soon went bumping up a very noisy street, and at the other end we stopped, and we were carried into a building which I heard some one say was a bank. We were soon thrown out of the sack, and all of the money like me was put into a drawer by itself. I was tired from my long journey, so I crept back into a corner to rest.

A gentleman was getting some money one day and I was given to him with a great deal of other change. He went home, and during the evening he gave his purse to his baby to play with; she was sitting on his lap, when all at once she began to cough; he looked to see what the trouble was, and found that I was about half-way down her throat; he succeeded in getting me out, and I was quickly put back in the purse to recover from my fright.

The next day my owner gave me to a little ragged boy for shining his shoes. That evening I was shown to a little girl and her mother, and the little girl was so delighted with me that the little boy gave me to her.

I then fell into a soft baby hand which soon tied me in the corner of a dirty little handkerchief and put me in a box in a cupboard.

I was left there all by myself for about two or three months. I did not get to see the light, and could only hear the sound of voices when the cupboard doors were opened. I thought I was forgotten, until one day I was taken out, and the same little hand that put me in there, untied the knot, and I saw the light once more; I heard her say, "You may have my dime to get some bread with, mamma, for I know you are hungry."

Then she ran to the grocery and I was exchanged for some bread. I was put in a small, dirty bag with some other money. I remained there for some time, but one day I was given to a gentleman, who seemed to be a collector. He exchanged me for some cakes at a large store in the city.

I was next given to a lady and she was delighted when she saw me, for I was still bright. She took me to a jeweler's and left me there with some other dimes to be fastened on a silver band. The next day we were taken to a table where the operation was to be performed; we were all to have a hole punched through us. After this was done we were fastened on the band of silver.

The lady called for us in a few days and we were fastened about her wrist. She has taken the best of care of us ever since we came into her possession.

WHILE teaching a class of girls in a school recently, the master asked the following question:

"What was Noah supposed to be doing when the animals were going into the ark?"

He received several answers. At last a little girl put up her hand.

"Well," he said, "what do you say?"

"Taking the tickets, sir."—Buffalo Times.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—When I told you last week of all the nice things that had been happening to me I kept just one little secret. You could never guess what it is! I am going to have a "really and truly" vacation! When this little letter reaches you I shall be away in New York, having a good time and keeping my eyes and ears open for something to tell you when I get home. Perhaps I shall meet some of the nieces and nephews, and that will give an added pleasure to my trip. I shall expect to find a great many little letters waiting to greet me when I return in two weeks, and then we will settle down for another year of working and hoping and planning for our beloved L. T. L., and exchanging our little confidences in the Cozy Corner.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl nine years old and would like to join the Cozy Corner. I like to read the Children's page. My mamma is dead and I live with my grandma. There are two saloons here but no L. T. L. My grandma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and we both wear the white ribbon.

Your niece,
SOPHY SHULTES.

Kasson, Minn.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am twelve years old. I have three brothers. Lyle, my youngest brother, makes a nest each year in the hay loft for Easter eggs. He is so anxious to make it he wants to make it a week before Easter. We have no L. T. L. here. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. My father is the Methodist minister here. We will have to leave Canton this fall for it is our fifth year.

Your niece,
MAE SMITH.

Canton, Ill.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl five years old. I love to hear my grandma read the little letters and want her write one for me. My mamma is president of the W. C. T. U., and my grandmas and my grandpa and my aunties belong to it. My aunt Anna organized it, and an L. T. L. for us children. I have a doll named Frances Willard. She wears a white ribbon. I used to live in Chicago, now I live away down here by beautiful Mobile Bay. Our flowers are lovely. I will send you some. With love,

BESSIE B. LEECH.

Fairhope, Ala.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a girl nine years old, and I would like to become a member of the Cozy Corner. I belong to the L. T. L. and we hold our meetings every Monday, and our leader's name is Mrs. Cory. I am in the junior class and my teacher's name is Miss Whitney.

Lovinly,
LILAH DUTTON.

Burlington, Vt.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

17.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of fifteen letters.

My 10, 11, 5, 13 is the name of a pointed stick used to drive oxen.

My 12, 14, 1, 6 is an open way for traveling.

My 7, 15, 2 is a girl's name.

My 9, 4, 8 is a boy's name.

My 1, 3 is the word used before vowels.

My whole is the name of a person loved by the Loyal Temperance Legion.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED APRIL 28.

1, Barker. 2. Beauchamp. 3, Willard. 4, Carse. 5, Somerset. 6, Chapin. 7, Rounds. 8, Fry. 9, Graham. 10, Dunham. 11, Cutter. 12, Parks. 13, Stevens. 14, Stevenson.

Correct answer to No. 15 was sent by Earl Stewart, Grimes, Ia.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

UNION SIGNAL
HAND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON, MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

The Art of Encouragement.

THE reformer can no longer be said to stand alone. In less happy times the man or woman who essayed to help the weak, the oppressed and the lost found very little encouragement from any source, for such was the tone of life and the disposition of society that all reform efforts were either sneered at as eccentric or waived aside as utopian. Many a "mute inglorious" philanthropist was foredoomed to isolation and contumely while in life, and to speedy oblivion when death mercifully claimed him. Heroic souls like John Howard, Elizabeth Fry, Dr. Benjamin Rush and Dr. Lyman Beecher were voices crying in the wilderness, who had a hard time of it trying to prepare the way of the Lord.

But thanks to the more enlightened and Christ-like spirit of our age, all this has been changed. Talent of all sorts finds ready recognition, the humanely disposed person is universally honored, and no one can now "lend a helping hand" without it being speedily grasped in warm appreciation by those who are eager to join forces and share their experience and means in furthering the common object of uplifting their fellowmen. Intelligent people now look upon reform movements as a necessity, they welcome moral progress quite as much as material gain, and it is safe to say that there is hardly a hamlet in the land that does not possess some sort of reform organization. Our own great organization, belting the globe, must be looked upon as affording the Christian philanthropist a magnificent channel through which to reach the objects of her unselfish efforts, a well-equipped army in which she, as a new recruit, may enlist to help fight a common foe.

Conditions have therefore become reversed. Instead of the true-hearted reformer standing alone, as formerly, with no tools to do his work, it now becomes a question of selecting proper workmen or workwomen to use the tools always at hand. In other words, in view of the urgent public reform work to be done, it is a question who of the many applicants shall receive adequate recognition and proper encouragement to do this work? This is a matter of no little difficulty. The art of encouragement is a fine art, and includes several things.

First of all, we hold the power to discriminate between the incompetent self-seeker and the true worker. There must be consecration to the cause. Without enthusiasm, without a consuming desire to do good, very little of permanent value can be accomplished. So great is the power of worldliness, so ceaseless is the pressure of evil, that only the intelligent enthusiast, who knows her generation and has counted the cost, can hope to hold out in this labor of love. Then as a next prime factor, we would mention moral sensibility—not softness or fastidiousness, much less tearful sentimentality—but that inner, robust holiness of life that finds a moral stain even more intolerable than a soiled garment, and that is willing to bear the sins of the world anew. Indeed, it is quite unthinkable that any sincere person who is not actuated by the keenest sympathy for his or her less fortunate fellowmen, would ever think of going into reform work. And last, but not least, there must be obvious talent for public work on the part of the applicant. It is here as in the gospel ministry, devotion is not enough; there must be marked fitness, some grace of person, fluency of speech, tact, charm of manner and the inborn gift of interesting others.

It must be confessed that this combination of qualities, consecration, greatness of soul and marked talent, will always be rare, but it does exist, and when once found, the next step is to secure these qualities for our cause before the world claims them. Genius is proverbially sensitive, and it is a downright calamity when the world finally gets, through neglect on our part, what rightfully belonged to us. We owe it to the approved worker to open the way, to extend every personal and financial encouragement possible. A hearty handshake, a timely word of appreciation has been known to hold brilliant talent from leaving us, and as for the financial question, when communities are once convinced that only the ablest speakers will solicit their attention, they can be counted upon to respond.

Miss Willard and Wine.

FROM time to time squibs have floated about, principally in liquor organs, to the effect that Miss Willard frankly admitted that she drank wine occasionally. It seemed hardly necessary to notice these so long as they came from the enemy's camp, but when a man like Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson makes a misleading statement it is time to call a halt.

In an appreciative article under the head of "Women and Men—A Natural Leader," in a late number of Harper' Bazaar, Colonel Higginson says of Miss Willard, "Indeed, nothing in her record is more valuable, because nothing is more sincere and human, than her admission, near the end of her life, that when in Europe she sometimes drank wine in places where the water was not good, and that she occasionally went on Sunday to see sights that could not be seen on any other day."

The phraseology of this sentence, coupled with the fact that the world knows of Miss Willard in Europe chiefly after she became a temperance advocate and in the latter part of her life, makes it easy for the average reader to take it that she drank wine in Europe "near the end of her life," and it certainly does say that she drank wine whenever she was in Europe.

The phrase, "near the end of her life," gramatically considered, tells when she made the admission and not when she drank the wine, but we much regret that Colonel Higginson did not insert the qualifying phrase, "in 1868–1870," after the word "Europe," making his statement read, "her admission, near the end of her life, that when in Europe in 1868–1869 she sometimes drank wine in places where the water was not good."

We do not like to believe that Colonel Higginson was not informed as to the time when Miss Willard drank wine and went sometimes to see Sunday sights, or that being informed, he deliberately let his assertion apply to all the times she was in Europe. We would like to have him rise to an explanation.

On page 334 of "Glimpses of Fifty Years," written by Miss Willard after she had passed the half-century mile-stone, one may read the "admission" of which Colonel Higginson must have been speaking. There, Miss Willard says, "From 1868 to 1870 I studied and traveled abroad, not tasting wine until in Denmark, after three months' absence, I was taken suddenly and violently ill with something resembling cholera, and the kind-faced physician in Copenhagen, bending above my weakness, said in broken French, 'Mademoiselle, you must put wine in the water you drink or you will never live to see your home.'" Miss Willard adds that she followed his advice with a tendency to change must to may and with some leaning toward the pure article, but that from the day of her return to this country till the time of her writing she did not recall the use of intoxicants by her as a beverage.

It is hardly necessary to remind our white ribbon readers that this was Miss Willard's first trip abroad, several years before the beginning of the crusade. We hope the papers which have diligently sought to make it appear that she was not a total abstainer will be as eager to add that the time was some six years before she became a temperance advocate, and then, only at the instigation of a physician.

The Jewel, Consistency.

WE couldn't help cutting it out, even before any one had had a chance to read the morning paper. It was too good to run the risk of losing, even if it did sound a trifle familiar—just a telling paragraph relating to "The New Woman in War," which ran as follows: "'The emancipated woman,' as she likes to call herself, is inclined to be emotional and erratic, and it is not surprising that at times her well-meant efforts should not be well directed, but," the writer adds, with superior charity, "her heart is in the right place, and that counts for a good deal."

The subject was not intended to provoke a smile, but it did, for our mind instantly sped to those recent animated scenes in our House and Senate where, with a question involving two nations and with the civilized world looking on, our august gentlemen vied with one another in what our dailies were pleased to call "spirited colloquies," "pertinent speeches," "vigorous talks," "brief debates" and "differences," but which were in reality specimens of back-alley eloquence such as has not been heard in our Senate since that disgraceful scene occurred in which one of our well-remembered senators called another "a liar and a dirty dog." When those to whom are intrusted the vital affairs of the American people meet together and so far lose their heads as to all but use their hands in mortal combat; when goes ringing through the state chamber such broad Anglo-Saxon as "Keep your mouth shut," followed by the no less vigorous reply, "He can't, it's too big;" then may our poor, little feminine sense take courage and begin to plume its rival wings for future soaring. For may not such outbursts as have been furnished by the sons of America and Austria in this year of our Lord, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, be construed as partaking of the nature of "the emotional" and "the erratic"?

Admitting that upon rare public occasions some of our prominent women have even given way to the momentary weakness of tears, yet has not man furnished quite as numerous examples of the same thing, not to repeat the anecdote about the grim warrior, Blanco, in which humidity pleasantly figured, nor yet that of his distinguished predecessor in arms, Alexander the Great?

An Indian's Plea for Prohibition.

A MOST interesting contribution to a recent number of The New Time, is that entitled, "An Indian's Plea for Prohibition." It is written by the venerable Simon Pokagon, chief of the Pottawattamies, a large portion of whose life has been spent in securing from the United States government the purchase price of the land upon which Chicago now stands, and which was ceded by his fathers for a small consideration. "Though born an Indian chief," says Pokagon, "I am a citizen of the United States, having the right of petition." He declares his bitter hatred of the "beverage of hell," and is puzzled to understand how it is that the white people, notwithstanding their intelligence and marvelous achievements in the realm of science and invention—their "almost divine works—declare to all the world by words and deeds that they are not able to provide means whereby they can destroy that great devilfish which their own hands have fashioned and launched upon the sea of human life." The science of government, he rightly concludes, has not kept pace with progress in other directions. "Christian charity," says this child of the forest, in his impassioned appeal, "may try to clothe the nakedness of politicians and statesmen by declaring that they are so blinded by the love of party and so fearful of the liquor ballot they will not hear the wife and the mother pleading, the little children and the orphans weeping; but this is no excuse. Not until the dove shall cease to fear the hawk that steals her young will Pokagon cease to sound the war whoop of alarm against the destroyer of your children and ours." And every sovereign citizen of these United States, must, if he be honest with himself, echo the words of the old Indian chief, "There is no excuse."

The Gothenburg System at Home.

DR. MARY S. WHETSTONE, of Minneapolis, Minn., traveling in Northern Europe the past summer, wrote THE UNION SIGNAL some of her observations about the Gothenburg system. She says:

In Gothenburg I visited a large park restaurant that I might see how the law was obeyed. I saw hundreds drinking on the premises, and openly in restaurants. Mr. Moondy, an Episcopal minister and an abstainer, said that was contrary to the law, but was permitted by the payment of a small fine.

While we were in Trondhjem, Norway, they were having a great celebration, it being the nine hundredth year of the existence of the city. The King and thousands of people were there. Temporary booths for the sale of drinks were erected in the parks and other places. I saw wagon loads of cases of beer unloaded at these places. They not only allowed them to drink the beer there, but furnished the required number of glasses the person desired, which they took, and sitting and lying about on the grass drank, drank, men and women, and whole families.

I saw a great deal of drinking on the cars all through Scandinavia. Some told us that one of the evils of the system was that the selling it only in bottles caused a man to drink more than otherwise, as he desired to get his money's worth and let none go to waste. This was particularly true of young men from the country.

The United States consul at Copenhagen informed me that a sort of brandy or whisky was made from potatoes, which was sold at the groceries for about twelve cents a gallon. It was vile, poisonous stuff, and made because the common people could not afford to buy the beer.

Rev. Moondy also told Dr. Whetstone that woman's vote had been against the Samlag (which is another name for the Gothenburg system), and in many cases had been instrumental in putting it down in different districts. All these things teach us that the only whole and complete remedy for drinking and drunkenness is prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks.

MRS. WILLING'S New York Evangelistic Training School and Settlement has a write-up and is illustrated in the Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times. It is characterized as "one of the most active institutions" in that city, as one might suppose from its being located in "Hell's Kitchen." Above the brownstone Roman arch of the doorway are engraved the words, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The writer speaks of Mrs. Willing's study as having an atmosphere of culture and as being adorned with curios from the capitals of Europe, fine engravings, books, music, and all that goes to make up a refined home. The account says:

The students are, in the main, college graduates. In the class now at the Settlement are one graduate from Texas, one from Mt. Holyoke, a teacher from Wellesley, and one who carries a diploma from Syracuse University with a three years' post-graduate course from Cornell. The course of study is intended to fit the student for the best practical service in Christian philanthropy.

The Carnegie union and such ladies as Mrs. Demorest, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, Mrs. St. John Gaffney, Mrs. Stanley and others have taken an active interest in the work, and hold meetings in the large and beautiful chapel.

The students visit each day in the tenement houses and conduct boys' and girls' classes, and young men's and young women's meetings, give kindly instruction to overworked mothers, and dispense food and clothing to the needy. Their contact with the slum-dwellers has greatly improved the general character of the neighborhood. The work is in a densely-settled community. In one block near the mission house there are at least two thousand souls. To every window you may count one family—and poverty, improvidence, and too often drunkenness, reign within.

Our readers will remember that at World's Convention in London Mrs. J. Fowler Willing was elected to found and superintend this work.

JUDGE EWING, of Chicago, lately used these words in an address, the whole of which honored and defended woman in her efforts for development and equality:

Yet no man is endowed with wisdom, wit or cunning enough to give a plausible reason why an intelligent moral woman in a land of freedom should be deprived of any of the privileges of citizenship; why, in a government based upon the idea of equality before the law, of all the people, a woman should be a citizen full panoplied, when the tax-gatherer comes around, and a cipher when the election booth is opened; why the product of her brain, the accumulation of her thrift, should be taxed to support a government that she has no voice in administering; why she should be charged with the fearful responsibility of rearing her babes in the love of their country and the love of God, and yet be deprived of all power to prevent an asylum of vice, the saloonkeeper's "ticket office to hell," from being erected in the very shadow of the school, the church, or the home, the sanctuaries of her children. There is no sex in truth, patriotism, intelligence or justice, answer me, then, who can, wherefore should sex be a factor, of any degree, in determining the highest privileges and prime duty of citizenship?

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake is in Southern California prosecuting her work for girls.

Mrs. Mary E. Teats has been called to the bedside of her daughter, Mrs. Howard, who is dangerously ill, at Los Angeles.

Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, National superintendent of purity in art and literature, was on the program of the mothers congress at Washington.

Miss Agnes Slack made a contribution in memory of Miss Willard to the Sisterhood Fund of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes West London Mission.

A member of the National executive writes: "I wish we could get at least half a million subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and then increase its number of pages with all that that would imply."

Miss Anna Gordon is to arrange a memorial program for the Loyal Temperance Legion, to be used on the celebration of Miss Willard's birthday, September 28, or what is known as "Harvest Home Day."

Mrs. Beauchamp, president of Kentucky, spoke recently on "Women as Outlined in the Scriptures." Of the three preachers in the audience two joined the W. C. T. U., and one of these was a southern Baptist.

Miss Belle Kearney has been making a three-weeks' campaign in Mississippi. She will attend the Louisiana state convention, and come north by the middle of June. She speaks at Ocean Grove, N. J., in July, and at a temperance assemby in New York state.

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D., says under the topic, Some victories the church should have won, "The improvement of the scandalous 'age of consent' laws of our country would surely have been a fitting work for pastors and church officers organized in union reform committees, but the recent raising of the age in many states, though a trophy of organized effort, is not a trophy of the church, but mostly of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which includes only about one-hundredth of the women of the churches."

A portrait in oil of Mrs. Mary H. Jones was lately placed in the meeting room of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at the Willard, 1921 Arch street, Philadelphia, at the monthly meeting of the association, in appreciation of the great work Mrs. Jones has done in advancing the principles advocated by the organization. Mrs. Jones has been connected with the work of the society for twenty-one years, during twelve years of which she served as president of the Philadelphia W. C. T. U., and three years as president of the state union.

M. M. F. says, "I send this clipping to you and since reading it, every time I hear 'Coronation' with the inspiring words accompanying it, I think, what a victory for temperance, in making the words and tune a triumphal pæan of praise to God!" Here is the clipping: "The Salvation Army is sometimes criticised for its irreverent music. It does not hesitate to take the devil's songs and put them to salvation words. But the critics have forgotten the origin of some of the most accredited sacred music. Mr. Jerome Hopkins, the American composer, mentions the fact, that the hymn tune 'Coronation,' so often sung in churches, was an old English pot house song, the words of which were:

> Oh, come, my jolly, hearty boys
> And drink, as drink you can,
> 'Tis on the floor we soon shall roll
> With whisky every man."
>
> —New York Independent.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Y's at Work.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

IT is with pleasure that we are able to report an increase both in interest and membership in our state. We have labored under the disadvantage that many of our towns are not of sufficient size to support both W and Y unions, and while many young women may have been doing good work for the cause of temperance, it has not brought honor or glory "to the Y's particularly." Mrs. Boole's very practical plans for Y Branches makes it possible for each young woman to work systematically and be given due credit in our Y reports.

Mrs. Mabel Conklin gave quite an impetus to organization in New Hampshire, by her interesting and helpful talks to girls. She spoke before the Rochester and Manchester Y's on purity and the Manchester union voted to make the work of the White Shield Society one of their departments. Mrs. Conklin organized a Y in Portsmouth of twenty-three charter members. Their meetings are progressive and "up to date," papers being prepared by the members upon various branches of work adapted to Y unions, including the Temple and Hospital. Several socials and musicales have been arranged for the purpose of securing new members.

From Greensville Y the report comes of an entertainment soon to be given for the Hospital fund. The Rochester Y has been alive to opportunities for work during the winter. Several petitions for reform measures have been prepared and presented to all the churches and young people's societies of the city for signatures. A class in physical culture, under the instruction of one of their number, who is an "Emerson" graduate, is a pleasant feature. An orange supper held for the benefit of the Temple, was a financial and social success, and a book social brought several new members to their society. The needs of the Mercy Home at Manchester appeal strongly to our girls; they always respond readily to any appeal from that institution.

At several of our recent county conventions Y members have presented papers upon their various lines of work, and a special effort is being made to have this become a general custom.

Should any state secretary have an effective method of securing reports from all her local unions, it would be a kindness to others who have a "strong desire to succeed" in this line, if she would give the details through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL.

(MRS.) EDITH H. PEAVEY, Wolfborough. State Y Secretary.

MAINE.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—Maine is glad to take her place at the Y Round Table and clasp hands with the thousands of young women who are laboring in the cause we love.

The Frances Willard Y, of Fort Fairfield, reports itself to be in a very progressive state, in better condition than ever before since its organization. The president writes: "The honoraries, though few in number, we find equal to almost anything in quality and are invaluable help. They are nearly all Christians."

At each meeting the roll is called, members responding with current events, etc. They usually have talks or original papers on the leading topics of the day, often followed by discussion. Sometimes table-talks, question boxes, recitations, etc., vary their programs.

At a social gathering a parliamentary drill was conducted and plan of work laid before the guests. This succeeded in arousing interest sufficient to add many new names to their membership list. This Y also united with the local W. C. T. U. in holding a memorial service for our loved and honored leaders, Miss Willard and Gen. Neal Dow.

The Somerset Y at Oak Grove Seminary is one upon which we can depend. These young people are very fortunate in having the active interest of their preceptress who is also president of the Y. This Y is much interested in its debates, which are found very helpful. They debate such questions as "Should women vote?" "Is the prohibitory law a failure in Maine?" and kindred questions. They have also assisted the local W. C. T. U. in a public meeting. Parliamentary usage is carefully noted in all their work.

A very promising Y branch of eleven members has recently been organized at Bridgeton.

Our youngest Y union, the Mar's Hill, organized with six members, and in a little more than a month numbered twenty.

There is another encouraging fact in our state, which rises out of seeming discouragement, that when circumstances scatter our young women, who have been banded together as Y's in the schoolroom where these loyal girls are laboring, other bands of temperance workers are trained by them for "God and home and native land." Even if our Y unions are often shorter lived than the W's, dear comrades, let us not be fearful in teaching the young women to be "wise" (Y's) while they are at home, for these influences are indeed far-reaching, and may bring forth fruit a hundred fold.

Since our beloved Chieftain has gone from among us, is there not an added responsibility resting upon us as young women? We can but heed her oft-repeated calls, and with her beautiful life before us let us bear onward the flag with truer courage, "for our labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Yours for the uplift of young womanhood,
LUBELLE B. PATRICK,
State Y Secretary.
Groveville.

MRS. MARY E. FROME, president of the Essex county union, New York, is forming a singing club of young people from the Y's, the Christian Endeavor Societies and the Epworth Leagues, to go to the Soldiers' Home at Kearney every Saturday and entertain and cheer the veterans with songs of youth and home and hope.

World's W. C. T. U.

Tasmanian Notes.

OUR honored Australasian president, Mrs. Nicholls, arrived in Launceston safely on the 19th ult., and on the following evening held a gospel temperance service in the Wesleyan Sunday-school room. There was a good attendance to listen to her able address. At this meeting it was Mrs. Nicholls' sad duty to refer to the startling intelligence received, announcing the death of our beloved Chieftain. The cablegram, "Australasia mourns," sent by Mrs. Nicholls to the World's secretary, truly expresses our feelings. We do indeed mourn, for we in this far-off land will miss the inspiration that came to us through Miss Willard's loving thoughts, true words and beautiful life. We mourn, too, that it will not be our privilege to see her face to face on this scene of our holy warfare, yet we thank our Heavenly Father for lending her to us for so long, and rejoice in the fact that the ties which bind us together are unbreakable, and that some day we shall all meet together in the "home land." The press has been loud in praises of Miss Willard's worth and work, and also in the purifying and elevating character of our organization.

A public social was held on the 22d, presided over by Mrs. F. L. Fysh, the worthy president of the local union. The Rev. H. Jones, M. A., in fitting words, tendered to Mrs. Nicholls a warm welcome. This happy gathering was made interesting, not only by the words of Mrs. Nicholls, but also by the presence of Miss Booth, the devoted secretary of the Melbourne Y. W. C. A. A well attended meeting was held on the 23d, in the Masonic Hall, at which Canon Beresford presided. Among the speakers were Mrs. Blair, colonial president, and the Revs. J. R. Currie (president of the Tasmanian C. E. Society), J. C. Wright and H. Jones, M. A. The central figure of attraction was Mrs. Nicholls, who gave a fine address on temperance and the enfranchisement of woman. On the following afternoon a drawing-room meeting was held at Bi-Ferns, the residence of Mrs. Wm. Hart, Mrs. Mrs. Nicholls' genial hostess. Owing to the day being unusually warm the attendance was not so large as expected, but those present had the pleasure of listening to a clear interpretation of our principles.

Mrs. Nicholls proceeded to Hobart on the 25th, and from there to Tasmania's golden west. On the evening of her arrival there she delivered an address in the Wesleyan church, Strahan, and on the following evening interested a large audience at Queenstown with a recital of the work and aim of the W. C. T. U. She gave another address in the same place on the following evening, and in the course of her remarks emphasized the fact that the union was wholly opposed to the drinking-bars of the saloons, sources of degradation and misery. During last month our local unions have been holding their annual meetings, and from reports seen we can not but feel thankful for what they have been permitted to do during the past year. Our women are, under many disadvantages, holding the fort, and small country unions are proving the power of faithfulness to simple duty. The continuance of much sickness and the dreadful bush fires that have been a scourge for the last few months have tended to cripple their energies. Mrs. F. L. Fysh has again been re-elected as president of the Launceston union, and Mrs. Lodge of the Hobart union. These two city and central unions have not been slack in their energies. They have an increase of membership and a general progress in all departments of work; and W. C. T. U. principles are taking a firmer hold on minds and hearts.

Our Australasian paper, Our Federation, is receiving a loving welcome, and its uplifting, educative, spiritual influences will do much to establish us in our work, and inspire us with greater desire to spend and be spent "for God, for home and for humanity."

(MRS.) JESSIE S. ROOKE,
Colonial Correspondent.
Burnie, Emu, Tasmania.

News from the Field.

New York.

THE liquor-dealers are correct in saying, "Activity in the direction of temperance agitation is more pronounced than ever." The work in this state no doubt received great impetus from the two mammoth conventions held last fall in Buffalo and Toronto, and the terrible blow of our glorious leader's going away to return no more seems to have aroused white-ribboners to a keener realization of the vastness and grandeur of our organization and to a renewed consecration to the cause to which her life was given.

"Though bereft, we're not forsaken,
Though afflicted, not cast down.
Thou didst give and Thou hast taken,
Blessed Lord, Thy will be done," seems to be the feeling in each individual heart, as unitedly the unions turn from her tomb to the work that lies before them.

Reports of some of the February conventions were received too late for my last letter. That of Wyoming county was held at Castile, where Miss Willard spent the winter last year. Rev. Elizabeth Greenwood was the principal speaker, giving a Bible-reading and a talk to the L. T. L., as well as an evening address. There was an enthusiastic L. L. L. rally, in charge of Miss Elizabeth Gordon. Dr. Cordelia Greene, of the Sanitarium, with three of her assistant physicians, added much to the interest by helpful papers and through the question-box. The Ensign Y tendered a greeting in song by two of its members. The five-minute physical exercises were conducted by Mrs. Whitman, a graduate of the Boston Emerson School of Oratory.

Orleans county met at Medina. "A group that will make a model union" included short papers upon the various "model" officers, "model superintendent" and "model member." An excellent paper on suffrage, showing the advance made by women in the last forty years was given by Mrs. Spencer, of Albion. Mrs. Frances W. Graham gave a song service.

Franklin county union met at Malone. The new county president, Mrs. Clark, won the confidence of all by her efficiency as a presiding officer. The most remarkable feature of this convention, in my opinion, was the prominence given clergymen and the number present. Eight ministers are mentioned by name as having taken part in the exercises, not only in the welcomes and devotional services, but the program had the "ministers' hour," in charge of Rev. S. G. Cass, during which the following topics were handled: "The pastor in relation to the temperance cause;" "The pastor preaching temperance;" "The pastor in relation to the W. C. T. U.;" "The W. C. T. U. in relation to the pastor;" "The pastor as representing a political party;" "The pastor, as a citizen, in regard to the liquor traffic." It seems to me this idea is worth "handing round." Mrs. J. C. Darling, of Ogdensburgh, gave the evening address. The Y branch of Brushton was ably represented by Miss Jarvis and Miss Potter. The county papers gave full reports of this most excellent convention.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

Oneida county locals are active in department and special work. Literature, mothers' meetings, parlor meetings and flower mission seem to be the most prominent.

Steuben union sent a barrel of literature and comfort-bags, prepaid, to a Michigan lumber camp. Every officer and several members take THE UNION SIGNAL. It has sent money to the Temple. New Hartford supplies library reading-room and a wall-pocket in railroad station with THE UNION SIGNAL and temperance literature. The Utica unions does much local, charitable work and for the city hospitals. Utica, "First" holds a monthly white-ribbon tea with papers on department work and discussions; proceeds are applied to a local work. Utica "Somerset" has new headquarter, is enthusiastic for the Temple and National Hospital. The president, Mrs. E. M. Wells, bereaved of husband, mother and sister within eight months, felt obliged to resign her office, but continues her interest in the work. The union furnishes THE UNION SIGNAL to reading-room of Y. M. C. A. Verona union has a Senior and Junior L. T. L., both self-supporting. The union gives monthly entertainments, which have proved remunerative. The proceeds increase a fund for enlarging their own headquarters. Comfort-bags have been sent to Sailors' Home.

Saratoga county held its spring convention at Ballston. A strong prohibition sentiment was voiced by both the leading speakers. Mrs. Tritton gave a report of the National convention. A memorial service was held for Miss Willard and for the county superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Dr. Robens.

Albany county held a one-day convention at Slingerland's, which was full of interest. Mrs. Cora E. Seberry, of Brooklyn, gave the evening address. A resolution in memory of Miss Willard was passed, also one extending the thanks of the convention to G. W. Aldridge, superintendent of public works, who will have carved in the column caps of the grand western staircase of the capitol at Albany the head of Frances E. Willard and other eminent American women.

Livingston county convention was held at Dansville. When the date of the convention opening was fixed for February 24, no premonition came to the county officers that that would be the burial day of the leader whom the world delighted to honor. But so it was, and as the grief-stricken members came together to mourn for the loved and lost and to offer their tribute of praise and of sorrow, they consecrated themselves anew to the work she had left unfinished. A paper on "Health and Heredity," by Dr. Kate Jackson, of the Dansville Sanitarium, and an address by John G. Woolley were the notable features of this memorable meeting. Westchester county held a two days' session at Yonkers. Mrs. E. U. Burgess made the address at the memorial service for Miss Willard, and also spoke on "Peace and Arbitration." Dr. Laura M. Wright, of New York, spoke on "Non-Alcoholic Medication," calling attention to the Red Cross Hospital in New York, which uses no alcohol in treatment of patients. Mrs. Mary T. Burt, state president, and Mrs. Cora E. Seberry, of Brooklyn, spoke one evening. Mrs. Mabel Coklin and Mrs. Charlton Edholm spoke on purity and rescue work. Mrs. E. F. Pettengill, president of Kings county, presided over the question box.

To attempt to give a report of the memorial services held for Miss Willard in this state would necessitate a special edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. Every county convention since her death has held such a service, and nearly every local union in the state. I can only give a general outline, for these services have, of necessity, been very similar in all places, as the program sent out by the National was followed in most places. As reported to me the services have been held in the largest churches and ministers of all denominations have participated, frequently the principal addresses were given by clergymen. Many unions decorated the platform with flowers and the portrait of the beloved dead. In many towns the Good Templars, Y. M. C. A., and young people's societies participated in the services. Several unions adopted resolutions. Many took collections for the Temple fund. The collection at Rochester amounted to two hundred dollars. Mrs. Parish and the pastor of the Churchville church spoke, as did Susan B. Anthony and Dr. Carlos Martyn.

At Sodus, Rev. Dr. Pearce, of Clifton Springs, who was associated with Miss Willard in Northwestern University, made the address. In New York city and Fulton, our state president, Mrs. Burt, made the address. Other unions reporting memorial services are as follows: Albany, Allentown, Buffalo, Burke, Batavia, Benton Center, Bloomingburgh, Brooklyn, Catskill, Callicoon, Carmel, Cattaragus, Churchville, Canton, Clayville, Chateaugay, Dundee, Elmira, Ellenville, East Randolph, Grahamsville, Glens Falls, Hankins, Hurleyville, Ithaca, Lima, Long Eddy, Malone, Middletown, Mayville, New Haven, Oswego, Philmont, Phœnix, Rockland and Watertown.

Oswego union celebrated its birthday by a white-ribbon tea, attended by fifty ladies. A letter from the first president was read, and the first recording secretary gave a short history of the union. The fifty ladies signed a petition for a curfew ordinance.

Our state legislature adjourned on the last of March, a thing which has not occurred before since 1814. Whether this early departure was to avoid discussing our "anti-treating" bill is not recorded, but it has spoiled our plan for this year. However we will hope to triumph next year, as we have our petitions with thousands of signatures ready to "snow under" our legislators early in the session.

Mrs. Emma F. Pettengill, president of Kings county W. C. T. U., has begun a crusade against the selling of liquor in the department stores of that city. One hundred pastors have been asked to read a letter on this subject to their congregations, and the letter has been published in the Brooklyn Eagle. It appeals to women to help put this evil from among them by refusing to patronize such stores.

MAY MORGAN MCKOON,
State Reporter, Long Eddy.

Missouri.

WHILE the twenty-fourth district has not had much to say, yet they are doing a great work. South Greenfield has a new Y, also a new L. T. L. Springfield has been making grand preparations to entertain the mid-year executive, April 19. Mrs. Neva Thomas is the district president, and also one of the state lecturers, so she is kept very busy. She states that in Springfield, that for which five years ago she sowed the seed amid strong antagonism and prejudice, and which she has been carefully watering and tending, came to full fruition last month, much to her delight, viz., four prize temperance essays were read by representatives from the white public school, and beautiful silver medals were presented at the high school auditorium one week; then the week following a like number of prizes were given to the colored children. The stories and essays were illustrated, and reflected great credit on Miss Parrish, their primary supervisor of public schools, and the teachers were very enthusiastic and earnest in the work. Mrs. Thomas is very proud of the Springfield schools, and knows that a similar interest can be awakened in every school in the state if the W. C. T. U. will only be faithful and true to the scientific temperance department. She addressed the last M. E. conference held there, urging the pastors to work for temperance and national prohibition, and distributed in the conference copies of the pledge entered into by Bishop McCabe and others to vote in 1900 for such officers of state and nation as represent a party that will put into its platform a plank for the annihilation of the liquor traffic and the repeal of license laws in the district of Columbia.

Springfield is mourning the loss of Mrs. Cornelia Monteer, who passed away last month. She was a loved member and a loyal white-ribboner. Mrs. Monteer was the wife of the superintendent of the Memphis car shops.

The thirtieth district will have much work to show at the next state convention, as Miss Ethel Harrison is the successful district president. Bloomfield union is arranging for a public franchise meeting, and are also raising money to purchase an organ for the public school and L. T. L. work. Morehouse union is very prosperous and

Every pound of Franklin Mills Flour, a Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat represents a pound of food value. One dollar's worth of beef contains nutriment for 2 4-5 days. One dollar's worth of

Franklin Mills Flour,

A Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat
contains nutriment for 19¼ days. When the true value of the Fine Flour is known, all will use it as their bread food. It is easy of digestion, perfect in assimilation and thoroughly nourishes every part of the body.

If your grocer does not keep Franklin Mills Flour, have him order some for you or send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.
See that the Flour delivered bears our label; avoid substitutes.
Booklet with key to picture Free for the asking.

The genuine made only by the
FRANKLIN MILLS CO., LOCKPORT, N. Y.

active, and were getting up an entertainment for the Temple fund. They have public temperance meetings once a month, distribute leaflets and pledge cards. They had a most enjoyable thimble party at the home of Mrs. Estella Piatt. She is superintendent of work among lumbermen, as that town is a mill town and every Sunday she distributes leaflets to all the sawmill men also. Mrs. E. Graham is very enthusiastic in the work at Advance, of which she is president. They have a splendid L. T. L. and were making arrangements for a contest.

Mrs. E. A. P. Hayes, of the eighth district, furnishes us a few items from her district. Mrs. Sallie Saul did good work in Bucklin. Mrs. Addie Fields will commence a two weeks' tour in that district May 18. The state prohibition convention meets in Moberly, May 5 and 6. All the unions held memorial services, but the one at Moberly conducted by Mrs. Nellie Burger was very impressive.

Mrs. Myrta Ringe, of Trenton, is the president of the third district. She assisted very much in a silver contest held in Trenton, April 1. The medal was awarded to Miss Gertrude Herriot. The union at Trenton keeps up a very interesting column in the Trenton papers.

One of the pretty features of the Ludlow union memorial services was girls all clad in pure white to represent each state president that followed the sacred clay to its last resting place. Then as they all slowly marched into the church a funeral march was played, after which each one spoke loving remembrances of the sainted one.

Mt. Vernon union is doing good work this year. Have quarterly Sunday-school entertainments, have had Mrs. Burger, who delivered two lectures. Rev. White gave two stereopticon lectures that were good. Have an L. T. L. of over one hundred members, entertained the county convention, which was said to be the best ever held in the county. Observed March 20 as memorial, had a silver contest, April 1. Observed the call of Mrs. Greenwood, on April 8, will have Mrs. Hoffman the last of April, and Mrs. Fields whenever they can get her. They think with Mrs. May L. Woods as district president, they could do nothing else but prosper.

The L. T. L. of Bethany, of nearly one hundred members, "took up a collection" among themselves and presented their superintendent, Mrs. Laura McCollum, with a lovely silver cake basket. The presentation speech was made by Miss Ollie Callaway, who is president of the Legion, and a most enthusiastic worker in all Christian work.

The Nevada meetings are growing in interest and they are using the course of study for mothers' meetings. Mrs. Frankie Evans, who is district superintendent of press, reports eight new local press superintendents.

The Warsaw union use the W. C. T. U. course of study. On March 10 they used the Christian Citizenship program given in THE UNION SIGNAL. A minister presided and six young men led the singing. The county collector recited the governor's and president's oaths of office. The prosecuting attorney read the law and made comments on saloons, brothels and gambling. Another lawyer read the law on Sabbath observance, obscene literature and pictures; a physician read the law and made comments on narcotics. Two business men made good talks on, "Are these laws enforced? If not, why not?" A minister and a business man spoke on, "What is true patriotism?" The presiding minister spoke of the Christian's duty to the state. The principal of the school gave a patriotic recitation. It was an enthusiastic meeting all the way through. The senior girls in the L. T. L. gave a "Hatchet Partie," on February 24. They decorated with large prohibition hatchets with W. C. T. U., Y. W. C. T. U., and L. T. L. on blades. The motto for the evening was, "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest may repair." They gave souvenir hatchets tied with white ribbon. This union has lately been of much assistance to Mrs. Susan Weed, who was converted to the work through a "wall pocket" in the depot, and although living eight miles in the country, she joined their union and takes THE UNION SIGNAL and keeps up in all the work. Her husband lately had the misfortune to break one of his limbs in two places, and soon after they sustained a loss by fire. Their many friends remembered them in their affliction and they are full of gratitude. But Mrs. Weed still continues in her good work and will give a contest soon in her neighborhood. The Warsaw union sends THE UNION SIGNAL to all ministers in the town and the School Physiology Journal to all their teachers and county school commissioner. For the notes from this union we are under obligations to the splendid press superintendent, Mrs. W. J. Huse.

(MRS.) ALICE BLACKBURN,
State Reporter, Bethany.

GROGGERIES will be closed in Austin, Minn., by the recent no-license victory. Sentiment was crystallized against them by the prevalence of the social evil.

Minnesota.

UTICA union holds its meetings regularly once in two weeks, and has a membership of twelve, all thoroughly interested in their cause. It is worthy of record that they take twelve copies of our state papers and two UNION SIGNALS also. They have sent three dollars to the Temple, and expect to send more.

Lanesboro union was recently invited by the Scandinavian Temperance Society to an afternoon reception which the latter gave Mrs. Bruun, and responded by going in a body. They also attended the lecture given by Mrs. Bruun in the evening, when she spoke at length upon the work being done in Norway. South Troy union has been sending literature to the lumbermen working up petitions for Congress and steadily supplying the local press with news. Mrs. L. J. Stedman, the local press superintendent, is also county president, and reports that seven papers in the county are supplied with temperance matter. Lake City union has a small membership, yet the "faithful few" hold the fort. They occasionally provide temperance services for a union meeting of the churches, and have secured nearly 300 signatures to the triple pledge. A column is maintained in each of the two local papers. Dodge Center union, one of the oldest in the state, has not now many members; but they are still trying to exert an influence for good in the community. They were greatly cheered last month by a visit from our state president. A parlor meeting was held in the afternoon, with about forty present, and in the evening Mrs. Scovell lectured before a full house.

Wasioja union is another small one of eight members, yet they hold their meetings regularly every two weeks; just now they rejoice in the return of their president, who has been absent most of the winter. Hastings union has been making special efforts to build up public sentiment. They have lately held three public meetings, and all successful ones. For several years they have furnished the pastors with THE UNION SIGNAL, and have also given them copies of the state minutes; they have distributed a good deal of literature, besides furnishing the Sabbath-schools with leaflets and pledge cards. Through their efforts the pastors have organized an Anti-Saloon League, which has held one meeting with over two hundred in attendance.

Mrs. Scovell's work in Goodhue county has been very ably reported by the county press superintendent. Mrs. Scovell began at Kenyon, where three women had bravely held the fort for three years. Here the state president held one parlor meeting and gave two evening lectures; as a result six more women joined the union, and thirty-seven pledges were signed. At Dennison Mrs. Scovell found that nearly every woman in the village and vicinity was a member of the union, which has done very efficient work in keeping out a "blind pig." A mothers' meeting was held here, followed by a lecture in the evening; also at Stanton. At West Oxford a mothers' meeting and parlor meeting were held, and Mrs. Scovell addressed a large audience on Sabbath evening in the church, securing one new member for the union and twenty signatures for the pledge. At Cannon Falls there was an evening address and a parlor meeting. At the close of the latter Mrs. Scovell rode nine miles to speak to a small audience of Swedish people. There is a good opening for a Swedish union there, although they seemed not quite ready to organize just then, but wished Mrs. Scovell to come back to them and speak in the Lutheran church. The next point was Welsh, by team, over roads fearfully muddy, yet a good audience greeted the speaker in the evening; thirty pledges were signed, two active and four honorary members gained. Owing to rain it was impossible to reach Red Wing, but a little later Goodhue was reached and a union organized, as also at Zumbrota; and at Pine Island three new members were added to the small union. The summing up of the two weeks' work showed thirty-seven active and sixteen honorary members gained, and one hundred and eighty signatures for the pledge. Some of the signers had been drinking men, and have signed the pledge with new purposes in life.

Litchfield union, as reported last month, was to hold an evening meeting of men and women to consider ways and means to work for election. The meeting was held, several gentlemen spoke on various phases of the license question, after which they (the gentlemen) were invited to organize for business. They did so and have been busily at work ever since; have had several lectures, some from away and some home talent. They do not expect to defeat license, but they do expect to diminish the majority voting for it. The union is aiding by distributing literature liberally and putting UNION SIGNALS into public places. This union has supplied the firemen with coffee at all fires for a year. Two serious fires occurred during the cold weather and the firemen became literally coated with ice, so that they fully appreciated the hot coffee.

Spring Grove union held a dime social in February with a very interesting program, and received a good collection. They are planning to raise money for the Temple. St. Cloud union in February held its first silver medal contest, charging ten cents admission, and taking in over twenty dollars. Rev. Alexander Cooper gave the union six evenings, accomplishing much good; a very large number signed the pledge and several joined the union. Miss Brehm was with them last fall, winning hearty love for herself and some converts for the union. The state convention of associated charities met in that city last fall, and our state corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. C. McCurdy, attended; also Mrs. Thompson, of Duluth. The union gave these ladies a reception, and in return received helpful, inspiring words from them.

New Duluth union has had a very successful silver-gray medal contest and monthly public meetings. The Central union of that city is helping in temperance work at the Bethel, and all the unions are preparing for a quarterly county meeting very soon to be held in Oneota.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Dear sisters, all who have sent reports of memorial services, do not be grieved that they cannot be reported. If the department of "News from the Field" were all given to Minnesota in one issue, it would hardly suffice to hold the programs, the tributes from pastors, teachers and everybody; the resolutions and original poems that Minnesota has contributed to the memory of our beloved. The following places have sent in reports of memorials; Lanesboro, Lake City, South Troy, Dodge Center, Wasioja, Kenyon, Hastings, Litchfield, Cedar Mills, St. Cloud, Duluth, besides which many have been held in this city and St. Paul. In very many places services for Miss Willard, Neal Dow, Mrs. Hobart and Rev. J. P. Pinkham have been combined. In almost every case loving tributes have led up to resolutions expressing greater zeal, more earnest effort to be of service in abolishing the evils for which these dear ones lived and and labored. May our Father help us all to "follow on" unfalteringly.

(MRS.) AMY B. GREEN,
State Reporter.
2208 Oakland Ave., Minneapolis.

North Dakota.

MR. A. C. RANKIN, the moulder orator, formerly of Pittsburg, Pa., now of Fargo, N. D., has been conducting a very successful campaign in the Red River valley towns. Hundreds have signed the pledge and large additions have been made to the membership of the W. C. T. U.

White-ribboners are rejoicing over the payment of a debt that has been for a year hanging over the Florence Crittenton Home.

Miss Preston, state president, and Mrs. Janette Hill Knox, vice-president, have been giving a series of memorial addresses throughout the state on the life of Frances Willard.

GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK
HAS NO EQUAL AS AN INFANT FOOD.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE. N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK

The consideration of this heroic life and triumphant "translation," results in renewed consecration on the part of white-ribboners, and many new recruits added to our ranks. Miss Preston's recent trip through the northeastern part of the state brought in more than one hundred new members.

We note great activity in the effort to make if possible the Temple a memorial for our beloved leader. The energetic Temple superintendent, Mrs. E. A. S. Mott, is pushing the work with vigor. Miss Mary A. Whedon, editor of Western Womanhood, is giving a stereopticon lecture on "Miss Willard and the Temple," for the help of the Willard fund. Miss Whedon is a bright, interesting young woman and the people are greatly pleased with her lecture. Our state president has taken collections for this fund at seven meetings recently, which aggregated $164.

The annual convention of the State Enforcement League was held March 30, at Grand Forks. This League was organized three years ago, through the efforts of the W. C. T. U.; it has upon its executive committee some of the leading business men of the state, and as a consequence most excellent work has been done. The prohibitory law was never so thoroughly enforced as during the past year. Thriving little cities and growing towns all over the state, with no open saloon and not even a "blind pig," testify that prohibition does prohibit.

Our superintendent of medal contest work has the loving sympathy of white-ribboners in the sad loss of her youngest child. Thus far, more contests have been held than during any previous year. Last year we held more contests according to the population than any other state, so says our National superintendent, Mrs. Carman.

Cass county Y's have beautifully furnished one of the matron's rooms at the Florence Crittenton Home.

Plans are being made for a very successful state convention at Park River in September. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer, will attend.

EMMA F. VAIL,
State Reporter, Towanda.

Organizers' Corner.

From Mrs. Denny.

When my husband announced to me the terrible news of Frances Willard's death, the shock came to me with such force it seemed to me I had received an outward blow. But I said in my agony, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." He hath taken our saint that the world was not worthy of, from the evil that He is to pour out upon a rebellious and gainsaying people.

The liquor traffic has treacherously constructed a mine (by government consent) under every hamlet and city of this nation, connecting wires with national and state legislatures throughout our vast domains. I realized the need of renewed consecration could I shake off the crushing grief that possessed me. During the Crusade God called me into this work and the earthly hand that has led me on and forward has been the hand of Frances E. Willard. I never knew before how much I leaned upon her. In 1877 I was delegate from my state to the National Convention in Chicago, and spoke of the great need of systematic work in our prisons and moved that we have as one of our departments jail and prison work. Frances E. Willard seconded the motion and it became one of the departments of the W. C. T. U. But out from the depths of sorrow and communion with God, I am assured though dead, she still lives and her mantle will assuredly fall on her successors, women that had been in close communion with her—women of her own choosing.

Since National Convention my work has been in Indiana. I have delivered twenty-five lectures, aided in county institute, held gospel services in jails, visited schools in the interest of scientific temperance instruction, held ten Bible readings, delivered memorial addresses (in Vincennes, February 27, and Evansville, March 6,) in honor of our promoted leader, visited state institutions, secured ten subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, fifteen new members for W. C. T. U. and four hundred signers for the total abstinence pledge.

ELLEN K. DENNY.
Vincennes, Ind.

The Southern Field.

Since our last National Convention I have delivered addresses in California, Arizona, Texas, Virginia, Tennessee and Mississippi, making a total of forty. I have held the usual parlor and business meetings and given sundry short talks. Have spoken before college and university students, Y. M. C. A's and woman suffrage conventions. I was in Washington when our great leader entered into everlasting life, and went immediately to New York to be present at the services in Broadway Tabernacle. Since that hour I have been almost continually busy; with a deeper consciousness of the sacredness of my trust and a more profound consecration to the ministry into which God led me nine years ago.

Yours faithfully,
BELLE KEARNEY.

Official.

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR COMRADES:—We are opposed to war, with its dreadful horror and its wickedness, but we must face this terrible crisis, and our organization must not be in the rear-guard, but in the forefront, to do all we can for our soldiers. We are patriots; we love our country and our "Old Glory," every star and stripe of which is dear to us. I should not fear to call upon our white-ribboners to be ready to make bandages and lint, or even to collect money, if necessary, but just now we are in great need of our regular supplies.

Send literature to Mrs. M. C. Faville, Norfolk, Va., who will see that it is placed on our warships when at Norfolk or Hampton Roads. Now is the time, at once, to make comfort bags and send them to Mrs. Faville; thousands of them can be distributed to our brave boys on the ships. Make the bags much smaller than we have heretofore for our regular work. All who live in or near Philadelphia send to our Soldiers' and Sailors' Rest, 1008 South Front street. It will be open every Saturday afternoon from two to five o'clock, for that purpose. Free transportation is hoped for; if not given, prepay all packages. Now is the time to send pledge cards (which the National superintendent has for sale) to these ships. Now is the day of our opportunity. Let us not confine this work to our white-ribboners, but call on churches and other societies to help. For Memorial Day, in May, send to me for Memorial Day Booklet No. 2. Who will respond at once?

ELLA M. THACHER,
Florence, N. J. Nat. Supt.

The Willard Fund for the Temple.

By request of the National officers I send a list of the cash receipts amounting to about $6,000, from the various states, held by me for Miss Willard's fund for the Temple. The larger part has been received since March 20. I have not included pledges, some of which are conditional:

Alabama, $5: Arizona, $5; Arkansas, $33.28; California, $117.78; Colorado, $122; Connecticut, 143.98: Delaware, $21.58; District of Columbia, $5; Florida, $14: Georgia, $5; Idaho, $12; Illinois, $453.61: Indiana, $48.10; Indian Territory, $10; Iowa, $48.98; Kansas, $117.03; Kentucky, $16.12; Louisiana, $75; Maine, $412.75; Maryland, $28.50; Massachusetts, $327.51; Michigan, $178.50; Minnesota, $99.81; Missouri, $159.56; Mississippi, $32.20; Montana, $33; Nebraska, $191.16; New Hampshire, $127.95; New Jersey, $167.14; New Mexico, $2; New York, $955.70; North Carolina, $42.45; North Dakota, $75.40; Ohio, $978.40; Oklahoma, $7.48; Oregon, $74.95; Pennsylvania, $276.91; Rhode Island, $10.88; South Dakota, $158.31; Tennessee, $24.72. Texas, $5.55; Vermont, $57.04; Virginia, $48.55; Washington, $21.30; West Virginia, $9.35; Wisconsin, 223.19; Wyoming, $12.40.

CORNELIA M. DOW,
Custodian.

Portland, Me.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to the state reporter.]

MOUNT CARMEL, Pa., observed Good Friday as a day of prayer for W. C. T. U. A large attendance and high spiritual uplift was the result.

MRS. ISABEL WING LAKE and Dr. Calla Geisel gave thrilling and inspiring talks at the mothers' meeting held by Denver's peerless Leonard union. This same union lately held its sixth silver medal contest; successful as usual. Denver unions sent congratulatory resolutions to Miss Christine Bradley.

THE Oxford, Mich., W. C. T. U. subscribes for six copies of Mrs. Mary Hunt's School Physiology Journal for the use of the teachers in the public school. Much help and pleasure is derived from them the teachers say.

SYSTEMATIC work will be advanced in Indiana this summer by a series of W. C. T. U. institutes, to be held in every county in the state. The dates are fixed until the middle of June. Some outside workers are engaged to assist, but local talent will be used to good advantage.

MRS. M. E. KUHL, of Champaign, Ill., associate superintendent of National W. C. T. U., met with the Elden, Mo., union, February 12, at a parlor meeting, her talk on the subject of purity was interesting and instructive to the ladies, and roused them to greater zeal in the work.

A NEW union in Austin, Texas, of fourteen members, has engaged a missionary to labor in the slums and drunkard's homes. They have rented a mission hall. Already about forty-seven boys and girls from these homes are being taught along L. T. L. lines. Services are held every evening for the adults. A marked change is already seen in the children.

EARNEST work on white-ribbon lines is being done in South Dakota by the state president, Mrs. Luella A. Ramsey. Her meetings held recently in Sioux Falls were productive of great good. Receptions were given her by the W's and Y's. She spoke for both societies, also before the Good Templars and to the prisoners at the penitentiary. The press noticed her work most flatteringly. Mrs. Ramsey is fast coming to the front as a public speaker.

MEETINGS on Sunday afternoon have been held by the W. C. T. U., of Ithaca, N. Y., ever since the crusade. On the first Sunday in January, 1898, their meetings were united with those of the Good Templars, and a large attendance is secured. At least once a month and sometimes oftener they are under the direction of the W. C. T. U., who engage a woman as speaker and attend to all the details of the service. A great interest is being awakened, and much good is hoped for as a direct result of this united effort for temperance.

THE W. C. T. U. of Hamilton is a small but persistent organization, with a president who is the main spoke in the wheel. Early in the winter it was decided the time had come for a course of lectures which would enlist, if possible, the entire place. A canvass was made, and people responded so liberally, that it was easy to employ a first class lecturer. Prof. A. A. Hopkins, of Rochester, gave four lectures during the closing nights of January, the trustees of the Baptist church cheerfully giving the use of the church building—the largest in the place—for the purpose of the lectures. The audiences were large, and the lectures superior. No lecture committee makes a mistake in engaging Professor Hopkins. He combines eloquence with wide experience, and energy with good judgment.

Everybody Says So.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the most wonderful medical discovery of the age, pleasant and refreshing to the taste, act gently and positively on kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the entire system, dispel colds, cure headache, fever, habitual constipation and biliousness. Please buy and try a box of C. C. C. today; 10, 25, 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed to cure by all druggists.

WASHINGTON, D. C., W. C. T. U. finding itself in need of china for the frequent luncheons and socials given for the benefit of the District work, gave a "cup and saucer" social. The admission ticket was a cup and saucer. Light refreshments were served, and an interesting program given. Miss Johansdottir has been speaking in the District; her work was appreciated.

Convention Calendar.

INDIAN TERRITORY, Atoka, May 11 and 12.

MISSISSIPPI, Yazoo City, May, 14 to 18.

TEXAS, Fort Worth, May 17 to 19.

WISCONSIN, Chippewa Falls, May 24 to 27.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, Pasadena, May 31 and June 1, 2 and 3.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Red Cross physicians are hereafter to be pledged against the use of intoxicants, personally, and in their practice. So it is stated in the New York Voice. The information came from Dr. A. Monae Lesser, recently returned from Havana, whither he went with Miss Clara Barton for the relief of the famine sufferers in that city. He gives many interesting facts which show the importance of banishing liquor from the list of beverages to be used either in health or sickness.

Dr. Lesser states that in the same class of diseases 66⅔ per cent died under the ordinary administration of alcohol, and less than two per cent under non-alcoholic treatment. That the highly educated physicians of Cuba, some of whom have a world-wide medical reputation, made no opposition to non-alcoholic treatment. That the Cubans regard drunkenness as one of the most disgraceful of vices, being themselves a decidedly temperate class of people. That persons using alcoholic drinks with moderation are far more likely to incur infectious and contagious diseases than total abstainers. That abstainers when sick are far more readily benefited by medical treatment than others. That Miss Barton faces smallpox, typhus, yellow fever and diphtheria with no disinfectant save cleanliness and total abstinence.

With such facts before us let us use earnest personal work in securing money to put the National Temperance Hospital into a home of its own and pray that the Holy Spirit may increase its power for the overthrow of the great enemy of human life, King Alcohol. Earnestly,

ELIZABETH B. COOK.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Our Library Table.

MAY MAGAZINES.

A very important educational investigation, entitled "A Study of Children's Ideals," appears in the May issue of APPLETON'S POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY.

The May CENTURY has another of André Castaigne's reconstructions of the "Seven Wonders of the World." Mr. Castaigne pictures "The Great Pyramids of Egypt," the accompanying letter-press being by Prof. Benjamin Ide Wheeler.

BABYLAND (established 1877) the babies' own magazine. A wonderful help to mothers in amusing and instructing the children. 50 cents a year; 5 cents a copy. The little ones look eagerly each month for BABYLAND because it is full of bright, pretty things designed especially for them. Charles E. Graff, publisher, 100 William Street, New York City.

A war poem by Rudyard Kipling, especially opposite to the present crisis, appear in MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE for May. It is described as treating, with all of Kipling's wonderful sweep and subtlety, of the torpedo, with its "strength of twice three hundred horse"—

"The doom bolt in the darkness freed—
The mine that splits the main"—

LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN for children from seven to twelve years of age. Just the important age when children may be most easily influenced by good literature, interesting serials, poems, fairy tales, fancy work, games, short stories and beautiful illustrations. $1.00 a year; 10 cents a copy. Charles E. Graff, publisher, 100 William Street, New York.

A series of stories of working girls was begun in THE YOUTH'S COMPANION during April. In these stories the aim has been to portray with fidelity the conditions which the self-supporting girl meets in factory life, business, the hospital, journalism or out-of-door work. The first of these, "Winning Her Stripes," by Elizabeth B. Stryker, describes some experiences of a girl who chose the career of a professional nurse.

NEW BOOKS.

JOHN WESLEY AS A SOCIAL REFORMER, by D. D. Thompson. Price 50 cents. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth Ave., New York city.

FROM THE OTHER SIDE; Stories of Transatlantic Travel, by Henry B. Fuller, author of "With the Procession," etc. Price $1.25. Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston, Mass.

WEIGHED AND WANTING: Addresses on the Ten Commandments, D. L. Moody, Price, 15 cents a copy; 10 copies for $1. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 250 La Salle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OBJECT LESSONS FOR JUNIOR WORK WITH PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS, by Ella N. Wood. The book will be found very helpful to superintendents of junior work and teachers in the primary grades of Sunday-schools. Price 50 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago.

GATHERED THISTLES, by Mrs. S. Elizabeth Sisson. 16 mo, 275 pp., cloth bound, gilt lettering, embossed side. Price, $1.25. Published by Hammond Bros., Fremont, Neb.

THE MAN WHO BECAME A SAVAGE; a story of our own times, by William T. Hornaday, author of "Two Years in the Jungle," etc. Price $1.50. Address the Peter Paul Book Company, 420 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE STORY OF JOHN WESLEY TOLD TO BOYS AND GIRLS, by Marianne Kirlew. The author has woven the life of the great reformer into a very interesting tale in language suited to the children, for whom it will be found both enjoyable and profitable.

Price 75 cents. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth Ave., New York city.

WALLED IN," is by William O. Stoddard, who is widely and favorably known as the author of many successful stories for boys, among them being "Dab Kinzer" and "Saltillo Boys." In this, his latest tale, he tells the story of the escape from the Randall's Island Reformatory of a boy unjustly confined therein, and gives many interesting details of life in that institution. The illustrations show something of the actual daily life and surroundings of the boys.

Price 75 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago.

PENELOPE'S PROGRESS. By Kate Douglass Wiggin, author of "The Birds' Carol," "Marm Lisa," etc. 1 vol. 16mo. Readers of "Penelope's English Experiences" will be glad to have in this book a continuation of that sensible, humorous, delightful story. In her new tour of fun and observation, Penelope takes in Scotland and the Scots. She and her fellow tourists, Salemina and Francesca, first invade Edinburgh, and it is hardly too much to say that they take it by storm,—an indescribable mingling of good sense, canniness, audacity and fun.

WHETHER WHITE OR BLACK, A MAN, by Edith Smith Davis. Published by Fleming H. Revell & Co., is a brave setting forth of the race problem as it exists in the South today. The story is written with sympathetic insight and there are incidents recorded with real dramatic power. It can not fail to make itself felt as a factor in the final settlement of this great question. The book is full of interest and the characters, especially "the major," who is admirably drawn, make for themselves lasting places in the reader's heart.

HOME FROM THE WAR, by Mary Lowe Dickinson. This story in rhyme is of timely interest, and the illustrations add much to its value. The author's familiarity with homely country ways and talk is well displayed in its dialect. It will serve an admirable purpose as a reading at public entertainments of the King's Daughters, Relief Corps, etc. Mrs. Dickinson is widely known as a writer and editor, and as the general secretary of the Order of the King's Daughters and Sons. The net proceeds of the booklet will be devoted to Cuban relief. Price, per single copy, 30 cents; four for $1.

Address Book Department of the Silver Cross, 156 Fifth Ave., New York.

Drinking Fountains
FOR
MAN and BEAST
Manufactured by
The J. L. Mott Iron Works
84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.
311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO
Catalogue mailed on request.
Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing
DRINKING FOUNTAINS
on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.
Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.
J. W. FISKE, Mf'r.
39-41 Park Pl., N. Y.

1898  High Grade BICYCLES for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models.
$75 'Oakwood' for $32.50
$60 'Arlington' " $24.50
Others at $15, $17 and $20
Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50
No Money in Advance. WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER.
Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits
Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 50, Chicago, Ills.

AGENTS Gents Ladies $100 A MONTH AND EXPENSES. WE FURNISH EVERYTHING.

You work at home or travel, showing, appointing agents, and taking orders. Patented "Quaker" Bath Cabinet. 97,000 sold. Demand unlimited. Home necessity. Turkish, Hot Air, Vapor, Sulphur or Medicated Baths at Home, 3 cts. Purifies system, produces Cleanliness, Health, Strength. Prevents disease, obesity. Cures Colds, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, LaGrippe, Malaria, Eczema, Catarrh, Female Ills, Blood, Skin, Nerve, Kidney troubles. Beautifies Complexion. Guaranteed best made. Price, $5. Wt., 5 lbs. Write today. Book Free. K. WORLD MFG. CO., Cincinnati, O.

PARLOR ORGANS At a Big Reduction.
"To sharply reduce stock, we offer unprecedented values. Fine Organs, formerly bringing $75, now $47.50. Used Organs from $15. Don't fail to write at once for catalogue. The world-wide reputation of this house is a guarantee of the quality of the Lyon & Healy Organ. Address, LYON & HEALY, Wabash Ave. and Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
BARLEY CRYSTALS
New Diuretic, Refrigerating Tonic Cereal; also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, and Diabetes Flour.
Pamphlet and Cooking Samples Free.
Unrivaled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

PLEASE TRY
Cascarets
CANDY CATHARTIC
REGULATE THE LIVER
10c. 25c. 50c.
All Druggists. 306.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE TO ALL. We have a new remedy, which is a positive cure for all forms of dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sour eructations, constipation, etc. To show our good faith in the remedy, we will be pleased to send a free trial package with circulars to all who write to
A. S. MILLER & CO., Box 231, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

SAVE MONEY. FREE! FREE! FREE!

One Million Dollars Personal Guarantee at the Back of Every CORNISH AMERICAN PIANO AND ORGAN.

A REMARKABLE PROPOSITION. Entirely New Catalogue—1898 Models. "An Ancient Egyptian Choir at Early Temple Service," is the subject of the exquisitely beautiful colored art frontispiece presented with our new catalogue of the celebrated CORNISH AMERICAN Pianos and Organs. This interesting picture was designed and painted exclusively for us by an eminent artist and has been reproduced in the original colors. The catalogue contains a complete description of over 50 styles of Pianos and Organs, together with prices and terms of sale. It will be sent to all intending purchasers FREE on application, postage paid. Remember, our vast business continues on the old basis—Pianos and Organs at wholesale cost, direct from factory to family; no agents', music stores' or middlemen's profits to pay. The purchaser of a Cornish American pays only for what he buys.

FACTORY TO FAMILY DIRECT NO OTHER WAY

REMEMBER we are the only firm of actual manufacturers selling exclusively to the general public direct, at factory cost—the only firm where you get the Real Exact Value for your money. There are no agents', dealers' or middlemen's profits added.

SPECIAL OFFERS NOW READY.

CASH OR ON EASY PAYMENTS to suit your circumstances. Pianos and Organs shipped on thirty days' trial in your own home under our special warrant for twenty-five years. NO MONEY REQUIRED in advance. Safe delivery to purchaser guaranteed.

Mention paper.

PIANOS $155.00 UP

ORGANS $25.00 UP

TERMS: NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY.

SEND for particulars of our popular Co-Partnership Plan by which any one can easily obtain a CORNISH Piano or Organ for nothing. Full explanation with every catalogue.

REMEMBER that a prompt response to this advertisement will secure a DISCOUNT OF $10.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1898 Catalogue on any CORNISH Organ, or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a CORNISH Piano. Owing to the very close margin this leaves for manufacturing, we are obliged to reserve the right to withdraw this special discount at any time.

REFERENCES.—Our bank, your bank, any bank, the editor of this paper, or of any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars worth of instruments from us during nearly 50 years. Our new book "The Heart of the People," containing a thousand recent references, sent free.

Don't Fail to Write at Once to CORNISH & CO., (Manufacturers of High Grade American Pianos and Organs.) Washington, N. J. Established nearly Half a Century.

Publisher's Notes.

Important Announcement.

The memorial volume, "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," is now on the press and will be in the hands of the public about May 15. Those able to judge by a careful scrutiny of the prospectus, pronounce it most worthy of our beloved leader and a fitting tribute to her precious memory. It is devoted in large part to character sketches, tributes, letters of loving sympathy and a description of the commemorative services. Her devoted secretary and faithful friend, Miss Anna Gordon, has most touchingly sketched the earlier and the later years of Miss Willard's radiant life. In the preface she says, "We believe this picture of her remarkable and winsome personality will 'bless and brighten every home that it enters,' deepening in the hearts of its readers the desire to hold aloft her white banner of purity and peace, patriotism and prohibition, the protection of the home and the redemption of humanity."

One can form little idea of the delicate and thrilling insight into her pure and Christlike character from the brief snatches given in the prospectus. The same magnetism which has held thousands spell-bound makes the pulse of the heart quicken and holds the attention as one reads of the heredity, the childhood, the teacher days and the heroic work of the "beloved Chieftain" who has left her "impress upon the state, the nation and the world."

Part second. "In Memoriam," contains an account of the commemorative services, character sketches and tributes, which are largely representative in character—National officers speaking for the great organization to which she gave her life; prominent American and English leaders in various works of reform, expressing the sorrow in thousands of homes and millions of hearts, where she is enshrined forever. This memorial volume will sooner or later find place in the home of every white-ribboner in the land, and the questions which have poured in upon us indicate the necessity of a general reply.

1. Is there any memorial volume of Miss Willard now being sold but the one written by Miss Gordon and published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association? Answer. None whatever. There is no other offered for sale.

2. When will the book be ready for delivery? Answer. About May 15.

3. Can we purchase it from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association? Answer. No, it is sold only by the agents of subscription book houses.

4. Why was this arrangement made. Answer. The subscription book business is carried on from year to year by firms who employ thousands of agents and a work upon the life of a noted person gives regular employment to the wageworkers who make a regular business of canvassing.

5. Can white-ribboners become canvassers? Answer. The firms who have advertised in THE UNION SIGNAL are most desirous of obtaining good agents among our own constituency.

6. Why can not each firm make its own terms with agents? Answer. More than sixty houses employ agents, and it was universally agreed that no one should give more than forty per cent discount, so that the rights of all might be protected, and a contract was signed which would prevent those not strictly adhering to fair play from obtaining the books. Do not deal with ANY FIRM offering more or less than forty per cent discount.

7. Why are white-ribboners subjected to the annoyance of so many agents? Answer. Dear friends, we regret this, but we trust you will promptly place your order with some one of the many, and try to feel that it is better to have many agents for one book than many agents for many books.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW.

BIBLE READING FOR MAY—"The Dignity of Conferring Life," by Mrs. Mary E. Teats, of California, National W. C. T. U. purity evangelist. A reading especially helpful to mothers—and fathers as well—in that its keynote is "parentage a partnership with God." Ignorance of natural law has been the curse of the human race from the beginning, and Mrs. Teats shows from Bible history that the violation of God's law regarding the home has been disastrous to families and to nations. She truly says that knowledge of and compliance with the divine law of right generation lie at the foundation of all reforms.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR MAY. "Franchise," by Marie C. Brehm, National superintendent of that department. She explains the object and methods of the franchise department, tells why the W. C. T. U. declares for woman's ballot, why it adopted this department and what is being accomplished by it; answers Bible objections so-called; points out results in the states of Wyoming and Colorado, and tells local unions how to go to work to help secure the enfranchisement of the women of their states. The Reading will make a good circulating leaflet for franchise workers.

We wish again to call attention to the frequent loss of money in the mails, and as many complaints are reaching our office, we urgently request our patrons to forward to us checks or postoffice orders in settlement of all accounts.

Temple Receipts.

Maryland—Buckeystown: W. C. T. U., $10; Baltimore: St. Paul W. C. T. U., $21.75; Chestertown: Anne R. Stewart, $2; Reisterstown: Mrs. C. A. Church, 75 cents.

Michigan—Charlotte: W. C. T. U., $5; Ninth District: W. C. T. U., $4; Eaton Rapids: W. C. T. U., $21.47; Jackson: Central W. C. T. U., $84.40; $.06; and $6; Newaygo county: W. C. T. U., $12.73; St. Ignace: W. C. T. U., $13 and $7: White Pigeon: Y. W. C. T. U., $2; Onsted: W. C. T. U., $2; Hillsdale: W. C. T. U., $5; Vergennes: W. C. T. U., $1; Benton Harbor: W. C. T. U., $2; per Mrs. Benjamin, $52; Calumet: W. C. T. U., $2; Munith: W. C. T. U., $8; Sherman: W. C. T. U., $1.50; Britton: W. C. T. U., $1.60; Lansing: Central W. C. T. U., $1.30; Byron Center: W. C. T. U., $2; Cedar Springs: W. C. T. U., 50 cts.; Pengally: W. C. T. U., $2; Sturgis: W. C. T. U., $1.25: Lansing: W. C. T. U., $5; Sherman: W. C. T. U., $1.50; Wyandotte: W. C. T. U., $2; Antigo: W. C. T. U., $1; Marion: W. C. T. U., $1; Schoolcraft: W. C. T. U., 50 cts.; Ypsilanti: Betsy Ann Huston, $10; Ann A. Gee, $1; Ionia: Mrs. E. H. Mudge, $5; Union City: Mrs. R. Zimmerman, $1.05; Four Towns: L. B. Colvin, $5; Ovid: Lela Ferol and Brownie Minor, $2; South Lyon: Mrs. L. A. Clark, $5; Evart: Mrs. Jennie Walker, $5; Albion: Mrs. Jas. Finch, 50 cts.; Olivet: Mrs. Ann B. Marsh, $5; Ann Arbor: Mrs. J. H. Ashley, $3; Britton: Mrs. M. H. Borden, $5; Grand Rapids: Miss Myrtle Slayton, $10; Leroy: Mrs. Mary Moulton, $3; and $3.50; Petersburg: Mrs. J. H. Lockwood, $1.25; Battle Creek: Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, $5; Mrs. M. A. Preston, $1.

Minnesota.—Western: Mrs. T. Symonds, $5; Sauk Rapids: Mrs. E. Cross, $75; Minneapolis: W. C. T; U., $1 and Willard W. C. T. U., $5; Mrs. L. P. Crow, $3.65; Julia Ellsworth, $2.10; Mrs. Bessie L. Scoville, $5; Nashville Center: Mrs. A. A. McKenney, $50 and $25; Waterville: Amelia Richter, $1; Wood Lake: Maude Coghlan, $5.40; New Richland: Millie S. Wood, $2: Albert Lea: Mrs. M. F. Armstrong, $25; Brown Valley: Mrs. M. E. Rooch, $3.50; Dover: W. C. T. U., $1; Janesville: W. C. T. U., $26.25; Hennepin county: W. C. T. U., $22.47; Cannon Falls: W. C. T. U., $10; Blue Earth City: W. C. T. U., $10; Tenth District: W. C. T. U., $30.50; North Mankato: W. C. T. U., $1.40; Nashville Center: W. C. T. U., $5; Pine Island: W. C. T. U., $5.39; Red Wing; W. C. T. U., $1: Cream: W. C. T. U., $50; Champlin: W. C. T. U., $2; Oxford: W. C. T. U., $6.50.

Missouri.—Rocheport: W. C. T. T., $1.25; Webster Grove: W. C. T.U., $20; Carthage: W. C. T. U., $5 and $5; Kirkwood: W. C. T. U., $5: Pleasant Valley: W. C. T. U., $75; Wilson: W. C. T. U., $5; Kingsville: W. C. T. U., $5; Kansas City: Hoffman W. C. T. U., $5; Wellsville: W. G. T. U., $9.35; Mrs. E. A. Rowley, $5; Monroe City: W. C. T. U,, $1.10; Maggie F. Snyder, $3.75; Meadville: W. C. T. U., $1.25; Mary B. Goodman, $1.25; Rock Port: Effie E. Johnson, $5; Wellsville, Mrs. Carrie E. Blackwell, $2 and $6; Fair Play: Amanda M. Fox, $5; La Monte: Mrs. H. M. Harrison, $25; Huntsville: Mrs. Mary Taylor: 50c.; Clarksville: Mrs. M. M. Roberts, $3; St. Louis: Mrs. Thomas Kirby, $1; West Plains: Mrs. Addie E. Odiorne, $2; Clarksville: Mrs. M. M. Roberts, $2; per Clara Egar, Rochester, N. Y., $30; La Monte: H. M. Harmon, $75.

Nebraska—Elk Valley: W. C. T. U., $1.60; Holdredge: W. C. T. U., $5; Craig: W. C. T. U., $4; Tilden: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Ashland: W. C. T. U., $8.80, $1.20 and $2.25; Jamestown: Sunnyside W. C. T. U., $3; Pleasant Plain: W. C. T. U., $9; Credit Thayer county per Hebron W. C. T. U., $13.70; per Chester W. C. T. U., $3.20; Mary I. Putnam tablet, per Hebron and Chester W. C. T. U., $2.75; Strange: W. C. T. U., $7; Palmyra: W. C. T. U., $9 and $7; University: Wesleyan University $5 and $10; Mapleville: W. C. T. U., $2; York: Emma Wellman, $1; Foreman: Mary I. Hursh, $2; Cody: Lillian E. Nelson, $5; Page: Bartley Blair, $25; Lincoln: Mrs. H. B. Kilbun, $1; Mrs. I. M. Smith, $5; Archer: Mrs. A. J. Ferris, $1.25; Dorsey: Mrs. S. A. Rosenkrans, $5.

New Hampshire—N. Hampton: H. Candage, $5; Somersworth: Mrs. H. A. L. Stanton, $5; Haverhill: W. C. T. U., $5; Concord: W. C. T. U., $10; Rochester: W. C. T. U., $25 and $25; Newport: W. C. T. U, $11.

Nevada—Reno: W. C. T. U., $11.

New Jersey—Ocean Grove: A. C. Dunham, $5; Maria A. Downer, $5 and $3; Pompton: Mrs. E. Miller, 25 cents; E. Orange: Miss Dora Alston, $5; Vineland: Mrs. Martha Keighley, $50; W. C. T. U., $1 and $11.19; Atlantic City: W. C. T. U., $2; Beverly: W. C. T. U., $1; Elmer: W. C. T. U., $1; Ocean Grove: W. C. T. U., $7 and $1.30; West Hoboken: Palisade W. C. T. U., $60; Newton: W. C. T. U., $10; Mt. Pleasant: W. C. T. U., $4.20; Millstone: W. C. T. U., $1; Jacobstown: W. C. T. U., $7; Bellville. W. C. T. M., $1; Rahway: W. C. T. U., $7.80; Millville: W. C. T. U., $30; Newton: W. C. T. U., $40.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
Financial Secretary.

To Sept. 1, 1897.

Beauty Is Blood Deep.

Clean blood means a clean skin. No beauty without it. Cascarets Candy Cathartic clean your blood and keep it clean, by stirring up the lazy liver and driving all impurities from the body. Begin today to banish pimples, boils, blotches, blackheads, and that sickly bilious complexion by taking Cascarets,—beauty for ten cents. All druggists, satisfaction guaranteed, 10c, 25c, 50c.

Signal Notes.

OF Spain's population of nearly 18,000,000, only about one-third can read and write.

IT is said that 1,500 children under fourteen years of age were arrested in London for drunkenness in one year.

AMONG the list of functionaries in the Lord Chamberlain's office are those of a chimney-sweeper and a mason.

ALL students in the laboratory courses in the University of Heidelberg are required to take out life insurance.

THE Empress of Germany has distributed 144 gold medals to servant girls for having lived forty years with one family.

WITH an apparatus called the myophone a French scientist claims to have proved that the nerves may live hours after the death of the body.

INDIANA has 8,487 miles of railroad, while all Spain has 7,617 miles, with five and one-half times as much territory and more than six times as much population.

IT is estimated by reliable statistics that each of America's 250,000 saloons have an average of forty customers—ten million people—steady drinkers, who spend an average of $100 per year for drink; it amounts to a total of $1,000,000,000 a year.

A GENTLEMAN who recently died in London at the age of seventy, had been a smoker since he was seventeen. During that time he kept a diary, in which he recorded that he had smoked 328,713 cigars, 43,639 of which were gifts. Those he paid for cost him $20,850.

THERE are in the world only twelve cities with over a million inhabitants, four of which are in China. London leads the list with 4,415,958. New York and Brooklyn combined rank third, with 2,352,150 (census 1890). Greater New York contains over three million souls.

NICOLAUS IVANOVITCH PIROGOF, the most noted of Russian surgeons, died of cancer of the upper jaw-bone. He was an inveterate smoker, and when remonstrated with for rinsing his mouth too frequently, replied that he hoped by that means to protect his mouth from the injurious effects of excessive smoking.—The Railway Surgeon.

MRS. ANN EYRE HELY, who was one of the nurses in the Crimean War with Florence Nightingale, and afterward nursed Miss Nightingale in England, has been presented with the royal red cross by Queen Victoria, through Lady Cave Browne Cave, as the old woman was unable to leave Ravenstone hospital and go to Windsor to receive the decoration from the Queen in person.

CHARLES R. SKINNER, state superintendent of public instruction for New York, advocates the general adoption of a curfew law in the cities and towns of the state. Referring to the matter in his annual report he says: "Over 300 cities and towns in the West have adopted a curfew ordinance. The result has been a decrease of from 50 to 75 per cent in the number of arrests of children for crime."

For Indigestion

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. S. H. MOORE, Indianapolis, Ind., says: "I have used it in my own family in cases of indigestion and general debility, with entirely satisfactory results."

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

IS TO BE WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon will be assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled,

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

will be brought out by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and will be offered for sale only through leading Subscription Book Houses of America.

It is well known that a large number of Subscription Book Houses are selling the official Life of Miss Willard, and in order to give all an equal opportunity it was agreed that a uniform discount of 40 per ct. should be given. Especial inducements should not be offered and territory should not be restricted. We repeat these terms in order that White Ribboners who desire to become agents may read with care all circulars, and may avoid entering into arrangements with firms offering extra discounts.

OFFICIAL · PUBLISHING · HOUSE · OF · THE · W.C.T.U.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicgao

The TEMPLE TRUSTEES OFFICIAL PICTURE

...OF...

Frances E. Willard

Painted on Porcelain and Pronounced a Masterpiece

A FAC-SIMILE of this exquisite painting is being executed in New York by the finest art engravers in America. Although not finished on porcelain it has the same lifelike tints, and it is almost impossible to distinguish it from the original. Arrangements have been made by which this picture, the favorite of all who have seen it, can be placed in the hands of every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL for ONE DOLLAR.

THE ORIGINAL IS VALUED AT

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS

WHITE-RIBBON WOMEN and all friends of the Temperance cause can make money for themselves or for their Local Union, as well as help pay for The Temple, by becoming agents for its sale.

All money should be sent by Checks, Post Office or Express Orders, and made out in the name of G. B. Shaw, Treasurer.

Send One Dollar at once for canvassing outfit.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE

Room 1118, The Temple, CHICAGO

A SONG OF THE MAINE

A TEMPERANCE SONG

SHEET MUSIC...OCTAVO SIZE

Sold for Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union.

PRICE 15C.

TEN COPIES ONE DOLLAR

MEMENTOES

BOOKMARKS made of the Ribbon that draped Willard Hall the day Miss Willard's body lay in state.

Send without delay as the supply is limited.

50 CENTS

ADA JENKS

1119 The Temple CHICAGO

SHE—Did you see that bird of paradise on Mrs. Style's hat at the theater last night? He—That wasn't what the fellow who sat behind her called it.

SUPREME COUNCIL OF THE ROYAL ARCANUM

will hold a meeting in Cleveland, O., May 18-25, for which the Nickel Plate Road is authorized to sell tickets at one and one-third fare for the round trip, on certificate plan. Unexcelled dining car service, Vestibuled sleeping cars. Three through trains daily from the Van Buren street Passenger Station. For full particulars call up telephone Main, 3389, or address, J. Y. Calahan, Gen'l Agent, 111 Adams St.

PLACARDS on the bedroom doors of a rural hotel in New England request that "guests will please not bathe on Sunday night, as the hot water is needed for the wash Monday morning."

BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES,

Rochester, N. Y., May 16-24, 1898.

The Nickel Plate Road is authorized to sell tickets to Rochester, N. Y., and return, at one fare and one-third for the round trip, on certificate plan, account of above meeting. Tickets good on any of our through express trains leaving Chicago daily from Van Buren Street Passenger Station at 10:35 a. m., 2:55 p. m., and 10:15 p. m. Vestibuled sleeping cars and unsurpassed dining car service. You will save time and money by patronizing the Nickel Plate Road. For further information address J. Y. Calahan, Gen'l Agent, 111 Adams St., or telephone Main 3389.

AN organist says that a cow moos in a perfect fifth octave or tenth; a dog barks in a fifth or fourth: a donkey brays in a perfect octave, and a horse neighs in a descent on the chromatic scale.

"WHAT a wonderful painter Rubens was!" remarked Mr. Jones, at the art gallery. "Yes," assented Mrs. Jones, "It is said of him that he could change a laughing face into a sad one by a single stroke." "Why," spoke up little Johnny, in disgust, "my schoolmaster can do that."

PRETTY little Margaret was sitting on her father's knee. She held a mirror in her hand, and, after viewing herself, she turned toward her stern parent and said: "Father, did God make me?" "Yes, my child," was the reply. "Father, did he make you?" "Yes, my child." "Well, he is doing better work now, isn't he?"

Why She Smiles Sweetly.

Sparkling eyes, quick beating heart, and the rosy blush of pleasure on the cheeks, makes the strong man happy when he meets his lady love. That's the kind of a man whose very touch thrills because it is full of energy, vigorous nerve power and vitality. Tobacco makes strong men impotent, weak and skinny. No-To-Bac sold by druggists everywhere. Guaranteed to cure. Book titled, "Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away," free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York or Chicago.

CANCER

I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1863 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH.'

Volume XXIV.—No. 19. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, May 12, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
War News and Notes—Mothers' Congress—The Polyglot Petition Presented—Temperance—Abroad— 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Frances E. Willard. By Charles William Pearson, A. M 3
"God's Errands Never Fail." Chap. II. By Emma E. Page 3
The Baby With a Broken Nose. By Mary C. Glass . . . 4
Prohibition and Liberty. By Rev. Carl F. Eltzholtz . . 5
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
A Farewell Letter From Miss Gordon 5
The Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Va 5
Our Little Meeting 6
A Reminiscence of Frances E. Willard 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Why 7
A Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Mothers . . . 7
The Doll That Talked 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Temple as a Memorial 8
The Temperance Campaign in Kansas 8
Cremation 9
Views of Leading Religious Papers 9
One Veteran Crusader to Another 9
Three Labor Bills in Congress 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Cape Colony—A Word of Sympathy 10, 11
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Tennessee—Oregon 11, 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Soldiers and Sailors—Medal Contests 13
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 13
WHERE OUR SPEAKERS ARE 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 14
W. C. T. U. NEWS—Announcement 14
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

RED-LETTER DAY.

FLOWER MISSION DAY—JUNE 9.
The Birthday of Jennie Casseday.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notes and Comments.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Gage says officially that it is impossible to enforce the prohibitory law in Alaska against the existing public sentiment, that no grand jury in the territory would indict any person arrested for violating the liquor law. How this confession of impotency must increase the respect of European nations for the United States government! Cabinet officers did not talk that way in the early 60's, notwithstanding the fact that the "public sentiment" of all the southern states was solid against another prohibitory law.

THE Liberty party is aiming to bring about a union of all reform forces, the state of Ohio taking the lead. The New Era, national organ of the party, is making a brave fight for this much-to-be-desired end. Its motto is, "Get together," and these were the words used by Miss Willard in her message to the party conference held in Columbus in February. "Tell them," she said, "to get together." It was the sad events of that month which prevented the managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL from attending the conference and giving in person what proved to be a deathbed message of our leader.

SPEAKING of the founding of a W. C. T. U. in Jerusalem, a liquor paper takes occasion to remark that "it would be worth a whole lot to this country if the entire outfit would go to Jerusalem and stay there." This tribute to the character of the W. C. T. U. is encouraging. We knew of course that the white-ribbon organization was the most persistent enemy of the drink traffic—the power most dreaded by the liquor forces—but for the benefit of those who would minimize its influence, it is well sometimes to have the testimony of the brewers and distillers and the "trade" generally as to the effect of its efforts upon their business.

THE internal dissensions of Spain are a surer indication of approaching disruption than are its external difficulties. The kingdom is a house divided against itself, Carlists and republicans struggling with the reigning dynasty for supremacy. The mob is clamoring for Sagasta's resignation and for the leadership of Weyler, who favors an uncompromising war policy. The defeat at Manila has intensified the dissatisfaction, and the opinion is growing among Spaniards that some of the millions used in maintaining the monarchy would be better expended in fitting out ironclads for the country's defense. But the factors that are combining to bring about the disintegration of Spain lie deeper than that. A nation which would make a hero of a Weyler and whose chief popular amusement is Sunday bull-fighting will, in accordance with a law of nature, sooner or later, bring about its own destruction.

FROM the paragraph which appeared on this page April 7, referring to the bill pending in Congress for the greater protection of girls, a masculine friend concludes that "the protection of men does not find favor in the editorial sanctum," which proves that our brother is not a "constant reader" of THE UNION SIGNAL. As the mouthpiece of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, this paper stands—or rather moves forward—on a "do-everything policy" for home protection, which means protection of men, women and children, aye, and of dumb animals also. The suggestion that in the unanimity of the House committee in the amendments for the protection of men lay an argument for woman suffrage is, our correspondent declares, the strongest argument he has seen against it, "if it could be believed that many women sympathize with it." Perhaps it will relieve the mind of our critic—and then perhaps it will not—to know that the paragraph was written by a man in Washington who kindly sends us from time to time congressional news items of special interest to white-ribboners.

A LETTER received on Saturday from Mrs. Hannah Whithall Smith, announced the death of her husband, Robert Pearsall Smith, in London, April 17. Mr. Smith was seventy-one years of age, and for some months suffered much from a painful, lingering disease. By his own request his body was cremated, and the ashes will be brought to America and laid beside the grave of his mother near the old home in Pennsylvania.

APROPOS of woman's ballot The Outlook contends that in view of the number of remonstrants, the real question is not, Shall we refuse the suffrage to women who demand it? but, Shall we impose the suffrage on women who protest against it? Speaking of a curfew law for New York city, the same periodical affirms the "right of the individual (italics ours) to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." If "we" i. e., the men people, withhold the privileges of citizenship from a single woman who desires to exercise them, are we not interfering with that individual's pursuit of happiness? In the current issue of The Outlook appears an article, written by "A Planter in Cuba," which declares that "autonomy is the government desired by the best Cubans"; that "if an honest vote were taken the majority would vote for guaranteed autonomy," etc. The real question, then, according to the same argument is not, Shall this nation intervene at great financial cost and sacrifice of life to free these islanders from Spanish tyranny, but, Shall it impose the burden of independence upon those Cubans who protest against it?

WE trust that each individual white-ribboner has laid upon her mind and heart the request of the General Officers concerning a memorial offering to Miss Willard. In the letter sent out to the organization soon after our leader went away, and published in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 17, they say: "No marble mausoleum could be a fitting tribute to her greatness; no house made with hands could shadow forth her worth. Only in deeds can we prove our sorrow, our love and our loyalty to the principles for which her great life stood. . . . What nobler memorial could we rear than to come up to the next Convention with a doubled membership and with redoubled activity along all our lines of department work!" And they ask that the plan she so often proposed be adopted, viz., that each member secure one new member as her part of this living memorial, doing it for Miss Willard. In the desire to build a lasting monument to our beloved, let us not forget what she herself would wish. "Now as never before"—to quote further from the letter of the General Officers—"are we called to prove whether our devotion has been to a principle or to an individual."

Current Events.

War News and Notes.

JUST too late to chronicle last week came the news of the naval battle off Manila, resulting in a brilliant victory for the United States. As the cable was cut between Manila and Hongkong, no official dispatch was received until Saturday, May 7. Reports then announced the situation as follows: On Saturday night, April 30, the Asiatic Squadron, under Commodore Dewey, entered the harbor under cover of darkness, ran the blockade of Manila Bay, destroyed the Spanish fleet, captured the naval arsenal and took possession of the forts and fortifications of Cavite. In the three and one-half hours of fierce fighting seven Spanish cruisers and four gunboats were sunk, 300 Spaniards killed and 400 wounded. The American fleet records none killed and only six wounded. The stars and stripes now wave over the forts at Corregidor Island and Cavite, and the city of Manila, unprotected by battery or fleet, is absolutely at Commodore (now Admiral) Dewey's mercy. Until the reinforcements which have been asked for arrive, the squadron will maintain its present position at Cavite. By order of the war department the troops on the Pacific coast are hastening preparations for going to Admiral Dewey's aid. It is believed orders have been sent by the president for the establishment of an American protectorate in the Philippines.

Admiral Sampson's fleet of seven ships is at sea under sealed orders. It is conjectured that his mission is either to take Puerto Rico (which, as it commands the Gulf of Mexico, is a strategic point), to look out for the safety of the Oregon and Marietta, or to meet the Spanish Armada if it is coming this way. The whereabouts of the Spanish fleet (four cruisers and two torpedo boats) which left St. Vincent last week, is, at present writing, wrapped in mystery.

Troops—artillery, cavalry, infantry—are rapidly mobilizing at Tampa for the expected invasion of Cuba, and carloads of arms and ammunition are waiting there for transportation to the insurgents. There seems to be no difficulty in landing on the Cuban coast, and communication is kept up regularly between Gomez and the army at Key West.

Conditions of the Havanna blockade remain unchanged, the line being rigidly kept by the Montgomery and other cruisers. The New England coast is guarded by three battleships and several cruisers, and in each principal harbor one of the old monitors has been stationed. Farther south, at Hampton Roads, the battleships Texas and Massachusetts are ready to move at a moment's notice.

TURKEY has formally declared its neutrality.

PORTUGAL attests its friendliness to the United States by offering one of the Azores as a coaling station.

THE Queen regent telegraphed the Pope that "the Spanish nation is calm but resolved to resist to the bitter end."

IN almost all the saloons from Harlem to Red Hook, New York city, the soldiers are offered drink free. This is called patriotism.

A BRITISH paper says that Dewey's "daring exploit will rank high in naval annals, not in America only, but throughout the world."

MUCH distress prevails in Havana by reason of the high prices of food. Business men favor surrender rather than starvation and patriotism is at a low ebb in the island.

SPANIARDS in Cuba have sent to President McKinley a memorial, protesting against "the proposals to impose upon the island a government contrary to its aspirations."

ON account of the intense feeling at Madrid concerning the defeat at Manila, for which the government is blamed, and also for political reasons, martial law has been proclaimed in that city. No mention of military operations or news of the war is permitted in the newspapers.

ON Monday, May 2, the House concurred in the Senate naval appropriation bill and it went to the President. The war revenue measure went to the Senate from the House and is now in the hands of the finance committee, a substitute for the bond provision being the chief point under discussion.

THE cowboy regiment under General Wood of the United States army, and Theodore Roosevelt, is now in San Antonio. It expects to be in Cuba before May 15. To this regiment belong only the most expert riders and shots, and the soldiers are provided with a uniform made with special reference to the Cuban climate.

FOR the first time in history the telephone will be used as an implement of war. Every regiment, brigade, division and corps will be accompanied by skillful electricians, under the direction of the signal corps, who will put up temporary telephone lines in camps and upon battlefields, which will be an enormous advantage in transmitting orders.

The Mothers' Congress.

THE second Mothers' Congress convened Monday morning, May 2, at the Grand Opera House, Washington, D. C., Mrs. T. W. Birney, president, presiding.

The morning session of the first day was devoted to the reception of delegates, recording of credentials and distribution of badges.

About 200 delegates and auditors were present at nine A. M., and the number augumented rapidly. The second day, Mrs. Frederic Schoff, of Philadelphia, gave an impressive address on "The Necessity of Training Our Daughters for Motherhood." She argued that a girl should first of all be a good housekeeper. Mrs. Hannah Sorensen, of Salt Lake City, followed on the subject, "Physical Side of Motherhood. "She said, "Girls should be educated to a proper knowledge of the responsibilities they are to undertake when they embrace matrimony. The physical redemption of women would mean the glorification of mankind."

The afternoon brought numbers of excellent papers, among them one on "What Shall be Taught and Who Shall Teach It," by Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of Purity. Ex-Queen Liliuokalani was one of the richly attired women who occupied a box in the evening.

"Hats off," was a part of the regular program. On Wednesday a paper prepared by Mrs. William Burnham, of Philadelphia, contrasting "New and Old Methods of Dealing with Defective Children," was read. The gist of the argument was that it is much better for both, to keep the mother and child together than to separate them. The ethical value of domestic science lessons to children was presented in an entertaining way by Mrs. W. E. Fischel, director of Domestic Science schools of St. Louis. She told how the different duties were conducted, fire-making, lamp cleaning, bed making, etc., and showed how the child thus became the light of the home.

Miss Margaret Bancroft, principal of the Home for Feeble-minded Children in Haddonfield, N. Y., declared that in hundreds of cases the neglect of parents in watching their children when young led to mental deficiency and moral irresponsibility.

Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, superintendent of purity in literature and art, asserted in a paper on that subject that saloons are the chief cause of impurity. She made a plea for a coalition between the National W. C. T. U. and the Congress of Mothers to have saloons done away with.

Mr. Anthony Constock said, "The blind are blessed for there are no bad books printed for the blind, and sightless eyes never behold degrading things."

Mrs. Helen H. Gardener asserted that there are 700,000 incompetents and idiots in the public institutions of this country and that most of them are born so of defective parents.

Miss Jane Hughes, a kindergarten teacher, established as an object lesson a school for the wee children attending the Congress with their mothers.

The Colored Women's League of the district presented a most commendable report of work.

A distinguished visitor was Miss A. C. Moon, of Brighton, England, who was accompanied by her brother, Dr. Robert C. Moon, Liberian vice-consul at Philadelphia.

Mrs. McKinley received the Congress from five to six on Thursday. Hundreds of notables were in attendance, and the good and helpful papers were almost innumerable.

The chief debate was upon a point in the constitution in regard to membership, the difference being between the women's clubs and other organizations.

The Polyglot Petition Presented.

[Special Correspondence, Ottawa, May 4.]

FIFTEEN members of the Dominion W. C. T. U. executive committee and other white-ribboners, led by Mrs. Rutherford, Dominion president, and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, acting National W. C. T. U. president, were present at the presentation of the great Polyglot petition to the government of Canada, at Ottawa, May 3. The petition was arranged in festoons and rolls in the Dominion Church, the largest in Ottawa. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and others representing the government were on the platform to receive it. Mrs. Atkinson, Dominion corresponding secretary, made a fitting presentation speech, the text of the petition was read, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied in a gracious speech full of appreciation of the patience and perseverance of women, but, of course, he made no promises.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens spoke for fifty minutes on Prohibition. Her speech was well received by the great audience. Brief remarks were also made by several members of the Dominion executive, also by Mr. Spence of the Dominion Alliance and Mr. Scott (father of the Scott Act). There was fine music and much applause, and the meeting was pronounced a great success.

The same afternoon the question of the plebiscite came up in the parliament and strong speeches were made in its behalf. The discussion continued until 11 P. M. It is likely to pass both houses before this is read.

The executive committee of the Dominion W. C. T. U. passed a resolution expressing hearty confidence in Lady Henry Somerset and commending her as the most suitable successor to Frances E. Willard as president of the World's W. C. T. U.

Temperance.

J. W. EVANS, prohibitionist, was elected mayor of Waupaca, Wis.

THE Exposition that opens at Omaha, June 1, has taken out a liquor license.

A BILL to prohibit the sale of liquor in department stores has been signed by Governer Black, of New York.

A GREAT temperance rally in Chicago is being planned by the Young People's Christian Temperance Union.

THE state convention of the Liberty party of Pennsylvania will be held in Philadelphia, May 31 and June 1.

THE battle of Atbara was won on tea and coffee made with Nile water. Sir Herbert Kitchener refused an offer of whisky for his men.

HON. HIRAM PRICE, president Anti-Saloon League, has addressed a letter to President McKinley asking for his influence against the furnishing of liquor to the soldiers.

THE Rev. Dr. Charles H. Payne recently delivered a strong prohibition address to a Rochester audience. Though the rain fell in torrents a large church was filled and five-sixths of those present were men.

Abroad.

PRINCE OSCAR, son of the King of Sweden, is one of the "mission preachers" of the Young Men's Christian Association of Stockholm. On a recent Sunday evening, he, with his wife, preached Christ to about two thousand people.

THE first Congress of Cuba, elected under the autonomous form of government, was formally opened, May 4, by Captain-General Blanco. Thirty-seven deputies, ten of whom are conservatives, presented their certificates of election to the secretary of justice.

THE annual convention of the Japan W. C. T. U. at Yokohama had two sessions of unusual interest, one when the "World's Prize Banner for 1897" was presented, and the other the Frances E. Willard memorial service. Miss Clara Parrish, round-the-world W. C. T. U. missionary, presented the banner awarded for the greatest proportionate increase of membership.

Contributed.

Frances E. Willard.

BY CHARLES WILLIAM PEARSON, A. M.

(Professor of English Literature, Northwestern University.)

OFT have we seen her on her throne of power,
While eager multitudes enchanted hung,
Oblivious of the swiftly passing hour,
Chained by the Orphean magic of her tongue.

That tongue was silent when we saw her last,
For in her shroud her worn-out body lay,
While hour by hour the long procession passed,
The last sad tribute of respect to pay.

The aged bent beneath the weight of years,
The young in all their beauty and their pride,
The rich and poor in common shed their tears,
For she, a sister to mankind, had died.

Yet Grief was not the only spirit there;
Faith, Hope and Love, the great immortal three,
Gave strength to hearts that bowed beneath their care,
And heaven seemed nearer than before to be.

Flowers of all hues in emblems manifold,
The rainbow, harp, the crown, the ripened sheaf,
The shield, the cross, the book, their story told,
Of service, conquest, joy, more than of grief.

Her name henceforth is sacred, and will shine
Bright in the list of those by love made great,
Type and example of that more divine
Humanity for which we long and wait.

Evanston, Ill.

"God's Errands Never Fail."

In Two Chapters.

BY EMMA E. PAGE.

CHAPTER II.

WHILE these same herds were resting and grazing about Montville, the "Cowboys' Rest" had a grand opening with music and free lunches. There were about a hundred men in the various outfits and the "Rest" was packed. Late in the evening there were loud and angry words over the billiard table.

"Some fellows that lunched too often," said Tom Barnett. Later, a table with glasses and decanters was overturned. "A blundering Dutchman," John Hawley sneered.

After all others were gone, poor Long Bill was found asleep on the floor and left there till morning. But the opening was pronounced a great success and while the camps remained, the "Rest" was literally crowded from morning till night, and almost from night till morning. Howard did not go in; he had no taste for motley crowds.

Bentley often had his hands full, but he managed to keep things pretty quiet. He was a man of pleasing address, with boldness and nerve, if occasion required. A few stories of gross drunkenness were whispered about, but that was at the camps and who was responsible for that? Cowboys would have their bottles.

When the herds were gone and there were but few about, Howard went in occasionally for a game of billiards. It helped to pass the time. Coming out one evening, he met Mr. James face to face. It was an awkward moment. The minister looked grieved. He shook hands and passed on. That look made Howard feel like a culprit—but billiards were no harm. It was well known that he never played for stakes and never took a drink, still he had no wish to hurt so good a friend; he would stay away. The next morning he got a letter from Corinne saying that she would be at home in three days.

"I have had a beautiful visit," she wrote, "the old friends are all charming and good, but I am homesick unto death, and laugh as they may, I am going home if my time is only half up."

Howard was jubilant. He swept and cleaned and dusted, till the house was spotless. He put up a pair of long, beautifully curved horns which he had polished and mounted for a surprise. He fixed a bracket for an exquisite crystal he had got from a miner in her absence. He worked so diligently that, on the evening of her return, there was left nothing to be done.

The train was not due till nine. He was restless and after looking everything over about the house for the third time, he went out to walk around. The lights of the "Rest" shone bright. He saw Bentley at the billiard table alone. Entering he saw but a few customary loungers and two cowboys, strangers, at a table with cards, and a bottle between them. His promise to stay away had been to himself only; when Corinne was at home, there would be an end of it. He needed something to help while away the long hour ahead. Bentley's greeting was hearty.

"I have been wishing for you, Fuller," he said.

"I want to do something till train time," explained Howard.

"There is nothing like the flying balls to chase the hours," said Bentley, taking up his cue.

They were soon both absorbed in playing and time was passing pleasantly but for the two boys at cards. Now and then their voices rose harshly and their words were coarse and profane. This was almost as offensive to Howard as to a woman. He had been blessed with a pure boyhood and was a pure-minded young man. He resolved to go as soon as the game was finished. Bentley noticed his annoyance and looked at the men as if he thought of going over to them, but they were quiet again and he went on playing.

Suddenly there was a snarl as of angry dogs. One stranger had the other by the throat. Bentley cleared the billard table at a bound. In an instant he had jerked one fellow to the floor and knocked a six-shooter out of the other's hand. It went off, however, and there was a sharp cry and the heavy thud of a falling body. Bentley blanched and staggered against the wall. The two ruffians dashed from the room. A horrible stillness fell like a crushing weight over all. At last Bentley gasped,

"Boys, it's Fuller. Get the doctor."

Hawley was off like an arrow. Long Bill was the first to raise the prostrate man. Tom helped lay him on a couch. Bentley knew enough to cover the gaping wound in the breast with his hand, to stop the frightful flow of blood.

"I'll fetch the minister," said Long Bill, starting off.

Bentley would liked to have stopped him, but he made no sign. His face was ghastly and drawn with terror. In another moment Dr. Richman was there. Bentley went to wash. He had often seen Macbeth played, and with startling vividness he saw himself as Lady Macbeth, trying to wash the blood stains from her hands. He heard the doctor say,

"The ball went straight though his heart; he did not live a second."

His knees knocked together. He sank into the chair Hawley pushed up for him. The low talk that had sprung up around the room as to how the tragedy befell, were like the tortures of the inquisition to him.

There was a sudden hush when Mr. James entered. He read the fatal truth in their faces. Crossing over to the couch he kneeled down and wept as a father might over a lost son. Presently, laying one hand on the broad, fair brow, and stretching the other toward heaven, he prayed with a yearning tenderness that touched every soul there.

"Dear Lord, this one is in Thy merciful care, beyond our power to help or harm, but these that remain, how shall they bear the awful consequence of their words and deeds! Thy hand of love is stretched out to them even now, to save them from despair. Oh, may they learn to the full, the lesson of this bitter hour!"

As his voice rose and fell in an agony of pleading, there mingled with it the sound of strong men sobbing, and more than one joined in the amen.

The silence that followed was sharply broken by the whistle of the train. Everyone started.

"She's come!" burst out like a groan. Even Mr. James was, for a time, too much overwhelmed for action.

No one had thought of going to meet Corinne but poor Long Bill. He went straight from the minister's house to the platform that served as a depot. He could not tell her, he could not face her, but he would see that no harm came to her. Crouching behind a pile of old ties, he waited and cried like a broken-hearted child.

The train stopped. One slender figure came out into the darkness.

All the way Corinne had been busy with happy thoughts of Howard and their blessed meeting. She carefully carried a basket of dainty fruit, just what he liked. The last few miles she had been picturing to herself how he would jump on before the train had fairly stopped, and whisk her and her bundles off, so strong and glad. How close they would cling to each other when alone in the darkness. She was glad to get home in the night so as not to make too public a spectacle of her joy.

She gathered everything up to facilitate their exit. When the brakemen called "Montville" a second time rather sharply, she went off alone. Her disappointment was sickening, but she was brave and sensible. Of course her letter had miscarried. Howard knew nothing of her coming. What a surprise! Her spirits rose. It was a cloudy, moonless night, but she was not afraid, especially here, where there were no night prowlers as in the city. She could not carry everything, but the fruit must not be left. She set the portmanteau under the edge of the platform. Howard would get it, perhaps to-night, and she would come along, of course, to show him where it was.

Still heavily laden, she set off at a brisk walk. She grew more and more exultant over the complete surprise in store for Howard, and unconsciously quickened her steps. Bill followed, alert as a faithful dog. At last she was at her own gate. She quietly opened and shut it and ran lightly up the steps. The door yielded to her hand and she peered into the cozy sitting-room. The lamp was burning dimly and the fire was low but Howard was not there. The disappointment was too much. She sat down and began to cry.

The door stood ajar and Bill saw her. He could not bear it and turned away, his own tears falling like rain.

"Good Lord, can't you tell her? You'd know how."

That was the first prayer Bill had uttered since he left his mother, a lad of fourteen. He heard someone coming and soon saw enough to be sure it was Mr. James. His guard was no longer needed and he took a short cut to the "Rest."

Corinne, hearing the click of the gate, flung open the door and called joyfully:

"Howard! Howard!"

The minister tried to speak naturally.

"It is not Howard, my child, it is your old friend."

A fear like death gripped her vitals. The old man held her in his arms and spoke soothingly, as he would to a little child. He thought she was fainting, but with a strong effort of will she rallied. With desperate energy she took hold of the lapels of his coat and looked searchingly into his face. Her eyes were strangely dilated.

"Tell me," she demanded, "tell me what has happened." He stroked her cheek; she did not seem to know it.

"My child," he said, tenderly, "Howard can't come to you."

She looked at him fixedly. He tried to draw her to a seat, but she seemed rooted to the spot.

"Where is Howard? Who has killed him?" She had divined the truth, God knows how. The veins on her hands stood out large and dark. She gripped his coat tightly and held her breath for his answer.

He was completely unnerved, and answered brokenly, "He is in at Bentley's, opposite the store. It was an accident. Some strangers got into trouble, and the revolver was shot off at random."

"At random?" she repeated. The horror and agony that came into her bloodless face were never to be forgotten. She let go her hold and staggered a little. He put out his hand to stay her from falling, but before he knew it, almost, she was out of the door, out of the gate and down the street. She flew over the ground, leaving him far behind.

At the "Rest," Long Bill was urging preparations for her coming.

"Nothing can keep her away when she knows," he said.

Carefully they laid the body on another couch and sought to remove all traces of blood. Those rough men—hardened, we should have said a while ago—showed almost a mother's tenderness for this stricken girl-wife. They worked rapidly, but in the midst of it there was a sudden opening of the door, a rustling of garments, and she stood beside her dead.

Oh, that meeting, so joyously anticipated! The tender care, the generous love, the glad self-sacrifice with which it had been planned! For days the thought of it had been rapture. Its realization was too harrowing to relate. It seemed as if every heart must break at sight of it; a meeting full of utter parting; no endearing words, no kiss, no caress, not even a smile or tender look to cherish, but instead, the clinging horror, the wantonness of it, and, above all, the maddening sense of partnership in the crime.

Mrs. Richman and the other ladies who came would have taken her away, but her clasp tightened on the loved clay, and she pleaded so piteously to be left alone that they could urge her no more.

Slowly the night wore on. Her agony seemed worse than death. At last, Mr. James went to her and taking her hands in his, gently but forcibly constrained her to look into his face.

"My child," he said compassionately, "God is not dead. His requirements for our past and our future, we cannot escape."

Slowly she laid hold of his meaning and seemed awed into calm. He lifted her up and led her away. Bentley opened the door for them to pass. His pallid face struck her. She fixed her steady gaze upon him and said in a clear voice, distinctly audible around the room,

"In my folly, I declared it was better for a gentleman than for a rough to keep a saloon. That monstrous lie is proven against me at the cost of my all. He would never have entered a common groggery. Are you taking the lesson home, too?"

With her last words she mercifully swooned and did not hear Bentley's response: "God save me from killing myself to get rid of this hell in my soul!"

But the minister heard and stayed with him until morning, leaving Corinne to be taken home and cared for by Dr. and Mrs. Richman.

She lay in a kind of stupor for days. Even her mother's coming did not rouse her. But nearly two weeks after the tragedy, Mr. James found her one morning, propped up in the bed with pillows. Her eyes looked dead and hardly a gleam of interest crossed her face at his coming, but when he read her a total abstinence pledge and showed her a long list of signers, James Bentley at the head, she sat upright, took the paper from his hand, re-read it with excitement, then fell back upon her pillows with a burst of tears that brought relief.

She listened eagerly to his story of the revulsion of feeling throughout the town and country against the saloon. The "Cowboys' Rest" was still open, but it was open as a temperance reading-room. Bentley still had it in charge, and with more than his old-time cordiality, made men and boys welcome there. The lights were as brilliant and the music was as enticing as ever; the reading was varied and the games innocent. The experiment was yet new, but it promised much. Bentley was anxious to spend and be spent for the work. It was his expiation.

All that Howard had accumulated she gave to the "Cowboys' Rest," and added to it from year to year. The good it did can only be measured in eternity.

When she left for her old home in Chicago, there was a crowd to see her off. None got a heartier handshake than Long Bill. She never knew of his devoted attendance through the dark, but she felt his sympathy and was drawn to him.

She did not go back to her old life in society; that was impossible. Her time, her strength, her gifts, her means, were consecrated to temperance reform. She never passes one of the gilded palaces where liquor is dealt out without a shudder and a fervent desire to sweep them out of the way first of all.

Olympia, Wash.

THAT which thou would'st be thou must be,
That which thou shalt be thou art;
As the oak astir in the acorn the dull earth rendeth apart,
So thou, the seed of thy longing, that breaketh and waketh the heart.

—Selected.

The Baby With a Broken Nose.

BY MARY C. GLASS.

SHAME on any woman who says to a little child at the coming of a new baby, "Your nose is out of joint. Your mamma will not love you any more." She thus thoughtlessly plants a seed of jealousy in the little heart which may grow and strengthen until his whole life is shadowed by it. No mother should allow such a thought to be suggested to his mind, for he would not dream of such a thing if left to himself.

We hear much of "hypnotic suggestion," but of vastly more vital importance is the fact that evil thoughts are suggested to the minds of little children by thoughtless, meddling older people. A baby should be so enveloped in its mother's love that it never dreams of a "rival."

A wise young mother, whose baby girl came when her boy was only two years old, forestalled all meddling neighbors and friends (?) by showing him the beautiful little blue and white nest which she had so lovingly prepared for the coming baby, and telling him that it was for "baby sister, who was coming by and by." He would kiss the little pillow and pat it tenderly with his hand and murmur, softly, "Baby—by and by—baby." No broken noses in that family.

I have heard persons say to a little one, who stood gazing at the new baby with wondering, admiring eyes, "You are not your mamma's baby any more. Mamma is going to love this baby now." Oh, the pity of it!

Strange that a tiny feathered mother can love, care for and protect a whole nestful of babies at one time, and some think a human mother, who should be the tenderest, strongest, gentlest thing on earth, is incapable of loving more than one baby at a time.

I once had three babies who were so nearly of an age that it was hard to tell "which was which." They generally all wanted to be "wocked" at the same time. So I would sit in a little old green rocking chair, with one arm around each little boy, who stood beside me, the baby girl on my lap, with her head resting over my heart, and we would "wock" and sing blessed old Greenville and comfort each other, and none of them have found out, to this day, which nose was broken.

A meddling nurse once said to a bright-eyed baby boy who was admiring the new baby, "Where is mamma's baby now?" The little fellow answered, pointing to the new baby and then to himself, "Dere, and here, us dot lots of babies now."

How often when the new baby comes is the older one turned over to the care of a nurse who is an entire stranger, of whom the mother knows absolutely nothing. Think of your female canary hiring a strange, inexperienced wildwood bird to care for her nestlings while she reads the latest fiction and "improves" her mind! We mothers might learn much from our "dumb friends," which we call "dumb" because we are too dull to understand their language. My little girl's pet cat is bringing up an adopted kitten with more tenderness and faithful solicitude than many human mothers bestow on their own babies.

There is nothing in all the world of such vital importance to a real mother as the welfare of her little children. She should know to a certainty that their food is properly prepared, and right in quality; that they are comfortable at all times; that the long, quiet sleeps are not produced by opium; that no bad habits are taught by ignorant nurses nor vicious playmates. Truly, eternal vigilance is the price of the liberty of our innocent babies.

When we consider how ignorant and thoughtless many young women are when they take upon themselves the great responsibility of motherhood, is it any wonder they make such grave mistakes? It is neither just nor reasonable to expect a little one who has been the household pet and plaything, who has been humored, amused and spoiled for two or three years, to suddenly develop into a well-behaved, obedient, model child, just as soon as another baby makes its appearance in the home. Oh, no, the child is simply what you have made it. You must not expect to reap a harvest differing from the seed you have sown.

At the coming of the new baby the older one should be able to do many things for itself and for its mother, varying according to its age. A system of judicious training, a "rule," demanding prompt, simple, old-fashioned obedience, will save a mother a vast amount of work and trouble. Babies can be taught almost anything if you begin early enough. A trained nurse says that a baby can be ruined before it is two weeks old. Teach them from their earliest babyhood that your word is law, from which there is no appeal; let them understand that you expect to be obeyed. Never appeal to nor threaten with "your father," and they will soon learn to obey you promptly and willingly, for even babies like law better than anarchy. Do this for the child's sake, as well as for your own. To train them in the best way, we must have their love and confidence, which they are so ready to give. We must get down close to them, for there are some things which can not be done from a distance. Did you ever try to remove the burr-clover from your violet bed by standing at the end of a long hoe handle and working with your might? Oh, no, you got down on your knees and took it out bit by bit. That is the way the soul weeds have to be removed—on your knees, asking God's help, then with firm, loving hands plucking up the weeds of selfishness, self-will and self-conceit, being careful not to disturb the tender soul plants of self-respect, self-dependence and self-denial.

It has been said, "We can not lead others higher than we have climbed ourselves," or, as Emerson so aptly puts it, "To lift me, you must be on higher ground." I believe this to be especially true as far as our children are concerned. If you tell a car conductor that your child is younger than he really is to save the car-fare; if you send back to your neighbor less than you borrowed; if you take from some ignorant peddler more change than is right, you do one of two things—you either make your child a thief or make him ashamed of his mother, and it will be useless for you to tell him to be honest; for little children have a curious way of looking through shams, right to the heart of things. It is a pitiful thing that all parents do not realize that the little everyday things are what make character, and character is what influences our children. "Our influence is the most vital thing about us," someone said. My sister, do not, on any account, tell your child a lie; if you do, you do it a wrong which no repentance can ever make right. Do you not know that you are your little child's ideal of all that is right and good and true? And if you are untrue, and do what he knows to be wrong, he forever feels the loss of what he knows you ought to be, and nothing can ever make good this loss to him. In this matter, according to Emerson again, "There is guidance for each of us, and by lowly listening we shall hear the right word."

Be careful that the coming little one receives from you a real heart welcome. I believe that more dispositions are either made or marred by pre-natal influence than we dream of. Did you ever enter a room where even one person heartily disliked you, without feeling the depressing influence of that dislike? Think what it must be to the sensitive spirit of a little baby to be subjected to such an influence for months. Ella Wheeler Wilcox says:

"We never can tell what our thoughts will do
In bringing us hate and love,
For thoughts are things, and their airy wings
Are swifter than carrier dove.
They follow the law of the universe,
Each thing must create its kind;
They speed o'er the track to bring us back,
Whatever went out from our mind."

I seem to have taken it for granted that "the child with a broken nose" is about two or three years old, but in some cases it is a little daughter ten or twelve years old. What is the wisest thing in this case? Take her into your full confidence before anyone else has a chance to forestall you. Show her the dainty little clothes you have prepared, and thus enlist her interest and sympathies. Her "nose" will come through safely, with perhaps a slight upward turn for anyone who dares hint that she, her mother's confidant and friend, is to be set aside by the advent of a little baby. I asked a little girl, the eldest of a large flock of babies, if it was her mamma or her aunt who had the new twin babies? She answered, "Oh, no ma'am, we ain't got no twin babies yet," her face beaming with joy at the bare thought.

If the older child be a boy, it is sometimes more difficult to prepare a welcome for the coming stranger. But boys have hearts, sympathies and pride, though many mothers fail to realize it. A mother should represent so much gentleness, wisdom and loving kindness to her little son, that he will be willing to admire even a brand new baby for the love he bears her. It is often convenient to turn the big baby over to the father's care at night, which is a fine idea, provided the father is a man of pure, clean habits, and the child would not be injured by his presence. Many a baby becomes pale, puny and nervous from the tobacco poison it absorbs from its father's person. A man may become so saturated with it as to become positively poisonous to a little child. Dr. J. H. Kellogg says that many nervous diseases of women and children can be traced directly to this cause. Of course no woman would dare trust her baby to the care of a drunkard.

Pasadena, Cal.

Prohibition and Liberty.

BY REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

SOME believe that prohibition of the drink traffic is an encroachment upon the liberty of a free and sovereign people. If one kind of prohibition encroaches upon liberty, other kinds of prohibition must do the same. Prohibition of stealing encroaches upon the liberties of the stealing part of the community. Prohibition of forgery infringes upon the liberties of the cheating part of the people. But stealing and forgery are nevertheless prohibited. It is admitted that prohibition of the liquor traffic is an infringement upon the liberty of the drinking people as much as the prohibition of stealing is an infringement upon the liberty of dishonest people. But why should it not be proper to prohibit one of these evils as well as the other? We prohibit different kinds of evil, though it may infringe upon the liberty of some corrupt people, because it is for the general good. The drink evil is prohibited on the same principle. There are, however, some who are not willing to admit that it is as proper and just to prohibit the drink evil or to prohibit other evils. They think that the drink evil should be licensed, and thus be restricted. But who would think of restricting forgery by giving it license? But if it is right to restrict the drink evil to a certain extent, then it must be right to let this restriction extend as far as necessary for the common good, even as far as unrestricted restriction—prohibition.

If it is proper and just to prohibit the liquor traffic at certain hours and days—for instance, on election days—then it must be proper and just to prohibit it twenty-four hours every day and three hundred, sixty-five days every year—if it is considered to be necessary for the general good. If it is right to prohibit the drink evil on election days, which we all admit, then it must be right to put this monster evil under unlimited and eternal prohibition. The one is prohibition in principle as well as the other. It is only a question of time.

As we have commenced to handle the drink evil we ought not to handle it with velvet gloves; it must be taken hold of with red-hot tongs. Let the limited restriction which the license system advocates be extended to an unrestricted restriction—prohibition. Let the prohibition already acknowledged, adopted and enforced in regard to certain hours and days, be extended far enough to include all hours and all days. The fundamental principle is acknowledged by most people; namely, that it is proper and just not only to restrict, but also to prohibit the drink traffic for the general good of the people.

Why is the drink traffic restricted? Because it is so utterly corrupt and dangerous that even its best friends are afraid to let it alone without restriction of some kind. Why do we prohibit the liquor traffic on election day? Because intoxicating drinks are hurtful, they weaken and becloud the intellect, they disturb the peace, create quarrels and disqualify a person for the faithful and intelligent performance of his duties as a man and a citizen. But if it is acknowledged that intoxicating drinks are doing such an infernal and dangerous work as that, they ought surely to be prohibited on all other days as well as on election days. If not, why not? People certainly need the full use of all their bodily and intellectual powers on working days as well as on election days.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Willard Hall Echoes.

ON Monday, April 25, Dr. J. P. Brushingham, pastor First M. E. Church, of Chicago, took for his theme in Willard Hall, "The Holy Spirit," rousing the audience by his earnest words, to seek more faithfully God's guidance, moment by moment. Tuesday Wm. Forkell, state M. E. evangelist, came for the noon hour. Wednesday the meeting was in charge of the superintendents of work among railway employés, and Rev. Dr. Parkhurst took the noon hour. Thursday and Friday Evangelist Forkell again brought the gospel message. On Thursday an enlisted soldier, brother of the evangelist, led us in song. He came from the Methodist Book Concern and goes into the army.

Singing evangelist Frank E. Miller was with us two days, and moved all hearts as he sang "Rock of Ages," accompanied with gestures as used by the deaf mutes. It was marvelously beautiful.

. . . . . .

For the past two years I have almost lived in Willard Hall. My days have been given to the noon meetings and to the journey to and from Chicago. My thought by night and by day has ever been that I might know God's will in the work; that He might so live in me that the hungry-hearted might turn to Him for peace and rest. Now as the responsibility is laid upon another, I turn and look back over the two years' service. Much that is beautiful and encouraging is well defined to my vision; much more will come to view when the "books are opened" and we stand face to face with what has been and what is to be.

Along the months words of cheer and commendation came again and again from our leader, now at home, where "it is so beautiful to be with God,"—words that will cheer me as long as I need words from mortal tongue.

Beginning Monday, May 2, Mrs. Minnie Darst will have charge of the Willard Hall noon meetings and will send the "echoes" to the white-ribbon sisterhood round the world through their weekly "letter from home," THE UNION SIGNAL. May her heart and voice be fervent with the love of God, and may her going out and coming in be honored of God, is the prayer of my heart.

(MRS.) ABBIE FRANCES B. CHURCH.

Crown Point, Ind.

Correspondence.

A Farewell Letter from Miss Gordon.

MY DEARLY LOVED SISTERS:—Before I leave a room forever sacred and which to me is full of life and light and love I send you a word of deepest gratitude for the comforting messages and assurances of sympathy you have given me in the loneliness I share with all of you.

[Miss Gordon wrote in the room from which Miss Willard's spirit took its flight.—THE EDITORS.]

In a few hours the Umbria of the Cunard line will carry us ("Little Mamie," goes with me by Lady Henry Somerset's kind invitation) out into the deep waters, but the sun is shining overhead.

"God is our home, and in that state,
We can not so far separate
As not to make the distant near
And know the loved are always here."

Ere many weeks I hope to be again in the native land I love and to do all I can to help the work we cherish more warmly than ever since Miss Willard helps it from the other side.

She has welcomed Mrs. Burt, and soon we shall all be gathered in the home toward which we look with longing eyes while trying to be faithful over the "few things" committed to our care.

It rests and comforts me to think of the true-hearted leader who stands at the head of the National W. C. T. U. God bless and uphold Mrs. Stevens and show us all how we may most helpfully rally round her in these difficult days. May God's banner over you be love.

ANNA A. GORDON.

Hotel Empire, New York City, April 30, 1898.

The Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Va.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The Home is beautiful these April days. To the careless passerby there may seem no difference except in the season, between the conditions existing now, and at your correspondent's first visit, eighteen months ago. There are differences—little ones, but growing. A mustard seed is small, but it grows vigorously.

In July, 1897, Rev. Joseph Bradley, D. D., began his work as chaplain of the Home. Since then he has held services in the chapel daily, and twice on Sunday. In summer the weekday meetings are in the morning, in winter in the evening. A number of conversions have taken place. The congregation has increased from an average of about twenty-five to more than three hundred. The C. E. Society, now almost a year old, has made steady growth and does a great deal of good. It meets once a week. Recently a non-sectarian evangelical church has been organized, and the men are greatly interested in its growth. They look out for brethren, bring them to the evening meetings, and frequently secure them as members.

A little more than a month ago Mrs. Thacher visited the Home. During her visit she talked to the men. The result was the Ella M. Thacher union, auxiliary to Mrs. Thacher's department. It started with seventy members and now has one hundred. Mrs. Bradley is its president, and weekly meetings are held.

One who has not studied the parish can not conceive of the difficulties Dr. and Mrs. Bradley meet in their work. Theirs is a community of four thousand men, old and disabled. There is no doubt but constant idleness causes many of the men to fall into evil ways. It is more difficult to reform the men than it would be if they were younger. Their characters are not plastic, and they have so little hope. Some of the men only stay a few months. In the main it is a floating community, but a change in the spirit is already evident. If nine months will accomplish so much, what may we not expect of that number of years?

There is a constant demand for literature. Don't send secular newspapers. Send any good religious or literary journals, especially illustrated ones. Dr. Bradley is on the ground all the time. He keeps his papers sorted so that each man may get a new one at every meeting, if he wants it. Address literature to Rev. Joseph Bradley, D. D., National Soldiers' Home, Hampton, Va.

A navy chaplain was called upon a few days ago to address a small body of members of the W. C. T. U. upon Christian work in the navy. He told of meeting Mrs. Leavitt and showing her over his ship in the harbor of Yokohama. She saw where Jacky got his justice, his food and his clothing, but the answer to her inquiry where he got his whisky was too long. He gets it in queer ways. He gets his ration of a quart bottle of beer every morning from Uncle Sam. Any grog he may be caught trying to bring aboard externally is promptly confiscated and the would-be smuggler punished. If he gives evidence of having applied any internally, he is punished. Whisky sharps beset him wherever he lands. Whisky has been brought aboard in the intestines of animals, cleaned and filled, à la sausage. The skin is coiled in Jacky's hat or sash-like about his waist. It has been found in egg shells and cocoa nut shells. The coal-barge which supplied the Minneapolis in Smyrna harbor brought out in its well-hole sixty quart bottles of whisky. When the ship lay long at a certain port and all the artful dodges of the whisky sharps became familiar, they sold the sailors cocaine in flat bottles. The result was cocaine sprees, which landed the men in the hospital. Boys whose curiosity was excited, caught the infatuation. In three months there were in a crew of five hundred men, thirty who had acquired the cocaine habit.

The good chaplain has been long in the service, and he says the only protection to the sailor is his trust in the Almighty. The best way to develop this is by personal effort. He makes it a point to mingle with the men as much as possible. On one ship he had a C. E. Society. The members visited and entertained the sick, and kept choice bits of literature pasted on a board which hung at the water cask. Whenever places of interest were in sight the chaplain gathered about him as many as possible of those not on duty and talked to them about the history of the region. In this way he taught them of Paul's missionary journeys on the deck of the Minneapolis. In answer to the question as to whether one or two meetings are of any help, he answered emphatically, "yes, but the more the better."

Our navy has over seventy ships and but twenty-four chaplains to serve them and the navy yards and receiving ships. Twenty-four from seventy leaves the majority unsupplied with religious teachers. Might not the ration of beer be profitably transmuted into a ration of gospel? It would pay for the needed chaplains. The twenty-four chaplains "denominate" thus: nine Methodists, five Episcopalians, five Baptists, three Roman Catholics, one Disciple of Christ and one Presbyterian. At present about one seaman in four is a Roman Catholic. A census of one cruiser showed that ninety per cent of the enlisted men came from Christian homes. This is supposed to be about the proportion in the whole navy.

M. C. FAVILLE.

Hampton, Va.

Our Little Meeting.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There was one little meeting you might care to know about. We do not always report the little meetings because they do not furnish us figures worth repeating, except as "ten times one is ten." There were not ten of us that day. It was a very stormy afternoon, damp everywhere. The leader herself had no elasticity to her when she left home. There had come to her possession a short time before a lot of packed household goods from Massachusetts where they had been stored ever since the war, when the dear father and mother had left New England to take up their abode at Washington, D. C. The goods had not been needed and had remained stored until it was necessary to have something done about them. An auction disposed of the bulky articles, precious and worthless together, and the boxed goods were sent to the only son and his wife. The morning had been spent, chilly as it was, in the garret, in looking over these boxes. Nice blankets were pulled out from their hiding places all moth eaten. A handsome brussels carpet had been sold because it was too moth-eaten to send. Everything woolen was filled with moth eggs or badly eaten. Do you wonder that practical woman could have cried if she had been of the sort to cry over such misfortune? No! there was that meeting she must lead and she must keep her mind clear and her head above such care. But she could not collect her thoughts for any quiet thinking until suddenly these words in the sixth chapter of Matthew came to her: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

She read these verses to the few who had come through the beating rain, and told them how she had felt about putting away garments and useful articles that might be of service to someone and leaving them for the moth and rust. Miss Havergal's suggestion in "Kept for the Master's Use" was given, to look into the chests and closets and see if there is not something there that the moth will destroy and which can not then be used, but will now do some of Christ's needy ones good.

Then followed a beautiful talk from one of our very faithful rainy-day workers about a recent visit to the Florence Crittenton Mission, New York city, which thrilled our souls and took the remaining time, but sent us home with our hearts aching for those poor fallen women.

We forgot about the moth-eaten garments for the time. The best of the meeting, however, was yet to come. One practical young woman went to her home and to her cedar closet, and began her distribution. There was a Sabbath-school class in one of the missions where many of the best garments would fit; there were articles that could go in the next missionary box; there was a dear friend to whom some of the all-wool garments would be most acceptable. A riding habit which was too small for a sister would make over nicely for a school dress for one trying to keep in school.

The Day Nursery was supplied with some of the treasures of the baby days, and perhaps the crib and little bath-tub would have gone too, but that the earnest worker suddenly found her big doll of the bygone days, and, as she took it in her arms, feeling that she could not part with that sacred treasure, was reminded that her mother, who was away from home, might not want to part with some of hers that the live dolls had used—treasures that the moth and rust could not harm.

Books, toys, pictures, dresses, wraps and underwear were all included in the list sent out. Ten times one and ten times ten hearts were made glad by the emptying of that cedar room, and because of the hearty way in which it was done.

Yours to do likewise,

NETTIE BARKER FERNALD.

West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y.

A Reminiscence of Frances E. Willard.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The following incident occurred in the old Congregational church in Evanston, in the early public life of Miss Willard. The occasion was the annual meeting of the alumnæ of the old Woman's College. The audience was composed in a great measure of students, and the remainder, of the citizens of the place.

Several speakers were to take part in the program; among the number was Miss Willard. Two or three ladies read papers in a low, indistinct voice, absolutely inaudible to the audience. A number of college boys were sitting together in the central part of the church, and, of course, must have some way of passing the time and some way to interest themselves. So we organized ourselves into a literary society, and selected several committees. One committee was to explain the speeches. One committee had as its work to denote the time when it was appropriate to cheer. It is needless to say that it was an endless source of amusement to the audience, but as great an annoyance to the speaker. At the first cheer, the speaker looked off from her paper, for the first time, to see if it were intended for burlesque or approval. But we were all serious and sat intent, as if we would catch every word.

Thus we cheered from time to time. Of course we knew not when the applause was appropriate or when it was not, as we could not hear a single word. We cheered when the chairman of the cheering committee said it was time, and that was regularly about every three minutes. We kept track of the time by the watch.

Miss Willard sat on the platform and was the last speaker. She took in the whole situation. Her countenance did not change. Not a muscle of her face moved, except a slight compressure of her lips that denoted determination, but we could detect a wonderful twinkling of her eyes; they fairly laughed. At last the speaker closed, and we cheered, certainly knowing that it was an appropriate time for applause.

Miss Willard arose. Her posture was one of determination, the lips had a firm expression, her eyes shone and her whole attitude spoke more plainly than words: "Boys, I will stop that fun," and she did. All were attentive. Her words came as clear and distinct as a clarion note. The audience was tired, but she held it to the closest attention from the beginning to the close of her speech, and we went to our rooms loud in our praises of Miss Willard.

I think that scene was a prophecy of her coming greatness. Where others failed she succeeded. She was a general and an orator. She could rule men and women as well as sympathize with them in their human woes.

(REV.) ELLERY H. BEAL.

Fairdale, Ill.

DURING the trial of a case before Judge Dickey, of New York, one of the lawyers remarked, "The best of men get drunk." In his charge to the jury Judge Dickey took occasion to dispute the statement. "The best men do not get drunk. If there ever was a time when the best men got drunk, that day has passed," said the judge. The judge was not disputed. There was no furor over his remarks. Public sentiment was on his side. This would not have been so twenty years ago.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?—Rom. 8:32.

1898, although but a third of its months have sped, has made itself memorable in temperance annals by the trophies death has won from our ranks. Following closely upon the departure of our great Chieftain, another one of our temperance leaders has been called quickly to follow—Mrs. Mary T. Burt. Beautiful and talented, sweet and gentle of mien, she lately has seemed to be ripening for her heavenly home. Last Thursday (April 28) she was busy about her work. She never had taken much interest in the Temple until Miss Willard's death, since which time she entered heartily into the plan of making it a monument to her. She made a ringing speech to this effect in Willard Hall when she was here in February, and since her return home has been formulating plans to have the W. C. T. U. of New York do their part in the work. She thought they ought to raise at least $40,000. Before she was taken ill last Thursday she indited a letter in regard to the Temple, the last written by her. The fatal attack seized her that evening, and the next night she joined our Saint Frances. Hail and farewell, brave leader and gentle friend. Soon we, too, shall follow that way and clasp your hand,

"Just over in the morning land."

✠

Mrs. Laura S. Haviland, ripe in years and good works, loved and honored from the Atlantic to the Pacific for her great philanthropies in behalf of the downtrodden, the outcast, the intemperate and the sick, proved another shining mark for death in our ranks during the past month. She took great interest in the Temple, and had full faith we would yet own it. Her voice has been heard often in Willard Hall, her name should be inscribed in our Westminster.

✠

Mrs. E. Norine Law, one of our National organizers, writes:

It seems to me our women ought to desire more than ever to pay for the Temple. God inspire them with more zeal than ever before to go on with the great work Miss Willard was so much the inspiration of, and to which she gave her life.

Miss Anna Downey, one of our National evangelists, writes to a friend in Chicago:

Miss Willard with her keen prophetic eye saw that to lose the Temple would be an almost irretrievable blow to the W. C. T. U. Those of us who are abroad in the field realize the same thing. The Temple must be saved. I shall do what I can to help.

Miss Nellie Mitchell, of Fond du Lac, Wis., writes:

If our women will only each do her part, the Temple will soon stand out free and clear of debt a fitting monument to our ascended Chieftain, who never relinquished her grasp on the Temple till unloosed by the finger of death, neither should one of her followers.

✠

Some of our women realize the truth of what is said above, but there are tens of thousands who do not. If they did, they would be at work filling the Temple Wheels, of which there is still 30,000 out.

✠

Quite a number of our best speakers have offered their services to speak for the Temple and are open for engagements. Mrs. Edith Davis, Appleton, Wis., is making quite a success in her own state. So is Mrs. Emma Cranmer, of Aberdeen, N. D. She is now speaking in Iowa. Dr. Sarah Morriss, of Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Caroline Woodward, of David City, Neb., and Mrs. Evelyn N. Graham, Newark, O., are all fine speakers, and will go to unions without charge, except the collection. Miss Mabelle Biggart, Windsor Hotel, New York city, is a young woman of great talent. She has dramatized "A Singular Life," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and is desirous of giving readings from it for the benefit of the Temple. It was at Miss Willard's suggestion she undertook the work.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

Why.

THERE'S many things I wonder why,
Which no one ever seems to know;
Why stars stay always in the sky,
And never tumble down below;
Why grown-up people never see
When they are interrupting me.

Why I am not allowed to play
With Nursy's nephew William John;
And why the sun sinks down each day
Directly it has seen me gone,
And where it lays its shining head,
And if it likes to go to bed.

Why fairies never come to me
When Nursy's with me in the room;
And why on earth I shouldn't be
A princess with a horse and groom;
And why—you never seem to hear—
Why is the world so very queer?

—Wilfred Wilson Gibson, in the Sketch.

A Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Mothers.

"CAN you help me a few minutes, Marion?" "I should like to, but I don't see how I can." The tone was not impatient, but hurried. "I have this essay to finish for the society this evening. I must go to our French history class in an hour, then to a guild meeting, and get back to my German lesson at five o'clock."

"No, you can't help me, dear. You look worn out yourself. Never mind. If I tie up my head perhaps I can finish this."

"Through at last," said Marion, wearily, giving a finishing touch to "The Development of Religious Ideas Among the Greeks," at the same time glancing quickly at the clock. Her attention was arrested by a strange sight. Her tired mother had fallen asleep over her sewing. That was not surprising, but the startled girl saw bending over her mother's face, two angels, each looking earnestly at the sleeper.

"What made that weary look on this woman's face?" asked the stern, strange-looking angel of the weaker, sadder one. "Has God given her no daughters?"

"Yes, but they have no time to help her!"

"No time?" cried the other. "What are they doing with all the time I am allowing them?"

"Well," replied the Angel of Life, "I keep their hands and hearts full. They are affectionate daughters, much admired for their good works; but they do not know they are letting the one they love most slip from my arms into yours. Those gray hairs come from overwork and anxiety to save money for music and French lessons. Those pale cheeks faded while the girls were painting roses and pansies."

The dark angel frowned.

"Young ladies must be accomplished now," exclaimed the other. "Those eyes grew dim sewing for the girls, to give them time to study ancient history and modern languages; those wrinkles came because the girls had not time to share the cares and worry of everyday life. That sigh comes because their mother feels neglected and lonely while the girls are working for the women of India; that tired look comes from getting up so early, while the poor exhausted girls are trying to sleep back the late hours they gave to study or spent at the concert; those feet are so weary because of their ceaseless walk."

"Surely, the girls help her, too?"

"What they can. But their feet get weary enough going around begging for the hospital and the church, and hunting up the poor and the sick."

"No wonder," said the Angel of Death, "so many mothers call me. This is indeed sad—loving, industrious girls, giving their mother to my care as soon as selfish, wicked ones."

"Ah, the hours are so crowded," said Life, wearily. "Girls who are cultured or take an active part in life, have no time to take care of the mother who spent so much in bringing them up."

"Then I must place my seal on her brow," said the Angel of Death, bending over the sleeping woman.

"No, no!" cried Marion, springing from her seat. "I will take care of her if you will only let her stay."

"Daughter, you must have the nightmare. Wake up, dear. I fear you have missed your history class."

"Never mind, mamma, I am not going to-day. I am rested now, and I will make those buttonholes while you curl up on the sofa and take a nap. I'll send word to the guild professor that I must be excused to-day, for I am going to see to supper myself and make some of those muffins you like."

"But, dear, I dislike to take your time."

"Seeing you have never given me any time! Now go to sleep, mamma dear, as I did, and do not worry about me. You are of more consequence than all the languages or classics in the world."

So, with a tender kiss from her daughter—usually too busy for such demonstrations—Mrs. Hensen fell into a sweet, restful sleep."

"I see we might have lost the best of mothers in our mad rush to be educated and useful in this hurrying, restless day and generation," Marion soliloquized, as she occasionally stole a glimpse at the sleeping mother. "After this, only what time she does not need I shall devote to outside work and study. Until she gets well restored, I will take charge of the house and give up all the societies except one—that I'll have by myself if the other girls will not join—a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Mothers."

And Marion kept her word. A few months later one of the Women's Progressive League members said to her: "We miss your bright essays so much, Miss Marion. You seem to have lost all your ambition to be highly educated. You are letting your sisters get ahead of you, I fear. How young your mother looks to have grown daughters! I never saw her looking so well."

Then Marion felt rewarded for being a member of what she calls the "S. P. C. M."—Woman's Signal.

The Doll That Talked.

"DOROTHY ANN, are you sleepy?" asked Dollikins. Dorothy Ann did not answer, but went on smiling with her red wax lips. Dollikins gave her a little shake. "Dear me!" she said, "I do wish you could talk! I am so tired of having a doll that never answers, no matter how much I say to her. It is very stupid of you, Dorothy Ann. There, go to sleep!"

Dollikins turned her back on Dorothy Ann, and went to sleep herself. Then she began to dream. She thought Dorothy Ann sat up straight in her crib and opened her blue eyes wide.

"Mamma!" she said.

"Oh, you can talk!" cried Dollikins, joyfully.

"Mamma, my pillow is not at all soft," said Dorothy Ann, in a complaining voice. "And you forgot to take off my shoes."

"I am sorry," said Dollikins.

"And I didn't have anything but mashed potato for my dinner!" cried Dorothy Ann. "I don't like mashed potato. Why don't I have things that I like, mamma?"

Dollikin's cheeks grew quite red. She remembered saying something very like this at the luncheon the day before.

"I'm not a bit sleepy!" wailed Dorothy Ann. "Why do I have to go to bed at seven o'clock, mamma? Other little girls don't have to. I wish—"

"Dorothy Ann," said Dollikins, "will you please not talk any more? It makes my head ache!"

Then it was very still.

In the morning Dollikins went over and took up Dorothy Ann and looked at her. The red lips were smiling as ever, but tight shut.

"Good-morning, Dorothy Ann," said Dollikins. "I am very glad you do not know how to talk, my dear, for then you might be a sore trial to your mother."—Selected.

LITTLE Margaret, gazing at a waterfall, exclaimed: "Mamma, the water is coming downstairs. It can't find the steps, so it is just sliding!"—Youth's Companion.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—"Once upon a time" when I was a little girl I used to live on a farm, and feed the calves and the pigs, and hunt for hen's nests in the haymow, and have lots of good times! That is why I am always interested in what the children do in the country, and I know you will all enjoy with me the letter from the two little nephews who live at Monticello, Ill. They must be right smart boys to milk two cows each night and morning, for that is hard work, as I know by experience. My fingers and wrists ache yet when I remember my first attempt in that line. I am glad to have my little friends tell me what they can do to help about the work at home, for it is the home tasks well done that fit you for the larger duties of life, and the boy of eight years who can milk a cow will have a strong right arm to do battle with the world and strike blows for temperance by and by.

Yours lovingly

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a girl twelve years of age. I am in the highest grade at school. Our school has just finished six and one-half months' term. I did not miss one day. I got 202 head marks in spelling. My mamma is a member of the Gettysburg W. C. T. U. and is a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, which we all prize very much. I am most interested in the children's page, and I like to find out the "Soft Shelled Nuts."

Your niece,

J. BELLE SCOTT.

Green Mount, Pa.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—We are brothers, eight and ten years old, and we would like to join the Cozy Corner. We live on a farm; we feed ten calves and milk two cows each, every night and morning. Our mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and we like to read the children's letters. We expect to start to school soon for the summer term.

JONAH W. CUNARD,
ORR CUNARD.

Monticello, Ill.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—This is my first letter to Cozy Corner. I am twelve years old and I would like to join the Cosy Corner. My teacher takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the letters in it. I am glad to say that there is not a saloon in Page. I have two sisters and three brothers. I want to be one of God's busy workers. I believe in kindness to animals, don't you? Good-by, dear auntie.

Your loving niece,

EMMA MCCLELLAN.

Page, N. Dak.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—May I be a member of your Cozy Corner? I am thirteen years old and in the sixth grade at school. I hope to pass to the seventh soon. My mamma used to be the president of the territory, but now she is president of the local union of Perry. We have no L. T. L. now, but we used to have, and I was the first president. We are going to start again soon. I would like to correspond with some of the Cozy Corner cousins.

MARY TEMPLE MENTZ.

Perry, O. T.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

18.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of fifteen letters.
My 15, 13, 4, is found in chimneys.
My 5, 6, 10, 11, is a place to keep coal.
My 12, 13, 4, is something we eat.
My 1, 9, 7, 11, is something we like in winter.
M7 14, 2, 8, 9, is required on pike roads.
My 3, 13, 15, is something we must not do.
My whole is seen is THE UNION SIGNAL every week.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MAY 5.

No. 17. Anna Adams Gordon.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON. MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

The Temple as a Memorial.

IT is hardly necessary to remind UNION SIGNAL readers of the heroic action of Miss Willard concerning the Temple at our last National Convention. Her words were faithfully reported on the first page of our issue of November 4, and the most salient points made by her have been quoted from time to time. "Now we are in debt, not legally but morally to the bondholders. I shall never rest what time I live till that debt is paid." . . . "I shall only try to help get enough to retire the three hundred thousand dollars of Temple Trust Bonds, thus holding the balance of votes, but shall not try to own the whole Temple." . . . "I pledge myself to the bondholders and I know Mrs. Carse does the same." Then she told the story of Garibaldi, who when his soldiers fell back simply turned and cried out, "Soldiers, I am going to die," and rode ahead. If she had stopped there the story would have been prophetic, but she added, "I am not going to die, I am going to live," and yet who shall say that these words were not prophetic!

As she explained at the Monday afternoon session of the Convention it was her intention to appeal more particularly to the rich, but the gifts of unions would not be rejected.

A resolution was adopted pledging her support and coöperation in raising the three hundred thousand dollars; but alas! the dauntless soul fell by the way, when she had but just formulated her appeal.

Immediately upon her death the general officers accepted her self-appointed mission as their sacred trust, and in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 17, page 13, made an official announcement that it was their pupose to carry out the plan of their great leader, Frances E. Willard, with reference to the retirement of the Temple Trust Bonds, which are the three hundred thousand dollar bonds.

In the meantime the Trustees of the Temple, Mrs. Carse, president, resolved in a meeting, held February 25, that when they should have secured for the National W. C. T. U. the capital stock of the Temple (the entire building stock) the name should be changed from "The Temple" to Willard Temple, thus making the building a memorial to our devoted leader.

This put a new phase on the Temple question. To make it a memorial to Miss Willard seemed to be a spontaneous thought with white-ribboners and the world at large. Letters had come pouring in from editors, clergymen, traveling men, from people at home and abroad, immediately upon her death, all advocating the same thing—"Make the Temple a memorial to Miss Willard." Forthwith the National officers went a step further, viz., that they would join in the effort to pay off the entire debt and make the building a memorial to Miss Willard; with this proviso, however, "that if by the next National Convention it is clearly seen that the plan of owning the Temple is not a feasible one, the money shall be used for another suitable memorial, the nature of which will hereafter be decided."

We learn that not a few white-ribboners have taken this to mean that in the event that the whole indebtedness can not be met by the next National Convention, that no part of the money sent to Miss Dow will be used to help pay off the three hundred thousand dollar Temple Trust Bonds. This is a mistake. The letter sent out by the National officers, and referred to in the March 31 paragraph, expressly says, "We propose to carry out Miss Willard's original plan, and to enlarge upon it so far as is possible." The original plan by Miss Willard and the officers was, and is, to pay off the three hundred thousand dollar bonds; the enlargement upon that plan is the determination to aid in raising more than that sum, if possible, and to apply it to the remaining indebtedness, unless at the end of the year it shall not be deemed feasible to pay for the Temple and make it a memorial building. The misunderstanding evidently came about from not referring to the first and original plan in announcing the further purpose to work for lifting the entire debt.

With the National thus pledged to apply the money sent to Miss Dow, first of all, to paying off the Temple Trust Bonds, and with the Temple Trustees working to the same end through the untiring devotion of Mrs. Carse and others, will not this be accomplished by July 1, which is the limit of the time given by Mr. Field in which to make good the conditions of his proposition?

May we not hope for even more than this? It would seem that the hearts of the people are turned to this enterprise now as never before, and that a supreme effort by white-ribboners and others particularly interested in Miss Willard might even reach to the extent of lifting the entire debt. Any one of the plans suggested by Mrs. Carse would, if thoroughly worked, be immensely productive. Couple what white-ribboners might do with what a citizens' committee, as set forth by the National officers, might do, and the whole scheme could be accomplished. The time is ripe for action. There is not a day nor an hour to lose. Nearly all are agreed as to what the ownership of the Temple would mean to our work; what it would mean as an object lesson to the world; what it would perpetuate as Willard Temple, and what it would mean to tear up the hopes and loves of the white-ribbon host, that have grown strong by their long-time cherishing. Every considerable city has a Y. M. C. A. building, erected and paid for by that particular city; and we are loth to believe that our Christian organization can not secure one such to represent all of the great cities into which we have entered, and in honor of so well beloved a woman as Miss Willard. Certainly now, if ever, is the time for victory, but it will not come unless white-ribboners lead on in the plans suggested by the Temple Trustees, as set forth from time to time in the Temple column, and in the plan of the National officers, as suggested on the first page of THE UNION SIGNAL of March 31, that the money may be gathered not only from white-ribboners, but from the friends at large.

The Temperance Campaign in Kansas.

THE state temperance union of Kansas is prosecuting a vigorous campaign against the violations of the state prohibitory law. Thirty-six addresses were given in the churches of Topeka on Sabbath, April 24.

The central thought in all of the addresses was the motto adopted by the state temperance union, "Loyalty to Law—The Joints Must Go." The meetings were all well attended, and more than one thousand five hundred dollars was subscribed for the work. Dr. Howard H. Russell, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and two of his ablest assistants, the Rev. J. C. Jackson and the Rev. W. L. Woodward, have been making a tour of the state in the interest of law enforcement. They report that in all of the forty-seven counties visited by them the temperance sentiment is rising, and that there is shown a determination to enforce the laws and elect public officers who will respect the constitution and statutes of the state.

A few of the sentiments expressed by some of the speakers in Topeka were as follows:

Dr. Russell:—That man is an enemy to Kansas, to its homes, its mothers, its wives and its children who proposes to resubmit the question of prohibtion of the liquor traffic to the hazards of an election. . . . Law enforcement must be secured by coöperation with the officers in the performance of duty, and where they will not maintain the law they have sworn to execute, it is proposed to organize inside all political parties to elect officers from governor to county attorney who will do their duty.

Dr. Jackson:— The saloon is the great corrupter of American political life. If we do not succeed in digging its grave it will dig the grave of the republic.

Judge Huron:—The politicians have been served with notice that no man who fails to enforce all of the laws of the state can fill the office of governor a second term.

Dr. Woodard:—Kansas is one hundred per cent better off than Ohio because Kansas has the best of all temperance laws—constitutional prohibition. Coming from a rum-cursed state I can see that prohibition does good in Kansas. I have covered nearly a thousand miles in this state and for the first time since I can remember I have spent three weeks without seeing the first sign of a drunken man or woman . . . When I am told that prohibition is dead in Kansas, I am reminded of what Mark Twain cabled to this country when it was reported here that he was dead. The cablegram said: "The report of my death is greatly exaggerated." So it is with the report that prohibition does not prohibit. It may not prohibit absolutely, but it greatly lessens the evils of intemperance, and is immeasurably better than any license law ever enacted.

Prof. W. H. Carruth:—We are asked to repeal prohibitory law because it is claimed to be a failure. The prohibitory law was never expected to prohibit, any more than the statute against petty larceny is expected to prohibit. But it has made the sale of liquor as a beverage disreputable; it has almost abolished the open saloon; it has greatly decreased the sales of liquor in the state, it has made it possible for a generation of children to grow up who have never seen a drunken man. Such results make the law worth all it has cost. It is whisky that wants the law repealed; and it is a good rule to find out what whisky wants and then oppose it.

Albert Watkins:—The policy of prohibition is the only common sense policy to adopt. The principle involved in the idea of prohibition is right, and, being right, should stand. The law does not abridge the so-called "personal liberty" of the citizen. The law is not a failure. It can and should be enforced.

Dr. Dougherty noted the fact that the illegal joint, however objectionable, is a great improvement on the legal saloon; that the number of joints in the state and the number of their supporters are greatly exaggerated by men who desire a return to the license policy.

An editorial in the Topeka Daily Capital, commending the movement for law enforcement, sums up the condition in a nutshell:

In the last analysis the government is the people. They can defeat as well as elect candidates for office and they can command and compel officials to perform their duty. It is not true that carelessness of the people in this regard absolves officials from their oath of office, as asserted by shallow defenders of the law breakers, but it is common experience that when the people relax their vigilance and fail to punish official offenders, little effort is made to enforce laws against which there is a strong, organized opposition.

Cremation.

WE have received a few condemnatory letters concerning the incineration of the body of Miss Willard. It is folly for any one to hold either the National W. C. T. U. or the editors responsible for that event. The instructions were given by Miss Willard herself to the executor of her will, and they were faithfully carried out, as was right and proper.

The revived method of cremation is still too new to these later times for great numbers of people to have given their thought to it or the arguments in its favor. It was to be expected that there would be a difference of opinion on the subject, both within and without our ranks. But the W. C. T. U. does not undertake the part of censor to the consciences of its members, as some seem to suppose. Miss Willard was of age, of a sound mind, and not under a guardian, and therefore made her own choice, and we are sure white-ribboners, at least, are broad-minded enough to be satisfied with this, whether they agree with her in method or not.

The most surprising thing, however, is the conclusions some have wrung out of the descriptions given in THE UNION SIGNAL. It is absurd to suppose that it was ever intended to convey the idea that the body put on immortality by the process. The thought emphasized was that the body escaped corruption, and that it was made easier thus for the living to take their thoughts from the earthly part and place them on the spiritual—her real self.

Some one asks what "freeing her" meant. To be entirely sure, one would have to ask the writer of the letter to Miss Gordon, but if the word "seemed" is not overlooked in the quotation referred to—"It seemed like freeing the dear form that it may be clothed upon at once with immortality,"—it simply indicates to our mind that the thought is carried from a corrupt body to the time when it shall have put on immortality. It is not to be supposed that cremation makes any difference to the spirit of the departed, but has its influence upon the spirit of the living. It may be said here that the very effort not to offend the sensibilities of the living, and especially of those who would be shocked by the first announcement of the cremation of the body of Miss Willard, have led to a misunderstanding of terms on the part of some.

Views of Leading Religious Papers.

THE Interior (Presbyterian) has this to say under the caption, "Along the White Path."

Still the idea of the immediate transformation of the remains into the sunlit atmosphere and into the snow white ashes, is exceedingly attractive. If one dwells upon the resurrection of the body, it should be said that the process is the same, and the consummation the same, either way. There is no difference after an elapse of sufficient time. The elements of the body return to the air and to the earth from which they came. The only difference is a choice between the longer or the shorter path which lead to the same destination.

The Standard (Baptist), after discussing the prejudices against cremation and the reasons therefor, closes by saying:

That a change will come in this matter of the disposal of the dead, is certain. As population becomes concentrated, the increasing urgency of sanitary demands which need not be here discussed, will oblige us to reconsider the basis of our customs. It is hoped the time will not soon come when cremation will be forced upon any class by statute, if the sensibilities of relatives and friends would be thus cruelly and unnecessarily wounded; but in such voluntary ways as may be easily adopted by those of other minds, there may be effected a reform which in the course of years will come to embrace the whole people. After all, not forgetting due reverence for the mortal frame that has been the home of a soul, it matters little how soon or in what manner the chrysalis disappears, if we behold a new creature emerged therefrom and exulting in the freedom of the skies.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal) speaking of cremation says:

Even the Christian rituals which are repeated at the graveside of many thousands of devoted people include the words, "ashes to ashes," together with the familiar other words, "earth to earth, dust to dust." We incline to the literal application of these words, as one element in the suggestion that the precise disposition of human remains does not signify more than other words signify. . . . What the real body is, who shall say? How it shall be raised Paul did not explain. When it shall be raised is known alone to Him who created all things. It is enough that we live and that we die and will be raised. God has promised that those who have earned the privilege will be raised according to that which has been recorded by Christ Himself and those who since have spoken in His name.

One Veteran Crusader to Another.

ON the occasion of "Mother" Stewart's eighty-second birthday, just passed, "Mother" Thompson sent the little appended letter. In a note recently received by THE UNION SIGNAL, from Mrs. Judge Thompson, she regrets that she is debtor to many dear ones in this country and abroad on account of the long illness of her husband, who, though improving, is still an invalid. She says "letter writing has become a rare privilege of past memory." It does not appear, however, that her right hand has lost any of its cunning.

MY DEAR MOTHER STEWART:—Another "milestone" in sight! And I hasten to send greetings and congratulations for the occasion, in which my dear husband heartily joins me.

Poor Mr. Thompson has been quite an invalid since last Christmas, a part of the time very ill. Since his convalescence, I am constantly in demand, reading aloud the daily exciting news, and slipping in the "blessed Word," with sweet old hymns of praise, once loved by the dear departed; and so my life goes, with two dear, kind widowed daughters and a noble son to share with me the care and attention which the dear old Judge has required during the past months.

How glad I would be to see you and have a good old-fashioned "Crusade" talk, but that can not be, until we rest by the "River of Life," and rejoice over the fact that we are "Safe at Home."

God bless you and comfort you, while you journey on to the "Tearless City." My family unite in best wishes for "Eighty-two."

Yours sincerely,
E. J. THOMPSON.

Hillsboro, O., April 22, 1898.

Three Labor Bills in Congress.

PRACTICAL application of Dr. Crafts' labor studies should include, among other things, the sending of petitions, and especially letters, in behalf of the three most important labor bills in Congress, all of them of that moderate type that allows the expression of Christian sympathy for labor, without an attack upon capital; indeed, two of these bills were drawn by capital and the third is indorsed by it. One of these is the "Phillips bill," providing for a commission of five senators, five congressmen and nine outside representatives of the various "industries and occupations," who shall investigate the industrial problems of the nation and suggest remedies. The pith of labor's plea for this moderate bill, in which it could have only a minority representation, is that labor has in Congress neither a John Burns nor a Lord Shaftesbury to speak in its behalf, no champion from its own ranks or from any other. The cost will be less than $100,000 a year for only two years, an amount that would be saved and more if the commission prevented even one important strike and did nothing more.

The "Erdman bill" would cost almost nothing, as it would use the national labor commissioner and the chairman of the interstate commerce commission as voluntary arbitrators to prevent railway strikes, the findings of the arbitrators being enforcible only when both parties submitted the case to them, but in other cases effective upon public opinion. For this bill both managers and employés of railways have petitioned, but it needs the people's demand.

The "Gary bill," originated by ex-Postmaster-General Gary, himself a banker, providing for the establishment of postal savings banks, such as almost every other nation has in operation in behalf of its rural population, proposes to gather the small savings of the people, the government thus paying interest to millions of the people instead of paying it chiefly to millionaires. The Chicago Record thus summarizes its benefits:

"Postal savings banks will bring financial independence to wageworkers; will make the habit general; will bring hoarded money into circulation; will increase the actual capital of the country by one-fourth; will reduce the current rate of interest."

JUST as we went to press last week the news came of the sudden death of Mrs. Burt, president of New York. A private letter from Mrs. Barnes gives the following additional items:

"Anna and Mamie sailed away in the sunshine on a summer sea, and at eleven last night dear Mary Burt sighted the heavenly land and was welcomed into the presence of the King and of our blessed St. Frances. Mrs. Demorest and I went up to Mr. Burt's right from the steamer. As Mrs. Burt was downstairs on Thursday and wrote a letter to the printer on Thursday evening about the Temple pictures (the last she ever wrote), they were not more alarmed than they had been, for she has been far from well so long, yet up, and equal to whatever call of day came, so fervent was she in her desire to meet all requirements, preferring to pull with the harness on. That night she grew suddenly worse and fell into a sleep on Friday afternoon from which she did not waken, but gently passed away while sleeping. The disease was diabetes, from which she knew for several years she could not recover. Funeral service at the house Tuesday and at Fort Hill cemetery in Auburn, N. Y., on Wednesday. National sent flowers."

A FRIEND quoted to us these words from a paper published in Chicago and asks an explanation.

"The Woman's Temple has a tunnel from its basement into a saloon next door, and has entered into a contract to furnish electric light, and is now furnishing light to the saloon."

It might be well enough for a paper so near the Temple to ascertain the exact truth before making such a statement and offering comment thereon. There is no tunnel from the Temple to any building. The electric light plant of the Temple contracted to furnish light to a building at the rear of the Temple, which subsequently let room to a saloon keeper, and he, with all other tenants, gets his light with his rent.

It might be well for white-ribboners to remember that if the management of the Temple should choose to rent light direct to a saloon we would have no recourse. Until the W. C. T. U. owns the majority of the stock in the building they cannot dictate its policy.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—It seems a long time since I addressed a letter directly to you through our Y column. As I look over many letters and papers put by during the anxious days and those of sorrow which have followed the translation of our cherished St. Frances, I find a half penned message of gratitude and appreciation for the gift of twenty-five dollars from the Y's of the United States for the World's Y work, and for the beautifully illuminated resolution passed by them at the National Convention in Buffalo. My heart was not slow in thanking you, as Mrs. Boole's account at the time of the presentation told you. If my hand has been slow in writing, you have known the reason, for you, too, have doubtless been occupied in writing and speaking of her at memorial meetings and in taking up more ardently than ever the work to which her life was consecrated; and most of all to join in making the Temple her memorial.

The money you sent was most timely and has been used to pay for printing, stationery and postage. A leaflet for the World's Y's will be sent May 1 to each state Y secretary, who is hereby requested to have all or a part printed in her state paper.

The engrossed "good wishes" so artistically surrounded by the oak and ivy leaves and lilies-of-the-valley, my husband calls my "license to serve," instead of my dismissal from service, as there seems to be no cessation of activities in the office corner of our sanctum where the loving tribute hangs, a constant reminder of your affectionate regard and admired by everyone who calls.

The sad news which has sped its way around the world, has also carried a sacred impetus, and young women everywhere, feeling the bereavement as for no other, have still heard the tender, alluring voice of our leader. From Africa, Australia, Europe and the islands of the sea comes the word of a deeper dedication to Christian temperance efforts.

The young women of England have been deeply grieved and moved, for she had spent so much time among them and was to have been their speaker on Y evening, May 6, of the B. W. T. A. meetings. They look forward with a keen sense of loss to this annual gathering, yet are inspired to do their very best, as she would have them, and to hold up the hands of Lady Henry Somerset. They are also planning a visit to Duxhurst to encourage the young women in supporting that excellent exponent of temperance interest. May the young women of the United States rally as earnestly to raising the debt on the Temple, and the Y's of each respective state also contribute to any special work in their province, as the young women of Massachusetts are rallying to the Willard Y Settlement in Boston.

Our dear Clara Parrish, away from her native state and debarred the privilege of participating in the last sad rites of the one who sent her forth and constantly encouraged her by letters and prayers, weeps with us who weep, but hopefully looks up amidst her tears and promises to battle on. You will all be glad to learn that two hundred dollars realized from the sale of the Y Almanac have been sent to her. We must not allow our hands to slacken because of this, as there may be greater need of funds as she journeys on to new fields, for which we must prepare.

The Y Almanac for 1899 is already in process of arrangement. Our beloved Chieftain admired the artistic design for the cover one of the early days in her illness. It is the work of Miss Brigham, the niece of Mary A. Lathbury, already so widely known for her pictures and her poetry, and beloved of Miss Willard. The almanac will have a special picture of Miss Parrish, pictures of officers and leading workers and delegates of the World's and National W. C. T. U., with texts selected by them; but all the sentiments for the three hundred and sixty-five days in the year will be from Miss Willard's writings, with some selections from her unpublished letters. This is enough to cause every white-ribboner the world around to desire a copy.

The Almanac for 1899 will be sold for the same purpose as was that of last year. It is hoped a larger amount can be realized. The marketing, including expressage and duty to Canada, made the expenses heavy, but if as large an edition is again published, these can be reduced. The size of the edition will depend upon the orders sent before August 1, to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Ave., New York, N. Y.

It is with sincere regret we are obliged to accept the resignation of Mrs. Isabel Gibson Scott as custodian of the Y fund for France, but continued ill health compels her to take absolute rest for a time. Miss Lillian Herr, 15 Thames Terrace, Norwich, Conn., editor of the White Ribbon Banner of that state, has consented to serve as the custodian of the fund for France, and even in the midst of these troublous times, with "wars and rumors of wars," let us not be weary in well doing, nor cease to communicate and contribute towards the work in France, Italy and Spain. Miss Agnes Slack writes of plans to visit these countries this year and of the great need of money in this difficult field. Our beloved leader said in her World's address at Toronto: "Arbitration is the highest instinct of self-preservation and protection for the individual, the family, and the state that has ever been thought out, and could occur to the mind of no nation until it had long been saturated with the Gospel of Christ." May it be ours to help permeate the lives of individuals and peoples with a Christianity which exemplifies sobriety, mercy, love and peace.

Fervently on this behalf,
FRANCES J. BARNES.

New York City.

World's W. C. T. U.

Cape Colony.

MEMORIAL SERVICES AT HEADQUARTERS.

THE W. C. T. U. of Cape Colony is affiliated with the World's W. C. T. U., and so on March 20 held a commemorative service. Goodnow Hall was used for the occasion. The pulpit was draped with white looped with the white ribbon. On the platform Miss Willard's portrait stood on an easel; over it was draped the American and English flags tied together with white ribbon, and "traveler's joy" wreathed the portrait. Behind the easel rose two stately palms. At one side of the platform there was a fine arrangement of pampas grass and palms. The front of the platform was decorated with fine potted plants, and bouquets of white roses stood on the pulpit in front of the picture.

The president of the colonial W. C. T. U. presided, and after an earnest prayer, the singing of "Jerusalem the Golden," a responsive reading on the resurrection and the singing of the twenty-third Psalm, Mrs. Harvie gave personal reminiscences of Miss Willard. She said in part: "I remember distinctly the impression she made upon me. There was such a glow of enthusiasm roused by her words. She was speaking in Glasgow on 'The Glory of God as the Aim of our Life,' and seemed the very messenger of God raised up to stir up our souls. She impressed me as a woman who lived in communion with God. She was a powerful Christian because she was a prayerful Christian. She had a wonderful knowledge of man as well as of God. A friend of mine was a comfortable, satisfied Christian, but she learned at the feet of dear Miss Willard that all was not right with her soul. Led by her she became an active worker in gospel temperance."

Miss Simmons said: "I first met Miss Willard when she came to the city where I live to hold a meeting for the W. C. T. U. The church was a very large one, holding one thousand five hundred people, and it was so filled that the only place I could find to sit was on the pulpit steps. As you see from her portrait she was slender and fragile looking, but you can not imagine the power behind her as she told of the woe in the drunkard's home. Several years later I met her when she with Lady Henry Somerset visited my college. The way in which she won our love and loyalty was wonderful. After listening I felt as though I must do whatever she would like to have me. That little, slight woman was a great power, was the heart and soul of such a great organization, and people who came in touch with her could not but be filled with the desire to do that which was right."

Dr. Buchanan: "I only once met Miss Willard and that was when she was speaking in a town that, though it was a temperance town, did not regard the W. C. T. U. favorably. The organization was at a crisis. It was at a time when ministers were beginning to invite the W. C. T. U. to speak in their pulpits. She spoke to an audience that was unconvinced, an audience of about two thousand people. Miss Willard was standing there being criticised. I did not agree with all that she said, but I could not contradict it, her arguments were so convincing. We feel that she has been a grand leader of the world. She impressed me as wonderfully prepared for her work, she was a marvel of a woman. She knew how to win people's hearts and her sympathy and her heart were big enough to take in the whole world. The way in which she gained her preparation for this work was through the earnest, conscientious faithfulness with which she always did her work. The full preparation only come after years of faithfully doing the next thing."

Miss Solomon: "I met Miss Willard the first time in London, at a reception given by the B. W. T. A. I shall never forget the bright, cordial greeting she had for strangers. She never forgot anyone she had met, and all through the week I had opportunity to watch her. One day she took the noonday prayer-meeting, and as we listened to her we began to understand how it was that she had accomplished so much. Later I had the joy of spending a day with her at Reigate. She took us to her room to show us a portrait of her mother. Although she was such a great worker she was a devoted daughter. I never met a more womanly woman than Frances Willard. At the farewell meeting given her in London before she left for America we saw what a hold she had gained on the British public. In Chicago I was present one day when she spoke in Willard Hall at noon. The Hall was filled with business men who had given up their noon hour to come in to listen to her. I do want one result of this meeting to be that we shall all be inspired with her spirit for the great fight which lies before us."

Miss Ferguson, Miss Pride and Miss Cummings were unavoidably prevented from being present, but they sent their messages, tender tributes to the memory of her they loved so well.

The reading of these letters was followed by the tribute of Miss Campbell, the present colonial president:

"I believe that the world never produced a nobler woman than Frances Willard. The deep, strong sympathies of her great heart had been widening with her years, and in every field of Christian work the world over her heart was at home. She has gone out from among us, but by all our loving and grateful admiration of her, we are confident that others, also, shall come, divinely chosen, and, like her, finely equipped for their part as she was for hers. I first met Miss Willard at Chautauqua, in the summer of 1891. She came to deliver a lecture, and in the evening a reception was held for her in the parlors of the W. C. T. U. An immense crowd gathered to do her honor, and although I had gone early, the crowd was so great that for over half an hour I could not get farther than the steps. Then there was an onward movement, and presently I found myself in the door of the parlor, where I saw her standing surrounded by her companions. As I drew near I handed my card to the lady who was acting as introducer, and expected to hear my name simply announced, and, like the others, to make my courtesy and pass on; but no sooner was it read than Miss Willard's hand was stretched out in a flash, and she drew me toward her, saying, 'I am so glad. Stop behind for a little; I want to see you,' and then turned and presented me to Miss Gordon.

"The second meeting was in the Massachusetts headquarters in Boston when the World's W. C. T. U. was organized, and during those days I had constant opportunity for studying her. The points that impressed me the most were her unfailing good humor and her ready wit. Again and again when it seemed as though cordial relations had been strained to breaking point, a good-humored smile would grow on her face and that was quickly followed by the utterance of some witty thought which acted like oil on troubled waters. In all those days of constant strain (for the meetings of the National W. C. T. U. were going on at the same time, and we had to utilize every moment that we could find in perfecting the machinery of the World's —getting its wheels so well oiled that they would run without friction) there was never an impatient word or look, but she moved serenely as one kept in perfect peace because she trusted in God."

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

In the evening the memorial services were concluded with appropriate music and a sermon by Rev. Clinton T. Wood, who spoke from the last clause of Esther 4: 14, "And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." He said in part:

"The United States has never been a monarchy and has never had a place for such as Ahasuerus, but a tyrant even more cruel and relentless had issued his decree against fathers and brothers and had long been executing his purposs of ruin in many an American home, until mothers and daughters dreaded with a hopeless dread the power of King Alcohol. A brave appeal from the Christian pulpit roused one noble woman to the situation, and she led the first charge of American mothers in their battle against the liquor traffic.

"We shall find in this woman of our own day the same lessons which we learned from Queen Esther."

The speaker enlarged upon the loyalty, the bravery and the self-sacrifice of Miss Willard, and concluded with these words:

"Is it any wonder that we can record to-night the results of such a life, and find them, even here in Wellington? The 'honor system' by which you college and seminary girls govern yourselves has been suggested by Miss Willard's work as a teacher. The local W. C. T. U. and your Y society is the result of her work. And yet, I would not say that these are so much the results of Miss Willard's life as the power of God in her life. This is not the work of woman, else would it have come to naught. It is the work of God. Because her life was hid with Christ in God, she lives among us by her influence. Miss Willard is gone. God is still with us. That which He has wrought through her can never die. I need not tell you that Miss Willard's influence has been greatest in the line of gospel temperance and purity, and it is in the ranks for the same conflict that I would enlist you all.

"May God lead you young people to take your stand in the gospel temperance army. Some of you may say that drunkenness is not an Afrikander vice, that it is confined to these poor natives. Surely that is bad enough, if that were the whole truth. But it is not. I have found out from my short two months here that young men of South Africa are just as liable to this temptation as young Americans. We thank God for Miss Willard and for all that she has done for the cause of gospel temperance. In her name and in the name of 'God, and Home and Native Land,' I would enlist you all in this cause."

THERESA M. CAMPBELL, Pres.

"A PERFECT FOOD—as Wholesome as it is Delicious."

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
BREAKFAST COCOA

"Has stood the test of more than 100 years' use among all classes, and for purity and honest worth is unequalled."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.

Costs less than ONE CENT a Cup.
Trade-Mark on Every Package.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.,
TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

That Slow Damage.

You see that common soap shrinks wool, and that's why you use Wool Soap. There is no other soap that careful people use on wool.

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD

Use common soap on the skin and you don't notice the harm so quickly. The skin repairs itself. But in time the skin loses its softness. Its natural tint reddens. Your complexion is spoiled.

WOOL SOAP

preserves the softness of wool just because its ingredients are pure. For just the same reason, it preserves the skin's softness.

You need Wool Soap in the bath room and the toilet room. There are plenty of soaps costing several times as much as Wool Soap, yet they all shrink wool. They cannot keep the skin soft.

IT SWIMS.

"Wool Soap is an excellent article, and every woman will be benefited by using it."—

A Word of Sympathy.

THE Executive committee of the Women's Liberal Federation of England, the Countess of Carlisle, president, sent the following, addressed to the secretary of the National W. C. T. U., duly signed:

"The executive committee of the Women's Liberal Federation desire to express to the National W. C. T. U. of America their warmest sympathy with them in the great loss they have sustained through the death of Miss Frances E. Willard; the committee in common with other earnest women will treasure her memory and be incited by the recollections of her example to continue their labors for those great causes in which she was so inspiring and sympathetic a comrade.

FROM far-off Panama comes a report of a memorial service for Miss Willard, held by the Anna A. Gordon L. T. L., which was very impressive and largely attended by other societies. The American flag floated at half-mast for eighteen days, and the L. T. L. has placed in Ebenezer Church (Rev. A. W. Geddes, pastor,) a tablet which bears this inscription in silver letters: "Frances E. Willard, Born September 28, 1839. Translated February 17, 1898. Tribute from Loyal Temperance Legion of Panama."

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Tennessee.

MANY good reports of work done have come to me the past month. I regret that I can only report briefly what is so cheerily reported to me at greater length.

Central Nashville union, through Mrs. Ida T. East, reports that they have not missed a meeting since the last convention. They have done good work along the evangelistic line, visiting weekly the hospital, penitentiary and jail, often having conversions during the services. They hold mothers' meetings monthly, and have parlor meetings regularly, with good programs, serving refreshments afterwards, which have proved entertaining and profitable. They have eight or ten who attend regularly, and others who come "when the spirit moves them." Central Nashville union is, I think, the only union in the state organized by our lamented Miss Willard.

Central Nashville and East Nashville unions joined in arranging the beautiful memorial services at the tabernacle in honor of our dear departed Chieftain, which were attended by four thousand people. The decorations were beautiful, and the whole program interesting and inspiring.

East Nashville union is not doing so much at present, as in days of yore; but a few faithful souls are doing what they can to promote the grand work. Mrs. Donelson, their secretary, writes that they have a new chief of police, and are hoping to dig up the police matron matter and secure the appointment of that much-needed official. Mrs. Settle, our faithful and efficient superintendent of legislative work, who is a member of that union, is preparing for her work on the curfew law, to be presented to the next legislature. The state has a woman matron over the forty-five women prisoners at the penitentiary, who is a much valued official in that institution. The W. C. T. U. women of Nashville, in their agitation for a police matron, did much to arouse the public sentiment that brought about the appointment.

A letter from Mrs. Lide Meriwether, the dear honorary president of the Tennessee W. C. T. U., tells of the beautiful memorial services held in Memphis in honor of Miss Willard. The program and exercises were arranged by the president of the local W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary B. Abernethy, who is also our state treasurer. This meeting was addressed by Rev. Hugh Spencer Williams, Rev. Dr. Hammer, by Mrs. Meriwether, and by Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi. The services for Miss Willard, and the ministrations of Miss Kearney together, caused an arrest of thought to many good people who had hitherto thought little on the subject of temperance. The churches were crowded to the doors, and at the night service the vestibule was filled with people who could not get standing room inside. At the Central Methodist church one hundred and fifty people pledged themselves to total abstinence, and a new W. C. T. U. was formed of thirty-nine members, to be called Willard union. Mrs. Agnes Brinkerhoff is president, and Mrs. L. W. Plummer, corresponding secretary. Another union was organized at Hernando Street Church, Mrs. S. L. Moore, president, and Mrs. J. D. M. Dean, corresponding secretary.

Chattanooga, through Mrs. Lowe,

(Continued on page 12.)

Food in Liquid.

Persons who do not obtain the desired nourishment from ordinary food, will find a decided gain by using the hot food drink, Postum, as it is made from especially selected portions of the field grains that furnish the body with the parts needed. It is in liquid form and looks and tastes like coffee, but it is a pure food drink that gives great strength to young and old.

It is especially recommended to those who are unpleasantly affected by common coffee.

Grocers sell it.

reports good work being done by their union. They are growing in numbers and the temperance sentiment is more popular. The superintendents of departments are taking up their work in earnest. They had a meeting on March 20, in honer of Neal Dow. A collection of nine dollars was taken and sent to Miss Dow for the Temple fund. A memorial service in honor of Miss Willard was held in the C. P. church. An interesting program was given, several ministers taking part, the music being furnished by a quartette of best musicians.

The chief work of the Chattanooga union is the building of the Working Girls' Home. They have their lot paid for and the foundation built. They hope to begin to build this spring. The churches are giving entertainments to raise funds for this work, and they are raising some in other ways. Little Mary Ferguson, a child elocutionist of wonderful power, and her mother, a member of the Chattanooga union, will start out soon on a tour over the state to raise funds for this work. It is hoped that W. C. T. U. women, wherever she goes, will do what they can to help make her meetings a success.

Winchester, through Mrs. Mattie Shook, reports some good work done. They have sent eight dollars to the Temple fund and ten dollars to the Working Girls' Home at Chattanooga, and will send two dollars to the National treasurer in response to the appeal for that amount from each union. They have added two new members the past month and are expecting more soon. They hold one business meeting and one mothers' meeting each month. They held beautiful memorial services recently in honor of Miss Willard.

Jonesboro, through their faithful Mrs. Epps, report good work. They are making unusual efforts to increase their membership and are hopeful of success. They forwarded two dollars to National treasury as per request, and are endeavoring to raise all the money they can to aid the local, state and National treasuries. Besides their regular business meetings they have regular monthly Bible readings and monthly mothers' meetings. They have added a "domestic science" department of work recently. They circulated the cigaret petition. Paid state dues at the beginning of the year. They held memorial services for Miss Willard March 20. The house was beautifully decorated and the services inspiring and impressive. A collection of ten dollars was taken for the Temple. They have also secured fifteen dollars besides for the Temple fund by means of the fifty-cent cards. They have probably sent in all fifty dollars for the Temple.

A letter from Mrs. H. T. Campbell, of Cumberland Gap, tells of their beautiful memorial services for Miss Willard and Neal Dow, and their collection of five dollars for the Temple fund. The chief work of this union is to fight the "blind tigers," which cause the good people of that neighborhood no end of trouble. They have a flourishing L. T. L. under the charge of Mrs. Campbell, which meets every Saturday.

Morristown, through Mrs. Lydia Johnson, sends an elaborate report of the Willard memorial services. An excellent program was presented and much interest was manifested by the large audience. A collection was taken up for the Temple which will enable them to contribute nine dollars for our "House Beautiful."

Harriman, through Mrs. Porter, reports eight helpful and instructive meetings—two mothers' meetings—the past eight weeks. They have Bible readings and business meetings combined. They have had several department days. Had the state president with them one day, and held memorial services for Miss Willard; had a Neal Dow celebration and an entertainment from which they realized twenty-eight dollars. A benevolent lady gave them twenty-five dollars and a gentleman gave them five dollars for literature.

Knoxville had an immense audience at the Willard memorial services. They were well conducted and impressively rendered, arousing renewed interest in W. C. T. U. work. A collection was taken for the Temple fund, and a neat sum realized. I think these Willard memorial services were held all over the state where W. C. T. U. women are found.

Mrs. Gibson, our state president, has been traveling for some weeks in the interest of W. C. T. U. work. Soon after convention she organized a union at Dayton which is doing good work. She went February 14 to Sweetwater, strengthening the union there; then to Knoxville, speaking to the Lathrap W. C. T. U., and organized a Y with Miss Nannie McCormick as superintendent, and an L. T. L. with forty members, Rev. J. R. Lauritzen, superintendent. She spoke also at the mission tabernacle, organized a W. C. T. U. of thirty-one members. Mrs. D. M. Reed, 937 Cameron street, Knoxville, president, and Mrs. W. C. McCarroll, 423 Front street, corresponding secretary. Went on to Harriman as already reported. From there to Dayton, where she found them doing good work, and held a Willard memorial service. Monday she visited the union at Spring City, and found them at work. In this trip she gained ninety-two members for the W. C. T. U. She also organized a strong union of twelve members at Cleveland, Mrs. Alma Fitch, president, Mrs. J. C. Wood, corresponding secretary. She reports also that Mrs. Haughton, of Indiana, was at Chattanooga recently, but I have no further report of her work there.

Later Mrs. Gibson went to Philadelphia, Tenn., organizing a union of six members at that place, Mrs. Fannie S. Waller, corresponding secretary. At London she made a three hours' canvass from house to house, and organized a union of twenty-four members, Mrs. Bettie Bickwell, corresponding secretary. Mrs. Gibson is still in the field at work and hopes to accomplish much before the warm weather opens up.

SILENA MOORE HOLMAN,
State Reporter, Fayetteville.

Oregon.

OREGON mourns truly for Frances Willard. Every paper, be it secular or religious, has had words of regret and admiration. The sisterhood here have summoned gatherings in many places for memorial services, and were joined by the pastors in warm and eloquent tributes to her dear memory.

In Portland, besides the special service of the local union, the first Baptist church—the "White Temple," as it is called—gave us its pulpit. Beautiful flower decorations, centered by a life-sized portrait of her whom we love to honor, were arranged by loving hands. A touching letter was read from our state president in whose absence our honorary president, Mrs. A. R. Riggs, presided. Mrs. Kern offered the opening prayer. Dr. Kellogg spoke of Miss Willard "as a great woman among great women." Mrs. Hoster and Mrs. Riggs spoke for a few minutes on her varied gifts. Dr. Henry became so eloquent with his theme that a ripple of applause forced itself from his hearers as token of their sympathy.

A large crowd gathered at Roseburg in the M. E. church, beautifully draped with white, where three pastors took part in the services. A large delegation from the Edenbower union was present, and Miss Helen Ferguson, of that union, read a beautifully expressed paper.

Portland University held a similar service, with its president, Professor Van Scoy, and Mrs. A. R. Riggs for speakers.

In the Ashland M. E. church over the picture were two doves hovering, and on a broad pendant white ribbon were her last words in gold and purple. There was there likewise a small globe belted with a white ribbon. The pastors and some young ladies helped carry out an impressive program. The collection was, as was fitting, taken up here and the other places, for the Temple fund.

At Albany the service was full of interest and loving tribute. Monmouth held a union church service in which all the pastors united, presided over by the president, Mrs. H. A. Adkins.

Multnomah county held its semi-annual convention March 2, in the Noon Rest Parlors in the morning, in the afternoon at the First Baptist church, with a large audience present. Mrs. Hoster, county president, presided, and the convention was greatly brightened by the presence of Mrs. S. H. Spangler, state organizer. Interesting addresses were made by the Rev. T. L. Elliott, Dr. Henry and Mrs. Hidden, of Vancouver, Washington.

Superintendents duly reported their work. Mrs. Albee's in connection with the Prison and Men's Resort, was particularly interesting. Mrs. Albee is the singing "Sankey" to the union. With a perfectly clear and telling enunciation the gospel hymns became heart hymns, as she sings them close to the iron gratings of the prison.

Miss Vera Kern, a youthful flower missionary, was welcomed with much warmth, as was the account of the thirty-one sailor comfort bags distributed by Mrs. Dalgleish, who is the "sailors' friend" for Portland. Weekly Bible classes and fortnightly concerts are being held at the Seamen's Institute, where twenty-seven sailor boys had signed the pledge. Mrs. Hoster is now relieved from her burden of collecting for the depot matron's salary, as the railroad company undertake to pay it entirely themselves, continuing the same efficient woman.

Dayton union declares itself to have felt a touch of resurrection power this lovely springtime, through the labors of Mrs. Spangler and her husband, in their week's gospel temperance ministrations.

Monmouth speaks in same high terms. At Dallas an accident occurred that would have disconcerted many a speaker. The electric light gave out, leaving the pulpit end of the church in the dark. But Mrs. Spangler showed she had no need of a light to talk by, but said her say, took up the collection and sang the doxology in the dark. The Monmouth ladies have lately rented a room and have a small circulating library, and hold mothers' meetings once a month.

From the state corresponding secretary's notes I see that Mrs. L. P. Rounds, who is no longer living so far away in southern Oregon, has made many visits this winter in the interest of her own departments—mercy and peace—and for the good of the cause generally. The name of twelve different places are given. At Shedd three new members were added. At Woodburn were revival services in progress. Mrs. Rounds, who has been long a Friends minister, preached a revival sermon along the lines of our evangelistic department. She says that the Monmouth union has secured a seven o'clock curfew bell, which is well done, considering the need of to-day—an hour earlier than the curfew of the middle ages. She assisted at the memorial services held at Lebanon, when the pastor took for his text, "Blessed art thou among women."

Plainview did not neglect its similar service, and Sunnyside (near Portland) had the presence of Amanda Smith at their service, who was intimately acquainted with our sainted leader.

Ashland's monthly mothers' meetings are well appreciated. They are looking after the children too, with five hundred pledge cards ready for the Sunday-schools. They sustain and pay for a column in one of their weekly papers, and have but ten dollars more to pay on their pledge of one hundred dollars for the Temple.

The Sumpter union, organized by Mrs. Hoster, and flagging at first, has now taken on a new lease of life,—a mining town, where much good may be accomplished.

The Refuge Home has been tided over these difficult years so far, by the help and energy of kind friends, notably Mrs. M. A. E. Stone and her daughter, of Portland, and Mrs. Riggs' kindly heart has been encouraged by grateful letters from her former girls. Ninety per cent saved! Thank God for such a showing!

Our state paper has enlarged its borders, embracing news now from the bordering states of West Wash-

Don't use

an imitation—especially imitations of Pearline. Many are dangerous. And dangerous washing powders can never be cheap—no matter how little you pay for them. Peddlers and untrustworthy grocers will tell you the stuff they offer is "Pearline," "same as," "as good as," "made in the same factory," etc. It's false. Pearline is the standard washing compound; never peddled; gives no prizes; simply stands on its merits as the best, safest, and most economical. 575

Millions NOW USE Pearline

Enameline

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

Produces a JET BLACK enamel gloss. Dustless, Odorless, Labor Saving. 5 and 10 cent boxes. Try it on your Cycle Chain.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

ington, Montana and Idaho, and broadened its name to the Northwest White-Ribboners. A page, too, is to be occupied by the "Working Woman's Club," that received its incipiency, at our "noon rest."

LOUISA A'HMUTY NASH,
Nashville.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

My silence for the past three weeks has indicated neither idleness nor indifference. I am sure the sisters whom I am wont to meet each week in this familiar corner need no assurance of this fact. I have simply found the days and hours so full of immediate pressing duties that all correspondence not absolutely imperative has been relegated to the future.

For nearly three weeks I have been in the sunny Southland, and I am writing to-day on board the Southern Pacific train, which is rapidly bearing me, through fields of cane and corn to New Orleans. My first objective point in Louisiana was Morgan City, where I attended the convention of the third district, and was the guest of Mrs. H. C. Pharr, both in the temporary home she had rented during the convention, and later at her beautiful residence—Fairview Plantation. The convention was very enthusiastic and helpful. The third has been Louisiana's banner district for years; and as one listened to the report it was not difficult to understand how it had won that distinction. Mrs. Pharr is a born leader and she has thrown herself with a complete consecration of time, talents and purse into the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Her hasband, Captain John P. Pharr, is her stanch ally, and is never seen without the white ribbon in his buttonhole. Even in an exciting political campaign, in which he was one of the nominees for the office of governor, the white ribbon went with him upon every public platform and was organized as a necessary adjunct of his sturdy personality. Would that we had many more such politcians!

From Fairview I went in the pleasant companionship of Mrs. Pharr, Mrs. Alice M. Zable, state corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Brownell, president of the Berwick union, to Shreveport, in the northern part of the state, to attend the eighteenth annual convention of the Louisiana W. C. T. U. There I met many of the strong, true women whom I have learned to love last year, and was the guest of Mrs. Colonel Ward, in a home which was the very embodiment of southern hospitality. Despite the fact that the dread warcloud burst upon our nation during those days, we had a very interesting convention and the reports showed much earnest, active work done. The officers were re-elected with practical unanimity of choice. Mrs. Goodale had felt obliged to resign during the winter, but so strong a pressure was brought to bear upon her that she finally consented to serve for another year the state into whose organization she has put in former years so much hard work and self-sacrifice.

It was delightful to meet again our dear Belle Kearney and also to renew acquaintance with Mrs. E. M. Haughton, National evangelist, who has just concluded three months of faithful work in the state. Altogether this convention only confirmed me in my opinion formed last year that the W. C. T. U. has nowhere more earnest, devoted women than in this fair state.

After the convention I filled brief engagements in Mansfield, Shreveport, Ruston and Patterson, had a day or two at Fairview, and am now on my way to New Orleans to attend the first convention of the Frances E. Willard state union, which was organized by Mrs. Thurman just a few days before our beloved leader passed into the life beyond. After I have helped there to the best of my abillty I shall turn my face Chicagoward.

My heart has been inexpressibly saddened by the news which reached me yesterday of the death of our peerless Mary T. Burt. Surely New York state is doubly bereaved, but two months intervening between the deaths of its National and state leaders. Every white-ribbon heart will beat in tenderest sympathy for her sisters in the Empire state, and all the more because Mrs. Burt was too great a woman to belong to any one state alone. She belonged to the nation and the loss is a national loss.

Surely the ties which bind our organization to the life beyond are rapidly strengthening. There will be a glorious reunion for us all some day. Meantime the work remains with only an added responsibility for its performance resting upon each one of us. May God help us to prove faithful!

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Official.

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR COMRADES:—I am in constant correspondence with the surgeon-general of the navy at Washington about sending delicacies to be used for sick and wounded "boys in blue." I received a letter saying that medical director, Della Van Bloodgood, naval hospital, Brooklyn, New York, had been delegated to attend to this special work. Our government has purchased an ambulance ship, the Solace, and all delicacies for this work must be sent to the above address. Boxes may be expressed paid when delivered at hospital. These should be marked plainly and a list of articles sent should be put in the box; a duplicate list put in a letter, telling when shipped and where from should also be sent to the medical director. Delicacies can be used, such as canned soups; farinaceous foods, as flaked rice, barley crystals, wheatlet, wheatine, germea, tapioca (three kinds), farina, sago and barley; jelly, gelatina, gelatine, extracts of beef and bouillon capsules, chipped beef; evaporated fruits if in glasses or boxes, lime and fruit juices, raspberry vinegar. Most of the surgeons in our army, and I don't know but all of them, are allopathic; numbers of them give alcohol as a stimulant. Would it were not so! All of these foods could be purchased cheaper in large quantities and less expense would attend the gathering of them together.

Bandages (rolled), old muslin and lint will not be needed, as bandages and lint are made by machinery now and great fears are felt of carrying microbes if collected promiscuously, but if any are ready to be sent, they will be received. Comfort bags by the hundred can be used, sending to your own state troops at the state camp, also to Mrs. Kate P. Stewart (Mother Stewart's daughter-in-law), at Tampa, Fla. Mrs. Stewart will also receive any supplies for the sick of the army stationed there at the present time. Comfort bags are made thus: Take one-fourth yard bright cretonne, denim ticking, divide in half, make two; sew one side and end making a bag; turn down and stitch one and one-half inches in width, run in a piece of tape to draw up. Put in it, pants buttons, two sizes, pearl or agate buttons, two sizes, heavy black thread, white cotton, No. 40, darning needles and cotton, blunt scissors, rolled bandages, one and one-half inches wide, court plaster, special pledge card (for which send to National superintendent), religious and temperance leaflets, Gospel hymns and a Testament. One relief committee in the East has asked for pipes and tobacco. I say put in leaflets strongly in favor of not using tobacco. A letter asking the recipient to please sign the pledge and telling them of your interest in and sympathy for, would be appreciated.

Petition President McKinley and your governor to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks on camp grounds. Send these letters by the thousand.

Yours for our loved country,
ELLA M. THACHER,
Florence, N. Y. Nat. Supt.

Medal Contests.

The appended letter which explains itself, I pass on to superintendents of medal contest work. The second prize has been very helpful to us, and I regret exceedingly its discontinuance, and shall always hold in grateful remembrance Mr. Tallman's generosity. He is a thorough prohibitionist and a warm friend of the medal contest department. I am sure the offer would have been continued but for the reasons stated.

A. E. CARMEN,
Nat. Supt.

Mrs. M. E. Carmen, The Temple, City:

DEAR MADAM:—We exceedingly regret the fact that for financial reasons we will be compelled to discontinue furnishing the American Home Magazine to winners of the second award of medal contests. We shall furnish the book to all award winners from whom we receive the printed slips until they are exhausted. We will thank you, however, not to inclose any more of the slips from this time forward. We find it a drain upon the treasury which we cannot continue for the present. We regret this more than we can state, but are obliged to take this step in the matter.

Yours very truly,
AMERICAN FASHION CO.,
Per A. B. Tallman, Pres.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

DEAR SIGNAL:—The time for the Hospital and all branches of the W. C. T. U. to memorialize the proper authorities against the use of alcoholic drinks in the army is here. Some of the directions of Surgeon Lydston for the preservation of the health of the soldiers when in camp (as taken from the last Advance, are as follows:

The soldier should take no stimulant other than coffee or tea, except under medical advice. The surgeons especially and earnestly request the command to follow this injunction to the letter. As a stimulant, sustainer and food, coffee is far superior to alcoholic or malt liquors and contains no elements of danger. Alcohol is especially detrimental to the digestive organs, liver and kidneys. These are the chief points of attack in yellow fever. Experience has proved that in both hot and cold climates the total abstainer lasts longer, endures more and fights better than the drinker. Aside from the earnest advice herein given on the liquor question, abstinence from liquor will be made a rule, infractions of which entail severe discipline.

All honor to Surgeon Lydston and his associates.

The earnest personal work for the financial needs of the Hospital we hope will not slacken until it is established in its own building. Two thousand dollars are needed immediately to pay notes now due.

We are informed on good authority that it will probably be years before one dollar will go so far in paying for building a hospital as now. Are there not some who read this whose hearts God has touched, to put this work for temperance into a place where its opportunity and power for good will be greatly increased. With our Father's blessing on earnest personal effort, the first of next May our Hospital patients will be in a comfortable new building on our own ground. For this let us labor and pray. Many thanks to those who have been gathering up the nickels, dimes and dollars for the Hospital this season. Making "our prayer unto our God," let us build up this Hospital for His glory, and also for home and every land.

ELIZABETH B. COOK.

Where Our Speakers Are.

MRS. UNRUH goes to Nebraska for May, taking a run down to Mississippi, where she is the speaker for the state convention at Yazoo City, May 14 to 18. For dates in Colorado and Wyoming and other points en route to Oregon, address her at Ord, Neb., Care Mrs. Mamie Claflin.

PLEASE notice that the address of Miss Greenwood, World's and National evangelistic superintendent, is changed from Remson St., to 358 Carlton Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A New Healthful Food Product.

For more than thirty-five centuries wheat has played a most important part in the food products of the human race. Under the old dispensation, the patriarchs made votive offerings of the first fruits of the wheat harvest; Gideon threshed wheat in the land of the Midianites, and Boas directed his young men to let handsful of the unthreshed grain lie among the sheaves to fall into the hands of gleaner Ruth, the beautiful Moabitess. Wheat appears to have been an important product in the time of Christ, and was often referred to by Him in the three years of His ministry. The writings of the earliest Eastern historians indicate that the first discovery of this cereal was made in Mesopotamia, and from thence it spread into Egypt, China and throughout the Eastern world. In some form wheat has constituted a very important part of the food of humanity in all ages, however crude may have been the processes of its preparation for food.

From earliest antiquity among prehistoric races, even in the stone period, there is abundant evidence that wheat kernels were broken, crushed, ground, or rolled between two stones, and the dough was then baked into domestic bread. When the three angels stood at the opening of Abraham's tent, Sarah took three measures, and after kneading it, baked it into cakes on the hearth. It is perfectly conclusive that in all the early centuries, the entire wheat kernel was used in making bread and in the preparation of other food products. Every perfect grain of wheat is a marvel of perfection in its construction. The outer husk has several layers of ligneous tissue, very hard in texture, which covers the farinaceous portion, and which, when ground in our modern mills, is reduced to what is known as bran. The inner portion of the envelope contains an active principle known as cerealin, which is rich in fat and salts. In the ordinary milling, this portion finds its place with the coarser residuum in the sifting processes. In the center of the kernel is found a substance friable in texture, which in grinding is made into the whitest flour.

It is an established fact in chemistry that a perfect kernel of wheat has more than a dozen elementary ingredients akin to those found in a perfectly healthy human being. If this is true, it would seem to be irrational to discard and reject any portion of the nutritive quality of the products of the wheat in its preparation for food. It is claimed by chemists and the best authorities on health foods, that the product of the entire wheat contains every constituent for building up the healthy man with perfect completeness of bone, muscle, brain and nerve.

There is no fact more clearly established than that the use of flour which rejects the coarser or outer coverings of the grain and only retains the whiter and starchy product, is a serious menace to the nerve force of the race. The greatest genius has been called into requisition to secure perfect whiteness at the sacrifice of established hygienic principles, and as a result humanity is afflicted with unnumbered ills which are born of the use of flour which has been impoverished by robbing it in its manufacture of the various salts and gluten and bone-making and nerve elements which the wheat contains and which constitute the real "staff of life."—The Evangelist.

Treasurer's Corner.

A good man sent to the National and Temple $3,600, but the heirs are contesting the gift. This necessitated a journey to the state of Washington, and as the treasurer was conversant with the gift transaction, it became her duty to go to Colfax, Wash., to defend the gift. During my absence I spoke in Colfax and Spokane. I found the women of Washington greatly interested in the coming suffrage campaign, and they are very hopeful that equality, with all its privileges, will be again restored to them.

I find upon my return that women are sending in wrappers and labels without name or place, and, of course, we cannot properly credit; also, we find that some are sending inside wrappers instead of red and blue. Do not send the inside wrappers. They will not count. We hear of one city that has 7,000 wrappers ready to send. The $100 prize is going to some union. Who will get it?

We stopped off at St. Paul for a few hours, and found the ladies very enthusiastic about the coming Convention. They are already formulating plans and setting wheels in motion that will, we are sure, bring about a very smooth-going Convention, and we are assurred that the hospitality of St. Paul will be ample for all delegates. This beautiful Western city will have all latch-strings out. All plan early for St. Paul.

HELEN M. BARKER.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to the state reporter.]

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER is the speaker at the Wisconsin state convention at Chippewa Falls, May 24–27. One evening a diamond medal contest will be given. This contest should be a feature at the convention of every state. It is a winner financially and a sentiment maker.

CONTEST work is forging frontward in the South. Virginia superintendent is sending in large orders for books and medals. Kentucky has just received three grand gold, and six silver medals for immediate use. Iowa is pushing the contests for the benefit of the Willard memorial.

REV. DR. FRANK BRISTOL, formerly of Evanston, who is now pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church of Washington, spoke the night of May 9 on the "Life and Character of Frances E. Willard." An appeal for the Willard memorial was made by Mrs. Ellis, and special subscriptions and collections taken.

MRS. MARY E. CARTLAND, state president of North Carolina, recently visited the eastern part of the state, doing some excellent work. Organized five new unions, visited and strengthened twelve old ones and increased the membership with one hundred and twenty-five active and fifty-one honorary members. The subscription list of the state paper advanced almost in the same proportion and the state treasurer was made happy with larger means. W. C. T. U. work is growing in public favor, and the talented president has more calls for addresses than she can fill.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

WILLARD memorial unions are being organized in many parts of the country. They are largely composed of women who have never been members of the organization, and in many instances these unions have been formed in towns where our work has never had a foothold. Now is the time to make large gains in membership through memorial unions.

MRS. S. M. PERKINS' birthday, April 23, was celebrated by her friends in Cleveland by a large party gathering at her home. The federation of unions was well represented, also the Ramabai Circle. Mrs. Perkins organized the latter ten years ago. Several valuable presents were received by Mrs. Perkins. Mrs. J. I. Foote made a humorous presentation address, which was responded to graciously by the hostess.

MRS. CLINTON SMITH, of Washington, entertained at a luncheon Mrs. John G. Brady, wife of the governor of Alaska, and president of the W. C. T. U. of that territory. Mrs. Brady was the recipient of much attention from the W. C. T. U. women of Washington. Flowers were sent her, and an informal reception held by her at her hotel, at which many of the ladies made her acquaintance. Hospitality is a pleasing feature of Washington white-ribboners.

ARRANGEMENTS for the W. C. T. U. camp-meeting at Washington Grove, July 16 to 25, are nearly completed. Mrs. Ella A. Boole is engaged for the entire time, and will speak at least once each Sabbath. Mary L. Hughes, a minister among the Friends, and one of Mr. Moody's students, will give a series of Bible readings and prominent state and district workers, both men and women, will complete the program.

MRS. ULRIKKA F. BRUUN has just returned to Chicago from a two months' working trip in Minnesota. She has been speaking under the auspices of different temperance societies, giving sixty addresses in the two months. Mrs. Bruun is the only field worker we have speaking in the Norwegian language and she should be kept at work all the time. She returns to Minnesota the first of June, Mrs. McCurdy making her appointments. The union organized at Madison has among its officers wives of two of the professors in the Lutheran College there. Churches of this denomination have open doors for her.

Announcement.

Dr. Crafts has completed his years' course of monthly outlines, and they are now published in "Social Progress," an illustrated book of 160 pages, which The Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Ave., N. E., Washington, D. C., will mail to white-ribboners at ten cents each, or the full list of literature named below for one dollar—less than half price.

Besides the May Outline in (1) "Social Progress," see (2) "Practical Christian Sociology," lectures III and IV; and (3) "Theses of a New Reformation in Social Ethics, Part Three; and (4) "Unfamiliar Reasons for the Rest Day," all by Dr. Crafts; and (5) "The Industrial Situation," by Dr. Washington Gladden, a report of Christian conferences of capital and labor, which Dr. Crafts regards the best single book on the labor question, though only a ten-cent pamphlet. The Bureau will send (3) and (4) free of charge, on application, with stamp.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.

Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.

J. W. FISKE, Mf'r. 39-41 Park Pl., N. Y.

It rests with you whether you continue the nerve-killing tobacco habit. NO-TO-BAC removes the desire for tobacco, without nervous distress, expels nicotine, purifies the blood, restores lost manhood, makes you strong in health, nerve and pocket-book. 1,500,000 boxes sold, 400,000 cases cured. Buy NO-TO-BAC from your own druggist, who will vouch for us. Take it with a will, patiently, persistently. One box, $1, usually cures; 3 boxes, $2.50, guaranteed to cure, or we refund money.

STOP SMOKING!

Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, New York.

CANCER

I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE TO ALL. We have a new remedy, which is a positive cure for all forms of dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sour eructations, constipation, etc. To show our good faith in the remedy, we will be pleased to send a free trial package with circulars to all who write to A. S. MILLER & CO., Box 231, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars, KIDD CHEMICAL CO., 2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

Publisher's Notes.

Two Good Temperance Songs.

"Marching Onward," of which we made mention in our issue of Dec. 30, 1897, has found its way into many of the unions of twenty-five different states.

Following this, the same author has written a temperance song and chorus especially for our work, which is just from the press. The pathetic story of a mother's love for her boy while in prison for a crime caused by whisky, is told in the song, "Your Mother is Loving You Yet." We predict for this song abundant success in our W. C. T. U's., as every mother should present her boy with a copy of it, besides it will add very much to the program of W. C. T. U. conventions, medal contests, praise meetings, etc.

"Marching Onward" is a splendid chorus for many voices, with bass solo. Price, 10 cents per copy.

"Your Mother is Loving You Yet," is a solo for contralto voice, with piano or organ accompaniment (sheet music). Price, 40 cents per copy.

The author will send both pieces by mail, postpaid, to W. C. T. U's only, for 25 cents, stamps or post-office order. Address the author and publisher, Emmet G. Coleman, Kentuck, Va.

N. B. The above offer only holds good until 500 copies are sold, after which full price will be charged. Send your order at once.

Important Announcement.

The memorial volume, "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," is now on the press and will be in the hands of the public about May 15. Those able to judge by a careful scrutiny of the prospectus, pronounce it most worthy of our beloved leader and a fitting tribute to her precious memory. It is devoted in large part to character sketches, tributes, letters of loving sympathy and a description of the commemorative services. Her devoted secretary and faithful friend, Miss Anna Gordon, has most touchingly sketched the earlier and the later years of Miss Willard's radiant life. In the preface she says, "We believe this picture of her remarkable and winsome personality will 'bless and brighten every home that it enters,' deepening in the hearts of its readers the desire to hold aloft her white banner of purity and peace, patriotism and prohibition, the protection of the home and the redemption of humanity."

One can form little idea of the delicate and thrilling insight into her pure and Christlike character from the brief snatches given in the prospectus. The same magnetism which has held thousands spell-bound makes the pulse of the heart quicken and holds the attention as one reads of the heredity, the childhood, the teacher days and the heroic work of the "beloved Chieftain" who has left her "impress upon the state, the nation and the world."

Part second, "In Memoriam," contains an account of the commemorative services, character sketches and tributes which are largely representative in character—National officers speaking for the great organization to which she gave her life; prominent American and English leaders in various works of reform, expressing the sorrow in thousands of homes and millions of hearts, where she is enshrined forever. This memorial volume will sooner or later find place in the home of every white-ribboner in the land, and the questions which have poured in upon us indicate the necessity of a general reply.

1. Is there any memorial volume of Miss Willard now being sold but the one written by Miss Gordon and published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association? Answer. None whatever. There is no other offered for sale.

2. When will the book be ready for delivery? Answer. About May 15.

3. Can we purchase it from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association? Answer. No, it is sold only by the agents of subscription book houses.

4. Why was this arrangement made? Answer. The subscription book business is carried on from year to year by firms who employ thousands of agents and a work upon the life of a noted person gives regular employment to the wageworkers who make a regular business of canvassing.

5. Can white-ribboners become canvassers? Answer. The firms who have advertised in THE UNION SIGNAL are most desirous of obtaining good agents among our own constitutuency.

6. Why can not each firm make its own terms with agents? Answer. More than sixty houses employ agents, and it was universally agreed that no one should give more than forty per cent discount, so that the rights of all might be protected, and a contract was signed which would prevent those not strictly adhering to fair play from obtaining the books. Do not deal with ANY FIRM offering more or less than forty per cent discount.

7. Why are white-ribboners subjected to the annoyance of so many agents? Answer. Dear friends, we regret this, but we trust you will promptly place your order with some one of the many, and try to feel that it is better to have many agents for one book than many agents for many books.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR MAY. "Franchise," by Marie C. Brehm, National superintendent of that department. She explains the object and methods of the franchise department, tells why the W. C. T. U. declares for woman's ballot, why it adopted this department and what is being accomplished by it; answers Bible objections so-called; points out results in the states of Wyoming and Colorado, and tells local unions how to go to work to help secure the enfranchisement of the women of their states. The Reading will make a good circulating leaflet for franchise workers.

The Memorial Number.

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

BIBLE READING FOR MAY—"The Dignity of Conferring Life," by Mrs. Mary E. Teats, of California, National W. C. T. U. purity evangelist. A reading especially helpful to mothers—and fathers as well—in that its keynote is "parentage a partnership with God." Ignorance of natural law has been the curse of the human race from the beginning, and Mrs. Teats shows from Bible history that the violation of God's law regarding the home has been disastrous to families and to nations. She truly says that knowledge of and compliance with the divine law of right generation lie at the foundation of all reforms.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Young Crusader for May and Sunday-school Supplement.

The Young Crusader for May is of especial interest, containing a delightful story by Miss Amelia Pemell, of Australia, reports from various state Loyal Temperance Legions and some excellent poems appropriate for recitations on Decoration Day. An excellent picture of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, "our promoted comrade," who for nearly twenty years was president of New York W. C. T. U., is on the first page of this number. Mrs. Burt was deeply interested in the work of the L. T. L., and was justly proud of the position of the senior organization in her own state and the record it has made under the leadership of Mrs. Harriet A. Metcalf.

In addition to other important features, the May number of The Young Crusader contains the Sunday-school Supplement, written by Mrs. Stella Irvine, with illustrations, and instruction of great value. Price, one copy per year, 25 cents. In clubs of 10, 20 cents; in clubs of 50 or more to one address, 12 cents. Sample packages, 100 to one address, $1. Price of Supplement without The Young Crusader, 65 cents per 100 copies; $2.75 for 500; $5 per 1,000.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple.

DYSPEPSIA

"For six years I was a victim of dyspepsia in its worst form. I could eat nothing but milk toast, and at times my stomach would not retain and digest even that. Last March I began taking CASCARETS and since then I have steadily improved, until I am as well as I ever was in my life."
DAVID H. MURPHY, Newark, O.

CANDY CATHARTIC
Cascarets
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
REGULATE THE LIVER

Pleasant, Palatable, Potent, Taste Good. Do Good, Never Sicken, Weaken, or Gripe. 10c, 25c, 50c.
... CURE CONSTIPATION. ...
Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago, Montreal, New York. 311

NO-TO-BAC Sold and guaranteed by all druggists to CURE Tobacco Habit.

"Sanitas" Means Health.
How to have thoroughly sanitary surroundings is told in a pamphlet by Kingzett, the eminent English chemist. Price 10 cents. Every household should contain this little help to comfortable living. It will be sent free to subscribers of this paper.
THE SANITAS CO. (Ltd.),
636 to 642 West 55th Street, New York City.

Give a Thought to the need and the quality as well.
WHEATLET
Is A Simple Food
and is easily and perfectly digestible. Is made of the WHOLE WHEAT denuded of the irritating husk particles, and is Rich in Gluten.

If your grocer does not keep it, send us his name and your order—we will see that you are supplied.
Made only by the
FRANKLIN MILLS CO., LOCKPORT, N. Y.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS
FOR MAN AND BEAST
THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
84-90 BEEKMAN ST. NEW YORK — 311-313 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO
Catalogues mailed on request, and special prices given to all Charitable and Temperance Societies.

Copyright, 1893, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

A BEAUTIFUL MEMORIAL PIN
The W. C. T. U. of St. Louis offer you an entirely new design in a
MEMORIAL PIN OF
MISS WILLARD
It is a perfect likeness of our beloved leader. A few months before her death Miss Willard gave her permission to us to use her picture on a pin and devote the proceeds to the benefit of the St. Louis W. C. T. U. This permission was granted especially on account of the hard trials and heavy expenses of the National Convention in St. Louis in 1896, which left us one thousand dollars in debt. A portion of the proceeds from the sale of these pins will be given to the Temperance Temple, the remainder to be used for general temperance work. State, County and Local Unions can make money by ordering these Pins in quantities.

Large, single pin	$ .25
" per doz.	2.00
" per 100	10.00
Small, single pin	.10
" per doz.	1.00
" per 100	5.00

Address all orders to
MRS. ABBIE FRANKEL
4119 WESTMINSTER PL. ST. LOUIS, MO.

HOLY GRAIL Mary Hanford Ford.
A beautiful book, giving history and interpretation of the literature of the Holy Grail from the earliest mediæval stories to the Parsifal of Wagner. The interest is held from beginning to end.
PROF. GEO. D. HERRON:—I know of nothing so beautiful in literature concerning the spiritual facts and forces of the relations of love and life.
THE OUTLOOK: Mrs. Ford has done real service to literature, philosophy and religion.
Sample pages free. Prepaid, $1.00
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO.
277 Madison St., CHICAGO.

$10 A DAY TO AGENTS
MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT WAR BOOK.
"Our Country in War." All about armies, navies, coast defences, Maine Disaster, Cuba, Our War with Spain and relations with Foreign Nations. Nearly 600 pages, written since the Maine Disaster. Magnificent colored illustrations. Agents making $10 to $30 per day. No experience necessary. Most liberal terms guaranteed, 20 days' credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 9 two cent stamps to pay postage.
EDUCATIONAL UNION, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

LADIES NEW PANEL SHOES
Free to anyone who will sell just a few boxes of our Toilet Soap to their friends. The very latest thing in ladies shoes, made from the best of French Vici Kid, black or chocolate. Finest worked fancy silk vesting in panel tops. New coin toe with kid tops and new style backstay. All sizes and widths. You will be delighted to learn how easy you can obtain these shoes. Illustrated premium list of Bicycles, Cameras, Dinner Sets, etc., mailed free. Write today for full particulars. This offer may not appear again.

H. H. DAWSON & CO.,
90 State Street, Dept. 62, CHICAGO.

Signal Notes.

THE Kansas State Temperance Union pledge includes besides total abstinence a promise "to do all in my power for the maintenance and enforcement of the prohibitory law."

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., is holding prohibition Sabbath afternoon meetings at 218 Nicollet Ave., with successful pledge-signing and large audiences.

THE temperance cause is making great progress in Scotland. Paisley has stuck to the reduction of license movement until only two licensed taverns are left in the city.

THE ninth annual convention of the National Young People's Christian Union of the Universalist church will be held at Chicago, Ill., July 13 to 20, 1898.

ON account of the disturbed condition of public affairs and the sus- of pension of business in consequence the war, the officers of the National Suffrage Association have thought best to indefinitely postpone all of the New England conferences.

PROHIBITION in North Dakota is gaining ground every day. The lawbreakers are finding it hard work to evade the State Enforcement League, and the officers of the law in many places are doing much to punish the evildoers. One of the largest wholesale liquor houses in Milwaukee has taken its traveling salesman out of the state, and has given as their reason that he did not sell enough now to pay expenses. A few weeks ago an agent of the Great Northern Railway was found guilty and fined for delivering a C. O. D. package that contained whisky.

GREAT BRITAIN'S drink bill last year went up $17,500,000 over 1896, and reached the enormous total of $760,000,000. The amount wasted in drink was double that spent for bread, was more than all the rents of houses and farms in the United Kingdom, and double what was expended in linen, cotton and woolen goods. The British nation is the only one which allows children under ten years of age to purchase beer at public houses for carrying home, the only nation which allows children under sixteen to purchase and drink liquor in public houses.

THE third annual report of the North Dakota State Enforcement League shows a large amount of work done in closing blind pigs, and declares that the prohibitory law is now better enforced than ever before. In the resolutions adopted, this occurs: "We express most emphatically our condemnation of Mr. John F. Cowan, who occupies the office of attorney-general of this state, for his persistent neglect and tacit refusal to perform the duties of his office. Nevertheless we recognize that after three years he has at last closed the blind pigs at Devil's Lake."

THE National Christian Citizenship League, through its president, Edwin D. Wheelock, 153 La Salle street, Chicago, and its secretary, makes its fifth annual call for the celebration of the New Fourth of July. It appeals in particular to all pastors, churches, young people's organizations, all temperance and patriotic societies, and all other leaders to unite in arranging such celebrations, mass-meetings and other exercises on this day and the Sabbath preceding, as shall make it indeed a "New Fourth of July," by the growth of a higher patriotism.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

HAS BEEN WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon has been assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled, is now on the press and will be in the hands of the reading public before May 30. Please send orders for books to the firm of whom you purchased your prospectus and they will be promptly filled.

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

OFFICIAL PUBLISHING HOUSE OF THE W.C.T.U.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicago.

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and coworker

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on sale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL

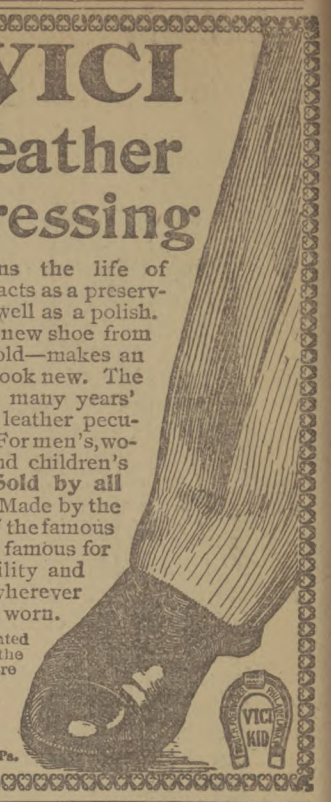
These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single Pictures, each, - - - $ .50
3, to one address, - - - - 1.00
12, or more, to one address, per doz. 3.00

A beautiful picture of "Rest Cottage," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the

W. T. P. A., The Temple,



or by MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treasurer, 539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

VICI Leather Dressing

Lengthens the life of leather—acts as a preservative as well as a polish. Keeps a new shoe from looking old—makes an old shoe look new. The result of many years' study of leather peculiarities. For men's, women's, and children's shoes. Sold by all dealers. Made by the makers of the famous Vici Kid, famous for its durability and softness wherever shoes are worn.

An illustrated book about the wear and care of shoes mailed free.

Robert H. Foerderer, Philadelphia, Pa.

WHY is the North Pole like an illicit whisky manufactory? Because it's a secret still.

SUPREME COUNCIL OF THE ROYAL ARCANUM

will hold a meeting in Cleveland, O., May 18-25, for which the Nickel Plate Road is authorized to sell tickets at one and one-third fare for the round trip, on certificate plan. Unexcelled dining car service. Vestibuled sleeping cars. Three through trains daily from the Van Buren street Passenger Station. For full particulars call up telephone Main, 3389, or address, J. Y. Calahan, Gen'l Agent, 111 Adams St.

LITTLE Barbara, on seeing a dish of lemon jelly placed upon the table, exclaimed, "Oh, mamma, see how nervous that jelly is."

BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES,

Rochester, N. Y., May 16-24, 1898.

The Nickel Plate Road is authorized to sell tickets to Rochester, N. Y., and return, at one fare and one-third for the round trip, on certificate plan, account of above meeting. Tickets good on any of our through express trains leaving Chicago daily from Van Buren Street Passenger Station at 10:35 a. m., 2:55 p. m., and 10:15 p. m. Vestibuled sleeping cars and unsurpassed dining car service. You will save time and money by patronizing the Nickel Plate Road. For further information address J. Y. Calahan, Gen'l Agent, 111 Adams St., or telephone Main 3389.

THE Vegetarian quotes what it calls a good example of street wit. "A newspaper boy who in the dusk of afternoon was crying his wares, 'Globe, Sun, Star,' was approached by a gentleman who facetiously asked him for a Moon. The boy glanced up at the pall of darkness overhanging the city, and replied, 'Not out yet!' and continued crying the merits of his various papers."

For Over Indulgence

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It preserves and renews the vitality, strengthens the nerves, and stimulates the stomach to healthy action.

A PREACHER who was a great smoker, closed an eloquent address on Christian activity by exclaiming: "Brethren, there is no sleeping compartment on the train to glory!" An old lady in the front seat who knew of the minister's appreciation of the soothing weed, responded: "No, brother; nor smoking compartment either."

Week Ending May 14.

"The Colorado Special," one night to Denver via Chicago & North-Western, leaves Chicago daily 10:00 A. M., arriving Denver 1:30 the next afternoon. Palace Sleeping Cars, Buffet-Library Cars, Free Reclining Chair Cars; Dining Cars serve meals "a la Carte." City Ticket Office, 212 Clark St.

A GENTLEMAN, to make himself agreeable, was conversing with the small boy upon various topics, such as politics, religion, travels, etc., when he suddenly turned to him with the question, "What nationality are you?" "Prohibition," was the quick response. Then as he saw his mistake he added, "Well, my papa was prohibition and my mamma is prohibition and so I must be."

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 20. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, May 19, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
News from the Front—Temperance—About Women—Educational—At Home—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, In Memoriam. By Ruth Plummer 3
Electing a Kansas Mayor. By Emma Playter Seabury 3
The Twelfth an Amethyst 4
Divine Service in Bread. By Frances Bennett Callaway 4
Willard Hall Echoes 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Introductory to the National Convention of Japan . . . 5
A Day in Ottawa 5
The Last Work of Mrs. Mary T. Burt 5
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, To Learn to Repeat 7
Billy 7
Growing Into It. By Ruth Graham 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Key to the Problem of Purity in Art 8
Chancellor Snow, of Kansas University Speaks 8
Liquor Dealers Sustain the National Honor! 8
Laura S. Haviland 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Mrs. Boole's Monthly Letter 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
From the Honorary Secretary 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Indiana—Arkansas—North Carolina—Missouri—Michigan 11-13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Health and Heredity 13
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
W. C. T. U. NEWS 14
Take Notice 14
Convention Calendar 14
Obituaries 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

RED-LETTER DAY.

FLOWER MISSION DAY—JUNE 9.

The Birthday of Jennie Casseday.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notes and Comments.

A CABLEGRAM from Miss Agnes Slack, secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. and of the British B. W. T. A., announces that Lady Henry Somerset was elected with great enthusiasm president of the British Women's Temperance Association at its annual council in London, England. The general officers cabled congratulations to the British organization in their choice of a leader.

THERE died in Bristol, England, a few weeks ago, a man, the record of whose life and work is a most suggestive study for all who believe in prayer as a factor of success in business. "A romance studded with miracles," Mr. Stead calls the story of George Müller's orphanages—"which only ceased to be miracles because they nappened every day." The necessary money for the establishment of these orphan homes and their maintenance during a period of sixty years came, we are told, without advertising or any personal solicitation. "George Müller simply prayed—and he got the cash." The sum raised and expended has been in round numbers about five million dollars. In the reports of "The Lord's Dealings with George Müller," it is said that four thousand of his prayers were answered on the same day they were made. The main point emphasized by this man of faith was that the primary object of the Bristol homes was to prove to a doubting Christendom that God hears and answers prayer as faithfully now as he did in the days of the prophets and of the apostles, or, as Mr. Stead puts it, in his fascinating character sketch in the current number of the Review of Reviews, "he did not use the prayer telephone in order to found the orphanage; he founded the orphanage in order to demonstrate the utility of the prayer telephone."

A PASTORS' conference in Grand Rapids, Mich., recently adopted a series of resolutions recommending the absence of display at funerals, both as to extended sermonizing and publicity in general; also that "mourning attire be discarded." We are glad to note the rapidly growing sentiment against the wearing of black garments as an emblem of grief. It comes of a better understanding of what death means. As we change our ideas of death our mourning customs will necessarily change. While our human nature mourns—and always will mourn—when our loved ones pass beyond our natural vision, let us, in outward symbol at least, "go bury our sorrow," remembering that "the world hath its share"; let us testify to our love and respect for our departed friends not by calling attention to our loss, but by emphasizing their gain.

AGAIN are we called upon to chronicle the death of one of our members who has for years been prominently connected with the work as state president, National superintendent, speaker and writer. Mrs. Esther T. Housh, honorary life president of Vermont, formerly corresponding secretary of Massachusetts, and also former superintendent of the departments of press and literature in the National W. C. T. U., died at her home in Boston, May 8. The last time Mrs. Housh was outside of her home she took part in a memorial service held for Miss Willard under the auspices of the Boston union. On her return home she said to Mrs. Mary E. Cheney: "I wonder who among our prominent workers will be the next to be called up higher. When the summons comes to you and me, may we be as ready to respond as was our beloved Frances." The funeral services at her home were conducted by the Boston W. C. T. U. Floral offerings covered the casket and the white ribbon nestled among them and had its place upon her heart which had always beat so true for the principles for which it stands. On Thursday, May 12, she was laid to rest beside her husband and little son, at Fort Wayne, Ind. Mrs. Housh made for herself a warm place wherever she went. She was a ready writer, and some of our leaflets which are best known and which have been most influential in winning members to our ranks were written by her. We give her joy, and think again of how our victorious hosts on the other side are augmenting. Meantime, for us there remains the battle. May we fight as good soldiers till we, too, shall lay down the armor and enter into the light and life beyond.

IN a letter just received from Mrs. Margaret Ellis, our faithful and capable superintendent of legislation, she beseeches us to tell the women of the exasperating shifting of responsibility which she meets with among the army and navy authorities at Washington, in respect to orders concerning the prohibition of intoxicants among the soldiers and sailors. We cannot do better than to quote her own words: "I wrote President McKinley, who, as commander-in-chief of both army and navy, I supposed had the power to issue an order prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquors in or near national military camps, and his answer received through his secretary was: 'The matter is referred to the war department.' I went to the secretary of war, and after waiting two and a half hours, was referred to his secretary, but as the latter had received no instructions from his superior he could say nothing 'for certain.' I wrote General Miles, who answered: 'It is out of my province; only Congress can issue such an order.' Whereupon I went to Hon. H. C. Brewster, representative from New York state and chairman of committee on alcoholic liquors. He 'was very sorry, but was going away for ten days; when he returned perhaps a quorum might be secured; but even if it was there was very little hope of getting the consent of Speaker Reed to present it.' (It is a fact nothing is allowed to be presented until the Speaker has seen the bill and knows all about it; he crushes everything he does not favor.) I saw Mr. Dingley, who is 'a good temperance man,' and asked his advice. He replied: 'You had better try for it in the Senate.' I went to Senator Quay, chairman of the committee having the matter in charge; he laughed, and shrugging his shoulders said: 'Let the House take the initiative and we will see about it after.' Every man from the President down has shifted the responsibility! I went again to the White House and tried to see Mr. McKinley, but the pressure of business made it impossible. The secretary advised me to write him again and I did so, receiving a reply from J. Addison Porter this morning saying 'the matter had been referred to the war department.' I have just mailed another letter to Secretary Alger. It is the same old story. Oh, I do wish the women would swamp the White House with letters!"

Current Events.

News From the Front.

Dewey's Victory at Manila Duplicated by Sampson at San Juan.

SINCE Admiral Dewey gave such a brilliant demonstration of the efficacy of the American navy, there has been a rapid forward movement of troops and supplies to the southern and western coasts, the one prepared to invade Cuba, the other to occupy and hold the Philippine islands. The latter expedition will comprise fifteen thousand troops under command of Gen. Wesley Merritt, and will sail from San Francisco at once.

On May 11 the United States torpedo boat, Winslow, participated in an engagement in Cardenas Bay and suffered severely under the Spanish fire, five men being killed, the first American victims of the war. The Winslow was disabled and was towed to a place of safety by the cutter Hudson.

May 12 Admiral Sampson's fleet bombarded San Juan, the seat of Spanish power in Porto Rico. The engagement lasted three hours and resulted in much damage to the batteries and a portion of the city. One man was killed on board the flagship New York and seven slightly wounded in the squadron. No serious damage to any ship resulted.

The Spanish flotilla, whose whereabouts has been a matter of conjecture since the opening of active hostilities, called at Fort de France, Martinique, on the 13th, and received sealed orders. The greatest naval battle in history is imminent, Admiral Sampson's fleet being under orders to engage the enemy at the first opportunity. The flying squadron under command of Commodore Schley, left Hampton Roads on the 13th, supposedly to join Admiral Sampson's forces. The troops mobilized at Chicamauga, and under orders to start for Cuba, will now be held to await the result of the naval conflict.

The war department has given orders for the wives and children of officers stationed at Fort Warren, at Boston, to be removed to places of safety in anticipation of an engagement with the Spanish fleet on the Atlantic coast.

NOTES.

CUBAN refugees, mostly wealthy women with their children, are arriving at American ports.

THE Spanish prisoners captured by the Nashville on the Argonata have been taken to Fort McPherson, Atlanta.

THE government of Uruguay has refused permission to establish a Red Cross Society at Montevideo in aid of the wounded Spaniards.

GEORGE DOWNING, arrested at Washington on suspicion of being a Spanish spy, hanged himself in the military barracks where he was confined.

THE war balloon which will accompany the invading army to Cuba, will keep a sharp lookout over the country within a radius of forty miles of the camp which will be established there.

A VOLUNTEER company in Ohio has been dubbed "The Disappointed Lovers," because of the number of young men belonging to it who have enlisted on account of disappointment in love affairs.

ONE of the largest merchant firms of Washington has shipped 10,000 pounds of the best butter obtainable to Rear Admiral Dewey at the Philippine Islands. It goes by fast freight to San Francisco in a refrigerator car, thence to the Philippines by a fast steamer.

HON. JOSEPH CHAMBERLIN, secretary of state for the colonies of England, said in a public speech on May 13:

The time has arrived when Great Britain may be confronted by a combination of powers, and our first duty, therefore, is to draw all parts of the empire into close unity, and our next to maintain the bonds of permanent unity with our kinsmen across the Atlantic. There is a powerful and generous nation speaking our language, bred of our race, and having interests identical with ours. I would go so far as to say that, terrible as war may be, even war itself would be cheaply purchased if in a great and noble cause the stars and stripes and the Union Jack should wave together over an Anglo-Saxon alliance.

Temperance.

THE Princeton Inn has secured a liquor license for the current year, but the application therefor does not bear the signatures of any of the Princeton professors.

REV. DR. LORIMER, of Tremont Temple, Boston, is credited with a willingness to run for governor of Massachusetts on the prohibition ticket if the churches of the state will stand by him.

THE Canadian prohibition plebiscite bill has passed its second reading in the House of Commons without amendment, and with only two speeches against prohibition. It will be concurred in by the Senate within the next ten days.

THE Scottish Temperance Convention held at Dundee, Scotland, at which delegates were present from all parts of the country, called upon the church "to consider anew the extent of the moral and spiritual wreckage within and without the church caused by the drinking customs, and to press more urgently the claims of total abstinence upon the conscience of her members." It also urged "all school boards to make arrangements for the instruction of the children in the nature of alcohol and its effects on the human frame," and asked that only unfermented grape juice should be used at the Lord's Supper. Many leading men took part in the meetings, which were large and enthusiastic, and sixty sermons were preached on the subject the Sabbaths previous.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH, of Kokomo, Ind., has organized a temperance society based upon the declaration of general conference. Members must take the following pledge: "Believing with our board of bishops that 'the liquor traffic can never be legalized without sin,' and that God's woes are spoken alike upon the drunkard and the drunkard-maker, and believing that 'no political party has a right to expect nor ought to receive the support of Christians so long as it stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself on record in attitude of open hostilities to the saloon,' I do pledge myself, God helping me, never to vote or use my influence for any man or with any party which does not meet fully the above conditions, and I will use all my proper means to induce others to join with me in this pledge to the end, that they may be saved from a wicked complicity with this iniquitous business, and to hasten the coming of the time when this barrier to the happiness of the home and nation shall be overthrown."

About Women.

THE widow of Henry W. Grady has been made one of the directors of the Atlanta Constitution Publishing Company.

MRS. ELIZABETH R. FOLGER and Ella O. Shoemaker were elected members of the board of education of Massillon, O., on the republican ticket.

MRS. JAMES HAVENS, formerly of Denver, Col., has been appointed postmaster at Pabor Lake, Fla., to succeed W. E. Pabor, poet laureate of the National Editorial Association.

MISS JESSIE E. PARKER was elected mayor of Kendrick, Idaho, at the recent election, after a spirited contest. The opposing candidate, it is said, was one of the most popular men in the city.

MRS. MARGARET MCGRATH, of Tallow, County Waterford, Ireland, who recently gave birth to quadruplets—all daughters—has received a check for £4 as the Queen's bounty.

THE House joint resolution to readmit Nellie Grant Sartoris, daughter of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States, has been passed by the Senate.

A WIFE'S rights in Kansas has been clearly defined by the state supreme court. It decided that if a wife, even if not properly a wife, aids her husband to acquire property, she is entitled to an equal division of such property on separation.

MISS A. J. DAVIES, one of Wale's educational pioneers, who has seven times been returned on the Liverpool school board, and on the last occasion at the head of the poll, has just declined to be made the recipient of a public testimonial at the hands of her fellow citizens, and the money subscribed will be in due course returned.

Educational.

PROF. JAMES SETH, of Cornell University, has been elected professor of philosophy of Edinburg University.

THE annual school report of Italy shows about 50,000 common schools. At half of these attendance is compulsory. Of the 50,000 teachers, two-fifths are competent, one-half passable and the remainder totally inefficient. There are 2,300,000 school children.

A MOVEMENT has been started in England to found a university scholarship, in honor of Charlotte M. Yonge. The scheme is supported by the princess of Wales, the archbishop of Canterbury and many of the bishops and nobility. The memorial is in recognition of Miss Yonge's "great success as the pioneer of that regious and high-toned literature for young people, which for the last fifty years has been the special glory of England, and the admiration of America and other countries."

UNDER the efficient leadership of their president, Lady Lee Anderson, the Ladies' Society in Dublin, Ireland, have practically undertaken the full care of the orphanage at Aintab, Turkey, and are sending a lady to take the position of matron. They will thus have charge of some 300 Armenian orphans, and very much lighten the work of the American missionaries. The Swiss are supporting 230 orphans in Sivas for a term of five years, and have sent two excellent ladies to look after their welfare and instruction. In twenty centers the American missionaries are still caring for more than 2,000 orphans, supported by funds sent through the National Armenian Relief Committee, Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall St., New York.

At Home.

THE price of wheat in Chicago has reached $1.75, the highest point recorded since 1888.

A WHOLESOME check upon the divorce business in North Dakota is the decision of the Supreme Court, that the plaintiffs in divorce suits must be bona fide residents of the state.

ON May 10 the Senate passed a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution, fixing inauguration day hereafter on May 4 instead of March 4. The unfavorable weather that usually prevails in March is the one reason for the change.

THE House has passed the labor arbitration measure, providing for the arbitration of labor disputes between employés and certain common carriers, a bill which had received wide indorsement by labor organizations throughout the country.

THE fortieth annual convention of the Illinois state Sunday-school association met at Galesburg on May 10 and continued in session three days. Officers were elected as follows: President, John S. Farson, Chicago; secretary, F. Y. Hamilton, Bloomington, and assistant secretary, A. C. Wilson, Sparta.

WALTER WELLMAN, the Chicago journalist, sailed for Europe May 10, and on June 15, will meet at Tromsoe, Norway, the members of the exploration party who will join him in another attempt to reach the north pole. These include Lieutenant D. B. Baldwin, of the United States Weather Bureau, who was the meteorologist of the last Peary expedition; Dr. Edward Hofman, of Grand Haven, Mich.; Prof. James H. Gore of Columbian University, Washington, D. C.; and Querof Harlan, of the United States Coast Survey. Equipped with helpers, dogs, sledges, provisions, etc., the party will sail on June 20 on the ice steamboat Fridtjof.

Abroad.

LORD ABERDEEN has officially notified the Dominion government that the Queen has accepted his resignation as Governor-General of Canada, and he will leave for England next October.

SERIOUS riots have taken place in Italy on account of the increased price of bread. Hundreds of rioters are reported to have been killed by the troops, and some of the provinces have been placed under martial law.

Contributed.

In Memoriam.

BY RUTH PLUMMER.

GO, sweet spirit! Labor done!
In the name of God's dear Son!
Though our hearts are rent and torn,
Though the smitten nations mourn,
Passing 'neath the Shepherd's rod
Thou hast heard the voice of God.

Pure of heart and white of life,
Making peace and healing strife;
Bringing back the wanderer lost
Home to God at any cost,
Thy whole life's divine intent;
Gone the way thy Master went.

Go, sweet spirit! thy reward
Waits thee with thy risen Lord.
Ours the sorrowing funeral train,
Angels singing glad refrain;
Ours, the longing tear-dimmed eyes,
Thine the peace of Paradise.

Mt. Vernon, O.

Electing a Kansas Mayor.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

"HENRY, you do not mean to say that Mr. Morgan was the republican nominee for mayor last night?" said Mary Ashley.

"Certainly; why not? Cyrus is a good fellow, he represents the business interests of the town."

"His business must be conducted then by some one beside himself. His time is spent mostly at the hotel, in the billiard room, or with supposed gamblers. He represents the very worst element in the town; he aids and abets the joints, he gambles openly, he is a libertine in morals; no woman will cast a vote for him, Henry."

"Oh, the woman's vote doesn't amount to anything," he replied. "Very few registered last year. The sentiment of the town is against that sort of thing. And if they had the nerve to put another candidate in the field, it means victory for the populis[illegible]icket and Liepman. Morgan is a much better m[illegible]n than Liepman and the interest of the state demands a straight republican ticket. The Reform League has nominated a goody-goody imbecile, Evarts. Morgan is the best man of the three for the town."

"Yes, the most polished of the two immoral men nominated, the representative of the genteel lawbreakers; I had hoped so much from this nomination. How did it happen, Henry?"

"We wanted to force the independent candidate to resign, and put up Burns, but the convention was packed, and rushed through before we knew it. I am sorry, but there is no choice now."

"I am not so sure of that," she said; "I believe something will be done; party can not always stifle principle!"

"Why, Mary, surely you are not going into politics?" laughed the husband as he passed his cup to be refilled. "I shall need more coffee to brace me up if my quiet little wife revolts against custom and usauage."

"Henry I am not sure but it is as much the duty of the church people to maintain the laws of the state by electing good men, as to pray and submit, as we have done year by year, bringing in evangelists to change the hearts of the people, mostly good law-abiding citizens. I am no politician but I think it is time the joints in this town were closed."

"Well, Mary, you good people nominated Evarts, and he is as near nobody as a man well could be."

"No, Henry, that man was not the voice of the convention. It was also packed. There were one hundred people in the house and one hundred and seventy ballots cast for a weak man. The meeting was captured; Evarts rushed in, so that the other candidate, Burns, a really strong man would not be nominated, you know that. It makes my heart sick, not for you or my own boys, because you are not given to frequenting evil places, but for those whose husbands and boys are. Mrs. Thomas was here last night, hoping for Burns to be the voice of the republicans. It is dreadful to have this same corrupt city government the next two years, when we might prevent it."

"Oh, nothing will much matter," he said, reassuringly. "Morgan may brace up and work for the respect of the good citizens."

Henry Ashley rose from the breakfast table and his wife went as usual about her work, but her heart ached and her head was full of ideas that almost alarmed her.

"I believe it is not right to submit," she kept saying to herself, "the women have the power, they ought to use it."

The days went on. Nothing but election matters were talked about in the city. It was a thoroughly busy, live little city of ten thousand, with zinc smelters, right in the heart of the coal region, five railroads and full of ambitious business enterprises. There were thousands of foreigners in the place and it was near enough the Missouri line to know something of the importation of liquors, but never until within the past few months had there been anything approaching the saloon in the quiet streets.

Since the triumph of the populists in the fall elections, and the election of a county attorney favoring the whisky interest, saloons had sprung up here and there, no longer in back streets and hidden in basements, but in some of the best blocks in the city. Protest had been useless; the law-abiding citizen stood appalled in the presence of the great evil; the gambling dens flourished unmolested; men were inert or weak, or changed in sentiment or principle. Business men hesitated, church men were silent, women saw the invader and his blighting influence, but unused to fighting evil except by prayer, afraid of their power, they sat mute, dazed, and the whisky came in, in ever increasing quantities, and more and more men were seen intoxicated on the streets. Still everything was very quiet. The Morgan men began to breathe freely, and the women said nothing. But if the men had been watchful they might have decided there was much more interest in the W. C. T. U. meetings than usual; and if they could have listened behind the doors they might have heard their president appealing eloquently to the women to use the power the state had placed in their hands, renounce all the nominees and nominate a man for mayor whom they could trust.

Mary Ashley represented not only the temperance element of the place but also the society people, and there was a general feeling of satisfaction when she seated herself in the crowded meeting in the parlors of Mrs. Thomas, whose son had been seen to emerge from a saloon as she came down the street that afternoon.

"It is no use," said the first speaker, a timid little woman, but nevertheless one having the courage of her own convictions, "we have nominated Evarts. It was a fraud but he was the voice of the meeting we called. We must stand by our colors and vote for him."

"Then you throw your vote away, and worse than that," exclaimed Mrs. Thomas, "you make the election of Liepman sure. If the women vote for Morgan, Liepman is defeated. We are the balance of the power. Morgan, bad as he is, is better than Liepman, but who wants to vote for any one of these three men?"

"Not one of us!" exclaimed an enthusiastic little woman, "all who wish to do so, say yes." Not a sound was uttered. "All contrary, say no," and there was a thundering "No,"—a chorus of all the voices present.

"There are a good many things women have to submit to," said Mrs. Peters, an ardent suffragist, "but this is not one of them. When parties nominate men we respect, stand by them; when they do not, ignore them. It is principle and not party we represent. It is said with more than a show of justice that we are not aggressive enough in our work. If we spent money as freely as the whisky men do, we should soon wipe out intemperance. I advocate open rebellion, calling a mass-meeting and nominating Burns. Half the republicans who are too cowardly to break with their party will vote for him. He will see that the law is enforced."

Mrs. Ashley rose in the crowded room and every eye was upon her. The color came and went in her face; she had never heard her voice before in any meeting. "Sisters," she said, "Mrs. Peters is right. We are afraid to use our power. We, every one of us, are church women, how much have the men and women of the church done for temperance in this city? The husband of every woman I know here is pledged to support the nominee of his party, regardless. If our husbands vote for Morgan, I say every Christian woman should nullify that vote in the interest of clean government. What do you say?"

There was a burst of applause. "As church women," she continued, "we owe it to ourselves and our families not to elect men who will ruin our boys or tempt those of our neighbors. I do not believe it is right to submit to party, when party is represented by unworthy, licentious men. The church and the W. C. T. U. must vote temperance, as well as pray temperance, before this is accomplished."

The contagion of Mrs. Ashley's enthusiasm spread like wild fire, and before the meeting adjourned resolutions were adopted as to a course of action. This was Saturday; the election was Tuesday; not a minute was to be lost. A deputation went direct to the printing office. Handbills were struck off which blazed all along the streets that night calling a mass meeting for Monday night. Another deputation waited for Mr. Burns and imbued him with some of their enthusiasm. They spent Sunday laboring with refractory members in their own families, but Monday no grass grew under the feet of this dauntless little band of western women. There were timid ones and hearts sore afraid, but they worked together, a unit. Knots of men talked here and there on the streets. Morgan and Liepman were alert and anxious and left no stone unturned which might be in their favor.

Monday night the opera house was packed. The hoodlums went, expecting to capture the meeting, but to their surprise not a W. C. T. U. woman was on the platform. The representative church and society women were there, women who had never taken any part in politics before, and the men on the platform were some of the cleverest speakers in the city. They were disarmed. There were a few brief speeches, then Evarts arose and resigned in favor of the candidate whom the ladies chose to nominate. "I only want to see the law enforced and whisky abolished," he said, "and there is a man in the audience who can do this better than I can. It gives me great pleasure to present to you one of our most popular townsmen, and to nominate Mr. Burns."

There were deafening cheers; dissenting voices were heard; cries of "no, no, we have our republican nominee," but no attention was paid to these voices.

Mary Ashley seconded the nomination and made an impassioned appeal to the citizens to support Mr. Burns, on behalf of the home and right.

"I am not," she said, "a W. C. T. U. woman, as you know, but I am a temperance woman. The worst cranks in the temperance ranks are the women and men who have never felt the power and degradation of the tempter, but in as much as I, as we all, are our brothers' keepers, and guardians of our sisters' virtue, I appeal to you to help me support a man who will hold up the hands of the law."

She sat down amid deafening cheers, and Henry Ashley in the back of the house, pale, nervous and astonished, listened and wondered.

Burns was nominated by acclamation. The women had packed their convention as well as the men. Enthusiastic men stood on the seats and shouted; women waved their handkerchiefs; clergymen lifted their voices in the cause of good government who had never said one word about living the religion they professed to their congregations before. The adverse element retired, and Henry Ashley went with them, humbled and discomfited.

Election day came and not any of the enthusiasm had had time to cool. The women were everywhere. Evarts was man enough to throw himself into the fray with his whole heart, which was much more level than his head. Burns brought the tact and experience of a politician and a gentleman to aid the ladies in their campaign. When the polls closed excitement ran high. The women congregated in the hall of one of the principal hotels. The announcements were made from the rotunda. They grew more and more discouraged as the returns came in, but about midnight Henry Ashley entered and pushed his way to the front. He held a brief consultation with the other men, then mounted a chair and shouted, "Burns elected by one hundred majority!"

The cheering was long and loud. When it died away, he said, "I should like to propose three cheers for the wives, mothers and sisters who have defeated us."

"I never dreamed of such possibilities in you, Mary," he said, when they sat at the breakfast table next morning. "I always thought I should hate women in politics, but you have quite outgeneraled us."

"I for one," said Mary Ashley, "am quite content to let you and my sons fight my battles. I prefer keeping out of the fray, and I claim that we women are physically not adapted to such sieges, excitement and work. Another such an one would kill me, but, Henry, if you and my boys do not fight for the right man, I shall continue to vote against him and you as long as I can vote; I am no longer afraid. I have learned that the enthusiasm of determination and faith has a power that sways the multitude, and if a woman is divinely gifted with such a power, I believe she should use it to uplift and help mankind, instead of submitting to wrongs that her husband refuses to right because of the party to which he is allied."

"Hurrah for mamma! she is a new woman!" shouted Ted Ashley.

"Yes, wherever the new woman rights a wrong or breaks down a prejudice, or infuses the new energy of everyday living and effort into the latent power of the church, I am with her, and I expect my son to stand by me!"

And after that election, Henry Ashley and his sons voted the same ticket with the brave little wife and mother.

Pittsburg, Kan.

The Twelfth an Amethyst.

[From a temperance sermon by Canon Wilberforce.]

THESE words form part of the singularly beautiful description of the holy city, the New Jerusalem, which John saw coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

The city whose streets are gold, and which needs not the light of the sun or of the moon, is supported upon twelve foundations, which are twelve precious stones. Precious stones have ever possessed in the legendary lore of nations a symbolical importance. There is not one of these precious stones upon which the heavenly city rests that is not obviously intended to represent symbolically the final victory of one of those regenerating principles now operating in antagonism to evil. I humbly submit that I am in no sense overstraining an analogy nor grasping an interpretation, but literally accepting the teaching of God, by concentrating your attention upon one of these precious stones, the twelfth and the last of the foundations of the heavenly city, and inquiring into its nature and teaching. It says: "The twelfth an amethyst." An amethyst—and why an amethyst? Put aside for the moment the unbroken chain of legend which has clustered around the amethyst, and which corroborates the application I would make; treat it from the matter-of-fact, scholarly point of view; put imagination on one side, and translate the word amethyst literally; it can bear but one interpretation—a combination of the two Greek words, a not, and methustos, a user of strong drink. Its literal, common sense translation is, "Abstinence from strong drink."

"The twelfth an amethyst." The twelfth regenerating principle upon which, as upon a foundation stone, the New Jerusalem alone can stand—abstinence from strong drink! What a marvelous prophecy have we here! Uttered twelve hundred years before the pernicious art of distillation was invented, it points distinctly to the peculiar and special peril of these latter days, and its remedy. How clearly and manifestly true, if in the New Jerusalem there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be no more pain, how manifest to the meanest comprehension that one of its foundation stones must be the victory over that ever-wasting destruction which, accompanied by the sigh of hopelessness and the groan of pain, is brutalizing, ruining, pauperizing and maddening thousands for whom Christ died, and for whom Christ's followers are, in a large measure, responsible!

To be privileged to build this twelfth foundation stone by the personal practice and advocacy of abstinence from strong drink, is within the scope of the humblest heavenly citizen. The method possesses the advantage of exhibiting a constructive, not a destructive, activity; it savors rather of overcoming evil with good, than of pulling down by aggressive warfare the strongholds of Satan; it quietly purifies the social atmosphere, by breathing into it a healthy element, as the eucalyptus gum tree planted in the malarious marshes of the Roman Campagna neutralizes the fever poison by its life-giving exhalations. It would be easy to give examples of the strengthening, reforming power in every kind of society, of the silent witness of total abstinence on the part of those who never made a platform speech in their lives, and could not sustain an argument as to the pathology of intemperance. Let it be an encouragement to the thousands who, in the face of opposition, ridicule, and often discouragement, have been quietly bearing this witness. Although they may not possess the gift of oratory or the opportunity for evangelizing the masses, they have, none the less, been silently establishing the twelfth foundation stone of the mystic fabric, and "shining as lights of the world" with the soft lustre of an amethyst for God.

Who, then, will become an amethyst for God? If you are weak, you will be wise to become one for your own sake; if you are strong, you will be wiser to become one for the sake of the weak. It is a privilege, not a command; an expedient to meet a present distress, not an addition to the Decalogue. It is an unwritten law in God's court of equity that it is not always right for a free and intelligent being to do that which it is within his right and his power to do. Jesus had both the right and the power to turn stones into bread when He was tempted by the devil in the wilderness. Had He done so He would have forfeited His complete identity with His brethren in humanity by availing Himself of a method of sustenance beyond their reach. He had both the right and the power to deaden the pangs of crucifixion by the use of the anodyne of alcohol and mandragora offered to Him. He used His liberty in refusing, that He might have fellowship with humanity in suffering, and speak His seven wondrous dying words from the cross. As a Christian man, a citizen of heaven, I have both the right and the power to extend to myself the indulgence of using intoxicating drink. If I do so I cannot place myself by identification by the side of my fallen brother, whose only chance of cure lies in uncompromising abstinence. If I would take him by the hand, bid him fix his eyes on Jesus, and crucify the flesh, I must unfetter my heart and cleanse my hands by first bearing myself the cross I am asking him to take up.

In casting out devils—and drink is a devil if ever there was one in solution, precipitation or incarnation in this world—the heavenly citizen must keep in touch with his Master; and whether he eat or drink, or abstain from eating or drinking, he must do it, not for his own satisfaction, but for the glory of God.

Divine Service in Bread.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

A DEVOUT man, seeing a cooking school at work in the Children's Temple at Chautauqua, exclaimed in alarm: "This used to be a place of prayer!" To which Mrs. Ewing, the cooking school teacher, aptly replied: "Nothing needs to be made a subject of prayer more than our cooking."

If any one doubts that cooking needs to be made a special subject of prayer, let him ask any physician how many diseases of this time are the result of starvation; ask in business circles how many strong men break down from indigestion; ask students of social science how much crime, wretchedness and intemperance is due to ill-cooked food. One of the first symptoms of a disordered stomach is the craving for a stimulant. Visit any schoolroom and witness the emaciated arms and spindling shanks of little children whose ignorant parents believe that bone and muscle can be made out of sugar, cookies, gingerbread and pickles.

As a people, we are lavish and even wasteful in our quantity of food. The repast at one of our church socials as compared with the refreshments which would be served upon a similar occasion in England was likened by an English clergyman to our continent beside the British isles. It is not in quantity our food lacks, but in quality, and it is this lack in quality from which whole families suffer semi-starvation. When the good house mother prays, "Give us this day our daily bread," and rises from her knees to serve her husband and children with a stone in the shape of sour and ill-fermented bread, she has much to account for.

Everywhere students of sociology are awakening to the fact that it is starvation which makes men irritable, weak, vicious, while good food stimulates the brain and promotes health, vigor and goodness. "The best education for children when they are growing," says Stanley Hall, "is good food. One great cause of stupidity in many of our school children is lack of nutrition." It is only a question of time when cooking classes will be introduced in all our public schools, and our state normal schools will be required to furnish teachers thoroughly trained in every department of domestic science.

A good, sweet loaf of cooking-school bread costs three cents, and a bake oven can be had which will bake one hundred loaves of bread with a scuttleful of coal. A lunch of four slices of bread with sweet butter and good coffee with sweet cream can be served for ten cents. It is giving the bread of life in more ways than one to establish bake shops where good bread can be had at reasonable prices, and where bread lessons can be given free at least once a week.

Washington, D. C.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

THE first week of May has seen a well-sustained interest in Willard Hall each noon meeting. Rev. W. B. Kent drew good audiences even when he continued earnestly to plead for a higher spiritual life for Christians and urged a deeper consecration. Brother Kent came several hundred miles to fill this engagement at Willard Hall. The five meetings were given to the discussion of the mission of the Holy Spirit to the church and to the individual Christian.

The testimony meetings were of special interest and witnessed to the earnestness of the message given each day through Brother Kent.

. . . . . .

Mr. Mackay, superintendent and founder of the Star of Hope Mission, in one of the river wards of Chicago, led one of the most delightful meetings of the week. The work of the Star of Hope is far-reaching and well known in all the city. Mrs. Mackay is closely associated with her husband in his gospel temperance work. Their own home is known as a "rescue home" for girls and women, and the work is being richly blessed in her care.

. . . . . .

Expressions of regret over Mrs. Church's absence were frequent and significant. The readers of THE UNION SIGNAL have learned to know Mrs. Church through these columns and will miss her familiar signature. Many a man and woman has been led on the "upward way" by her cherishing influence. Frequent prayers are offered in the noon meeting for God's blessing upon this faithful Christian worker and loyal white-ribboner as she follows duty's call and enters upon other labors. We miss her, but know her prayers are with us.

May God continue to richly bless these meetings and help us through them to win souls to Christ, and through Him to the "white life" and the life of power and unselfishness!

(MRS.) MINNIE DARST,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

THERE is no war between the old and the new,
The conflict is between the false and the true.
—Henry Van Dyke.

Correspondence.

Introductory to the National Convention of Japan.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—

"How strange it seems with so much gone
Of life and love to still live on!"

Like all the rest of you, I was completely crushed when the news of our beloved "Chieftain's" death reached me, and my courage entirely failed, but knowing that this would not be loyal to her, I resolved to make a deeper consecration than ever, and so have promised our Father that I will count no sacrifice too great to make for the cause she loved so well.

Japan has already planned an advance movement. This second week in April, thirty temperance meetings are held in thirty different parts of this big capital city, closing with a mass-meeting at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, at which Hon. Sho Nemoto, who has just been elected a member of the new parliament, presides.

Memorial services were held in Tokyo, March 27, and the great audience was strangely swayed. The plan to make the Temple the monument of Miss Willard's life and work was most sympathetically received, and committees appointed at once. All want to have a part. Hon. Taro Ando presided at this meeting, but I shall not describe it, because I am going to tell you of the service held during convention days. You will rejoice with us when you have read what I have to say.

The second National Convention of the Japan W. C. T. U. is now a part of history, and has been pronounced by all a wonderful monument to the worth and work of the women of the land. "Is it possible that we can have such a woman's meeting in Japan?" "I had not expected to see anything like this!" These and other exclamations were frequently heard when the foreign white-ribboners entered Union church, Yokohama, on April 2, 3 and 4. The Gazette reporter declared that, "whether viewed in the light of numbers, the interest exhibited, or the character of the addresses made, the convention was a great success."

It certainly is true that rarely has so much of the real nobility of the country been brought together in the interests of Christian work as on this occasion, and in the list is included even the political aristocracy, which is usually so hard to secure. There was Hon. Taro Ando, ex-minister at a foreign court, Hon. Sho Nemoto, a member of the new parliament, his honor, Judge Miyoshi, and Hon. Mr. Kiyoura, a member of the late Matsukata cabinet. And all these men talking on woman's education, or on her privileges and responsibilities as a sentient human being. Think of it!

The musical program, too, was unexcelled in this or any other land. Prof. Edward Gauntlet presided at the pipe organ for the whole of the three days; Miss Garst, Miss Yamada, Miss Allen, Miss Spencer and Mrs. Miyama gave their entire time, and Mr. Topping, Mr. Ransfords Miller and Mr. Galen Fisher, all came for special music on the last day. A choir of about one hundred fifty voices, composed of the white-ribbon girls in the schools was organized, but an epidemic of influenza prevented final rehearsals, and greatly reduced the number. The chorus that did lead, however, added much to the attractions of the days.

The decorations were very effective and produced a most home-like atmosphere. There were the palms and blooming plants which the Japanese know so well how to select and arrange; a life-sized picture of Miss Willard, draped in white silk, the "stars and stripes" and the flag of "the rising sun" was suspended from the center of the organ; the World's prize banner occupied a conspicuous place, also the new National banner, while large Japanese flags were artistically arranged on either side. Then there were two mottoes in the beautiful Chinese characters, "Peace to all nations," which seemed especially appropriate just now, and "Joy to the world," very fitting, too, for the season of the year.

No mere review can give any idea—even if there were space for details—of the interest manifested, nor of the splendid manner in which the meetings were conducted. Those who were present last year and saw how business was dispatched, can surely believe that the W. C. T U. has proved a good training school. Nothing develops an individual more than to have opportunity to preside at great meetings, and why may not women have this chance to grow? Florence Nightingale once said: "Three-fourths of the whole mischief in women's lives arises from their exempting themselves from the rules of training considered needful for men."

Specific plans for this series of meetings were begun months ago. It was the purpose of Mrs. Yajima to make it a time for influencing the whole country, so letters were sent out to five hundred pastors and evangelists asking them to preach temperance sermons and to join with us in prayer on April 3 for the overthrow of King Alcohol and the building up of the home. As a result, during convention days telegrams came from all parts of the empire; and on each succeeding day, up to the time of writing, large numbers of enthusiastic messages have been received. With such foresight as this it is no wonder that the Gazette reporter said: "The zeal and admirable tact of these workers cannot be too highly praised." Mrs. Yajima is a remarkable woman, and deserves to take her place alongside the leaders of the world. It did seem truly businesslike when she called, through the telephone, for a short-hand reporter, with a view to taking a full stenographic account of the proceedings.

Speaking of the interest and size of the audiences, quoting the Gazette reporter again: "Nor could they have been subjected to a severer test than the terribly uncomfortable state of the weather yesterday; yet from 9 A. M. until 9 P. M. the Union church was the crowded and happy home of these many devoted Christian workers." The unions of Tokyo and Yokohama sent the largest delegations, of course, but many interior places were represented, members coming from as far south as Kobé and as far on the north as Morioko, Sendai and Hirosaki, five hundred miles. The men's temperance societies of the Hokkoido sent fraternal delegates, and altogether there must have been visitors from as many as fifteen or twenty different cities. At one time a call was made for all white-ribboners to stand and be counted. One hundred and sixty-two arose.

Now all this is rather a long preface, and it gives very little idea of the spirit of the meetings either. I find I would better leave the real convention for another letter, lest you weary. So good-by until next week.

CLARA PARRISH.

Tokyo, Japan, April 14, 1898.

A Day in Ottawa.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Last night, in spite of a drenching rain, the Dominion Methodist church, one of the largest in the city, was filled to the doors on the occasion of the presentation of the World's W. C. T. U. Polyglot Petition to the government of Canada.

The petition, three rows deep, covered the sides of the gallery, and was piled in gracful designs on the platform. Other decorations were tall palms, graceful ferns and beautiful crimson and white roses, these last brought from Chicago by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, acting president of the National W. C. T. U.

On the platform were seated Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. S. Fisher and Hon. R. Scott, representing the government; Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Hon. Senator Vidal, president Dominion Alliance, Rev. Dr. Saunders, Rev. Dr. Cameron, Mayor Bingham, general officers, Provincial representatives and members of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. A. Rutherford, president of the Dominion union, occupied the chair. The petition was presented by Mrs. Atkinson, of Moncton, N. B., and Mrs. Alexander, of Ottawa.

On receiving the petition the Premier spoke first of his regret that "the occasion of the meeting was marred by the death of that great and good woman, Miss Wiliard, who is no longer with us, but whose memory will live forever." He then declared himself not a total abstainer, but pleased to see the progress made by temperance in this country, and promised to lay the petition before his colleagues. Hon. Wm. Fisher spoke briefly, "fully appreciating the meaning of the glorious petition presented by the ladies." Hon. R. Scott, originator of the "Scott act" local option law in Canada, congratulated the ladies "on the results that would be obtained in the not far distant future."

As the House of Commons was in session, the members of the government then withdrew, as did also Hon. Mr. Foster, and other members of Parliament present.

Short addresses were given in a happy manner by Mrs. Dr. Sanderson, treasurer World's W. C. T. U., Miss Jennie M. Arthur, of Cornwall, Dr. Amelia Yeomans, of Winnipeg, and Mrs. F. S. Spence, secretary of the Dominion Alliance. Hon. Senator Vidal spoke a few words of appreciation and encouragement from the vantage-ground of fifty-eight years' experience in the temperance work.

The principal address of the evening was given by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Portland, Me., who, in her opening remarks, touched all hearts as she referred to the dear, sainted woman who had planned this Polyglot petition, had prayed over it and toiled for it, and now had "gone away" from the scene of toil and tire and all sickness. "Greatest of reformers, noblest of women was she, and to-night I sigh for a touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that is still." A holy hush rested upon the audience as she thus spoke as if the stilled voice had again reached them or a hand had reached out from the invisible to beckon them higher.

Then for three-quarters of an hour Mrs. Stevens held the close attention of her hearers as she spoke of prohibition in Maine, and I need hardly tell the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL how well qualified she is to speak on this subject.

Charming selections of music were rendered by the choir during the evening, and thus closed one of the most enthusiastic meeting ever held in the city of Ottawa.

A happy coincidence was the fact that on the day the Polyglot petition was presented to the government the "plebiscite bill" was introduced in the House of Commons providing for the submission of the question of prohibition to the people of Canada. This bill will no doubt pass in both houses, and the Premier has stated that it will be voted upon late in the summer or early in the autumn. It then rests with the people to say whether or not they want a prohibitory law, and after that it will remain for the government to say whether or not they will give a prohibitory law to the people of this Dominion.

A VISITOR.

Ottawa, May 5, 1898.

The Last Work of Mrs. Mary T. Burt.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For the last three years a divine energy has seemed to inspire the labors of our beloved promoted president of the New York state W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary T. Burt. Always ready to advance the best interests of the great organization, she weighed well all matters which involved the service and financial support of the white-ribboners. It would be impossible to give in detail, or even to present an outline of her work for the state she loved so much and which has made the organization one of the foremost among those affiliated to the National W. C. T. U. Through her faithfulness and helpfulness to all departments each year the army became "more terrible" because of its capture of banners.

When word came from Chicago immediately following the death of our dear National Chieftain, Miss Willard, that the Temple was to be made her memorial, Mrs. Burt at once took the subject under consideration, and although far from well, began arranging plans for a central committee for New York county. To save her strength as much as possible, we held small conferences until the work was arranged sufficiently to call a meeting of the county workers and present a definite plan. Other delays were caused by both her absence and mine from the city to participate in memorial services to Miss Willard, so it was not until the week previous to her heavenly call that the first committee meeting was held. Many of us have heard prayers put up in behalf of the Temple, but never one which seemed more like a voice speaking into the ear of God than was the prayer of Mrs. Burt that day when she prayed for the Temperance Temple; that through the united efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union this building should be paid for as Miss Willard's memorial.

The last letter Mrs. Burt wrote was within less than twenty-four hours of the time of her translation, in which she said the next day she would send the remainder of the material for the little leaflet to be printed in the collection books.

We, who were so shocked and grieved by the sudden bereavement, now feel as if this work had been left to us as a sacred legacy from her as well as from Miss Willard. We can do no other than attempt to carry it forward. The plan is to district the city and each W. C. T. Union to send out collectors, paying those who can not afford to go without, a certain percentage on subscriptions obtained. The Wednesday following her funeral the committee met, the city was districted and the collectors appointed. Owing to the lateness of the time and the public mind being filled with the "war and the rumors of war," we may not be able to report immediate results, but shall hope for a blessed ingathering before the state and National Conventions.

God grant this great building may become not only the Willard memorial, but also a perpetuation of the consecrated services of our promoted sisters.

Following are two paragraphs selected from Mrs. Burt's appeal, which was the last thing written by her. After speaking of the beauty and appropriateness of the Temple as a memorial, and the proposition to make it such, she says:

"The bewildered soul who rises in the noontide prayer-meeting at Willard Hall, feeling that here is refuge from the sin and temptation without, indirectly pleads for this. The little child, whose feet are placed in the better and surer way, through the legal provision that he shall be taught the effects of alcoholics and narcotics upon the human system, indirectly pleads for this. And hundreds of thousands of consecrated women unite in the prayer that this building, which represents the love, sacrifice, and high aims of women as does no other, shall be made a memorial to the one who stood for all that is noble, pure and lovely in womanhood.

"We believe that all who have a knowledge of Miss Willard's life, will be glad to contribute to this memorial. It should not stand as the work of one organization alone, but rather voice the love and appreciation of the people at large, for Miss Willard's sympathies and labors were broad as the world itself."

The appeal is signed by Mary T. Burt, chairman; Frances J. Barnes, vice-chairman: Mrs. E. Frances Lord, recording secretary; Dr. Phebe J. Wait, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Emily D. Martin, for the press. Committee for New York Co.

PATRONESSES.—Mrs. Wm. E. Dodge, Mrs. James B. Colgate, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Mrs. Clarence E. Beebe, Mrs. Alfred K. Hills, Mrs. M. D. Lillard, Mrs. Margaret Bottome, Miss Kate Bond, Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell, Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, Mrs. Bowles Colgate, Countess Di Brazza.

PATRONS.—Hon. Thomas L. James, Bishop John P Newman, Dr. Alfred K. Hills, Mr. Bowles Colgate, Mr. William T. Wardwell, Rev. E. S. Tipple, Rev. R. S. MacArthur, Dr. I. K. Funk, Rev. James B. Dunn, Rev. Dr. Payne.

The treasurer, with whom all amounts are to be deposited, is Hon. Thomas L. James, president Lincoln National bank, New York city.

The Temple collection books are of red leather, having on the outside in gilt letters at the top "To the friends of Miss Frances E. Willard." In the center, also in gilt, is the representation of the Temple with the word "Memorial" underneath. These books are for the use of New York state workers and sample copies to other states desiring such. Unions are urged to send at once for price and further particulars to Dr. Phebe J. B Wait, corner of 34th street and 9th avenue, New York, N. Y., who has the books in hand.

Yours in white-ribbon bonds,

FRANCES J. BARNES,

126 West 103d Street New York, May 7, 1898.

"I WAS all run down and my doctor advised me to drink beer. I now find I have Brights' disease of the kidneys. Is the cause due to beer? Undoubtedly. It is well established to-day that beer attacks the kidneys, and that every beer drinker has a tendency to this horrible disease, which is pretty sure to develop sooner or later.—Ralston Magazine.

Local Union.

QUESTION.—Is it right for a white-ribbon woman to advertise a saloon in a paper just purchased by herself? Can she do so and still be a member of the local union?

ANSWER.—If the paper has been just purchased the sister has purchased with it the advertising contracts made by her predecessor and can not in honor, break them. If one of those contracts was with the proprietor of a saloon, unfortunate as is the situation, the same rule must hold which would obtain with any other business house. The contracting party could sue the paper for breach of contract if its advertisement should be put out. Under such circumstances I should say that the sister could still be a member of the local union, although it would have been much better had she seen to it that all liquor contracts should expire before purchasing the paper. One is not always able to control circumstances, however, and I can easily imagine a case in which a true, loyal white-ribboner would find herself the unwilling advertiser of a saloon. Under such circumstances her sisters should bear with her most patiently until the contract should expire; after that I can imagine no combination of circumstances which could make it possible for a member of the W. C. T. U. to advertise a saloon and still continue in good and regular standing.

Q.—In electing a president for a local union do we also elect a permanent chairman for all union meetings, large or small, public or otherwise? This has long been a vexed question in some unions. We would like much to know if a president is compelled to preside against her own wish? Or, on the other hand, is the union compelled to always have the president as presiding officer, even if its members would like to honor some one else? Please do not refer us to the constitution.

A.—Despite this pathetic appeal it is to the constitution that we must refer, or rather to that necessary appendix to a constitution—the by-laws. The by-laws of most unions, whether National, state or local, declare, in one form or another, that the president shall preside at all the meetings of the union. This, if it were to be interpreted with cast-iron literalism, would effectually prevent any other person from filling the chair at a public meeting. As a matter of fact, however, that literalism is not often used in the interpretation of the duties of a president. There are many presidents of local unions who, through shyness never preside at a public meeting. Again, there are many presidents who are fine presiding officers, who yet recognize that there are occasions in which it might be well to yield the chair to some one else. Often it is best to ask some clergyman or prominent citizen to occupy the chair, and I can conceive of W. C. T. U. meetings in the interests of some special department in which it would be best for the superintendent of that department to preside. Other things being equal, I should say it is best for the president to preside at all public meetings. But, as other things are not always equal in this world of ours, I should not have the matter take the form of a cast-iron law. If the president has not the quick tact which will enable her to see for herself when it is best that she should preside at a public meeting and when it is not, then a modifying word or clause could easily be inserted in the by-law by means of which the judgment of the union could be brought to bear upon certain important meetings.

But the ideal W. C. T. U. president is such a woman as would naturally, by the sheer force of her personality, preside at any woman's gathering. And when she is in the chair, she presides. She does not allow the meeting to go of its own sweet will. She does not act as if she were ashamed to find herself in so prominent a place, nor does she comport herself as if she owned the church with all its appurtenances and as if the pastor were in his own pulpit only through her sufferance. A goodly mingling of womanly dignity and womanly modesty is never more to be desired than when our women appear before the public in the character of presiding officer. Not long ago we attended a meeting in which all who were to take part sat with their backs to the audience until they arose to speak. Could anything be better calculated to "throw a coldness" over the meeting?

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Have faith in God.—Mark 11:22.

Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Mal. 3:10.

"ONWARD for Willard Temple," is the heading of the following article, from the pen of the Rev. Ada Bowles, who lives in Gloucester, Mass.:

What a rallying cry for 1898. What an opportunity for every white-ribboner to help such a noble memorial of our great and beloved leader. To fulfill her hope of making secure all that toil and sacrifice have contributed already, and put it to noble use for the future of redeeming work. Parlor socials, with personal recollections of Miss Willard and larger Willard meetings in halls, with readings, illustrated lectures, etc.; booths for refreshments in all of the Fourth of July celebrations; pushing the sale of Miss Willard's new and beautiful picture; the free use of mite-boxes, Temple Wheels; fifty-cent subscription cards, with house-to-house presentation. Are there not enough ways, direct and indirect, to make it possible that the sum of money needed shall be forthcoming at the next National Convention, as a pledge of loving loyalty to the invisible leader whose spirit should still lead and direct? Yes, let it be Willard Temple."

✠

Mr. E. E. Sanders, Kokomo, Ind., sends a letter showing his great interest in the Temple, suggesting that we put an appeal in the newspapers in its behalf. We have done this, but we find that all general appeals unless backed by personal work fall flat. When Mr. Sanders says, "Ask the local unions to appoint one or more members to solicit and assist the papers—there are thousands of persons like myself who would gladly give a dollar or two for such an object," he hits the nail on the head. If unions would do this, success would be assured. Another brother, Benjamin F. Brush, Grand Blanc, Mich., writes proposing that we call on every member of the W. C. T. U. to give fifty cents. He remarks with much truth, "this is a small amount for each one, and yet the aggregate would be astonishing."

✠

Mr. J. W. Reynolds, Griggsville, Ill., writes a most kind and brotherly letter, suggesting ways of raising money for the Temple. He believes in each white-ribboner pledging to raise a certain sum, and says truly: "Poor, weak, human nature is so irresolute that but little is accomplished in this world, except people are in some manner committed to it as a thing that must be done. There are but few members of the W. C. T. U., if they had a will, but could raise a few dollars each." I am in receipt of a beautiful letter from another brother, Rev. A. P. Hutchinson, Sandy Lake, Pa., pastor of a United Presbyterian church, although his salary is small and he has thirteen olive branches about his table to provide for, he has pledged $20 to be paid by July first. He also writes me he has been speaking in the interest of the Temple and sends $48. Of this amount he says, "$17 was paid by my county mission churches." Not content with this, this great-hearted man is sending out twenty-five personal letters to men of means asking for money for the Temple.

✠

Why should not the Temple Wheel be a winner now in raising money for "the House Beautiful"? Who would refuse a dime to help make it Miss Willard's monument? We have two beautiful new premiums to offer. One is Miss Willard's life-size, life-tinted picture. We will give this exquisite picture to any person who fills four Wheels. We will give for filling one Wheel a lovely white satin bookmark, nine inches long, with Miss Willard's picture in the center, and printed in gold letters her immortal dying words, "How beautiful it is to be with God." We sell the bookmarks for twenty-five cents. In this connection we wish to say in reply to scores of letters we are receiving that Miss Willard's new picture, while a fac-simile of the one painted on porcelain, is on heavy lithographing paper. The porcelain alone, without any painting, would cost ten times the price we ask for the picture.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

To Learn to Repeat.

IF you're told to do a thing,
And mean to do it really,
Never let it be by halves;
Do it fully, freely.

—Phœbe Cary.

Billy.

THE clerk at the general delivery window in a city postoffice is usually a pretty busy individual, but on rare occasions he has his moments of leisure. It was such a time, one summer afternoon, that the young man who presided over the general delivery was startled out of a comfortable doze by the sound of a piping voice issuing from some invisible quarter:

"Say, mister, is der a letter fer me?"

The clerk stared out across his little corner, but failed to see the owner of the voice. Then he poked his head half-way out of the narrow window, and, glancing down, saw a little mite of a ragged fellow with a bootblack's kit swung round his shoulders.

"A letter for you?" he echoed with a smile. "Don't know. What's your name?"

"Billy."

"Billy—what else?"

The little fellow shifted from one foot to the other, but his clear, blue eyes looked steadily at the clerk.

"Nothin' else," he said, "jes' Billy."

"I guess not," the clerk replied. "Were you expecting a letter?"

"Yes, sir."

There was an expression of faith in his errand in the little fellow's face, and the clerk racked his brain for a simple explanation to offer him.

"Mebbe," said the boy, "if I told yer why I wuz a-lookin' fer a letter yo' ou'd find it for me?"

"Perhaps I could," said the clerk. "It won't do any harm to try, anyway."

"It wuz like dis," he said. "Last Sunday mornin' I wuz at d' mission Sunday-school up town, an' on my way back I walked wid Miss Rogers. You know her?"

"No," replied the clerk, still smiling.

"Yo' orter. She's d' teacher uv our class. She wuz a-tellin' me erbout d' lesson, an' when I left her by her house, I jes' knowed it all. Well, I walked on down d' street, an' pretty soon I seen an old gent in front of me drop a pocketbook, when I picked it up and tuk it over t' the alley where I live. I seen it wuz full o' money, but I never touched none uv it. Long erbout night-time I begun t' think o' the Sunday-school lesson, an' the more I thought of it, the more I got worried. D' next mornin' I put on my good clothes agin, an' I wuz a-goin' t' take d' pocketup t' Miss Rogers. I knowed she'd feel bad 's I did, an' so I thought I'd send the money back on my own accord. D' wuz some cards an' things in it, tellin' d' name o' d' man what dropped it, an' I writ a letter to him, splainin' how I wuz sorry I'd kept it, an' signed my name jes' Billy. Den I wrapped it up, an' sent it to him by mail."

The clerk has ceased smiling by this time, and he looked into the boy's sober face as he asked:

"Did you tell the man where to reply to your letter?"

"Nusser; but I said I'd come here an' ask, to see ef d' pocketbook got to him, dat's all."

"I see," replied the clerk. "If you'll wait a minute, I'll see if I can find anything."

Without any hope of success, he went over to the "B" box, and ran quickly over the letters it contained. In the center of the pack he found one addressed, "Billy," to be called for."

"Here it is," he said. "This must be for you."

Billy took the letter, turned it over once or twice, and then handed it back.

"Read it fer me," he said. "I ain't much on makin' out writin'."

The clerk opened the envelope and extracted the contents. In a business hand was written a kindly letter to "My honest little Billy," and the writer asked that the boy call to see him at an address which he gave. The letter closed with the familiar words that "honesty was the best policy always, but I feel that in this case that a reward of another sort is called for." The latter referred to a folded greenback which was inclosed.

The clerk read the letter over to Billy, and then handed it to him with the inclosure.

"Go up to Miss Rogers," he said, "and tell her the whole story; she will advise you what to do."

Little Billy's eyes sparkled as he thanked the clerk. Then he swung his kit over his shoulder again, and, promising to return to explain the rest of the adventure, he trudged out into the street.

It was a week later when he came back to see the clerk. His clothes were new, and fitted him somewhat better than his old ones, and the bootblack kit was not visible. He reached up and shook hands with his friend as he said:

"I ain't a-shining shoes no more. D' gentleman dat writ me the letter has given me a place in his office, an' I'm a-goin' to night school now."

He said more than this, and the two had a chat during the first lull in business. But we have told enough of little Billy's story to show how true—always true—is that story about honesty is the best policy. And even if there had been no letter for Billy, the policy would have been the same.—Exchange.

Growing Into It.

BY RUTH GRAHAM.

"WHEN I'm grown up, I mean to be just like papa." That was what Tom said one afternoon.

"Just like papa?" his mother asked. "Then you don't mean to be forgetful any more, or careless, or selfish now and then? You know how good papa is in all these ways."

"That's when I'm a man, you know," Tom said, in some surprise. "Why, I am only a boy, now."

His mother smiled a little. "Wouldn't you think it was strange, Tom," she asked, "if a little boy who was wearing kilts should say that he was going to keep on wearing them until he was a man?"

"I certainly would!" Tom said, laughing at the idea. "But I don't believe there are many little boys like that, mamma."

"You're right, there, Tom. Most of them can hardly wait for their first pair of trousers. But I knew one little fellow who said he wanted to keep on dresses; he 'didn't want trousers till he was a big man,' and you made me think of him."

"How, mamma?" Tom asked, rather injured at the comparison.

"You've just told me that some day you want to be like papa. You want to be careful about business affairs, thoughtful for other people, kind and unselfish, as he is. But you want to wait till you are grown up before you put these on, like the little fellow with his kilts. You know, Tom, how careless you are. You put your books and playthings down wherever it happens, and then the next time, you haven't any idea where they are. Quite often you give all your thought to your own pleasure, and forget how many ways there are in which you can give pleasure to others. And sometimes, I know, you are not as kind and good to Baby Dorothy as you should be."

Tom looked a little uncomfortable, for he knew that all this was true. His mother went on kindly:

"You see, Tom, as far as these things go, you are really in kilts, and you told me a few minutes ago that you want to stay in these kilts till you are a man."

"Oh, no, mamma, I don't!" Tom exclaimed.

"Then you must begin now, and try to grow into those traits that you admire in papa. You know what tiny coats and trousers a little boy wears at first, after he changes from kilts, and how each new set is made larger, as he grows bigger and bigger. It is the same way with these good traits that you are trying to grow into. If you put them on now, and wear them right along, they will grow larger as you grow older. And this growing into them is the only way you can get them, for you can not expect to have a ready-made suit of them waiting for you to step into as soon as you are a man."

"No more kilts for me!" said Tom. "I'm goin' to get out of them right off, an' I'm goin' to stay out, too, if I can."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Here I am again, back from my little vacation, and what a busy time I have had reading all the little letters on my desk! It was very pleasant to "go out and play" for awhile, and it is nice to get back and find that my little friends have not forgotten me in my absence. I find a nice letter from Alta Thornburg, of Holton, Kan., and I thank her for the kind wishes she sends me. I would like so much to print all the little letters, but it is not possible with such a constantly growing family. Your letters are all read and enjoyed, and I want to say to Alfred Chaddock and others who have asked the same question, that there is always room for one more in our Cozy Corner. Little Elva Ellsworth, of Greenwich, Kan., is going to try to organize a Band of Hope, and get subscribers for The Young Crusader. How many of my boys and girls will try to do the same during the vacation weeks when there are no school duties to demand your time? Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I am a little girl eleven years old. My mother is secretary of the W. C. T. U. and I am president of the L. T. L. and Mrs. H. F. Campbell is our superintendent.

MOSSIE OVERTON.

Cumberland Gap, Pa.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl nine years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I enjoy reading the Children's page. I go to school and Sunday-school. I have been taking music lessons.

Lovingly,

TIRZAH MAY DINSDALE.

Soldiers Grove, Wis.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—In a recent UNION SIGNAL you spoke about flowers. When I am in the woods I feel as if I were in another world. The adder tongues seem as if filled with dew all ready for the fairy folk. The violets seem like faces. The river (Indian) runs right through our wood. Down the river grows the arbutus. It is on the most beautiful island in the river. NELLIE C. WAIT.

Philadelphia, N. Y.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl twelve years old. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and my aunt too. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I think it is a very good paper. I like to read the Cozy Corner and I think I would like to join it.

Yours lovingly,

Salineville, O. ANNA B. DUNCAN.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

19.

ENIGMA.

My 5, 6, 3 is a boy's name.
My 1, 6, 3 is used to put fruit in.
My 3, 6, 5 is a preposition.
My 4 is an article.
My whole is a country belonging to England.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MAY 12.

18. Soft-Shelled Nuts.

Correct answers to No. 15 were sent by Alfred Leon Chaddock, North Rose, N. Y.; Lucy Dean, North Ferrisburg, Vt,; Frank Samuels, Mount Carmel, Pa.; Max M. Layton, Great Village, Nova Scotia, and Willie Sutherland, Saginaw, Mich.; to No. 17 by Alice F. Hogeland, Newtown, Pa.; to Nos. 15 and 17 by Ruth Rogers, Farina, Ill., and Ethel C. Watts, New York city.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

Young Woman's Branch.

OFFICERS YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH, WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.
Nat. Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.
Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.; Miss Eva M. Shontz, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Round-the-World Missionary.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Mrs. Boole's Monthly Letter.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—I have been constantly in the field since February 21, speaking and organizing. Miss Willard's death and the beautiful tributes paid to her and to our work have brought about an "arrest of thought," which is all that is needed to arouse an interest in the work of our beloved organization. Beginning with a Y conference in Rochester, February 24, nearly all of March was spent in New York state, speaking for W's and Y's. Nine new Y's and Y Branches were the result of the trip, and many new members for the W's. Our new Y at Bath, with its forty-four active and thirty-one honorary members, is an inspiration. In this little city we found the young men as zealous for our cause as the young women, and they will organize an Anti-Cigaret Club among the honoraries. In all, twenty-five new Y unions and Y Branches have been organized in New York state since the state convention at Cortland. Cuba Y and Cortland Y, both new, report great interest. St. Lawrence, Jefferson, Lewis and Steuben counties were in the itinerary.

From New York to Salem county, N. J., for their county convention at Woodstown, and a week's meetings in the county, closing up with an address for the Y's at Salem. All the arrangements for the meeting were perfect, and young women from both Y's assisted. West Hoboken and Morristown Y's (N. J.) have both been visited, we trust, with increased interest, and at Morristown twenty new members were added. First Philadelphia Y held its anniversary meeting, April 14, Y Membership Crusade day. The union is full of good works, and had the weather been favorable, the audience would have been very large. They thoroughly appreciate their officers, and are not afraid to show their appreciation. The secretary, treasurer and superintendent of L. T. L. work were each presented with a copy of "Glimpses of Fifty Years." Miss Thomas, the faithful president, was not forgotten, and one of the honoraries, in behalf of the Y, presented her with an alligator satchel, not to be symbolic of their desire for her to leave them, but because, as state secretary, she is planning a lecture trip through the state.

Miss Stewart arranged for two Y conferences in Maryland, one at Rising Sun, the other at Worton, at which the general secretary was present. We wish that such conferences might be held in every county, for when we are ready to put forth the effort then will we reach and enthuse the young women. The next trip was Orange county convention at Washingtonville, N. Y., and Queens county at Flushing; at both of which Y work was presented in the afternoon with address in the evening.

McKean county (Pa.) convention came next with other appointments en route. At Warren, Pa., we found a good Y led by Miss May Ball. In the afternoon they gave a reception to which W's and Y's were invited. Our hearts are filled with thankfulness as we see these young people enlisted for service. Crawford county (Pa.) convention, then to Franklin, where we find another Y led by Miss Wilhelm. They too are full of good works and are standing for our cause.

There are two things pertaining to all our work; to be and to do. In our anxiety to do, we sometimes lose sight of the other, and my highest aim for the young womanhood of this country is that they should aim to reach in their own character the highest ideal of Christian womanhood, and after being, should so plan to do, that the temperance work will be advanced in every community, and that social life will be freed from the stain of giving its sanction to the legalized liquor traffic.

Yours in loyal service to humanity,

ELLA A. BOOLE,
Gen. Sec. Y Branch Nat. W. C. T. U.

World's W. C. T. U.

From the Honorary Secretary.

DEAR COMRADES:—Two hundred and forty-eight of our B. W. T. A. Branches have sent in nominations to beg Lady Henry Somerset to stand again as president, telling her that they would require no public work for a year, but begging her to accept the leadership. Seventeen have asked her to defer standing for a year; three have nominated another president. You will see that this overwhelming majority leaves very little doubt as to the result of the election, but Lady Henry has refused to stand for a year, because she states that the spirit that has been manifested by those who oppose her is in many cases in her opinion so harmful to the harmony and Christlike spirit that should prevail in an association banded together for Christian work, that she feels it would be better that she should retire for a year and let such a spirit die down, believing that the love which must inspire all really effective organization will be revived when all bitterness has died out. She fully understands that many of the women feel strongly on the question which has arisen in the past, but for the sake of the work she is convinced that the spirit in which such opposition has often been led is one that is harmful to the best interests of the society, even though the cause be the most righteous. A strong resolution is likely to be drafted by the next executive committee, to be presented to the council, to the effect that no other president should be proposed, but that the other General Officers should undertake the leadership of the B. W. T. A. during the intervening year. Lady Henry will preside at the council meeting.

Our cable sent to the various distant countries, announcing March 20 as a World's memorial day to Miss Willard, was telegraphed from colony to colony and from union to union, with the result that we have never known a day observed all over the world as a great memorial day, in the way March 20 was for the late president of the World's W. C. T. U. It has been an immense education, calling attention on all sides to our work and to her beautiful life.

We have decided to send out an appeal on behalf of the $300,000 bonds which Miss Willard proposed to clear off the Temple. She was the founder of the World's W. C. T. U., and America has been its great nursing ground, so it only seems natural that the World's W. C. T. U. should help the National American W. C. T. U. to own its own headquarters at the Temple.

NORWAY has, through its National officers, asked if we can send an organizer there. At present we are obliged to postpone doing so, as we have not the funds to spare. The Countess Jarlsberg has been obliged to resign the National presidency, but still takes active interest in the W. C. T. U. Froken Johannesfen, a modest, capable and charming woman, has been unanimously elected president. An effort will be made this summer to make the W. C. T. U. prominent at the Bergen exhibition.

FRANCE: We are not forgetting the great international exhibition to be held in Paris next year, and I am corresponding with French friends to see if I can make terms for us to have a space at the exhibition to display our work. This will be an opportunity for our superintendents to send us illustrations of the extent of their work, but is only a preliminary hint of something which I hope may turn into a practical effort. The opportunity is far too good to lose, and I hope many of our leaders will make this an opportunity to visit Europe.

MADEIRA: There is promise of further development of our work in Funchal. We are hoping for help from Bishop Hartzell, who is now in America.

TURKEY: Miss Salmond, a brave white-ribboner, is now in charge of the Armenian Orphan Home at Marash. On her way from England she was glad to find her white ribbon a friendly introduction at various places, and at Smyrna she found an old pupil of hers in charge of a flourishing Y Branch. She hopes to organize among these poor orphan Armenians a Loyal Temperance Legion. Miss Salmond asks if any union of ours will pay £3, or fifteen dollars, for the annual support of a widow, with a view of her becoming a Bible woman. I shall be very glad to forward this sum to Miss Salmond if any W. C. T. U. will send it.

IRELAND: Mrs. Crawford, our president, has had the honor conferred upon her of being asked to give evidence before the Royal Commission. We are thankful she has had this deserved honor paid her. Mr. Lamont, on March 20, preached in the Cathedral of Irish Methodism, at St. Stephen's Green, Dublin, on the life of Miss Willard.

AFRICA: Miss Campbell has sent a most beautiful account of the memorial service at Wellington, Cape Colony, on March 20. In the afternoon several ladies gave their personal reminiscences of Miss Willard, and in the evening the Rev. Clinton Wood preached a memorial sermon. Our cablegram "filled them with consternation," writes Miss Campbell.

MADAGASCAR: Mrs. Standing has sent a delightful account of the progress now being made after so long a period of depression caused by the tyranny of the government. General Gallieni, who is now at the head of the government, is favorable to our work. Five hundred pledges have recently been taken, and at the close of one meeting nineteen children signed the pledge. The Sunday-school department has recently been adopted. The French government has, by heavy taxation, reduced the small drinking shops in Tamatave alone by forty-two.

INDIA is one of the brightest spots in our progress and the white-ribboners there are already talking about entertaining the World's Convention some day. Lady Henry Somerset's withdrawal of her proposals has given great satisfaction. The social purity department has sent a petition to the governor protesting against the re-establishment this year of a form of state regulation. The Bengal W. C. T. U. has decided to hold a week of self-denial, the proceeds to be given to the temperance restaurant which the W. C. T. U. hopes to build in Calcutta this year.

A W. C. T. U. has recently been formed at Bengalore. Mrs. Hoskins, one of the World's superintendents, holds monthly meetings of the native Hindustani W. C. T. U. in Cawnpore. The other day some of the members of the English W. C. T. U. paid a surprise visit; they were introduced by the native women with all possible grace and it must have been a pretty sight to see this white-mantled assembly of native women rise to their feet and with low salaams greet their English sisters. One of the visitors addressed them in Hindustani.

JAPAN: Our world's missionary, Miss Parrish, reports a great achievement; she has been able to organize the men's societies into one national society, thus strengthening our forces by consolidating them considerably. We have reminded Japan that the prize banner they now hold must be at the next World's Convention presented to the country making the greatest proportionate increase.

NOVA SCOTIA: The fire which devastated Windsor soon after my visit there last autumn, burned down the W. C. T. U. headquarters and now the Windsor W. C. T. U. asks if some of our World's women will send them small contributions. I would suggest all these contributions be sent through Mrs. Sanderson; they can then be entered in our World's report. If we each send a mite it will tell considerably and our white-ribboners here deserve our help. The Misses Vincent and Cummins are doing very good, quiet work, visiting the unions. Their lantern lectures are particularly popular.

BERMUDA: An appeal has come to me from a friend in Hamilton for us to organize our work, an accomplishment that I am sorry to say our funds at present would not allow. If I were in America I think I should go there, but now that is impossible for the present. We remember how Miss Willard appealed at Toronto for a subscription list to be started to raise funds for our World's missionary work. I have in response to my letters had a few subscriptions from friends in England of two shillings each and upward. All these subscriptions will be separately entered in our report for the future and I trust from every part of the world we shall receive these annual subscriptions. This will enable us to help Europe, Mexico, Chile, Burmah, Ceylon and other countries where a great work is waiting for us. I hope our treasurer's appeal to the unions will also receive a good response.

BAHAMAS: Mrs. Dillet has sent an account of how the W. C. T. U. flag was raised half-mast and an impressive memorial service was held at Nassau.

PANAMA: Miss Duchatellier was arranging for a thanksgiving service for Miss Willard's recovery when she heard of her death. The W. C. T. U. flag was raised half-mast and an impressive memorial service was largely attended.

URUGUAY: Miss Dornselaar reports the good work of the Loyal Temperance Legion at Montevideo.

BRAZIL: Miss Watts, of Rio, has sent a letter expressing great sympathy with the World's W. C. T. U.

AUSTRALIA: Mrs. Nicholls has had a capital time in Tasmania. She is traveling from colony to colony building up the work. She wrote once on hearing the sad news, a letter full of truest comradeship and sympathy, and Miss Lockwood also.

WEST AUSTRALIA: Miss Stone on behalf of the colony sent a beautiful letter of sympathy. A competition is being arranged throughout the schools on behalf of scientific temperance instruction.

VICTORIA: Mrs. Kirk sent the colony's loyal sympathy.

QUEENSLAND: Mrs. Brentnall and Mrs. Carvosso wrote on behalf of their white-ribboners with a similar loving message.

NEW SOUTH WALES: Mrs. Nolan and Miss Pemell have also written, making us feel how dearly and truly the colonies are each and all bound to us and how they loved her.

WORLD'S SUPERINTENDENTS: I am glad to say since the convention I have received more communications from our superintendents showing increased activity. Miss Bleby has already sent some money from her department, including a tenth of a legacy left her old servant. Mrs. Oberholtzer is about to send round a circular from her department. Mrs. Hunt has sent me some valuable information about European work. Miss Pemell is actively at work.

We are glad to know how through this sad time the United States of America is being so ably led by Mrs. Stevens.

We are hoping soon to welcome Anna Gordon in England. I would suggest that at once each one of our countries should through some of their National officers send orders to the Temple, Chicago, for copies of "The Beautiful Life of Miss Willard," which Anna Gordon has written and which is now ready. I would also remind you that I have copies of Miss Willard's address at Toronto, 7d. or 14 cents, each post free. Fifty copies for £1 or $5.

On May 9 our B. W. T. A. annual meetings open with a great public meeting in Queen's Hall, when Lady Henry Somerset will preside. I am most thankful to say her health is steadily improving. Two hundred and eighty-two branches have nominated her for the presidency, and there is, I believe, every probability she will be re-elected by a large vote.

We are anxiously scanning the papers, and the sympathies of England are all with the United States in the struggle with Spain. If an European alliance is attempted, the Union Jack will quickly twine around the stars and stripes. We hope this crisis will show the great necessity of an alliance between the United States and Great Britain. England and America combined would be invincible.

Your affectionate comrade,

AGNES E. SLACK,
Sec. World's W. C. T. U.
Ripley, Derbyshire, England.

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Indiana.

WHEN the saddest of news ever received came to us, we sent a telegram to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens at the Empire Hotel, New York, signed general officers. "Indiana mourns; our uncrowned queen is crowned with immortal glory." The state conducted memorial services at Indianapolis in the Central Avenue M. E. church, February 24. Our president, Mrs. F. T. McWhirter, presided, giving a brief sketch of Miss Willard's death and funeral services with a short historical sketch of her life and work. Dr. C. C. Laspy, pastor in charge, conducted the opening services. None of the general officers were absent except recording recretary Mattie O. Cammack. Duty called her elsewhere. Appropriate remarks were made on the different phases of Miss Willard's life and work by Mary E. Balch, state corresponding secretary; Miss Harriet Noble, former professor in Butler College, Irvington; Mr. Edward W. Clark, junior editor of the Patriot Phalanx; Rev. Nelson of the Pentecost Band; Martha L. Gipe, and Mrs. May Wright Sewall, president of the National Woman's Council. Miss Mary Hadley, vice-president, in closing her remarks said, "While our earth is lonely, our sky has gained a star." The Pentecost sisters gave their part in the sweetness of song. Miss Northcut sang "Some Glad Day" as a solo, and the church choir rendered appropriate hymns.

The decorations, wherever memorial services were held, consisted of Miss Willard's picture. No black crape, but white fabrics, palms and flowers in profusion. The prevailing sentiment was: we must renew our zeal and with more faithfulness persistently push to the finish the work she laid down.

LaFayette: The four unions of this city held memorial services in Trinity Church on Sabbath, February 27. The clergy, Protestant and Catholic, were invited, and the house was crowded to the doors.

Richmond: Fifth Street M. E. and First M. E. churches had Willard memorial services Sunday morning, February 27. The W. C. T. U.'s held theirs in Rhoda Temple at 3 P. M. the same day. Mrs. Kate Gallbury presided. Dr. Geo. W. Hill, a relative of Miss Willard's, delivered a eulogy. Harriet Valentine read a poem recited at the funeral services held in Willard Hall. Rev. Daniel Hill, Professor Hodgin, Mrs. Dr. Hopkins, Mrs. Dr. Rachel Bailey Hill, Mesdames Hodgin, Jackson, Buell, Doubly, Mrs. Dr. Stevens and others spoke loving, appropriate words.

La Porte: Services in the M. E. church, February 24, the ministers of the city present. Mrs. C. L. Bovard, Mrs. Ellis and others paid their homage in well-chosen language, the church choir having charge of the music; Mrs. L. J. Harrison reporting.

Greencastle commemorated March 10 in Locust Street Church. The clergy were well represented. Rev. Farr spoke of Miss Willard as a reformer, Miss Hattie Welsh of her girlhood days. Reported by Mrs. Florence Martin.

Greensburg: Mrs. Ella B. Wright presided. The churches, city schools, G. A. R.'s, W. R. C.'s, C. E. societies and Epworth League all joined with the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Thurman represented the colored people.

Logansport Woman's Club, under the leadership of its president, Mrs. J. M. Barnes, passed strong resolutions of respect and admiration of the character of this remarkable leader among women.

Versailles combined their fourteenth anniversary and memorial services in the home of Mrs. H. White, their president; Mrs. Emma J. Wilson, in charge.

Shelbyville W. C. T. U. and the pastors of the city united in memorial services in the evening of the day Miss Willard's funeral services were held in Evanston.

Rockport union, at their services, resolved to set apart one day in each year in memory of Miss Willard, that the light of her good works might guide them onward and upward.

Deer Creek union observed March 20. Rev. Enos Harvey, of Fairmount, delivered a most excellent address, followed by Eunice Wilson, Grant county's noble president.

Frankfort union responded to the National call for March 20, and combined the two memorial services for Miss Willard and Neal Dow. Rev. Brown, of the Christian church, delivered the address. He spoke in the highest terms of the W. C. T. U. leaders and organization. Mrs. Frank Hinds reported.

Willard union, at Frankfort, held their services during Miss Anna Downey's labors in that city, Miss Downey presiding. Mrs. Florence Vance, state superintendent of press work, reported

Elkhart, a memorial service was held in the Protestant Methodist church, and its seating capacity was taxed to the utmost, Mrs. R. C. Travis, president of the union, in charge. It was resolved that every member of the union wear a black and white badge thirty days.

Fairmount union chose the day of the burial service at Evanston. Let us gather up the lessons her consecration taught us and weave them into the warp and woof of our lives, was the seed thought.

Crown Point observed February 27, in the M. E. church, Mrs. A. B. Church, leader of the Willard Hall noonday meetings, in the chair. Miss Marie Brehm, of Illinois, made the address.

Dana union, Mrs. Lute Anderson, secretary, reported their memorial meeting, held in the Baptist church, an occasion of great refreshing.

Waterloo union. Their president, Mrs. Olive Long writes they rendered a beautiful memorial program.

Pendleton union, very recently organized, held their memorial February 27.

Westfield, one of the pioneer unions, observed March 6. Miss Emma Doan, organist, played in opening a funeral march. Phebe Doan, Edith Hinshaw, Emma Binford, Rose Baldwin, Clara Roberts and Sarah D. Roberts, each made appropriate remarks. Thomas O. Blair gave an original poem. Anna Tomlinson preached a short sermon. An English lady present, Harriet Green, said, "Miss Willard's name is as much a household word in my country as in America."

South Bend held memorial services in connection with their spring institute, their four unions being represented. Time, March 16 and 17.

Goshen conducted memorial program February 24, at the home of Mrs. J. F. B. Kauffman.

Many unions not reporting have been heard from indirectly and they have all held memorial services. Among that number are Bloomington, Harrodsburg, Bedford, Mitchell, Shoals, Loogootee. Petersburg memorial meeting revived the union and made it strong enough to entertain a two days' institute.

Vincennes, reported by Mrs. Denny, our dear sister of the jail and prison field.

Francesville, February 26, used the hour for its regular meeting, at the home of the county president, Mrs. Laura Wise. Several papers were read, Mrs. Allie Anderson, state organizer, Mrs. Lawrence and others gave short addresses.

Broad Ripple at their anniversary meeting, added memorial exercises. Highland Mapleton carried out excellent programs.

Miss Willard in her death has recruited an army of white-ribboners, for new members have been enrolled at nearly every memorial service. A spirit of love and loyalty to those who succeed her in office has been manifested. Our great leader still leads, and every member wishes to do those things she would commend.

MARY E. BALCH,
State Reporter.

Arkansas.

AT the recent state convention the undersigned was chosen state reporter, but owing to the pressure of work for our state paper, and also some field work, it was impossible to send a letter earlier.

Nearly every active union in the state held a memorial service for our Saint Frances, and many of them reported to our state paper, but much to our regret there was not space enough to print them. Since we could not do justice to them, all were omitted except a brief statement of the Temple fund collected at each.

Our state convention met at Newport, the home of our dear little president, Mrs. Mildred Dorsey, and despite the fact that the city just a week or two before had an overflow from White river, the Newport women were equal to the emergency. Everything was in perfect readiness, the best homes in the city were opened to us and excellent musicians were ready for their part of the program. Nearly thirty delegates were in attendance. "The brainest set of women I ever saw," was the comment of one who attended this, her first W. C. T. U. convention. "The work develops brains," was the reply.

The reports showed increase of numbers and interest. The treasurer, Mrs. Lulu A. Markwell, of Little Rock, reported the union out of debt and a healthy surplus on hand.

The directors of the Arkansas Signal, our state paper, the responsibility of which was assumed a year ago with many fears of failure, also reported a small balance on the right side, and this year no one says that it may be too heavy a burden for us, but from every union came as from one voice, "We must have the state paper and we will help."

The superintendent of legislation, Lena Hartzell Wallace, of Little Rock, reported a victory in the shape of a defeated native wine bill in our last legislature, and told us how nearly we came to getting an improved scientific temperance law. In this latter space interest was manifested and steps were taken to enable Mrs. Maggie Knox, of Paragould, superintendent of this department, to secure, if possible, the presence of Mary H. Hunt, during the next session of our state legislature, which

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

convenes early next December. We have little doubt that Arkansas will then come off the black list. We suggest that unions in other states assist us this summer by sending literature on scientific temperance instruction into Arkansas. If requested to do so by postal card I will send lists of names and addresses to unions outside our state that are willing to help in this way.

Rev. Mr. Miller, of Little Rock, gave a most interesting address with startling new statistics which he has been at much pains to compile. Miss Steele, of Galloway college, the same evening read a paper on ideal womanhood, with Frances E. Willard as its noblest illustration.

Thursday night John G. Woolley lectured to a crowded house. Our good brother-in-law, Rev. Mr. Ricks, pastor of the Newport Methodist church, had without even a request from us visited the merchants and secured the early closing of every store in the city save one, in order that the clerks might attend the lecture. The unusual number of young men in the audience showed that this thoughtfulness was appreciated. No one present will forget the forceful lecture.

The medal contest Friday night commanded the closest attention of the large audience. Medal contests as educators are growing in favor in this state.

Mrs. Effie Prall, of Fayetteville, being unable to attend, had sent a set of pictures used in her noted L. T. L. From these Mrs. Pittman conducted a meeting of the little folks one afternoon, and every one present was much interested in this effective branch of our work.

The devotional hours were strictly observed, and were full of spiritual power and blessing. People who had shared some prejudice against our work were quite won over when they found that with us the word "Christian" was not an unmeaning term. The purity department came well to the front. Dr. Honoria Austin, of Van Buren, a most capable young woman, is the new superintendent of this department. Mrs. Springer, of Little Rock, our most valued worker in prison and jail, was present, and the report of her work touched every heart.

The superintendent of evangelistic work gave a brief account of her visits to several towns en route to convention, telling of one woman who had for many years held the fort all alone at Ozark with splendid results.

"The best convention we have ever had" was the summing up of one who had attended most of our state conventions. "It has been a most powerful influence in our town," said a resident of Newport. Twenty-two new members were added to the Newport W. C. T. U. On Sabbath afternoon following the convention a mass meeting, led by three ministers, was held in the same church, the topic for discussion being "How to crystallize this good influence into permanent results in the way of systematic work." It was well attended, full of interest, and other such meetings are to follow.

The Arkansas Methodist, a paper having a wide circulation, in a recent issue printed a long list of names of men holding United States licenses in our prohibition territory. The list embraces some men of good standing in their respective communities, who will be somewhat startled at having this evidence that they are law-breakers placed in the hands of their neighbors. We hope to have the list completed, arranged by counties, and used as a campaign circular this summer.

But we must add that Rogers is to have the next state convention, and that Arkansas is be divided into small districts instead of using the absurd congressional district lines as heretofore.

Yours for victory,
MARY A. BROWNE,
State Reporter, Fayetteville.

North Carolina.

ALTHOUGH the Old North state has not been represented in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL for some time, we trust we have not been accused of being asleep. Rip Van Winkle of the temperance movement in our state awoke in 1881, and since that time has steadily gathered strength and courage until to-day a stronger sentiment against the legalized liquor traffic prevails than at any former period.

In W. C. T. U. work, organization has been the keynote for the past three years, and our membership has steadily increased. Last year over five hundred new members were not only enrolled, but paid dues, and at the National Convention one of the prize banners was awarded the state. Without relaxing our efforts, the work still goes bravely on. The state president gives much time to field work, reviving and encouraging old unions and organizing new ones. Fourteen new unions, embracing a membership of nearly two hundred, have sprung into life within the last three months. In our broad and sparsely settled territory this means much wearisome travel by tedious and often uncomfortable routes. Only pioneers can read between the lines and realize the sacrifice and toil incident to such service for the Master, and it may be equally true that only pioneers realize the fullness of His loving presence and approval borne in upon them in a gentle "well done." Barring all obstacles, "with faith in God, faith in man and faith in work," the high standard of W. C. T. U. principles will not lack advocates during 1898, and, we trust, no lack of a much larger following.

Memorial services in honor of our dear, departed Chieftain, have been held all over the state and everywhere the people have given expression to their appreciation of her noble character and life in large audiences and tender sympathetic words.

June 11–14 has been fixed as the time of the meeting of our next annual convention. A new union at North Wilkesboro, situated at the foot of the mountains, will entertain us. Indications are good for an excellent meeting. Local unions at many points have been unusually active this year and if they are as faithful in reporting as they have been in labor, our work will show decided progress along many lines. They have a committee on separating youthful criminals from those older in the penitentiary; committee on suspension of street car traffic during the hours of public worship on Sabbath; committee on the sale of intoxicating beverages and cigarets to minors, and a committee on the display of objectionable pictures on the streets.

Raleigh union deserves special mention in carrying on its work through well organized committees.

At Randleman, where several large cotton mills are operated, the union has secured the signatures of the proprietors to a resolution, to the effect that all mill hands who drink will be dismissed, and employment will hereafter be refused those addicted to the habit. The resolution is conspicuously placarded around the mill, and is doing good.

Y work in the colleges is not very extensive, but a most interesting and hopeful feature of well-directed effort. Six colleges will enter the oratorical contest at the convention. Prizes are awarded every contestant, and one grand prize is given for the best oration delivered without manuscript. Our girls are enthusiastic, and youth and culture devoted to this Christian service wields an influence almost irresistible.

Our state paper, the North Carolina White Ribbon, now closing its second year, is a great aid in keeping our principles before the people and bringing our work into notice. Much prejudice which has heretofore been prominent has yielded to a better knowledge of our work through the columns of the paper. Besides, the White Ribbon is the only temperance paper in the state, and is respected and encouraged for the heroic effort of the women in supporting such an enterprise when similar attempts by the men have so far failed.

(MRS.) C. E. CRAVEN,
State Reporter.

Missouri.

THE tenth district, we suppose, can claim the youngest president in the state, in Miss Georgia Woodhull, who is right up in the lead. Mrs. Nelle Burger has just begun a campaign for temperance in this district to continue three weeks. Miss Myrtle Whiteside, a girl about twenty years old, lectured in New Florence recently and added fourteen members to the union. Several delegates from the tenth district will attend the state prohibition convention in Moberly in May. Wellsville is putting forth every effort to finish paying their $100 pledge for Temple by July. Memorial services were held for Miss Willard all over the district and the president succeeded in several places in having services where there was no organization.

Mrs. S. C. Nutter, president of the first district, has been one of the busiest women lately, but is trying hard to have each superintendent responsible for her department.

In the first district Mrs. Fields organized a Y. W. C. T. U. and three L. T. L's in March. She gave ten days' work in the district. Lancaster union gave a "hygienic supper" April 1. Kahoka held a medal contest March 11. Memorial services were held at Memphis, Kahoka, Luray and Lancaster.

The union at Green Ridge has been doing some good work in medal contests. They tried the free contest, and were favored with an audience who seldom or never attended such entertainments before. Frances Willard memorial services were held in the Congregational church and the memorial offering sent to Miss Dow. A very enthusiastic worker in this union is Mrs. Sarah Richmond, and she takes great pride in circulating THE UNION SIGNAL among her friends. She puts her name on the paper and adds, "read and return," and keeps it going and she has been able to secure some new subscribers in this way.

The mid-year meeting of the state executive committee met in Springfield, April 21–23. The five general officers were present, with many state vice-presidents, superintendents and editor of state paper.

It was voted that the state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction be advised to send a personal letter to all the county commissioners in the state, asking that our speakers be given a place on the programs of their institutes, and be included among the regular lecturers selected and receive an appropriation for expenses the same as their other lecturers.

It was decided that organizations be perfected in the unorganized territory, and some of our best workers were appointed to work in the portion of the state not organized.

The committee, thinking that women can best care for women, it was resolved, "that we petition the legislature of the state of Missouri that a woman physician be placed on the board of physicians in each insane asylum in our state." A petition will also be presented at the next legislature, asking for a law prohibiting the sale and manufacture and importation of cigarets in our state.

The executive recommended Miss Ollie Blunt to the National W. C. T. U., and asked that she be made a missionary to Japan. All local presidents will be made members of the coming state convention, to be held in Popular Bluff, October 21 to 25, this action not to interfere with the election of the regular number of delegates from the local unions to said convention.

The mid-year convention was a success in every way, and though we can give but little of the work done, it proved to be a most profitable meet-

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Babies Thrive On It.

Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

LITTLE BOOK "INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE, Should be in Every House.

N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK.

ing. The Springfield unions royally entertained their guests and the delegates were given a dinner at one of the best hotels in the city, by Mrs. Kate Newton, the state recording secretary.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter recently organized the twenty-eighth district with Mrs. Cora Hammett, president. Their main work will be in getting ready to entertain the state convention this fall. Miss Carter also spoke at Morley, and organized a strong union, being the first one in the twenty-ninth district. Recent tragic events in this town caused by the liquor traffic had aroused the people, and a union of forty active and twenty-eight honorary members was the result.

Mrs. Addie Fields has just closed a very successful campaign in the twenty-first district, visiting and lecturing in thirteen towns and organizing four unions and four L. T. L's, with three others in contemplation. "Mrs. Fields is a thorough and enthusiastic worker and won friends for the cause wherever she went," the president, Mrs. M. M. S. Gilson, writes, and adds that she has the happy faculty of engaging the best element in a community in this work and she has every assurance that her work will endure.

The following call is sent me for publication in this column:

The sixth annual convention of the twenty-first district W. C. T. U. of Missouri, will convene in Appleton city, June 9 and 10, 1898. We are assured that a large delegation of visitors and delegates will be present to enjoy an exceptionally good and interesting program. Mrs. Emma Cranmer, National organizer and ex-president of South Dakota, will lecture the first evening and a temperance drama will be given the second evening. Miss Carrie Lee Carter, National organizer for Y's, and our beloved state corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen D. Morris, will be present and assist in making this a profitable convention. We pray for God's blessing to attend us.

M. M. S. GILSON
Pres. First District.

South Greenville had a splendid Y of fourteen members and an L. T. L. of twenty-two members organized not long ago with an increase of membership for both organizations to about fifty. They both hold regular meetings every Sabbath afternoon, the Y's taking charge of the L. T. L. Every member is an active one, including the honoraries. They have held one contest, composed entirely of the honoraries. They have eleven different departments of work, and they are doing well in each line that they have touched upon.

If all press superintendents could report as does Mrs. Maude Willis-Allen, of the Albany union, it would keep some of the other states busy to get ahead of Missouri in press work. She reports one hundred and fifteen columns of temperance matter furnished to papers the past year, and says she has no difficulty in having space to fill; many papers offer it to her and tell her why they are glad to read any article she chooses to write. Why can't Missouri get to work and be the "star" state in this department this year.

The fourth district convention to be held in King City, May 20 to 23, is attracting a great deal of attention. The program is full of good things. The convention opens Friday evening, May 20, with the welcomes and a social in honor of the union having made the greatest gain in membership the past year. Mrs. Callie Hoover-Howe and Miss Carrie Lee Carter will be in attendance throughout the convention; Mrs. Emma Cranmer on Sabbath and Monday, and Miss Ellen D. Morris, state corresponding secretary, will assist. The convention closes Monday night with Missouri legislature. The Daily to be issued by the district promises to be quite a success, and the first two subscriptions received for it were from California, they having read the report in THE SIGNAL. All who would like the Daily can secure the three copies for ten cents by sending to me.

(MRS.) ALICE BLACKBURN,
State Reporter, Bethany.

Michigan.

THIS is truly convention time with us. Counties and districts holding their annual gatherings in the glad springtime are making vigorous and thorough preparations for the same. Programs from the second and sixth districts are in my hands. They are finely arranged and full of good things. All over the state, too, our women are making ready for the summing up of our year's efforts and the "gathering of the clans" at Saginaw. Our president is exceedingly busy these days attending county and district meetings and preparing for her own.

Nearly every report sent me since the going away of our dear Miss Willard has been full of tender words for her, and tell of beautiful memorial services held. Many acted upon the suggestion of our National officers and held union memorial services for her and for Neal Dow, March 20. Others held them on different days. Those who reported are as follows:

Clarendon, California, Homer, Tekonska, Albion, Lansing, Grand Haven, South Lyon, Petersburg, Algonac, Bay City, South Bay City, West Bay City, Flint, Fenton, Flushing, Clio, Howell, Brighton, Osceola, Milford, Holly, Holland, Detour, Vicksburg, Schoolcraft, St. Johns, Saginaw, Dorr, Chief, Manton, Stetson, Muskegon unions, Adrian, Rea, Manchester, Hillsdale, Somerset Center, Reading, Coldwater, Battle Creek, Northville, Plymouth, Flat Rock, Wyandotte, Canton, Dearborn, many churches in Detroit, South Butler, Hopkins and Wayland.

Mrs. Gertrude Minore is reported as having done good work in Almont, Mrs. E. Norinne Law in Onsted, and Mrs E. L. Calkins in Branch county. Lansing union has forwarded thirty dollars to Miss Cornelia Dow, of Portland, Me. This amouut was the collection taken for the Temple at their memorial services.

(MRS.) I. W. SLOAN,
State Reporter, Clarendon.

Official.

Health and Heredity.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS AND WORKERS:—You have not heard from me in this way for a long time, but all of you have heard personally if the mails have been faithful in taking the word.

Since February 18, my heart and brain have been busy with more immediate work in connection with the going home of our beloved leader. Every day and all the days, sometimes 'mid blinding tears, I have tried to do the "next thing" as she would have had it done. Without being in the least unfaithful to our department, I think in the hush that comes just now, we should be most faithful to the special legacy of work that her going has laid upon us. I refer to the Temple. Whatever else we may do, let us not leave this undone. If each one of us in her appointed place, in her church, in her community, would do as some of us have done in the last three months, the amount would be raised. And so I ask that this be your first consideration, conscientiously believing that you will in this way most truly advance our department work.

Miss Willard had unfailing interest in the department of health and heredity. She felt that it ought to be the "very pilot of the engine" in all the machinery of the W. C. T. U. She believed with all her heart in preventive work. The battle will be over when bodies are redeemed, and people have learned the truest, noblest life.

As rapidly as possible we are getting out helpful leaflet literature in the health and heredity department; also, your superintendent is now preparing a revised literature list of material most valuable and practical for use in the unions. I wish especially to call your attention to Publisher's Notes, UNION SIGNAL, April 21, and the offer made by the Good Health Publishing Company, Battle Creek, Mich. The magazine, Good Health, will be found valuable in pushing the work; it clubs with THE UNION SIGNAL and both are furnished for $1.30.

Let us strive the harder to carry out all that it is possible for us to do in the life work and purpose of Frances E. Willard, and God bless and help us every one!

LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
Nat. Supt.
23 Allston St., Dorchester, Mass.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The first convention of the Frances E. Willard (colored) W. C. T. U. of the state of Louisiana was held in Algiers, a suburb of New Orleans, May 3 and 4. This state union was informally organized by Mrs. Thurman on February 15, Mrs. Frances Joseph, president of the W. C. T. U. of St. James A. M. E. church, New Orleans, being made its president. In the less than three months intervening between February 15 and May 3, Mrs. Joseph has traveled quite extensively over the southern part of the state and organized more than a dozen unions. She has the hearty sympathy and support of the Ministers' Alliance and does much of her organizing work under their auspices.

It was my privilege to be in attendance upon the convention in Algiers. When Mrs. Joseph heard that I was to attend the Shreveport convention she wrote, urging me to remain to help in the work so new to them all. I consented, although it seemed as if I could hardly spare the time, and shall never cease to be glad that I did so. The convention was, from first to last, an inspiration, and I am humbly thankful to have been able to aid in laying the foundation for what I believe will prove to be a great and far-reaching work.

Mrs. Joseph is a woman of commanding presence and gracious personality. She has thrown herself with rare enthusiasm and devotion into this work for the reclamation of her people from the liquor curse, and her address was full of practical points and suggestions, which proved that she had given much careful study to the problem. She has earnest, able coadjutors, and especially among the ministers and the teachers, devoted honorary members. At one of the morning meetings there were present eleven ministers of different denomination and one bishop of the A. M. E. church. The evening meetings, one of which was held in Algiers and the other in New Orleans, were well attended. The people listened with respectful interest, and not a little enthusiasm. Everything points to the encouraging fact that the colored people of that fair state are ready for a crusade in the interests of total abstinence and prohibition.

It is only just to the women of the Louisiana W. C. T. U. to say that they have done much seed-sowing among their brothers and sisters prior to the organization of this state union. Indeed, three years ago in their convention the work was formally taken up and state officers appointed, but, for some reason, the president found it impossible to serve and the effort seemed abortive. Who knows, however, how much of the former seed-sowing may now come to its harvest.

The officers and members of the white union are deeply interested in this work and will be ready to help in every way. The state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Alice M. Zable, and two of the members of the New Orleans union, attended the convention with me and gave most practical aid.

While in Algiers I was the guest of Mrs. W. H. Riley, who entertained me in her beautiful home during my last year's visit. On the day following the convention I conducted a school of methods before the New Orleans union and renewed many pleasant acquaintances begun last year. We have a brave, devoted band of women in the Crescent city and they "belong" body, mind and soul to our glorious army.

On Friday morning at nine o'clock I started northward, reaching Chi-

PILES

"I suffered the tortures of the damned with protruding piles brought on by constipation with which I was afflicted for twenty years. I ran across your CASCARETS in the town of Newell, Ia., and never found anything to equal them. To-day I am entirely free from piles and feel like a new man."
C. H. KEITZ, 1411 Jones St., Sioux City, Ia.

CANDY CATHARTIC Cascarets TRADE MARK REGISTERED REGULATE THE LIVER

Pleasant, Palatable, Potent, Taste Good. Do Good, Never Sicken, Weaken, or Gripe. 10c, 25c, 50c.
... CURE CONSTIPATION. ...
Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago, Montreal, New York. 312

NO-TO-BAC Sold and guaranteed by all druggists to CURE Tobacco Habit.

cago on Saturday at noon and am again settled into the Headquarters routine with no more field work until Chautauqua and the plans for the National Convention shall call me East in August.

Everything is moving on calmly and harmoniously at Headquarters. Mrs. Stevens had been obliged to leave just a week before my arrival, greatly to my regret, but abundant proof that she had been at her post was everywhere to be found.

The items which come from the Field are most cheering, and I believe that, despite the sore loss which has come to us, this will be a good year. Let us claim it, with all that can be compressed into the adjective, "good." From Mrs. Kenney, the president of our W. C. T. U. of Southern California, there has just come a letter, from which I want to quote a little, because I know it will be of cheer to others as it has been to me. Mrs. Kenney is describing a trip into one of the counties of her great field. She says: "The union at this point has fourteen members, and meets once a month. They have an all-day meeting, bringing their luncheons, and some of them driving ten or twelve miles. They bring their babies, and are educating themselves and their families in our work. They are intelligent, educated women, many of them from the East, who are laying the foundations for a great country, and who are all loyal, enthusiastic white-ribboners. Who dares to set the limit to the influence these women are sending down to future generations? What statistics can record their work? No one can begin to comprehend the extent and influence of our organization. We are far stronger than we ourselves dream of."

And what is true of California is true of every state of our Union, and nearly every nation on the globe. Surely we may thank God and take courage. Some day we shall see that we have builded better than we knew.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

W. C. T. U. News.

EL RENO union has doubled its membership since the last convention. This is the memorial our leader approves of.

MRS. EMMA BOURNE, state president of New Jersey, addressed a mass-meeting at the convention of Gloucester county, which was listened to with deep appreciation by the large audience.

MISS KATE LUNDEN gave the address of the evening at a county convention held in Bridgeton, N. J. The daily press said it could not well have been surpassed in strength and eloquence.

THE union of Charleston, S. C., observed the anniversary of the death of Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, by meeting at her grave with their heart offerings of flowers. A simple service was held there, the president making a tender address.

MRS. REBECCA MITCHELL, the pioneer worker of Idaho, is enthusiastic over medal contest work. She has just given a contest of seven young girls, and has another of boys of twelve and fourteen in training. Mrs. Mitchell appreciates the great educational and financial importance of this department.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 139 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

AT the memorial meeting for Miss Willard, held in Anadarko, O. T., one man rode fifty-five miles to be present. Twenty-five dollars was raised for the Temple.

MRS. LUCY G. THURMAN is at work in Indiana; the organization of colored unions follows her movements almost invariably. A lively union at Wabash is the latest reported.

THE members of the Willard union St. Paul, headed by Mrs. C. S. Soule, state treasurer, made a trip out to Camp Ramsey, to call on the soldier boys and take them food for their Sunday dinner.

INDIANA has a new state Y organizer, Miss Olive Peelle. She has already organized two new Y unions in Indianapolis, and has a third one now ready. She is described as very magnetic, persuasive and winsome.

THE Message, Indiana's state paper, has a paid subscription list equal to about two-thirds of the paid membership in the state, which is a good showing for a paper so young. Subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL have also been largely increased the past year.

THE Washington, D. C., work among soldiers, sailors and marines is fully organized. They have a full board of officers and eight or ten local superintendents at work. They have arranged with the proper authorities for the free transportation of hospital supplies (in case they are needed) and many comfort bags are being filled for distribution.

KINGS county, N. Y., W. C. T U., in a late meeting, appealed to Governor Black, asking that he use the power vested in him to forbid the sale of intoxicants on all camp grounds occupied by the soldiers of the state. A similar petition has been sent by Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, for the women of Kentucky, to Governor Bradley, asking also that he engage chaplains who are advocates of temperance.

THE North Capitol union, Washing, numbers among its honorary members Hon. Hiram Price, president American Anti-Saloon League; Wilbur F. Crafts, of the Reform Bureau; two members of Congress; Hon. J. D. Botkin, of Kansas, and Hon. A. M. Todd, of Michigan; Rev. Arthur O. Sykes, chaplain at Washington navy yard; Wm. H. Armstrong, one of the "fathers" of constitutional prohibition. This is Mrs. Margaret B. Platt's union, and she is properly proud of it.

A SOLDIERS' and Sailors' Rest has been opened at 1008 South Front street, Philadelphia, Pa. The first donation to it was a Bible, which was taken as a good omen. A bureau of work was formed, of which Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, National superintendent Soldiers and Sailors, is president; Mrs. E. P. Bosch, county superintendent, is first vice-president; Miss M. L. Heiner, state superintendent, is second vice-president; Mrs. Lincoln, secretary; Mrs. Waples, treasurer. All local presidents of Philadelphia county are members. Mrs. Thacher will soon have out a circular of instructions. She wishes white-ribboners would add to the things for the comfort bags already enumerated in her official, the following: one-half dozen large safety pins and a yard and a quarter, or a yard and a half of flannel. Physicians say that a bandage of flannel worn around the abdomen will save an immense amount of sickness.

Take Notice.

QUESTIONS FOR THE LOCAL UNIONS.

Will the presidents of the unions please note the rules governing the voting, and observe them to secure uniformity? Roll in the answers.

1. What per cent of the members of your union subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL?
2. What part of the paper is most interesting?
3. What part of the paper is most helpful and why?
4. What subject would you like to have exploited more largely in our columns than has been done heretofore?
5. What proportion of the subscribers would approve of returning to the former price, $1.50 per year, to secure the use of a better grade of paper, and other improvements?

RULES GOVERNING THE VOTE ON THE QUESTIONS.

(a) Only members subscribing for THE UNION SIGNAL should vote, but this may include those taking a paper together.

(b) Only such unions are asked to reply as can secure a majority vote of the subscribers on one or more of the questions.

(c) Questions upon which such majority vote can not be obtained are not to be mentioned in the reply to THE UNION SIGNAL.

(d) Each answer should be numbered the same as the question to which it refers is numbered.

Question 5 is not for publication, but for our own information.

Announce this plan at your first regular meeting after this is received, and if possible take the votes at the following meeting, or at as early a date as a good representation of the members can be secured.

If majority votes cannot be secured at one meeting try it at subsequent meetings.

The limit of time for receiving replies will be announced later.

Report as soon as possible after the union has voted. Sign the name of the union and the state. Write only on one side of the paper and address THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Convention Calendar.

MICHIGAN, Saginaw, E. Side, May 24–27.

WISCONSIN, Chippewa Falls, May 24 to 27.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, Pasadena, May 31 and June 1, 2 and 3.

NORTH CAROLINA—North Wilkesboro, June 11–14.

WEST WASHINGTON—Centralia, June 24–16.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to higher service our sister, MRS. SARAH W. INGHAM,

Resolved, That we, the members of Cheshire, Conn., W. C. T. U., express to her family and friends our sincere sympathy with their loss, and our appreciation of the earnestness, faithfulness and unselfishness of her character.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family and to THE UNION SIGNAL, and that they be recorded in the minutes of this society.

LILIAN N. STODDARD,
ANNIE E. CLARK,
Committee.

***

The Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U., of Clifford Gap, Placer county, Cal., mourns the loss of one of its most faithful workers, MRS. BARBARA E. BASSETT, who went home April 8, 1898. Her husband, L. S. BASSETT, passed away April 7. They leave one daughter, Miss Estella Bassett.

Drinking Fountains

FOR

MAN and BEAST

Manufactured by

The J. L. Mott Iron Works

84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.

311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO

Catalogues mailed on request, and special prices given to all Charitable and Temperance Societies.

Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

$10 A DAY TO AGENTS
MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT WAR BOOK.
"Our Country in War." All about armies, navies, coast defences, Maine Disaster, Cuba, Our War with Spain and relations with Foreign Nations. Nearly 600 pages, written since the Maine Disaster. Magnificent colored illustrations. Agents making $10 to $39 per day. No experience necessary. Most liberal terms guaranteed, 20 days' credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 9 two cent stamps to pay postage.
EDUCATIONAL UNION, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

PARLOR ORGANS At a Big Reduction.
To sharply reduce stock, we offer unprecedented values. Fine Organs, formerly bringing $75, now $47.50. Used Organs from $15. Don't fail to write at once for catalogue. The world-wide reputation of this house is a guarantee of the quality of the Lyon & Healy Organ. Address, LYON & HEALY,
Wabash Ave. and Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

It rests with you whether you continue the nerve-killing tobacco habit. NO-TO-BAC removes the desire for tobacco, without nervous distress, expels nicotine, purifies the blood, restores lost manhood, makes you strong in health, nerve and pocket-book. 1,500,000 boxes sold, 400,000 cases cured. Buy NO-TO-BAC from your own druggist, who will vouch for us. Take it with a will, patiently, persistently. One box, $1, usually cures; 3 boxes, $2.50, guaranteed to cure, or we refund money.
STOP SMOKING!
Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, New York.

K C FLOUR
Copyr't'ed 1895.
Contains entire digestible substance of 3 choice wheats. For Bread, Griddle Cakes, Gems, etc. Prevents and relieves Constipation and Liver troubles. Ask grocers, or write. Please send for pamphlet about Diabetes Flour.
FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

1898 High Grade BICYCLES
for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models.
$75 'Oakwood' for $32.50
$60 'Arlington' " $24.50
Others at $15, $17 and $20
Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50
No Money in Advance. WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits
Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION,
162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 80, Chicago, Ills.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE TO ALL. We have a new remedy, which is a positive cure for all forms of dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sour eructations, constipation, etc. To show our good faith in the remedy, we will be pleased to send a free trial package with circulars to all who write to
A. S. MILLER & CO., Box 231, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free.
CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of..

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

Publisher's Notes.

A Great Mother.

What One Union Did.

BY M. B. A.

The W. C. T. U. in D—, in Northern Iowa was a small one. For five or six years it had lived and had but six members. These faithful few did what they could for "God, and Home and Native Land," by trying to hold a meeting each week, distributing temperance literature and by taking the National and state papers to keep posted in regard to the workings of the great white-ribbon army.

But things are changed. These six have been reinforced until their number is now thirty and different lines of work are taken up and much more can be accomplished.

One of the first things they did when THE UNION SIGNAL announced "The Great Mother" was in print and ready for the public, was to purchase a copy. This has been passed from member to member until a number have already read it. Then a chapter is often read at the weekly meeting and interested discussions often follow from subjects brought out in that chapter.

One of the new members is a lady seventy-nine years old. She is much interested in the work and when "The Great Mother" was handed her to take home and read she was delighted. In two days the book was read, and many parts read the second and third times, so interested was she. She went to the house of the secretary to return the book and her talk was of nothing but what she had just read.

She said, "My birthplace was in Otsego county, N. Y., and many places mentioned in connection with the childhood of Madam Willard are familiar to me.

"I had an aunt, one of the richest women of Boston, who married a man named Willard during the Revolutionary war. He was a Tory, and when the war closed he fled to Nova Scotia. Their property had all been confiscated, so his wife followed him, and remained with him until his death. One son was named Joseph Willard, and the name Willard appears as a family name for several generations.

"Oh! the reading of the book recalls so much to my mind, I would not have missed it on that account and for the good things there are in it for anything."

Many other incidents Aunt Mary, for so every one calls her, told, and when some of it was repeated many were the calls for the book.

It is the best investment we have made, and I only wish every W C. T. U. member, at least every union in the United States, could read the life of The Great Mother.

Price, $1.50. WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, THE TEMPLE.

The following excellent paper was read at Portland, Oregon, at "a parlor meeting" held in the home of a prominent white-ribboner:

We realize every day the truth of the Scripture, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," and that the lack of knowledge not only destroys physical life, but most of the evils that are killing both soul and body grow and thrive in ignorance; ignorance of the laws of life—ignorance of the results of sin—ignorance of the ways and means that Satan is using to ensnare those for whom Christ died. But the most inexcusable ignorance is that of the professed disciple of Christ, whose mission should always be to save. For that reason every woman should know the conditions of humanity today—should know the possiblities and opportunities for Christian work. And whoever does not arouse herself and interest herself in those things that affect the well-being of mankind, can not fail of condemnation, and suffer such a loss as no life of ease or material pleasure can at all compensate.

As a means of enlightenment let me tell you briefly about THE UNION SIGNAL—the National organ of the W. C. T. U.—and the best woman's paper published.

For the last seven years I have had the privilege, so far as I could avail myself, of the Y. M. C. A. reading-room, but I have never found any paper or magazine that gave me as pungently and briefly the outlook and conditions of humanity as THE UNION SIGNAL does. As it stands alway for the helping and betterment of all people, recognizing most practically that "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth," and that we are "our brother's keeper," the paper represents reform measures, and so gives all the moves and plans of the self-sacrificing host who are closely following the Scriptural injunctions to "make the crooked paths straight lest the lame be turned out of the way."

MRS. M. A. E. STONE.

Portland, Ore

The Memorial Number.

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

Our Philanthropy Fund.

Our philanthropy fund is becoming depleted and we are watching for gifts from generous friends to enable us to send THE UNION SIGNAL to those who in turn when better days come will aid in widening its influence. Extracts from our letters will reveal the blessed work this fund is accomplishing.

"I received your kind note, telling me I was placed on the philanthropy list. It did me a world of good. Things looked so dark and that made a bright spot. I shall keep that note and if the good Lord spares me you will certainly get your dollar. It is the little things that help and the spirit that dictated that note did me more good than one hundred dollars would.

Mr. A. K. Miller, of Thayer, Kan., has sent to us a donation for the philanthropy fund, saying that he does not "think he could use his mite to better advantage than by giving it to poor white-ribboners who are unable to take THE UNION SIGNAL." One cannot estimate the amount of good done by the philanthropy fund the last year, and as at this time it is in a somewhat depleted condition, we trust other generous-hearted temperance workers may be disposed to follow the example of the Kansas brother.

A dear saint who has received THE UNION SIGNAL through the philanthropy fund, writes thus appreciatively of the kindness extended to her: "Many thanks and praises to God that He has provided our beloved white-ribboners with means, and given them generous hearts to share His bounty with those who so dearly love the work, but are in less favorable circumstances. The thought of giving up my UNION SIGNAL was a great trial to me, but I believed that the Lord would some way provide for my needs in good time. When your letter came, my heart cried out in joy and thankfulness, and I assure you I shall be glad to 'lend a hand' whenever I shall be able to do so."

A Grateful Letter.

"Inclosed please find $3, which I send with a feeling of thankfulness, not only that God in His mercy has at last permitted me to liquidate my debt, but that the association, of which you are a component part, was so liberally endowed with His spirit as to place me under such obligations. You can never known all the dear SIGNAL has been to me through these long years of drought and disaster. I thank you with an overflowing heart, and pray that God may bless you as an association and each individually as you have blessed me."

Of Importance to the Y's.

Mrs. Barnes has concluded to offer the remainder of the Y almanac for the surprisingly low sum of fifteen cents each. The pictures in these exquisite books are worth far more than that amount. Order early, for at the reduced price the balance will be promptly disposed of. Send fifteen cents to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Avenue, New York city.

"THE UNION SIGNAL is splendid and grows better all the time. I could not do W. C. T. U. work without it."

Young Crusader for May and Sunday-school Supplement.

The Young Crusader for May is of especial interest, containing a delightful story by Miss Amelia Pemell, of Australia, reports from various state Loyal Temperance Legions and some excellent poems appropriate for recitations on Decoration Day. An excellent picture of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, "our promoted comrade," who for nearly twenty years was president of New York W. C. T. U., is on the first page of this number. Mrs. Burt was deeply interested in the work of the L. T. L., and was justly proud of the position of the senior organization in her own state and the record it has made under the leadership of Mrs. Harriet A. Metcalf.

In addition to other important features, the May number of The Young Crusader contains the Sunday-school Supplement, written by Mrs. Stella Irvine, with illustrations, and instruction of great value. Price, one copy per year, 25 cents. In clubs of 10, 20 cents; in clubs of 50 or more to one address, 12 cents. Sample packages, 100 to one address, $1. Price of Supplement without The Young Crusader, 65 cents per 100 copies; $2.75 for 500; $5 per 1,000.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple.

BIBLE READING FOR MAY—"The Dignity of Conferring Life," by Mrs. Mary E. Teats, of California, National W. C. T. U. purity evangelist. A reading especially helpful to mothers—and fathers as well—in that its keynote is "parentage a partnership with God." Ignorance of natural law has been the curse of the human race from the beginning, and Mrs. Teats shows from Bible history that the violation of God's law regarding the home has been disastrous to families and to nations. She truly says that knowledge of and compliance with the divine law of right generation lie at the foundation of all reforms.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR MAY. "Franchise," by Marie C. Brehm, National superintendent of that department. She explains the object and methods of the franchise department, tells why the W. C. T. U. declares for woman's ballot, why it adopted this department and what is being accomplished by it; answers Bible objections so-called; points out results in the states of Wyoming and Colorado, and tells local unions how to go to work to help secure the enfranchisement of the women of their states. The Reading will make a good circulating leaflet for franchise workers.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Our Library Table.

THE CHILDREN OF THE FUTURE, by Nora Archibald Smith, joint author with Kate Douglas Wiggin, of "The Republic of Childhood," "The Story Hour," and "Children's Rights." The book will be found an invaluable help to mothers, especially so to those who have not had access to the lectures or practical workings of the kindergarten methods. Price $1. Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston, Mass.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

A war poem by Rudyard Kipling—a poem of torpedoes and torpedo boats—is one of the features of McCLURE'S MAGAZINE for May.

Mrs. Amelia Gere Mason, author of "The Women of the French Salons," has written two papers for THE CENTURY on "Club and Salon," the first of which appears in the May number. The articles will consider the influence of clubs upon women.

IN the REVIEW OF REVIEWS for May, Mr. W. T. Stead tells the dramatic life-history of George Müller, founder of the Bristol orphanages, who never asked anybody for money, buth as received and expended millions in direct answer, as he believed, to prayer.

It has doubtless been forgotten by many that Gen. A. W. Greely, who has written a graphic article on "The Polar Bear" for THE YOUTH'S COMPANION of the week of May 19, owes his rescue from starvation in the Arctic to Com. W. S. Schley, now commanding the United States flying squadron.

"Cuba and Her People" is a subject to which William Eleroy Curtis does full justice in his article in THE CHAUTAUQUAN for May; and in the same number of the magazine Mary H. Krout, a reliable authority on the affairs of Hawaii, contributes an illustrated article on "The United States and Hawaii."

The guilt or innocence of Captain Dreyfus bids fair to become as insoluble a mystery as the identity of the Man in the Iron Mask, and interest in the question deepens more and more as the facts and circumstances, so graphically set forth in the May ATLANTIC, by John T. Morse, Jr., in his review of "The Dreyfus and Zola Trials," are read and studied.

"Woman's Work and Wages" are discussed in the May LIPPINCOTT'S by Eleanor Whiting, who claims that matrimony is the most appropriate and profitable business for women in general, and that they had better not attempt direct wage-earning. This highly conservative position she defends by an array of facts and arguments.

GODEY'S MAGAZINE for May opens with a thirty-two page special supplement containing large pictures of the "War Ships of our Navy." These pictures are from the latest photographs, and form a superb souvenir that is to-day peculiarly timely. People desiring to follow the course of naval events in future, will, by the aid of these pictures, be able to quickly place each ship aright.

A Tonic.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. A. E. CAROTHERS, San Antonio, Texas, says: "It is the best tonic I know of in debility and nervous prostration, with sleeplessness, caused by mental overwork or prolonged lactation."

Last pictures taken of our dear Leader

FRANCES E. WILLARD

and her loving companion and coworker

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

are now on sale for the benefit of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL

These pictures are cabinet size, and were taken in January, 1898, just before they left for New York.

Single Pictures, each, - - -	$ .50
3, to one address, - - - -	1.00
12, or more, to one address, per doz.	3.00

A beautiful picture of "Rest Cottage," and one of Miss Willard in the home of Lady Henry Somerset, taken about two years ago, can also be secured at the above rates. Send in large orders accompanied by cash, and thus help a worthy institution to which our loved Chieftain gave, and for which she labored and prayed.

Orders filled by the

W. T. P. A., The Temple,

or by MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treasurer,
539 W. Adams St., Chicago.

The TEMPLE TRUSTEES OFFICIAL PICTURE

...OF...

Frances E. Willard

Painted on Porcelain and Pronounced a Masterpiece

A FAC-SIMILE of this exquisite painting is being executed in New York by the finest art engravers in America. Although not finished on porcelain it has the same lifelike tints, and it is almost impossible to distinguish it from the original. Arrangements have been made by which this picture, the favorite of all who have seen it, can be placed in the hands of every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL for ONE DOLLAR.

THE ORIGINAL IS VALUED AT

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS

WHITE-RIBBON WOMEN and all friends of the Temperance cause can make money for themselves or for their Local Union, as well as help pay for The Temple, by becoming agents for its sale.

All money should be sent by Checks, Post Office or Express Orders, and made out in the name of G. B. Shaw, Treasurer.

Send One Dollar at once for canvassing outfit.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE

Room 1118, The Temple, CHICAGO

A NEW EDITION OF

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life

BY HANNAH WHITALL SMITH

Bound in cloth, artistically decorated in two colors.

PRICE, - - 30 CENTS.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.....

"WHAT did Clara say the second day out, when she was so seasick?" "She said the man who was rocking the boat that way was no gentleman, and she would like to tell him so."

RICHARD—"We are always wanting something we never get." Little Johnny (interrupting)—"When ma says I want a whipping I notice I always get it."

HOMESEEKERS' EXCURSIONS.

On the first and third Tuesdays in May and June, 1898, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway will sell round-trip excursion tickets (good for 21 days) to a great many points in South and North Dakota and other western and southwestern states, at practically one fare for the round trip. Take a trip west and see what an amount of good land can be purchased for very little money. Further information as to rates, routes, prices of farm lands, etc., may be obtained on application to any coupon ticket agent or by addressing F. A. Miller, Assistant General Passenger Agent, 95 Adams street, Chicago, Ill.

HE—Yes; the women of to-day are occupying nearly every walk of life. Still there is one field they will never enter. She—And why not, I'd like to know? He—Because the cows are grazing in it.

JUST OUT—1898 EDITION

Of the Lake Shore's Summer Tourist Book. More interesting and attractive than ever. If you contemplate an Eastern trip it will be of especial interest. Sent free on application to C. K. Wilber, A. G. P. A., Chicago, or A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland.

MOTHER—"Dear me! The baby has swallowed that piece of worsted." Father—"That's nothing to the yarns she'll have to swallow if she lives to grow up."

WHY is a prohibitionist unlike a postage-stamp? The latter usually gets only one licking, but the former, though he gets a score of lickings, loses none of his starch and still sticks. Also, water spoils the stamp, but it saves the man.

Only 3 Days to California from Chicago via Chicago & North-Western. No change of cars. All meals "a la Carte" in Dining Cars. Solid Vestibuled Train leaves Chicago daily 6:30 P. M. City Ticket Office, 212 Clark Street.

"WHAT did you say was the name of your horse?" "Nail." "Nail?" "Yes, Nail—N-a-i-l." "What induced you to give the animal such a queer name?" "Nail is the most appropriate name imaginable. My wife can't drive him."

LADY enters barber shop with a Skye terrier: "Mr. Barber, can you cut my doggie's hair?" "No, I can't; or rather I won't." "Indeed! You seem to hold yourself pretty high for one in your position." "Perhaps I do; but I'm no Skye scraper."

THROAT DISEASES commence with a Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and sure relief.

AN Argument—"The two best men I ever knew—" began the raconteur. "Excuse me," interrupted the precise man, "but you ought not to say that." "I hadn't got started yet. How did you know what I was going to say?" "I was referring to your English. 'Best' is superlative, you know. There can't be more than one 'best.'" "Humph! That shows how much you have read." "There is nothing to prove the contrary." "Yes, there is. Take any newspaper and read the bicycle advertisements."

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.

Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.

J. W. FISKE, Mf'r.
39-41 Park Pl., N. Y.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 21. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, May 26, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
The Twenty-second Annual Council of the National Rritish Women's Temperance Association—A Great Temperance Gathering—Death of "The Grand Old Man"—Progress of the War—Temperance—About Women—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, A White-Ribbon Idyl. By Dwight Williams . . 3
She Being Dead Yet Speaketh. By W. E. Heston . . . 3
The Greatest Party 4
Willard Hall Echoes 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Proposed Change in Alaska Liquor Law 5
The Japan W. C. T. U. Convention 5
The Girls of the World 6
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Water Drops Journey 7
The Hole in Mrs. Washington's Door 7
Frank's Dream 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Girls of Yesterday and To-Day 8
Poor Uncle Sam! 8
Cigarets Are Responsible 9
Law-Breaking Openly Advocated 9
A Beautiful Etching 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Y's at Work 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
New Zealand 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Florida—Rhode Island—Louisiana—Connecticut—Pennsylvania 11, 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 14
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 14
Announcement 14
Obituaries 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 15
THE HOME 15
Convention Calendar 15

RED-LETTER DAY.

FLOWER MISSION DAY—JUNE 9.
The Birthday of Jennie Casseday.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11–16.

Notes and Comments.

THE war makes us brush up our geography; also our arithmetic and astronomy. Dispatches from Hongkong according to standard time reach Washington before they leave Hongkong. This would be a "miracle" did we not understand that when it is noon in Washington it is midnight in Hongkong.

A BIOGRAPHICAL sketch of Mrs. Burt, with account of her death and funeral services, writen by Mrs. Frances Graham, New York state corresponding secretary, reached us just too late for publication in this issue. It will appear in our next. The June issue of the New York white-ribbon paper, Woman's Temperance Work, will be a memorial number, and can be obtained of Mrs. Graham, 355 Market street, Lockport, N. Y.

THE state of Pennsylvania, we learn with sorrow and indignation, has contracted with a certain brewing company for two carloads of beer a week to be furnished to its volunteer troops assembled at Harrisburg. It is possible other states are also providing the "boys" with that which not only steals away their brains but renders them physically and morally sorry defenders of the country's flag. We recommend that white-ribboners inquire into these matters in their respective states.

APROPOS of Dr. Schenk's sex theory, it is stated that "he accepts the scientific dictum that femininity is a result of arrested development in the embryo." That is to say we women are all undeveloped men—that if nature's efforts were unimpeded we should all be men. And yet, how often is the "new woman" berated because the "vain imagination" of some who "profess themselves to be wise" picture her as tending toward masculinity! According to the aforesaid "scientific dictum" all women should strive to be "mannish," and all scientific men should help them to evolute manward.

THE liquor leaders of the country are making vigorous efforts to defeat or reduce the beer tax proposed by the war revenue measure now pending. To this end they are urging individual liquor dealers everywhere to send letters and petitions to their senators and congressmen, and the National Liquor Dealers' Association has sent out to the senators a lengthy letter, setting forth the arguments against an additional tax on beer. According to their statement, "the more beer sold by a saloonkeeper, the smaller the profit." This they rightly characterize as "a peculiar state of affairs," and we can but wonder why the saloonkeepers endeavor so assiduously to increase their beer sales.

HONOR to Illinois colonels! A dispatch from Camp Thomas, Chickamauga Park, says that Colonel Bennitt, of the third regiment, is "after" the army canteen, and that Colonel Culver, of the fifth, has issued an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks inside the Illinois camp line. It further stated that the fourth Ohio, just west of the Illinois post, allows beer and whisky to be sold in its camp, and that this being demoralizing to Illinois boys, the colonels will probably take the matter to general headquarters. In behalf of the white-ribboners of Illinois we thank Colonels Bennitt and Culver for their most sensible action. May other military officers do as much for the moral and physical welfare of the "boys" in their command, is the prayer of thousands of mothers and wives.

WITH the passing of England's "grand old man," William Ewart Gladstone, comes a profound sense of loss to the entire civilized world. As the daughter land, whose filial ties are growing stronger year by year—and, in this critical time, day by day—the United States feels that to it next to England belongs the place of chief mourner. The United States ambassador truly voiced the sentiment of American people when he sent to the stricken family at Hawarden, sympathy and congratulations; sympathy in their personal loss, and "congratulations to the English race everywhere upon the glorious completion of a life filled with splendid achievements and consecrated to the noblest purposes." No more brilliant or heroic figure than that of Mr. Gladstone has appeared upon the arena of modern history. He was a statesman in the truest sense of the word. His outlook was not only wide but deep; his great heart, attuned to eternal verities, was quickly responsive to the needs of humanity. His voice was ever raised in behalf of the oppressed, whether of his own or other countries. For half a century he was the chief factor in moulding the policy of an empire upon which the sun never sets and the impress of the hand and thought of this great Christian commoner is stamped around the world.

THE re-election of Lady Henry Somerset to the presidency of the British Women's Temperance Association was briefly announced last week, and the further particulars of the convention, so far as they have reached us, are found on page 2 of this issue. No more splendid spectacle was ever seen than the personal attitude of Lady Henry in the two campaigns that have tried her soul. The first was when, after her visit to America, she advocated the broadening of the B. W. T. A. toward the do-everything policy, and the movement was characterized by those opposed as a "monstrous attempt at Americanizing Britain." Lady Henry believed the changes to be vital to the progress of the society, and she would not voluntarily abandon them. Invited by a majority of the executive committee to resign, she replied: "To his own master he standeth or falleth, and I refuse to recognize any master save the representative council of the association." The result justified her attitude. This was in 1893. But when, during the past year, she herself became the disturbing element, she refused to serve or to stand for re-election, not because women entertained views different from hers, nor that they openly proclaimed them, but she would not remain a personal point of variance, especially when the spirit of a few became such as to work harm to the organization, as she believed. Lady Henry possesses in a marked degree the ability to distinguish between persons and principles. She does not descend to criminations or recriminations, no matter what the provocation. This is an added power to her splendid capabilities, and one greatly needed in reform and in government. If another proof of her greatness were needed, we have it in her prompt withdrawal from the position taken on the India army situation as soon as she saw her error, and her open avowal of the same. We are glad that she was enthusiastically re-elected to remain at the head of the B. W. T. A.

Current Events.

The Twenty-second Annual Council of the National British Women's Temperance Association.

[Special Correspondence, London, May 10.]

MONDAY evening, May 9, the annual public meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association was held in Queen's Hall. The audience numbered 5,000. Lady Henry Somerset presided and spoke with power. The Rev. C. F. Aked, of Liverpool, and Mrs. Bamford Slack also delivered addresses. When Lady Henry alluded to Miss Willard the vast multitude arose to their feet.

On Tuesday the convention began at 10 A. M., with prayer by Mrs. Pearsall Smith. The annual report of the B. W. T. A. was read by the Hon. corresponding secretary, Miss Agnes Slack, after which Lady Henry Somerset gave her address. When she spoke of resigning the office of president, the delegates rose spontaneously and gave her an ovation. In the course of her most heart-moving address Lady Henry said it was the eighth time she had come before the council as its president. She alluded to the fact that the spirit of the gathering must have largely decided the result of the council; that the last year had been marked for her by sorrow and difficulties; and that she was determined to speak plainly of the questions of gravest interest.

She said: "I stand as I always have stood for the prohibition of the liquor traffic by the will of the people [called there the direct veto]. I have never changed my position on that question. I am not here to contradict vain rumors that I have ever advocated a dual basis in our work, for I have always stood for the principle of total abstinence."

Alluding to her letter to Lord George Hamilton, advocating that men should be treated precisely as women, she wished it understood that she spoke for a quarantine and not a license system, but fell into the error of advocating a system of regulation instead of standing by the principle of absolute abolition. She said she had since seen that there was only one way and that, to unflinchingly uphold the standard of abolition, and went on to say: "When I found how wrong I had been I did the only thing it was possible for me to do, I retraced my steps. If my action has brought great harm to the movement for which we stand, none has suffered more than I. . . . For the sake of the work it is essential that we should have charity for all. It matters most what we are, not so much what we do. I would far rather stand aside as president than be the cause of losing any woman from the association."

At the close of her address Lady Henry led in prayer, and "How firm a foundation" was sung, after which the memorial service was held. Mrs. Pearsall Smith spoke a few words and Lady Henry with intense pathos paid a tribute to Miss Willard. The essence of her thought was that Miss Willard was great because she was the embodiment of love itself. "All for each and each for all," was the spirit of her life. Great quietness and peace marked the spirit of the audience as Lady Henry spoke.

A Great Temperance Gathering.

AN International Temperance Congress will be held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y., from July 1 to 6, inclusive.

The object of the congress is to secure an exchange of views, so that the different classes of temperance workers may become better acquainted with the work and purpose of one another and to discuss plans for united effort along such lines as the following:

1. To prevail upon the 115,000 physicians in the nation to cease prescribing alcohol for internal use, except as they would prescribe other poisons.

2. To bring the leading life insurance companies to acknowledge publicly, what they admit privately, that total abstainers are at least twenty per cent safer risks than moderate drinkers, and then to take the further logical step to grant these total abstainers the benefit of their abstemious habits in lower insurance.

3. To urge upon the more than 300 universities and colleges of America to protect their students by providing clean and anti-liquor surroundings.

4. To see that the millions of children in the Sunday-schools are systematically fortified against the drink habit by moral and spiritual arguments, as they are now beginning to be fortified in the public schools by physiological and hygienic arguments.

5. To urge upon the 100,000 clergymen in this country to preach systematically, at least once a month, on temperance.

6. To teach the industrial and commercial classes to recognize the vital bearing of total abstinence on their respective interests.

7. To agitate for total abstinence as a qualification of teachers in our public and other schools—as it is rapidly becoming a qualification of engineers and others who handle complicated machinery, there being found nowhere more complicated workmanship than that of the immortal human minds and hearts, which are placed within the training of teachers.

8. To agitate for total abstinence in the officers and men of the army and navy, who are placed, not to defend simply a railroad train, but a government.

Also, there is to be an exchange of views on such questions as Fermented and Unfermented Communion Wine; Partisan and Non-partisan Prohibition Movements; the Best Substitutes for Saloons.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to every National and general organization and every local organization, including the church, that is opposed to the liquor traffic and the drink habit.

Each local organization will be entitled to one representative, if its membership be twenty or less, and for every additional twenty members an additional representative; each state organization to ten representatives, and each National organization to twenty representatives. While none but delegates will be entitled to vote on questions that will come up before the congress, all persons interested in temperance work will be gladly welcomed. All organizations are requested to appoint delegates on the above basis at as early date as practicable, and to notify the secretary of such appointments. The call is signed by Alexander S. Bacon, temporary chairman, Isaac K. Funk, temporary secretary, and fifty additional names of people prominent in reforms.

Death of "The Grand Old Man."

THE Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone died at his home, Hawarden Castle, on May 19, aged 89 years. Mr. Gladstone had been failing for some weeks and death came calmly and painlessly, his last spoken word being "Amen." In compliance with the expressed wish of the English people, the well-loved statesman is to be given a national funeral and his remains be interred in Westminster Abbey.

Progress of the War.

NEWS from the front is exceedingly meager and unreliable, a strict press censorship having been established by the government. Newspaper reports are therefore largely drawn from the imagination of correspondents.

There is a steady forward movement of troops to the seaboard, seemingly in preparation for the invasion of Cuba at an early date. The Spanish Armada is reported as having made the port of Santiago de Cuba, and the strength of our navy is now supposed to be concentrating there in anticipation of a battle, which it would seem impossible for the enemy to evade much longer. There have been no engagements during the past week, and future movements seem to wait upon the meeting of the naval forces.

NOTES.

THE battleship Alabama was successfully launched at Philadelphia on May 18.

THE Master Bakers' Association of Chicago, has advanced the price of bread one cent on a loaf.

THE cruiser Charleston sailed from San Francisco on May 18 with ammunition and projectiles for Admiral Dewey's fleet at Manila.

SENOR POLO DE BERNABE, former Spanish minister to this country, who settled himself at Montreal, where he could gain information for his government to good advantage, was quietly requested to "move on," by the Canadian officials, and so sailed for Liverpool on May 21.

TWO American newspaper men, Messrs. Thrall and Jones, of the New York World, are prisoners of war in Spain, but are to be exchanged for Spanish prisoners. Freeman Halstead, another correspondent, who was arrested at San Juan de Puerto Rico while taking photographs of the fortifications, has been sentenced to nine years' imprisonment.

Temperance.

A GRAND state inter-collegiate oratorical contest will be held in connection with the convention of Massachusetts prohibitionists on June 9. General subject, "The Ballot Box versus the Saloon."

WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR, in reply to the question, "How may a poor man make a fortune?" says, in the New York World: "Rum and tobacco he should entirely avoid. No man can make money unless his brain is clear, and clear it can not be when clouded with the fumes of alcohol and tobacco."

THE supreme court of Illinois has decided that the testimony of police officers and city employés against "blind pig" keepers is valid, and a reversal of the ruling recently made in the case of Evanston vs. Meyers, by Judge Waterman. As a result of the new ruling two "blind pigs" have voluntarily gone out of business.

A NEW proposition in regard to Alaska's prohibition law is that in the list of occupations taxed to secure revenue, "restaurants" be included, every place that sells "refreshments" being taxed $700, but with no permission for the sale of anything illegal, although it is considered probable that the "refreshments" will often include illegal liquors until public sentiment in all or parts of the country, has been so developed that the prohibitory law can be taken up, like a neglected sword, and wielded. Such a disposition of the case in the pending law will not make it any the less the duty of the secretary of the treasury to enforce prohibition. It will leave upon all liquor sellers the brand of outlaws, with no rights in the courts. The new government tax is, no doubt, objectionable in that it presupposes, though it does not permit, liquor selling, less directly, however than the internal revenue tax.

About Women.

MISS GRACE DARLING, a teacher in the South Chicago high school, has sold six hundred celluloid American flags at five cents each, in order to raise funds for the maintenance of free summer schools.

MISS JOHNSON, one of the best known women geologists in this country, will conduct a small party through Europe this summer. She has crossed Russia several times, and was a delegate to the seventh International Geological Congress, held in St. Petersburg last August.

THE late Dr. Elizabeth H. Bates, of Port Chester, N. Y., has bequeathed to the University of Michigan an estate valued at $125,000. A chair is to be established in the medical department to be known as the Bates professorship, the subject to be the diseases of women and children. This bequest is the largest in the history of the university.

THE trustees of the University of Pennsylvania have decided to establish a college for women in connection with that university. Col. Joseph M. Bennett has given four houses on Walnut street, valued at $80,000, for the purpose. These buildings will be destroyed, and new ones erected in their places. The college will bear the same relation to the university that Radcliffe bears to Harvard and Barnard to Columbia.

Abroad.

AT a crowded and enthusiastic meeting of the Salvation Army, held lately by the permission of the Lord Mayor of London in the Mansion House, a number of notables spoke, among whom were the Right Hon. Herbert Gladstone, M. P., and Sir Walter Besant. Mr. Gladstone said, after reviewing the work of the army in some of its phases: "I say, emphatically, there is no society or body in the country which has done more valuable work in connection with prison matters, and for the rescue of criminals, than the Salvation Army. Referring to the attacks on the army, Sir Walter Besant said something it would be well for all reformers to remember. It was this: "The more an institution of this nature is attacked, the better for it. You don't attack a dying society—you let it die. [Laughter and applause.] Therefore, the more hostile the attacks made upon this work, the clearer the evidence that it is doing good service."

Contributed.

A White-Ribbon Idyl.

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

OUT of the morning's brightness
Fly Love, in lily whiteness,
Around the world;
Fly with an angel's motion,
Fly with a new devotion,
To every far-off ocean,
With isles impearled.

Fly to the cities olden,
Of long oppressions holden;
Go storm their walls
As south winds come with flowers
To capture mountain towers,
And fill the woodland bowers
With festivals.

Your daughters, fairy-footed,
Fly to the lands imbruted
By evil long,
Where droop their sisters waiting,
The voice of hope translating,
A dawn no more belating
Of happy song.

Hail! hail! white-ribbon marchers,
Ye are the new-time archers,
With bows of peace,
White-feathered arrows bearing
For your chivalrous daring
Of ill and wrong unsparing,
With their surcease.

Your martial course is onward,
Your prayers uplifting sunward
Bring showers of light.
The Christ who loved His mother
Declares Himself your brother;
Like Him, there is none other
Enthroned in light.

Beyond the lily's glory,
He, by His deathless story,
Shall win the world;
White-ribbon host undaunted,
Go by His star enchanted,
'Till on the walls be planted
His flag unfurled.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

She Being Dead Yet Speaketh.

BY W. E. HESTON.

"I AM completely discouraged," said Mrs. Eldredge, with a long drawn sigh, "I see no possible way for us to continue our existence, to say nothing of doing more than that," and she settled back in her chair with a disconsolate air.

"Courage, my friend," replied her companion, but in a tone of voice that was pitiful in its attempt to be brave, "there are ways and means that we wot not of; 'not by might nor by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts';" and the last words carried a firmer ring.

"You always look on the bright side of things, Mrs. Heller, but the ways and means are long in coming to light. Here our president has been gone from the village five months and we have not yet found a successor; our union has not held a meeting for three months; we are all but disbanded; our superintendents are doing nothing; the departments are falling into decay. Temperance work in this town has never been popular; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union even less so; our very name elicits no more than a passing smile. In our most flourishing condition we had the sympathy of a choice few, now in our extremity even the few desert us."

"But we have one Friend who will never desert us," interrupted Mrs. Heller, "perhaps we have not trusted Him enough."

"Yes, my dear woman," without noticing the interruption, "we are on the verge of disintegration; and our individual union is but an example of the fate of the National organization. Our great leader is dead; she it was who inspired the women of our land to be up and doing. Led on by her and beholding her heroic efforts, her constancy to the cause she loved, her noble unselfishness, we pressed forward against all odds; but now our inspiration is no more. We are as sheep without a shepherd. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is entombed with its great Chieftain.

Mrs. Heller looked into the face of her aged companion. She saw real distress there and said gently: "It is unlike you, my friend, to surrender to circumstances in this way; this is not the first time that you and I have carried our union on our shoulders and hearts until a deliverer has been found. I do not anticipate the fate which you so dismally predict, either for our local society or the national organization. Now I suggest that we pray over this matter until evening, and then go forth in the strength of the Lord to conquer; in meantime we had better do some planning for a systematic campaign."

"Campaign?" interrogatively. "Who and by whom?"

"You and I, and among the ladies of our town."

"Well, what can we do?" putting her forebodings behind her with an effort.

"My idea is to interest some of the younger women; their presence at the meetings would give spice and variety."

"But how interest them?"

"That I do not know; but we will find means. By the way, did you see Mrs. Enos about taking the presidency?"

"Yes," laconically.

"And the result?"

"Failure, as usual."

"Ah, that will never do; what did she say?"

"She has so many cares—five children, you know; then her church work is heavy. She belongs to all the church societies and has an office in each; the woman's club takes a considerable time· the reading circle also; and of course they entertain a great deal—they have to, because of their position in the place. So you see how impossible it would be for her to assume any more."

Mrs. Heller mused and finally said: "It is my opinion that an office in the union will not be the last straw to break this camel's back. The busiest women are never too busy to undertake a little more; and now, to change the subject, have you read your memorial UNION SIGNAL?"

"No, I have not had the time; it only came yesterday, you know. I looked long at the picture of our loved leader—and the tears would come, Mrs. Heller; I could not restrain them. I loved her"—but her voice broke and she rose to go.

"I, too, wept," Mrs. Heller said, taking her hand tenderly, "but you must read it; it will encourage you; we can not let go down the work she loved so well." And with assurances of mutual aid in prayer and supplication unto the Lord, they separated, Mrs. Heller remarking as she closed the door, "Perhaps we can have a memorial service, if it is a week late; we will try."

Mrs. Heller and Mrs. Eldredge were respectively secretary and treasurer of the C— W. C. T. U. C— was a small town with a thriving business and a multiplicity of saloons. There were, however, many intelligent and a few wealthy families there which gave a certain tone to its rather small social circle. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union had not enjoyed unexampled prosperity; perchance the most wide-awake ladies of C— had not been drawn into it; the pastors may have looked upon it askance; at any rate it had barely existed, and scarcely that since the removal to a distant city of the last president.

After tea Mrs. Heller proceeded directly from the dining-room to her private apartment, where she remained for an hour; when she emerged her face wore the peaceful expression of a perfect trust in One higher than herself.

Throwing a large shawl around her she picked up the last number of THE UNION SIGNAL and walked rapidly to the residence of Mrs. Enos found at home and at liberty. Mrs. Enos was a whom she very popular woman, partly because her husband was the wealthiest man in the village, but more because of her own sweet womanliness. Mrs. Heller found her singing a soft lullaby to her youngest boy, as he nestled his curly head against her shoulder. Her eyes shone, and her voice sounded real pleasure as the servant announced her guest.

"I am so glad to see you, Mrs. Heller; will you excuse me for not rising? Poor little Johnnie is not feeling well to-day, and so I am baby-ing him a wee bit," and she laughed a silvery laugh as she pressed the child closer to her breast; "you know I never could consign my children to the servants, precious things, I want them to know a mother's love."

Mrs. Heller looked admiringly at the picture before her—the sweet mother face bending above the chubby baby face, and both fitly framed by the beautifully appointed room.

They conversed on all manner of topics—the club, the church, social functions—until at last Mrs. Enos herself introduced the subjects nearest her caller's heart.

"My conscience almost smote me," she said, when I refused Mrs. Eldredge's request; but it seemed so perfectly impossible for me to assume any further obligations."

"We need you more than I can say," replied Mrs. Heller, "but I would not think of urging you; you know what the demands upon your time and strength are better than I; you also know that your influence would be worth everything to us. Many of the ladies would join the union simply because you did; others would think there must be some good in it or you would not be there, and would follow your example. If you could only see it as a duty." And there was a yearning tone in her voice which touched a responsive cord in Mrs. Enos' heart. "But you know best," she went on brightly; "only—if you change your mind do not fail to let me know."

"You forget, Mrs. Heller, I am a member, though my dues have not been paid, nor have I attended the meetings for a year. I shall pay up my dues but there is no possibility of my changing my mind about the office; it is simply impossible."

"I brought over THE UNION SIGNAL for you to read," said Mrs. Heller, rising to depart. "It is the memorial number."

"Oh, I shall enjoy it so much. Thank you a thousand times."

"But must you really go? I am so sorry to disappoint you about the union."

Mrs. Heller smiled pleasantly, and giving the little boy a parting caress, withdrew.

Mrs. Eldridge found time to read her memorial paper before tea that evening, and the effect was as Mrs. Heller had anticipated. All of her doubts disappeared and she was determined to carry on at any cost the work for which Frances E. Willard had laid down her life. She knelt before her west window just as the sun was setting in golden glory and cried to the Lord to give wisdom and strength to carry on the mighty work which had been so close to the heart of their sainted leader. As she raised her head with one of the great promises on her lips the glory of the western sky seemed like a glimpse of heaven from which came a silent assurance of ultimate victory.

At the tea-table her son said, "Did you know that Miss Homer was home, mother? She came Wednesday."

"Ah, indeed; no, I had not heard of it; to remain long?"

"I imagine so. Mrs. Homer, you know, is quite poorly, and the daughter has come to remain indefinitely."

"I am glad that she is here, she is a young woman whom every one admires."

"Yes, indeed; she has been studying in Boston all the winter. I understand that she has made a few public addresses since leaving here which have attracted considerable attention."

"That is good. Miss Homer was always a very bright girl and one who is bound to make her mark in the world. I think that I shall call upon her a little while this evening."

An hour later found Mrs. Eldredge shaking hands with Miss Homer and giving her a warm welcome back to C—. "We have missed you beyond words to express, my dear," she said, "and you are not changed so very much after all," glancing at the tall lithe form before her, clad in its simple yet stylish costume of dark wool. "They tell me that this shapely head of yours is leading you away from us all into the realms of the learned, and that you are already attracting the attention of the erudite people of the day," and she tapped her playfully on the hand.

"Oh, nonsense," replied Miss Homer. "And you have not changed either; tell me all about yourself and your family; everything that interests you."

So they talked long, and eventually came to the subject which was the burden of Mrs. Eldredge's prayer.

"How very discouraging it must be for you," Miss Hosmer said, sympathetically. "I know nothing of the local work of the union, but have always been an ardent admirer of Miss Willard. She was the greatest woman of the age, fitly called the uncrowned queen of America. She was universally loved, too, as has been shown in the tributes paid her by a whole nation, nay, a whole world. I once heard her lecture when I was in my teens, and was completely carried away—out of myself. For the time being I was, like her, lost in the theme of uplifting humanity, oblivious of all selfish interests, ready to devote my life to the cause which she represented. But of course the impression wore off after a time. I was not yet out of school, and other interests and ambitions crowded out all but the memory of that hour. She was one of the most wonderful speakers I ever heard."

Mrs. Eldredge was listening keenly. "You are just the one we need, my child; it is not yet too late to live up to the ideal which she created in your heart."

"I fear it is," rejoined Miss Homer. "I have my career planned, and as soon as mamma recovers sufficiently, shall enter upon its fulfillment. It has always been my practice, too, to let side issues take care of themselves. To be successful, one must be possessed of but one idea, and live up to that."

"Yes, that was the secret of Miss Willard's success; I will leave with you the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL. Having both seen and heard her, you will find it interesting I am sure."

"Indeed, I shall. Thank you very much. But do not go, you have not told me half the news."

The next day was Sunday. A holy stillness filled the air which was balmy with the breath of spring. Before church time little Ralph Enos knocked at Mrs. Heller's door and handed her a note, saying, "I will not wait for an answer," and skipped away. The note read as follows:

"MY DEAR MRS. HELLER:—My heart is melted; I am ready to do anything for the cause—if to serve as president of the union, why, so be it. She lived much, though not long. 'We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial; we should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.' If I can emulate her example in ever so small a way I shall be honored, and praise God for the privilege. Sincerely yours,

"MARY L. ENOS."

Mrs. Heller laughed and cried with joy. Now we are all right," she said to herself, "our future is assured; God has answered our prayer."

At divine service that morning Miss Homer stepped close to Mrs. Eldredge's side and whispered, "That ideal has come back in all its force; I am ready to join you."

Mrs. Eldredge pressed the hand which was laid so lightly on hers, but said nothing. On the way home she overtook Mrs. Heller coming from another church, and they both said in the same breath, "Good news!" then in the next breath, "Mrs. Enos will be our president" and, "Miss Homer will join us."

Mutual congratulations and explanations followed, after which Mrs. Eldredge said, "Had we not better have the memorial service announced to-night for next Sunday? It will give us a very short time to prepare, but we can do it, and it is better to strike while the iron is hot."

"By all means," replied Mrs. Heller. "Our annual meeting occurs Tuesday, and if we have all arrangements completed by that time the participants can make a hurried but none the less thorough preparation."

Everything was nicely planned by Tuesday. Miss Homer prevailed upon her girlhood's friend, Miss Langley, to join the union with her. "She will be of so much assistance with her magnificent voice," she said to Mrs. Eldredge. "I read some extracts from the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL to her and she succumbed as I did."

The next Sunday night the largest church in the village was crowded to its utmost capacity. It had been rumored that Miss Langley was to sing and no one wished to miss so rare a treat. The program had been arranged with much prayerful thought, and consisted only of music and short addresses by the several pastors and a closing address by Miss Homer.

Mrs. Enos presided with sweet dignity. They sang the favorite hymns of her whom they had met to honor. There was a breathless stillness in the house when Miss Langley arose to sing, and never had she sung from her soul as on that night.

Even the pastors seemed to be imbued with the spirit of the evening as they paid tribute to her whose followers had been denied their sympathy.

When Miss Homer came upon the platform, the interest was at its height. Her eloquence was quite unexpected. It was evident that she had forgotten herself—everything but the grand life of which she spoke in such glowing terms. Then she made a plea for the work, in which she depicted its needs and asked them all on the spot to consecrate themselves to the cause for which one pure and noble woman had lived and died.

The enthusiasm ran high; the collection plates also ran high, and after the benediction a stream of women filed up to the front and wrote their names as members of the W. C. T. U.

Two hearts were made glad that night, and Mrs. Heller whispered to Mrs. Eldredge, "'She being dead, yet speaketh.' 'Praise ye the Lord.'"

East Jordan, Mich.

The Greatest Party.

[Extract from a Decoration Day address delivered by Miss Willard at the National Prohibition Convention, Indianapolis, May 30, 1888, at upon which occasion were assembled five hundred soldiers of the Blue and the Gray.]

HERE, side by side, sit the Blue and Gray. No other than the Prohibition party ever dared to be so great as to ordain a scene like this. I speak the words of truth—and soberness.

What a circle we have here! Sweep the compass of thought through its circumference. Prohibition first of all, the fixed point whence we calculate all others; the Blue and Gray, the workingmen, the women. Inclosed and shielded by this circle is the home—that goes without saying; and beyond its shining curve is the saloon, outmatched, outwitted and outvoted, which, in a republic, is best of all. For the fiat of the greatest party has gone forth, and we are here simply to set our seals to it, no saloon in politics or law, no sectionalism in law or politics, no set in citizenship, but liberty, equality, fraternity in politics and law now and forever. This is our platform in a nutshell, and it is a platform of four ideas at least.

The greatest party welcomes here the home-folks to equal opportunities and honors, and rallies here a remnant of the noble veterans who have learned that it is good to forgive, best to forget, attesting by this splendid object lesson that one political party spells "nation" with the tallest kind of a capital "N," and that the Blue and the Gray are to us emblems of nothing less than the blue sky that bends its tender arch above us all, and the gray ocean that enfolds one country and one flag.

When the troops were mustered out in 1865, we little dreamed that less than ten years later the home guards of the land would be mustered into the war of the Crusade. God bless the Crusade state, the veteran of our army! As the sequel of that mighty movement, God's pentecost of power upon the nations, behold the women who, only a year ago, went to the polls to persuade men to cast their ballot for prohibition in Oregon and Texas, in Michigan and Tennessee. If the voters of the greatest party are true to us as we have been and will be true to them, ten years hence we will help those who were beaten in four states that stood for constitutional prohibition in 1885, with our guns that are ballots, as we are now helping with our bullets that are ideas.

The greatest party stands for nationalism as against sectionalism; it stands for the noblest aims and aspirations of the wageworker as against monopolies that dare to profane that holy word, "trust"; it stands for the future in politics as against the past, the home vote with an educational test against the saloon vote with a beer-breath as its credentials; and best of all it stands for the everlasting and absolute prohibition of sin as against any alliance between sin and the government. For while the greatest party will never hesitate to be the champions of these causes good and great, so closely linked with its own central purposes, neither must it fail to put prohibition by law and prohibition by politics so far in the lead that no candid man can for a moment question the august supremacy of these overmastering issues. We are firmly persuaded that the separation of the people into two distinct armies, one voting for men who will outlaw the poison curse, and the other for men who will legalize it, must come, and that such separation cannot come too soon. We are not here to speak harsh words of armies rallied under other ensigns, but simply to declare that in this great emergency we cannot depend upon them. Party machinery and the ambition of party leaders to-day stand between the people and their opportunity. We would clear the track for prohibition. We are bound to do it. For that were we born and for that came we into this world.

When I think of Lexington and Paul Revere; when I think of Bunker Hill and the dark redoubt where General Warren died; when I think of Washington, that greatest of southerners, upon his knees in prayer at Valley Forge; when I think of Stonewall Jackson praying before he fought; of Robert Lee's and Sidney Johnston's stainless shields; when I remember Sheridan's ride and Sherman's march to the sea, with the boys in blue behind him, and Grant fighting the battle out and on to the glorious triumph of our northern arms, then my heart prophesies with a patriot's gratitude, America will win in her bloodless war against the awful tyranny of King Alcohol and King Gambrinus, and proud am I to have a part in it, for, thank God, "I—I too, am an American."

Bound together by our mutual faith in Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan, and Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina; cemented by the martyr blood of Iowa's George B. Haddock and Mississippi's Roderick Dhu Gambrell; made one by the pride we feel in these grand old pioneers, John Russell, the father of our party; James Black, its earliest presidential candidate; Gideon T. Stewart and H. W. Thompson, St. John and Daniels, the heroes of a later day and a more dreadful crisis; Green Clay Smith and Samuel Dickie; Hopkins and Brooks, Clinton B. Fisk and Geo. W. Bain and glorious old Neal Dow, the father of prohibition for the world, surely temperance people of the North and South may well say to each other, "Whither thou goest I will go; where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. The Lord do so to me, and more, also, if aught but death part thee and me."

In the spring of 1863, two great armies were encamped on either side of the Rappahannock river, one dressed in blue and one in gray. As twilight fell, the bands of music on the Union side began to play the martial strains, "Star Spangled Banner" and "Rally 'Round the Flag," and this musical challenge was taken up by those on the other side, who responded with the "Bonnie Blue Flag," and "Away Down South in Dixie." But after awhile it was borne in upon the soul of a single soldier in one of those bands of music to begin a sweeter and more tender air, and slowly as he played it, they joined with all the instruments on the Union side, until finally a great and mighty chorus swelled up and down our army, "Home, Sweet Home." When they had finished there was no challenge over yonder, and every Confederate band had taken up that lovely air, so attuned to all that is holiest and dearest, and one great chorus of the two great hosts went up to God; and when they had finished came from the boys in gray a challenge: "Three cheers for home!" and as these cheers went resounding through the skies from both sides of the river "something upon the soldier's cheek washed off the stain of powder."

Fellow soldiers in the fight for a clear brain, I am proud to belong to an army which makes kindred of those who once stood in arms against each other. Let us cherish North Carolina's motto from Isaiah's words: "Fear not, I am with thee; I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather them from the west; I will say to the north, give up, and to the south, keep not back; bring my sons from afar and my daughters from the ends of the earth." I am glad of these good times, and I think we womeu are in them, equal members of the greatest party, as we have been since the day of its birth.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

O. W. STEWART, the silver-tongued prohibition orator of Illinois, drew large houses to the noon meetings last week. It is a pleasure to hear Mr. Stewart's clear, logical exposition of his attitude toward the liquor traffic, and his earnestness reacts upon the hearer as he presses home upon the individual Christian his duty in the matter. He is entirely free from bitterness or recrimination, and his sweet charity for all who may not think with him disarms even his opponents, while his earnestness wins their respect.

The Menelee Trio accompany Mr. Stewart, and sang for the noon meetings to the delight of all. Their purpose is to sing prohibition, and in every way make song a power in the campaign against liquor. "And they went into the battle singing."

. . . . . .

At every service there are visiting white-ribbon women from other states. A special welcome is always extended those sisters who may be passing through Chicago. From Japan, from Canada and other distant countries they come, as well as from the different sections of our own land.

One of the visitors, en route from California to Massachusetts, said: "I have worn my white ribbon from the Atlantic to the Pacific on the outside of my coat, and I shall wear it until I return to the East, but I wish more sisters would do the same." Put the ribbon on your outer wrap, as well as upon your dress, dear comrades.

. . . . . .

For two years a business man, Mr. McNair, of the Dunn Advertising Agency, has faithfully led the song service each noon meeting at Willard Hall. His labors on Sunday have been so heavy recently that he feels he can no longer promise to be present each day. But we are glad that he still expects to be a helper whenever his duties will permit. The faithfulness required to fill such an appointment punctually is a witness to the Christian devotion of Mr. McNair, who has so cheerfully given this service without compensation "as unto the Lord."

(MRS.) MINNIE DARST,
Leader Noonday Meetings.

Correspondence.

Proposed Change in Alaska Liquor Law.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Governor John G. Brady, of Alaska, who is urging the repeal of prohibition, and the substitution of high license, is best answered out of his own official report for 1897, page 6, where he says: "During the last term of court the judge made a strenuous effort to enforce the law against this large class of offenders, and a number of convictions were secured. It was a demonstration that the law could be upheld if the officers of the court were determined to do it." Governor Brady's change of opinion has been so sudden that it is entitled to small consideration, though doubtless sincere. He has admitted in conversation with the writer, that if the government would send to Alaskan waters one or more well-equipped steam launches, the smugglers of liquor would find it hard to escape the clutches of the law. The Senate, by a unanimous resolution of inquiry, recently sent to the secretary of the treasury, has suggested the willingness of Congress to provide such means of suppressing lawlessness instead of surrendering to it. Shall a nation able to cope with Spain yield the field in Alaska to a few whisky pirates, and reward them for defying the nation's authority by valuable licenses to continue under law a traffic begun in defiance of law? Let us run up the stars and stripes in Alaska as well as in Cuba, remembering the words of the world's greatest statesman, that drink has wrought more devastation than war, pestilence and famine. The increased debauchery that high license would cause among the Indians, and that too through the nation's law, and not, as now, in defiance of its law, is admitted to be a serious objection to the change.

Congress has never canceled a prohibitory law, and the party or person that votes to do so, and that, too, when confessedly no real effort has been made to enforce it, must expect to be held responsible for the repeal and its results.

Governor Brady's argument for high license, those who talk with him will see, is purely negative. He knows nothing of the statistics of high license, its failures, even in orderly communities, to reduce either the consumption or the consequences of drink, but only that the present conditions in Alaska are intolerable. To change unenforced prohibition for high license he admits is "a choice of evils," forgetting that there is another choice, not evil, namely, the execution of the law, which should be his chief demand as the "chief executive." He does not expect that high license will reduce the consumption of drink or the crimes that spring from it, but only the smuggling and crimes incident to that. He forgets that high license always multiplies "speak-easies" in which the smugglers would easily find a continuence of their trade in a country so thinly settled as Alaska. Even staid Philadelphia, with the best of high-license laws, is full of "holes in the wall." The choice is never between imperfectly enforced prohibition and perfectly observed high license. There will be illegal selling in both cases, but the traffic is most restrained when deprived of all legal standing, and branded as a leper. Prohibition is not annihilation, but more than any other liquor legislation, prohibition fulfills Gladstone's great saying, that it is the purpose of law to make it as hard as possible to do wrong, and as easy as possible to do right.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS,
Supt. of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.
May 5, 1898.

The Japan W. C. T. U. Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The convention opened at 9:30 A. M., on April 2, with a well attended prayer-meeting in the lecture room. Promptly at ten o'clock the president, Mrs. Kaji Yajima, made her appearance upon the platform, and this was the signal for Mr. Gauntlett to play the national hymn. As the first strains rang out, the large audience arose and gave their honored leader the Chautauqua salute. After a few introductory remarks by the chair, there was another season of prayer, and then the business of the session began, roll-call, appointment of committees, addresses of welcome. Under the head of miscellaneous business, came the considering of two important changes in the constitution—deciding what the basis of representation in National Convention should be in the future, which resulted in making it one delegate for every twenty-five members, and determining what the life membership fee should be—this last becoming necessary because Hon. J. Hale Ramsey, who presented the World' banner, wished to join. Twenty-five dollars was deemed about right, meaning twenty-five yen in this country, and twenty-five dollars gold abroad. Just as this business was concluded, the clock began striking the noon hour. As is our custom all round the world, every head was bowed in silent prayer.

The first business of Saturday afternoon was the reading of the reports of the secretaries and treasurers. These included a résumé of the work of the whole empire, and gave a comprehensive idea of the advance that has been made. There are now thirty-one local unions in all with a paid membership of about twelve hundred. This is a gain of fully four hundred per cent. Several other places were reported ready for organization, and so the good work goes on. Just here Mrs. Sumikura, chairman of the committee on courtesies, interrupted the business of the convention by introducing all visiting delegates and all pastors and distinguished people who were in the house.

Then came young woman's hour. Miss Tami Mitani, National secretary, was called to the chair. There were poems, essays, letters and choice musical selections, besides the secretary's report of what had been done in the schools. Never did anything work out more beautifully or more gracefully than this program by the girls. The young women of no other land could have done better.

The last number on Saturday afternoon's program was an address by that most popular speaker, Hon. Taro Ando. We did not get an outline of this, but judging from the amount of applause he received, this leader must have been at his best.

Saturday evening, following the stirring organ voluntary, the world's banner was presented. It is of white moiré silk, four by six feet, and is suspended from a brass standard seven feet high. At the top are the words: World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union; on the left side the world's motto: "For God and home and every land;" and on the right side, "Not willing that any should perish." At the bottom, World's Prize Banner, 1897, and then the whole is finished in gold braid and very heavy tassels. The president's address and the reading of the telegrams received during the day, followed the presentation of the banner. Then Mr. K. Ito, whose name is so well known in connection with the temperance work in the Hokkoido, was introduced and gave the principal address of the evening. He took for his subject "The Influence and Duties of Women," and lifted his audience to the highest plane.

Sunday morning all pastors in the city preached temperance sermons in their respective churches, Rev. Hosokawa occupying the pulpit at Union church at nine o'clock and Dr. Meacham at eleven. The latter took for his theme, "The Relation of Women to the Temperance Reform." We wish all who read these lines could have heard this classical, poetical and yet intensely practical tribute to woman. It is a source of great regret that we cannot give at least a synopsis of all these excellent addresses.

At two o'clock a children's meeting was the order of exercises, the entire program of songs and recitations being given by the little folks.

Three o'clock the memorial services for our promoted leader. If only we could take you, dear reader, into the quiet and holiness of that hour. There was no eulogy—indeed, none could be pronounced upon the life of Frances E. Willard. She was so much greater than anything we can say that we are speechless. This service began with, "One sweetly, solemn thought," sympathetically rendered by the Young Woman's choir.

Mrs. Yajima presided, and gave the sketch, and Hon. Sho Nemoto, who, because of his association with Miss Mary Allen West, has come very close to white-ribboner's in America, was asked to voice the tribute of the Japanese. Mrs. Sakurai, who knew Miss Willard "at home," also spoke, and gave grand testimony, assuring us that there was no lack of harmony in Miss Willard's words and acts. The writer was asked to speak from the standpoint of "A Personal Friend," but the best that she could say was not half worthy of her. Beautiful hymns were sung and a benediction must have rested, not only upon those who participated, but upon all who were in the house.

There was no more encouraging feature of the convention than the mass-meeting on Sunday night. Pastors gave up their services and came together at Union church to testify not only to their faith in God, but in woman's work. Seven short addresses were given, interspersed with the same excellent music.

Monday morning came the election of officers, the reports of the superintendents of departments and the editor of the Woman's Herald. Mrs. Yajima was unanimously chosen again, and when her re-election was announced, the audience arose and sang the national hymn, giving her once more the Chautauqua salute. It was most inspiring. The reports showed a greatly increased subscription list, and that the women had much better ideas of methods than they had a year ago. The work in the schools and colleges, the mothers' meeting department and the department of unfermented wine are especially gratifying.

Monday afternoon there were five regular addresses on the program, besides the introduction of many visitors, who each spoke a word of cheer. The first subject was "The Rescue Home," by Mrs. Ushioda. Helping to maintain this institution is the most important work yet undertaken by the union. The second address was given by Miss Mary Florence Denton, who clearly outlined the aims and policy of the foreign W. C. T. U., and created great enthusiasm by calling upon all to enlist under our banner. This appeal was responded to by nearly twoscore of men and women, every foreigner in the house who did not already "belong" proudly rising to his feet.

Mr. Tomeoka, Mr. Hara and Judge Miyoshi followed. The latter on "The Expansion of Woman's Power." He compared the customs of the East and the West, the past and the present, and expressed a most cordial hope and belief that through the W. C. T. U. a new day might and would dawn for the women of Japan.

We came to the last service, Monday evening, when the most crowded house of all testified to the people's appreciation of the proceeding days. The speakers of the evening were Dr. Julius Soper and Hon. Mr. Kiyouri. The former deduced many beautiful, helpful lessons from Miss Willard's life. Mr. Kiyoura's subject was "Woman's Education." He spoke in most complimentary terms of his pleasure in being permitted to address such a meeting. Summed up in a few words, he believed that everything depended upon the home; and as woman was the center of the home influence, she must be educated, or the community and the larger home, the government, would suffer loss. In addition to these fine addresses the evening's program included "The Faces of Our Leaders"; illustrated with stereopticon. Then the very best of the special music came, the report of the committee on resolutions followed, and the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds" closed this never-to-be-forgotten three days' session of a woman's convention in the far East.

Yours faithfully,

CLARA PARRISH.

Tokio, Japan.

The Girls of the World.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The letter of Miss Clara Parrish in a late number of THE UNION SIGNAL must have produced sorrow and distress in many a heart. We were once more told of the inhumanity practiced upon the women and little girls of Japan by their countrymen and others. So appalling are the statements in this letter, that for a moment they seem almost impossible; yet when we women of California consider the state of affairs in our own midst concerning oriental women, little better than the conditions of Japan, we can more readily comprehend such degradation than women of states where immoral slavery is almost unknown. So much has been said and written against the terrible system carried on in California and so little has been gained thereby, that it seems as though church people and all those interested in the sufferings and sorrows of humanity and in the welfare of the country should unite in forever freeing the country of slavery—and such slavery as this. The day will come when people will be obliged to rise, and the sooner the better.

Let no more little faces, although faces of another race than our own, be wet with tears; no more childish forms be bent with suffering, and no more graves be filled with those who have taken their lives rather than face the future and endure their fate, and we sit by sanctioning the wrong with our silence. There is no Chinatown in the state but has pretty little Chinese girls in it, and not one of them is safe in counting upon a life of security. "The hardest part of my work," recently said the teacher of one of the country missions for Chinese, "is watching the little girls come and go to and from home," and she pointed to the Chinese village below. This teacher then told how often highbinders had attempted to allure these little girls away with money as they had been going to and from the mission. The night succeeding this interview a little girl was kidnaped in this very Chinatown, bound, gagged and carried away to a distant Chinatown. May the innocent little faces of our own little girls ever remind us of those others equally tender and capable of suffering, who are enduring such a life, that words capable of picturing it and burning it into the minds of the world's inhabitants are entirely lacking. May we do all within our power to obliterate the enslaving and suffering of little children, not only in our own land, but in those dark oriental lands beyond the sea.

MAUD BOARDMAN RODGERS.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Local Union.

TO Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin we are indebted for the following suggestive answer to the question, "How may we make our mothers' meetings more successful?"

A.—Popularize your mother's meetings by giving them as much study and careful preparation, at least, as is ordinarily given to clubs or church work. Hold them once a month, never meeting twice in the same neighborhood until you shall have been the rounds of all the neighborhood represented in the union's membership, and meet in private homes rather than in church parlors. The Sunday preceding the date of a meeting have well written notices read from every pulpit stating the time, place and topic for the coming meeting, extending an invitation to all women, especially young women, to attend, and add that "tea or refreshments will be served at five o'clock," or any hour most convenient for the close of the meeting. Do not vary from the rule of two in the matter of refreshments, thus precluding the possibility of making the entertainment burdensome. Serve tea and wafers, or lemonade and cakes, or what you will, but serve something. A little strategy is a good thing, and if some, at first, do come to the meetings because of the social and material inducements, they are sure to give food for thought which may win their interest and coöperation in time.

Begin the meeting promptly and make the devotional exercises in closest harmony with the theme of the hour. At the beginning of the year the local superintendent of mothers' meetings should prepare an outline of study distinctly progressive in its nature. It was Bishop Vincent who said: "The education of a child should begin generations before it is born." The corner-stone for a course of study for mothers' meetings should be heredity, considered in its various stages as pre-marital, initial, pre-natal, etc. The destiny of the child is largely determined before it ever breathes the air of heaven, but so universally have men and women been ignorant of or indifferent to this fact that sin and sorrow now rule where virtue and happiness should prevail. After heredity take up the subjects of moral training; what to tell our children and how; purity in the home and the school; the need for open purity; the curfew law and how to secure it; homekeeping vs. housekeeping; laws of your state regarding the sale of liquor and tobacco to minors; the legal disabilities of mothers; and finally the physical care of the child, such as sleep, food, hygienic dress, non-alcoholic medication, etc.

By no means confine the papers to members of the union. Frequently invite outsiders to address your meetings, giving them the subject you wish discussed, and when you have exhausted the best speakers and writers of your town draw from the county force. The workers of our county in New York have made their local work so alive and coöperative by this plan that the meetings are quite the event of the towns in which they occur and the attendance is always large. If mothers' meetings are not interesting it is entirely the fault of those in charge, for with a subject of such vital importance and a specified people needing and really eager to receive instruction, there is every reason why they should be the most interesting and profitable of all occasions. The great mother-heart is eager for knowledge as to its duty and privilege; eager to learn how it may best fulfill its duty and achieve its privilege. Put your own knowledge, which has come to you from experience, from careful study, or by a divine intuition into such attractive guise that its value will be at once apparent and the problem will very soon become, not how to get attendance upon your mothers' meetings, but how to secure a place large enough in which those meetings may be held. Do not hesitate to invite the young women to these meetings where they are usually conspicuous through their absence. The prevailing impression seems to be that "Mother's meetings are no place for girls," but if they are conducted with such tact and delicacy as will make them a fit place for any woman, they are surely fit for those who are to become the mothers of the future and who should early learn the sacredness of motherhood.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Thou, O God, hast proved us; thou hast tried us, as silver is tried. We went through fire and and through water, but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.—Ps. 66:10, 12.

THERE seems to be great activity along Temple lines in spite of the war. Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, Washington, D. C., writes: "We had a rousing meeting, May 10, in the Metropolitan M. E. church. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, the pastor, gave a most exquisite and glowing address on 'Frances E. Willard, her life and character.' After it I made an appeal for the Temple; there were several $50 subscriptions, and one $50 bill from one of the trustees of the church. He said: 'I give it because of Miss Willard, who, the last time I saw her, stood where you stand to-night, and her voice is with me still.'"

✠

A beautiful letter, accompanied by a $100 check, has been received from Mrs. H. R. Cody, Cortland, N. Y., to place her late husband's name on the New York memorial tablet. Mrs. Anna A. Heberson, Des Moines, Ia., pledged $100 to Miss Eva Shontz a few months ago; we have just received a check for this amount from her. The Peoria, Ill., union has done much for the Temple in the past, and they have added to their benefactions by sending another check for $110. Most of this amount was raised by filling Wheels and cards. Mrs. A. Clark, president of Ohio, writes to say that Mrs. Louisa Southworth, of Cleveland, O., has sent a $500 check to Miss Dow for the Temple.

✠

Mrs. Alfa V. Freeman, Seattle, Wash., sends a check which completes Lake Union's hundred dollar pledge. Besides, this noble woman writes: "I will soon send you another check, and hope soon to get filled the eighty fifty-cent cards you sent us. I long to have our memorial for our beloved Chieftain completed, so as to have Willard Temple remind the world of her grand life. While there is a dollar of indebtedness on the 'House Beautiful' I will do my best to help raise it." Mrs. K. I. Blakeslee, Bridgeport, Conn., writes the kind of letter I like to receive. She says: "I received fifty fifty-cent subscription cards and assure you I will return the $25 in cash before July 1. I have already ten that have been returned to me filled; also, cash collected before the cards reached me to fill twenty more. What little I have accomplished has been done in just one week."

✠

Mrs. C. I. Moors, president Cheshire county, New Hampshire union, sends a check for the last installment for a tablet in memory of Rev. Elijah Willard, great-grandfather to Frances E. Willard, who was forty years pastor in the town of Dublin, Cheshire county, New Hampshire, and was a chaptain in the Revolutionary war. Miss Willard was greatly delighted when Mrs. Moors and the white-ribboners of her county undertook to raise money to place the name of her noble ancestor in Willard Hall, and she wrote out the inscription she desired placed on the tablet. Extra money over and above the $100 has been sent to pay for the inscription.

✠

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill., has completed raising $100 by sending out two hundred fifty cent subscription cards to friends. She got a response from every card she sent. We have just received the last installment of it. Mrs. Tyng secured this money in a few weeks. Will not all our women try this simple and wonderfully productive plan which imposes no burden on any one? We have received from Mrs. Ann E. Warren, of Warren, Mass., the last installment on a hundred dollar pledge. She requests that the name of Mrs. Mary Anna Blair shall be placed on the Massachusetts tablet.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

The Water Drops Journey.

"SOME little drops of water,
Whose home was in the sea,
To go upon a journey
Once happened to agree.

"A cloud they had for carriage;
They drove a playful breeze;
And over town and country
They rode along at ease.

"But oh! there were so many,
At last the carriage broke,
And to the ground came tumbling
These frightened little folk.

"And through the moss and grasses
They were compelled to roam,
Until a brooklet found them
And carried them all home."

The Hole in Mrs. Washington's Door.

JOE and I had a fine picnic the other day. Our North Carolina Aunt Jane came to our house on a visit, and of course she must go to see Mount Vernon, George Washington's old home, you know.

Our house is a mile or so out of Alexandria, so we hitched up the pony cart and drove Aunt Jane into town one morning to take the electric car to Mount Vernon.

Joe and I and a lunch basket were going along.

While we waited at the car station on Fairfax street, a noisy crowd of school-girls dashed up from the R. and P. station. They had come from Richmond on a "vestibule," to go picnicking at Mount Vernon.

So the electric car was pretty full, but Joe and I got one seat, and the lunch basket and Aunt Jane another. There isn't much noise on 'em, you know—you just whizz along pretty quietly; so by wriggling around in our seats we could talk to Aunt Jane all the way. She asked us whether we had been to Mount Vernon before?

"Not on the electric car," says Joe, "cause it hasn't been running very long, but father drove Arthur and me over there once, when we were little boys."

The old lady gave a sort of grunt, and I knew she was thinking we were not very big boys now.

"Well, what did you see?" says she.

"Whew! we saw a lot," says I.

But, do you know, after Aunt Jane had made us tell her everything we could remember, she said, La! she didn't think that was much.

"Now, I am going in for offering a prize," said Aunt Jane; "I've got a gold dollar in my trunk, a shining fellow, wrapped up in tissue paper, and I am going to give it to the one who sees the most to-day."

You may be sure we used our eyes that day, and it seemed to us that what we two fellows did not see was not worth seeing.

The car was too full for us to get seats together going back to Alexandria, so we spent the time counting up what we had seen.

Presently Joe whispered out loud to me, across the back of two seats, "One hundred and ten." "One hundred and twelve," I called back, and that set the school-girls to giggling. But, for that matter, the girls laughed all the way, both trips.

Joe put his head down in his hands and remembered two more things; one was the custard cup used by General Washington at some great dinner, and one was a little mahogany table which would turn a somersault, and go flop against the wall.

Now Joe was even with me, and I must think of one thing more. I thought and I thought, but could only seem to see the great wide river, with high green bluff, the white stuccoed house, the old-fashioned garden set round with box, and all these sights I had counted in my "one hundred and twelve."

At last I remembered six rubber buckets, set under one of the cabinets in the upstairs hall; they were for use in case of fire. This set me "one hundred and eighteen," so there, now! I was easy, and could look about and enjoy myself while Joe was scrubbing up six more things.

He had thought up only six more by the time we got to Alexandria, but Aunt Jane let the time run on till we should reach our own front gate. So I whistled as we drove home, and looked at the red sunset through the trees, and pretended not to be thinking about Mount Vernon, while Joe was frowning and screwing up his face and trying to think up two more things.

But, in fact, I had thought of one more myself; such a funny thing that I laughed over it easy to myself; I was crazy to tell Aunt Jane, but I kept it to spring on Joe, in case he should get even with me.

Sure enough, just as our white gate came in sight, with the big holly-tree beside it, Joe sang out, "It's a tie, Artie! I've thought of the stove in the kitchen fireplace and the picture of the prison keys—that French prison, you know; the picture hangs in the upstairs hall."

We were close on the gate now, but I caught the reins and slowed up.

"I'm one ahead, though," I shouted; "I've thought of the hole in Mrs. Washington's chamber door, cut for her cat!"

I had won! But Joe was so tickled about the hole that he didn't seem to mind my getting the gold dollar. As for Aunt Jane, she nearly fell off the seat of the pony cart for laughing.

Joe hadn't seen the hole in Mrs. Washington's door; neither had Aunt Jane. One of the school-girls showed it to me, and when you go to Mount Vernon you'll find it in the door of the third-story room, southeast corner.—Elizabeth Preston Allen, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Frank's Dream.

FRANK had been walking in the garden with his uncle, who had been explaining to him how the plant was rolled up in the tiny seed, and how the sun and rain and air worked together with the mysterious life that was in the germ of the seed to unroll it and make it stretch out into a tall, fruitful plant.

He fell asleep in the arbor thinking about it, and dreamed that he heard a number of soft voices talking close to him. He listened, and soon came to know that they were talking about him, and seemed to be rejoicing that they had found him.

"Isn't it wonderful," one of the voices exclaimed. "Just to think that there is a splendid man wrapped up in him."

"Yes, dear Faith," answered another, "and it is our duty to help get the man out. It will be your turn first. What will you do?"

"I will teach him to become rooted in Christ," answered Faith, "so that he may begin to grow. What will you do, sister Prayer?"

"Oh, I will strengthen your arms and help him by claiming the promises to draw rich nourishment for his growth."

"And I," spoke up Promise, "will help you by giving him all the rich things God has in store for him as soon as he is hungry for them, and here by my side in the Word are Commandment and Warning and Knowledge and Praise. They will help him to grow into a strong man."

"And I," said Obedience, "will hasten his growth by turning him in the direction of Promise. I will lead him to where you can reach him."

"And I," spoke up Good Works, "will give him such exercise every day that he will grow rapidly."

"And I," whispered a voice that sounded like a soft zephyr, "will watch over you all and over him; and make all your work fruitful and perfect him in the image of his Father."

Then all the other voices softly whispered: "It was the Spirit that spoke. Amen. So will we do if he will give attention to us."—Christian Endeavor World.

JESSIE W. KITSON, the ten-year old daughter of the Boston sculptor, was recently presented with the Royal Humane Society's bronze medal. She rescued a small boy from drowning in a London reservoir. The young heroine, who received her reward from the hand of George Harwood, M. P., has learned swimming to good purpose, for when she saw the child struggling in the water she at once plunged in, and by her presence of mind and skill, saved his life.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have been very much interested in the little story which is on our page this week, because I was at Mount Vernon while on my vacation. It was my first visit to George Washington's home, and I was eager to see and remember everything, but in spite of the fact that my eyes have been trained to catch every detail of a picture, I missed the cat-hole in the door. I felt quite humiliated to learn that a bright little boy had seen more than I did, but I am going there again some day, and I shall take particular pains to find that hole in Mrs. Washington's door. The habit of close observation is a good one to acquire, and I hope my young folks will draw a lesson from the little story and always use their eyes to such good advantage that not even a cat-hole will escape them.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I have not seen any letters from Nova Scotia. I live near the Cobequid Bay, where the tide rises so high and so fast. The mayflowers are in bloom, and the grass is getting green. I am nine years old, and I belong to the Band of Hope.

Your little friend,
MAX M. LAYTON.
Great Village, Nova Scotia.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl seven years old. My grandma is president of the W. C. T. U., and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I love to read the Children's page. I have one brother and one sister. We are all temperance children. I would like to join the Cozy Corner. Would you like to have me?

Norfolk, Neb. CARRIE HARDING.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little boy seven years old. I have a black cat. My mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL.

CLAUDE VICTOR KUSE.
Perryopolis, Pa.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I am a boy eleven years of age. I have a little sister three years old. My father and mother are temperance workers. I live five and one-half miles from Glasco. I signed the pledge some months ago. There are two drug-stores in Glasco, and there was a joint, but the W. C. T. U. workers closed it up.

From your loving nephew,
Glasco, Kan: FRANK J. HARPER.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Seeing your invitation to children to write to you during vacation, I felt sure I was included. I am a little girl nine years old. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U., and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I read the Children's column, and enjoy it very much. We have two churches here, and no saloons, although the saloon men tried to get license last fall and failed. We have a nice L. T. L. of about forty members.

Your little niece,
Center, Mo. NATALIE ELY.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

20.

ENIGMA.

My first an explorer.
My 1, 4, 6, a young bear.
Second, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, the world's Saviour.
Third, 16, 13, 15, 19, 10, what most girls are afraid of.
Fourth, 17, 14, 4, 1, babies have.
Fifth, 1, 14, 13, 6, 9, 10, 11, we all wear.
Sixth, 1, 7, 14, 6, young horse.
Jerseyville, Ill. THEO DODSON.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MAY 19.

19. Canada.

Correct answer to No. 18 was sent by Ethel C. Watts, New York city.

UNION SIGNAL
AND WHITE RIBBON
WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON. MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Girls of Yesterday and To-Day.

A LARGE part of humanity, even of the Christian portion, continues to lament the "good old days" and the good old people who lived in them. It amounts to a fad to bewail the women of the bygone times. If anything could induce the happy dead to return to the scenes of their trials and conflicts, surely the women who departed this life fifty or twenty-five years ago would be prevailed upon, by the lamentations which occupy the spare corners of the newspapers. It is some consolation to the modern woman, however, to reflect that if the mourners were to have their wish, and the lamented sisters were to return, not one of those who so loudly bewail the womanhood of the past, would have one of the "dear departed" as a precious gift, but would rather hie him away to hunt up a despised modern bicyclist, bloomers and all.

We recently read a lament for the girl who is dead and gone; the "womanly, modest girl" who delighted in housework, who never knew a desire above the kitchen stove, whose ambition never soared beyond achieving matrimony. It berated the modern girl who rides the wheel in preference to devising brilliant roses on patchwork quilts, wears bloomers, despises housework, etc.

The chief difficulty in this kind of comparison is that those who institute it invariably choose for their purpose the best specimen of the past and the worst of the present, not from malice prepense, but because the average individual of our depraved humanity is keenly alive to all that is disagreeable in his present environment and often oblivious to that which is pleasant. Memory and imagination, on the contrary, leave out of their pictures everything that offends. Accordingly, the girl of the earlier period is idealized into a very charming personage, while the average girl of the present rarely has her dues. There were, no doubt, occasional girls in early days who were models in the housekeeper's arts, and who, because of great native ability, possessed, in spite of their environment, cultured intellects and a religious development, which made them charming indeed. But the average girl of that period was not even the remarkable housekeeper that she is represented to be by her admirers of the present. The literature of that time abounds in complaints of the gossiping, slatternly housekeeper whose sins were popularly supposed to be sufficient excuse for her husband's frequenting the public house and her son's going to the bad.

On the other hand, the girls of to-day are by no means so deficient in household arts as their defamers represent. Doubtless many of them prefer bicycling; so do many of their brothers prefer bicycling to farm work; but it is a fact to be recognized and accounted for, that it is the modern woman who has instituted scientific cooking and hygienic housekeeping, that she patronizes the schools in which these arts are taught, and that the marked tendency to systematic improvement in these essential arts of successful home-making have come in with the much berated "new woman."

It is true the girl of twenty-five years ago did not spend her time in just the way that her modern sister does. It must be admitted that she never rode a bicycle, but it may be a question whether this was due to her superior "modesty," "womanliness" and love of domestic pursuits, or to the more obvious reason that she had no bicycle to ride. There can be no question that the modern young woman spends much of the time in college which her predecessor spent in the kitchen. Neither can there be any question that the modern young man, with all his fondness for well cooked food, shows a decided preference for the cultured girl who can understand a remark about finance and who knows what the tariff means, over the "Hannah Janes" with all their devotion and household arts.

To the girls of twenty-five years ago marriage was the one goal of their earthly ambition. It was almost inevitable that they should accept with eagerness the first offer they received. In the numerous divorces of the present, we are reaping the harvest of such marriages; the harvest which always obeys the inexorable law: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

It is becoming more and more common for the young woman of to-day to plan for a definite life work aside from all possibilities of marriage. Marriage is ceasing to be the goal of a woman's life and is becoming what it should be, the greatest earthly happiness which can come to her if a man worthy of her presents himself and true love seals the contract. The harvest from such marriages will not be divorces, but the spread of happy homes, an exhalted womanhood and motherhood and a purer, nobler manhood than this world has yet known.

The girl of the last generation was shut up almost exclusively to house work and sewing, however distasteful these pursuits might be to her. The girl of the present may fit herself for any intellectual or business pursuit that she chooses. It stands to reason that far more women of to-day will find their proper sphere and make a success of their life work than did those who were obliged to do a prescribed task, however unfitted by nature for it.

The changed view of life gives to the modern young woman an independence which need not be, and usually is not offensively "masculine," though, compared with the silly, simpering miss who sought to ensnare every young man who crossed her path, the most masculine young woman of the present is almost a delightful creature.

It is also to be remembered that the girl of to-day is in an exceptionally transitional period. A sudden change of condition, even though it be for the better, is always accompanied by some evils. The girl of the present has not had time to adapt herself to her changed conditions. If she carries some of her weaknesses to her new state, it is no worse than the other half of humanity has done before her. If she expects that the unmeaning, extravagant courtesies which she has been taught to consider her due, should transform themselves into substantial favors in business transactions, she is sure to find her error before she becomes a successful business woman; if she makes the very common mistake of imitating the foibles of those she admires, copies the faults of the sex which has always paraded as her superior, and thus becomes disagreeably "masculine," a few years of experience will correct the fault. The girl of this century has many elements of character which prophesy a noble personality. Until the transitional period is past it is too soon to denounce her.

Poor Uncle Sam!

HE can not do it. He says he can not, and thus confesses to the whole world his weakness. We are sorry that he finds such limitations. When a certain part of his children once upon a time, said they "couldn't" and "wouldn't" he promptly put on his stars and stripes and went down and taught a family lesson of could and must. We would think that old age were telling on him were it not for the Philippine Islands and Cuba and a few other little things we know of. There are too many inlets and outlets in Alaska for Uncle Sam. He can not enforce his laws there, but the Philippine Islands, all scalloped and buttonholed, arn't too much to tackle. Uncle Sam said liquor should not be sold in Alaska and wrote it down in his book; but now he says that his liquor progeny out there won't obey, and he thinks he'll have to give them permission to do as they please, so they won't be disobedent. The old lady, you know, declared that her dog should go out of the house, but he sneaked under the bed while she stood over him with the broom. "Well," she added, "then go under the bed, but you've got to obey me."

Poor Uncle Sam! does he think he can enforce the "thou shalt nots" of a big license net, with all its meshes and large enough to spread all over Alaska? Will his disobedient children be good when he gives them the looking glass and the hammer? If they break anything is he going to thrash them and put them on the stool of repentance till they are willing to be good? If he is, why not thrash them now into compliance with what is already laid down as law?

The truth is, that Uncle Sam really is weak in his moral nature. He has gotten considerably warped and rickety, being "wet up" and dried out so much. He could make the people mind, but he wont. The secret of it is that the mess of pottage is too tempting for him and he refuses to see his present and future bondage.

In the debate in the United States Congress on the question of the repeal of the prohibitory law of Alaska, Senator Hansbrough, of North Dakota, hit the nail on the head when he said: "A high license law is simply a certificate of partnership between the government and the saloon-keeper."

Mr. Carter, of Montana, speaking for license, was obliged to confess to singular conduct on the part of the government; "that while one section of the public law prohibits the introduction of intoxicants into Alaska, or the sale thereof to any person or persons, the internal revenue tax has been steadily collected by the government, so that while the traffic is unlawful, according to one section of the statute, the man engaged in the traffic has in his place of business prominently displayed in each and every instance a certificate of the internal revenue department licensing him to engage in the traffic."

Mr. Perkins, another speaker, admitted that the government is to-day granting an internal revenue license to people engaged in selling liquor in Alaska, and that that is one of the reasons why no jury can be found to convict those who violate the law.

The liquor dealers say, "The government has given us a license to sell intoxicating liquors, and, therefore, we claim that we have a right to sell under the license."

Well, well. Here it is then in a nutshell, the old gentleman is in the business himself and is breaking his own laws. Things will never be righted that way. The Babylonish garment and the shekels will have to be given up, Uncle Sam, or this government will become a heap of stones.

Cigarets are Responsible.

WE are told by the daily press that President McKinley and Secretary Alger are not well pleased with the lack of progress in raising the volunteer army. At the present rate, it will take six weeks before the full complement called for is ready. Army officials protest that they are not to blame in this matter. The members of the National Guard in the various states are given the preference, but must pass the same rigid medical examination as raw recruits. It is stated that the rejection in the National Guard will average thirty-five per cent. This has caused the delay and much comment in the army medical corps.

But here is the strangest thing of all—strange from the standpoint of those who claim that cigarets are but mildly harmful at the worst. The public press reports that the physicians who actually conduct the examinations say that outside of the ranks of cigaret smokers there are even fewer rejection than there were in the days of the Civil war, but that among habitual users of cigarets the rejections are about ninety per cent. Dr. Benjamin King, of Philadelphia, who acted as an examining surgeon during the years of 1861–63 in the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, says that the average rejections during those years did not exceed thirteen per cent. He attributes the large increase almost entirely to the cigaret habit. We have moved on, then, from thirteen to thirty-five per cent of deterioration since the Civil war.

Most of the men who have failed to pass the medical examination have weak hearts or lack the vitality necessary to make good soldiers. Dr. King says: "The examining physicians with whom I have talked have generally told me that the excess of rejections is due to the large number of young men applying for enlistment who have become victims of the cigaret habit."

Almost three times as many rejections as in 1861! What stronger testimony could we have against the cigaret? Yet this only confirms what some of our best physicians and scientists had already declared.

Law-Breaking Openly Advocated.

THE praise awarded the liquor trade for "good citizenship" by its own organs is not "faint" enough to do any harm even in Hamlet's eyes. It slops over and lathers even those who break the laws. Columbus, O., like other cities having military camps, has had a large influx of strangers on Sabbath days. A liquor organ published in that city commends the open saloons, and lets loose all of the vile epithets of which it is master, upon those who ask the mayor to close them An article in that paper begins with this: "Temperance people are proverbially fools, and all that is lacking to demonstrate it is an opportunity." The mayor is commended for refusing to "injure the city" and "entail on many of its guests unnecessary inconvenience and real discomfort by closing the saloons on Sunday." He is reported as saying that the entire police force of day and night men were doing an enormous amount of work, taking care of the citizens and half as many more men, keeping a keen lookout for the crooks and answering unnumbered calls; and he felt that the men "could not, in addition, see to it that the four hundred saloons were closed and kept so."

But, we would inquire, why should it be necessary to watch such good citizens, "the best people on earth," the only really good citizens there are! Will some one please rise and explain?

Why is it that law-breakers and abettors are continually praised by these papers and lawkeepers are condemned in billingsgate, such as was used in referring to the citizens who asked that the Sunday saloon law be enforced in Columbus. The paper alluded to was "outraged by the impudence of these dried-up old maids and female hellions who had nothing else to do but poke their dried-up, peaked, sharp-billed noses into the business of the great public." We quote this as a sample where we might give columns, were it well to pervert the taste and insult the intelligence of our readers. We simply have this to say to those who want arguments against the liquor business in every phase of it, law-breaking and all, let them acquaint themselves with the sentiments of a liquor organ.

A Beautiful Etching.

WE have before us an etching of Miss Willard, done by the noted Chicago artist, Henry Taylor, Jr. The picture is the promised official portrait, indorsed by the National officers. Miss Willard is seated upon a sofa, a letter is held in one hand with careless grace and she looks thoughtfully out upon a distant scene.

The chiaroscuro is excellently handled, especially about the head. The face is in profile, and reveals both the strength and sweetness of her remarkable countenance. The effect of the whole is captivating. One who knew our leader could not fail to recognize in this picture a masterpiece portrait of her in her mature years and best mood. One such said, while gazing upon it, "She looks as though she would rise and speak as soon as she has thought it all out."

The highest there is in a work of art is that which it reveals. The artist has succeeded in revealing the soul of Miss Willard in a sweet, thoughtful, half eager reverie, and the result is highly artistic, expressive, satisfying.

It may be of interest to know that the etching is done on a copper plate, and differs but little from a steel engraving. The artist proof edition is limited to two hundred and fifty numbers. These are printed on the finest Japanese vellum, nineteen by twenty-four inches in size, signed by the artist, and matted ready for framing. The popular edition is the same size, printed from the same plate on fine Holland paper and is within the possibilities of all who wish a truly artistic picture of Miss Willard.

THE Ohio saloon is taxed $350 per annum to provide against evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating drinks, but the county poor fund receives only about one-fifth of the total and the insane asylums receives nothing whatever. Is it constitutional to appropriate money to the account of "revenue" when it was collected to provide against evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating drinks?

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, acting National W. C. T. U. president, has been elected one of the vice-presidents of the American Peace Society, to fill the vacancy made by the death of Miss Willard. Mrs. Stevens writes: "I accepted, for I believe in peace. I wish it would come."

President Turner, of Lincoln University, Rev. J. W. Van Cleve, of East St. Louis, and Rev. J. A. Lord, of Cincinnati, will speak at a big mass-meeting Tuesday night, May 31, and John G. Woolley Wednesday night, June 1, at Peoria. All friends of temperance will be welcomed to these large gatherings, and to the other meetings of the State Prohibition Convention, June 1 and 2, at Peoria, Ill. All railroads have granted half fare.

Mrs. Jessie Leggat writes from San Luis Potosi, Mexico, of a Protestant minister there who gave her time to explain some of the W. C. T. U. departments to his congregation, and she expects soon to have a medal contest. She is having so much success, even among people whose language she does not understand, that she writes for the encouragement of all, "If you want a field of labor, you can find it anywhere."

Mrs. Marietta A. Cassell, state vice-president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., is a committee to arrange for open headquarters for the local and state unions during the Biennial Federation of Women's Clubs, which meets in Denver, June 22-29. Dr. Kate Lobingier and Dr. Stewart have offered their reception room for this purpose, Room 322 McPhee Block, corner Seventeenth and Glenaton streets. White-ribboners and their friends from everywhere will be heartily welcomed by Colorado comrades.

Dr. Joseph M. Patton, a lecturer in the Chicago Polyclinic, in an article in the Clinical Review for March, 1898, says: "Tobacco should be altogether interdicted. Bernard showed that tobacco increased the pulse rate, and many observers have declaimed the disastrous effect of tobacco on the heart. (Decaisne observed twenty-one cases of intermittent pulse independent of organic lesion in eighty-eight confirmed smokers. He thinks that a state of narcotism of the heart is developed, characterized by pulse intermittence). The bad effect of tobacco on the heart is particularly evident in functional disorders where there is a tendency to rhythmic disorders. In many of these cases the digestive functions are to blame; nevertheless, in a person with well marked functional or organic disease of the heart, the use of tobacco should be prohibited."

Among the speakers at the National Congress of Mothers, were Deborah Leeds, Mrs. J. C. Fernald, Mary Wood-Allen, Emilie D. Martin, Miss Joanna P. Moore, and white ribbons were seen in all parts of the house as reminders that we have been workers for years along the lines of child-study and child-training. Dr. Wood-Allen perhaps never spoke with more force and beauty than before the Mothers' Congress. She moved many hearts with truest emotions as she talked of the great work of parents, and its value to the world. At the close she referred to the fact that she was Miss Willard's representative and spoke for her in behalf of the home. "Miss Willard," she said "was homeless, yet home was the heart of her thought. Her political preferences expressed themselves in the words, 'home protection,' her religion in the rallying cry, 'for God, and Home, and Every Land!'" At the mention of the name of our beloved Chieftain the audience broke into applause that showed how her life touched every heart. At the close of Dr. Wood-Allen's address, "Nearer, my God, to thee," was sung, the president requesting that during the last stanza all should think of our beloved Frances Willard. A sweet and solemn hush seemed to fall upon all as they sang, "E'en though on joyful wings cleaving the sky," and thought of her as now realizing more fully than ever, "how beautiful it is to be with God."

Young Woman's Branch.

Y's at Work.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ALTHOUGH the Pennsylvania Y's have not been heard from for a long time they are marching on. Since our last state convention we have organized thirteen new unions, and a number of old ones that had dropped out are at work once more. We are aiming to double our membership, or if we fail in that to do the very best we can. Some unions have doubled their membership. Good work is being done in many places.

Armstrong county reports work being largely devoted to the Temple, yet not neglected in other lines. Berks county, Reading Y's, one of the new unions, are adding to their members, aiming to have fifty, so they can have a delegate at the next state convention which meets in Reading. They have taken up the study of civil government, besides working in several departments. Bucks county, a new union organized last October with twelve members at Perin's Park now numbers over forty. The honoraries take as much interest in the work as the girls; at each meeting they take up one of the departments, and are thus not only interested, but becoming familiar with the work of each.

Dauphin county, Harrisburg Y's are constantly at work, and send letters each month to the state secretary, reporting work done. Have held a number of parlor and public meetings, are active in flower mission and prison work, distribute literature, succeeded in getting signatures to a remonstrance and thus prevented the licensing of a saloon; are always ready to help on the cause in any way they can. Greene county has only one union, but reports good work done. Lebanon county, a new Y at Campbelltown reports taking up flower mission, press and literature, keeps county papers supplied with items of the work, also a new union at Myerstown.

Lehigh county, Allentown Y's have added many to their number, and have over 150 boys and girls in their L. T. L. The county superintendent has organized one new union, and expects soon to report three more.

Philadelphia county does not mean to be left behind; reports two new Y's since the first of the year, both doing good work; one bears the name of Anna M. Hammer, our former state president. The First Y celebrated its eighteenth anniversary April 14, with Mrs. Ella A. Boole, our National Y secretary, as the speaker. Although a stormy night, we had a fair audience, and gained new members. We have begun the new year with more zeal and determination to do much better work. Our Y rejoices that it had a warm place in the heart of our dear leader, and her last public utterances in Philadelphia were for us. Several parlor and public meetings have been held, with two suppers in the park and others at our headquarters during the year. We have been glad to have with us Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, our World's secretary, Miss Johansdottir, of Iceland, Miss Anne Rothwell Stewart, state Y secretary of Maryland, and others.

One of our honoraries, Rev. C. E. Adamson, held for us in his church a memorial service for Miss Willard, at which a fine copy of her photograph was given to each one present.

Mothers' meetings have increased in interest, and six of the mothers have joined our union. These meetings are held weekly; we have a saving fund for coal, shopping department, discussions on home matters and housekeeping, and at present are sewing for the Red Cross Society. Many counties, while doing good work, fail to report. Ours is a big state, and this the secretary's first year, but she is trying to get acquainted with the whole field, and hopes in her next letter to report many places not heard from in time for this. Many of the unions throughout the state held memorial services for Miss Willard, and are responding to the call to do what they can to help free the Temple from debt and make it a memorial for our leader.

Other counties report faithful work being done. All along the line our young men and women are ready, armed, face to the foe, marching on to victory.

Lovingly yours for service,

A. ELIZABETH THOMAS,
State Y Secretary.

World's W. C. T. U.

New Zealand.

OUR thirteenth convention held in Napier and just closed, was the largest and the best in the history of the New Zealand W. C. T. U. The progress of our work is most hopeful. The white-ribbon flag now waves in fifty-three localities, thirteen new unions having been formed during the year, while we have thankfully to record that, though some are rather weak, not one union has collapsed. The European membership, which last year stood at 1037, has now reached 1294, which with the addition of 113 Maories, gives a total of 1407. Better than all, our proceedings were throughout of a most harmonious character. Strong opinions were expressed and many subjects looked at from widely differing standpoints, but all seemed willing to bow to the majority and believe the final decision was the best in the interests of our work. It was manifest that we are a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, every speech which dealt with the more spiritual side of our work meeting with a heartfelt response.

The convention was unique in one respect—that of the presence of four delegates from the native unions in the Hot Lakes district. Three of these were unable to speak English, and addressed the convention through the fourth, the half-caste interpreter, Mrs. Foley. Our superintendent of Maori work, Mrs. Hewett, went into the above district in 1896, and grand work has resulted. Six native unions have been formed, also several Sunday-schools and Bible classes and three thousand hymn and prayer books, Bibles and Testaments distributed.

Mrs. Mitchell, one of the natives, said: "I salute all the members, all the delegates and all the officers. I was born too late to go to school (I am waiting till you have done laughing). From the time that Mrs. Hewett came to us, in 1896, that was the beginning of good days for us, and the good days went on all through 1897, and now in 1898 they are still going on. All the drinking and evil deeds where I live have come to an end and the good deeds have begun."

Mere Peka said: "We are glad that you brought this good news to us, the Maori people. It is a valuable property that you have brought to us. My people were all wicked in the days gone by, but now we have had some good news through Mrs. Hewett's work. The work is good among the children. If we had a house of worship to hold religious services in, our settlement would be perfect. May you all, my mothers and friends, live in the love of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Artareta (Adelaide) said the others had said all she wanted to say, and concluded with the Maori salutation: "May you live for ever!" In other parts of the country our white-ribboners are at work among the Maories. Six hundred have signed the pledge in addition to the women who have joined the union. We are constantly receiving testimonies from outsiders as to the genuine character of the work. I recently met a lady who had been visiting at Rotorna and who heard some English tourists ask the natives to dance the haka, which they consented to do. The tourists then remarked, "You will want some beer and whisky, won't you?" "No," was the reply, "dance haka, no waipéro (fire-water); ka pai (very good) the haka now!" I think we need no further refutation of the oft repeated taunt thrown at us that the Maoris can not keep their pledge. The haka, with the accompaniment of the drink, is a demoralizing spectacle, unfit for any one to witness. The most encouraging feature of the work is the fact that to the Maoris "the blue ribbon" means not only temperance, but Christ. They seem unable to separate the two. I wish Europeans were similarly affected. One of them said, "I hope you will all remain in the root of the blue ribbon, for we are only the branches." Mrs. Hewett has been obliged to retire from her official position, and we have placed the Maori work in the charge of our president, Mrs. Schnackenberg, who speaks the language fluently. We intend to raise a special fund to enable her, once a year, to visit all the native unions, and feel sure the work will prosper in her hands. Our public meeting was devoted chiefly to the Maori work, Mrs. Hewett being the chief speaker. Short addresses were given through the interpreter by each of the natives, while Mrs. Foley gave an interesting account of her experiences in the Maori war, when she joined the rebels to avoid separation from her favorite brother. She was the heroine of that notable incident at the fight of the Gate Pah, when Colonel Booth lay wounded and dying, and Mrs. Foley faced a murderous rain of English bullets to bring water to him and his companion. When taken to the hospital Colonel Booth related how he had been succored by a half-caste woman and a special concession with regard to their land was made to the tribe as a grateful acknowledgement.

During the convention the following resolutions were passed:

1. That a medal contest department be formed.

2. That a letter be forwarded to the proper quarter asking that the natives be allowed to fish in Lake Rotorna without a license.

3. That the junior parliamentary superintendents make inquiries as to the law re the width of the tires of cars wheels, to see if any relief can be afforded to the poorer natives. (The last two deal with real hardships. The natives with childlike confidence brought all sorts of grievances to the convention, satisfied that the W. C. T. U. would see them remedied.)

4. That this union requests the premier to again introduce a bill for the repeal of the C. D. Acts. (These acts still stand upon our statute book, though they are nowhere enforced. The local authorities of the four largest cities only have power to put them into force within their own limits.)

5. That the government be urged to apply such sections of the corrupt practices act as can apply to the local option poll.

6. That the premier be urged to introduce a bill raising the age of protection to twenty-one years.

7. Urging that a bill be introduced into Parliament to equalize the conditions of divorce for men and women.

8. That an amendment be inserted in the Alcoholic Liquors Sale Control Act, prohibiting the employment of barmaids.

9. That the minister of justice be urged to set apart, in each of our large towns, a suitable place of detention for persons supposed to be insane and awaiting examination, that they be not confined in the ordinary police cells.

10. That a petition on the subject of cigaret smoking by boys under the age of fourteen be signed by New Zealand officers and presidents of district unions and presented to the House.

11. That all women be urged, in the interests of shop assistants, to discontinue late shopping on Saturday night.

Notice of motion was given by the Gisborne union to amend the constitution by adopting as our pledge the one inserted in the World's constitution, which contains the words "as beverages."

A new department was formed called educational meetings.

Mrs. Webb, superintendent social purity, read a paper on "The Responsibilities of Women as Mothers," and Miss Kirk, recording secretary, gave an address upon "Methods of Work," both being very practical and well received.

The subject of social purity receives increased attention, and all over the colony women are waking up to the grave need for action in this matter. Two or three unions carry on preventive work by means of "Society for the Help of Friendless Girls," while in Moercargill, as a result of Mrs. Barney's visit, the Victoria Rescue Home has been established. To avoid invidious distinctions the departments of drawing-room and college meetings have been merged in one, with the title of "Home Meetings."

The news of the loss of our beloved Chieftain reached us just as we were traveling to the convention. The fact that the cablegram had not appeared in the papers at Wellington (the headquarters of press association cables) led us to hope that the message had been mangled in transmission to other parts of the colony, especially as this was the first intimation of her illness, and we refused to believe it. Under these circumstances we felt it impossible to carry out the Sunday afternoon memorial service arranged before our arrival by the Napier friends, so we frankly stated the position and a very profitable general W. C. T. U. meeting was held. Miss Slack's cable placed the sad news beyond a doubt, and we mourn with you. And yet we dare not mourn. The work is the Lord's and He who had need of that choice spirit for the higher service will not leave us leaderless. All over the colony ministers fell into line on March 20, and much interest in our work is aroused. That is just what she would have wished.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

The reception meeting, prior to the opening of the convention was a thoroughly representative one. The Presbyterian schoolroom was decorated with the banners of the various Christian Endeavor societies which also sent representatives decorated with their colors. Rev. G. D. Cox, Baptist, vice-president of the Habokes Bay Christian Endeavor and Prohibition League represented those societies, Dean Hovell and Rev. G. Patterson, Presbyterian, representing their respective churches.

All through, from beginning to end, the convention was an inspiration. It closed with the singing of Mary Lathbury's hymn, "The Lord be with thee in the flush of morn."

Yours in the work,
MARY S. POWELL,
N. Z. Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

Florida.

"THERE'S the trample of a host,
Like the breakers on the sand;
Like the surf upon the coast,
There's a shock that shakes the land;
For a mighty nation's massing,
And the boys in blue are passing,
And their feet
Along the street
Drown the clashing of the band."

The massing of United States troops at Tampa has added thousands to our population, as if by magic. Just beyond the limits of our city the white tents and uniformed men tell too well who the strangers are and why they are here. Simultaneous with the soldiers came the saloon on the ground. "Only beer," 'tis said, cooled with ice, while the water is, of course, warm in this climate, and "Uncle Sam" does not furnish ice for his numerous family. "Then," some argue, "the change from North to South is so great it would not be safe to drink water." As though it would be safe to drink "the other" in any climate.

Tampa union, seeing the need and recognizing the opportunity before it, will speedily erect a booth upon the camping ground where water pure and cold will be offered the soldiers. A library will be put in circulation, books, magazines, papers, the best; flowers and delicacies for the sick will be received and distributed. In short, we will give it a touch of home and mother for the boys so far away from both.

One of our members owns a genuine beer barrel, handsome faucet and all, which we propose to place in our W. C. T. U. headquarters as a water cooler. The inside has been effectually purified by fire, the outside will be artistically and appropriately decorated, not omitting the white ribbon. It will probably bear a legend after this sort,

Where beer so lately held full sway
Cold water now has come to stay.

THE TEMPLE.

During May and June Florida unions are pledged to work for the end desired to be reached before July 1. A letter from state President Webb urges that other interests become secondary to this for the present. We earnestly desire to do our share in making the Temple a perpetual memorial to Miss Willard.

Messages come from all over the state. Mrs. C. S. Burnett Haney, now of Stuart, Fla., is state superintendent of purity. She addressed two memorial meetings at Stuart and at Fort Pierce. Is now in the North. From the union last named the corresponding secretary writes: "We did well last year, intend doing better this," and mentions a hopeful increase in membership.

Chipley sends a résumé of more than a year's excellent achievement. From ten members and four departments they have increased to thirty members and twelve departments. The town has been rid of its one saloon, by the united efforts of Good Templars, pastors of all the churches and the W. C. T. U. Temperance Day they had a rousing reform sermon, preached by a Baptist minister. This union makes its prayer service the most important feature of regular meetings.

Ocala tells of an interesting public meeting where a large audience attended and twelve names were added to the union. The little band had felt discouraged—thought seriously of disbanding—but now have taken heart and intend making this year their best.

Winter Park has recently had a "wet or dry" election in the county (Orange), which resulted in a victory for the "dry" by small majority, but "as the county officials are not supposed to be in favor of the new order of things, you may expect to hear of friction in the machinery in applying the law," writes my correspondent.

New organizations are reported as follows: A splendid new W at Gainesville, a Y at Sanford, one at Winter Park, and still another at Ybor City, a part of Tampa really. Half the members of this last named Y are Cuban; nine honoraries. "Our work is bound to advance this year," writes Miss Neal, our state corresponding secretary.

And now I want to say to the eleven unions who have written me beautiful reports of the tender memorial services held for our dear leader, thank you! I regret that I can only make brief mention of your loving tributes. There is in it all no "trappings of woe" but a brightness and a whiteness typical of the wondrous life commemorated. All express a determination to go on with the work with renewed energy. Florida will more and more substantially pay tribute to the precious memory of Miss Willard by helping build, thus, a lasting monument.

SARA J. GLENN,
Reporter, Tampa.

Wool Soap is a pure soap; so pure that it 's white; so pure that it swims. More than that. It's so pure that it won't shrink wool.

Made for fair skins and fine fabrics. Whenever you need a pure soap use

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD WOOLSOAP
IT SWIMS.
"Wool Soap is an excellent article, and every woman will be benefited by using it."

"A PERFECT FOOD—as Wholesome as it is Delicious."

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
BREAKFAST COCOA

"Has stood the test of more than 100 years' use among all classes, and for purity and honest worth is unequalled."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.

Costs less than ONE CENT a Cup.
Trade-Mark on Every Package.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.,
TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Rhode Island.

ALL through the year our thoughts and prayers have been with the "eighth round-the-world missionary," Mrs. J. K. Barney, so it is not strange that when her face was turned homeward we planned a reception to welcome her to her home and city. It seemed especially fitting that this should be held in connection with our semi-annual meeting, which for some years has been observed as a "thank-offering day." According to plans we assembled in a church centrally located, and had the business of the day transacted first, then came offerings. We think we have just the right kind of a woman for the superintendent of systematic giving, for she is so sunshiny herself and seems so impressed with the blessedness in "giving systematically and spasmodically too," as she says, that the very idea is contagious, and our people seem to enjoy bringing their gifts in this way. We were delighted to find the offering amounted to over four hundred dollars. Mrs. Paine gave us a sweet talk on the privilege and the blessedness of giving; several touching incidents were related, and we all joined in the noontide prayer with thankful hearts.

In the afternoon a very large audience gathered to see and hear Mrs. Barney. Among our special friends was our former state president, Mrs. E. B. Cheney, who gave a warm welcome to the one who was state president when she was secretary. Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, Jr., welcomed Mrs. Barney for the pastors of the city, and spoke beautifully of Miss Willard and her work. Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer welcomed her for the Local Council of women of Rhode Island, composed of thirty-one societies of women. She enlarged upon the need of Mrs. Barney in our own state, and rejoiced that we have such a faithful worker among us. Mrs. A. M. Paine welcomed our sister for the local unions, and spoke of the help Mrs. Barney's little everyday book, "The Pocket Friend," had been to her during the year. Rev. J. G. Vose welcomed our missionary for the church and his people; in these times of war we need the sweet influence of women to preach the gospel of peace and temperance. A cablegram was received from Lady Henry Somerset, and the National officers sent a loving letter of greeting; other letters were received and read from Anna Gordon, and each of the presidents of the New England states. A globe of rare white flowers, encircled with white ribbon, was presented from Anna Gordon for the late World's president. An elegant bouquet of "American Beauties" came from the National officers, and a large cluster of rare tea roses was presented from the state union.

Mrs. Barney's response to this welcome was a sweet heart to heart talk about her trip. In a marvelous manner, as she only can, she told us of the journeyings from the day of our farewell meeting for her, of her brief but blessed visit with our beloved Chieftain, the trip to San Francisco, her visit to the great prison, her voyage to Australia and the wonderful work on the way; of her six months in the great continental island and other countries, and then of her journey home, stopping on the way to report to Lady Henry the things she had hoped to tell Frances Willard concerning the prospect for success in those far-away lands. It was most tenderly and touchingly told, and all felt deepest sympathy with all the trials, and rejoiced in all the success of that marvelous journey.

Mrs. H. P. Nottage, the daughter of H. L. Hastings, sang very sweetly, "If I were a Voice" and "Some Glad Day." Those who were there said "it was a blessed meeting."

All through our state, in every large town, and even in little hamlets, our women have planned and carried out memorial meetings in honor of Frances Willard. Many of these have been held on Sunday, and the pastors have coöperated in holding union services, often giving up their own church service and speaking on some special line of Miss Wil-

(Continued on page 12.)

Child Wrecks.

One of the most Divine traits in mankind is the love for and care of the little folks. To furnish them good nourishing food is to supply the wherewith to build the little bodies into healthy and sturdy men and women. Parents who thoughtlessly give coffee to growing children will see the day when they would give anything on earth to be rid of the regret for the weakness and frequent sick spells of the children, caused by the alkaloids of coffee. Give the children Postum Food Coffee, the famous food drink, which goes directly to nourish and strengthen child or adult, and when in after days you glory in their strength and ability, you can remember with pride that your intelligence and care about the food and drink in their childhood made the sturdy men and women they are. It is criminal to be careless. It pays well to give children nourishing liquid food like Postum

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

lard's life or work. Every Protestant denomination has taken part in these services, and the expression of one seems to tell what all have felt. He said: "I want to thank the W. C. T. U. for the privilege I have had in studying Miss Willard's life in preparation for this meeting. I feel that it has been an inspiration to me to know about the life and death of this grand woman." In many places collections were taken for the Temple.

The work in the state is progressing; we feel that we have been blessed in a "hearing" before the legislature. We do not dare to hope that a "rum legislature" will give us a prohibitory law, for which we have asked at Miss Willard's request, but it is some satisfaction to get ministers of the gospel, business men and white-ribbon women to tell these lawmakers what they think of a license system and of the beneficial working of prohibitory laws.

Our women are taking the agency for Miss Willard's life; several will give the commission to their own unions. A very blessed district convention was held at East Greenwich, in March, when plans of work were discussed and helpful addresses were given. Eleven unions were represented.

Neal Dow's birthday was very generally observed by public meetings in churches, by C. E. societies, and by the local unions; so much interest was manifested that we hope the day may be kept every year.

Our women are much interested in the Hospital and in the Temple. We are raising one hundred dollars for the former and are on the second hundred for the latter. We have sent out Miss Willard's letter and some favorable responses have been received. Clara Parrish's work has interested us deeply and we are raising funds for her help.

This letter must not close without a tribute to our brave National secretary, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, whose coming to our state has given us fresh enthusiasm, and has increased our membership and built public sentiment for our work. May rich blessings rest upon her labors everywhere.

L. F. NICHOLS, Jr.,
State Reporter, Westerly.

Louisiana.

THE sixth annual convention of the second district, was held at Morgan City, April 14–18. Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, of Chicago, National corresponding secretary, Mrs. Alice M. Zable, state corresponding secretary, all of the district officers, except the treasurer, five district superintendents and about forty delegates were present.

The first night session was principally devoted to giving and receiving greetings from citizens and friends. Vocal and instrumental music by Miss Lizzie White, and solo and chorus by Mrs. Zable enlivened the exercises. Mrs. Stevenson gave an address, taking for her subject, "Temperance Light."

Mrs. Pharr's annual address was a stirring appeal to the unions of her district not to relax their diligence, but to keep up a constant and vigorous campaign against the liquor traffic.

In her personal efforts, Mrs. Pharr knows no such word as discouragement or failure, and she labors faithfully to instill knowledge and zeal into the unions throughout her district.

Mrs. Ray Whitworth, of Jeanerette, gave her methods and plans for conducting L. T. L. work, which might serve as a model for all L. T. L. superintendents.

The Loyal Temperance Legion rally, on Sunday afternoon, was one of the most encouraging events of the convention. Mrs. Stevenson devoted an hour each day to a school of methods, which was instructive and delightful. She made the plans of department work so plain that a child could understand, and I am sure quickened the intelligence of those who heard her.

Benefit night was a success in every way. Miss Fannie Brown, of Morgan City, won the medal in the oratorical contest, and the presentation speech, by Mr. George G. Zenor, was felicitous.

The solos, by both Mrs. Winchester, of the city, and Miss Harp, of Lake Charles, were encored enthusiastically, and the musical part of the program fully merited the admission price.

The military drill, by sixteen young ladies, just now when the air pulsates with the patriotic spirit, proved to be the attraction of the evening, and drew an immense crowd. The proceeds from Benefit Night made the work of paying bills an easy matter for the finance committee. There was a delightful program of recitations and songs on Y night, with an address to the young people by Mrs. Stevenson.

A memorial service was held in loving remembrance of Frances E. Willard. Mrs. Stevenson spoke with tender reverence of her friend and our friend who has passed onward, and Mrs. Zable sang her favorite song, "Crossing the Bar." It was a service worthy of our divinely inspired and beloved leader.

Sunday, Rev. S. Beall, pastor of the Methodist church, South, closed his church in order that he might with his congregation, participate in the meetings at Whitney Hall. It was a rare privilege for the people of Morgan City and the adjoining country.

Mrs. Stevenson preached an eloquent sermon from Matthew 45 : 16: "Jesus said unto them, they need not depart; give them to eat." At the night service her theme was gospel temperance.

The delegates who remained over Sunday, on Monday morning were treated to a boat ride on the bay in Captain Pharr's steamboat. He landed the party at his beautiful home, "Fairview," where the bountiful hospitality of Mrs. Pharr and family was enjoyed. Refreshments were served and the visitors given the freedom of the house and spacious grounds until train time. Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Zable remained guests of Mrs. Pharr until the following day, when they departed for the state convention at Shreveport.

The district officers were all re-elected. The increased territory given this district, by the new arrangement, has stimulated Mrs. Pharr to renewed vigor, to push the work of organization the coming year. May her labors be crowned with success, both in this life and the life hereafter.

MRS. LURY GOULD BALDWIN,
State Reporter, Baldwin.

Connecticut.

MOST tender and impressive have been the memorial services held in many of our local unions. Often the churches have united with the W. C. T. U., in honoring her who "yet speaketh." I have received reports from the unions at Milldale, Pawcatuck, Hartford, Mystic, Meriden and Willimantic.

The last mentioned union has just rented a hall which has been attractively furnished by members of the union and outside friends.

Many public meetings have been held, notably the following:

Hartford: Mrs. Bowen, of Constantinople, addressed the union and its friends on the condition of women in the latter city. Rev. Wilbur Crafts gave an interesting account of the work of the reform bureau. Miss Greenwood gave an instructive and inspiring Bible reading. A meeting to raise money for the National Temperance Hospital, addressed by Dr. Crothers, of the Inebriate Sanitarium.

The Hartford county annual convention was held April 27. The program was interesting and helpful. The state paper, of phenomenal growth, was represented by its bright and faithful editor. The state president gave royal greetings. The Y's and otherwise young people were duly represented.

Mystic and Meriden report free-will offering meetings. (Other free-will offering meetings have been held in Connecticut, only I have not received a report of them.

At the Meriden Willard memorial the Temple needs were spoken of and a collection of thirty dollars taken, and petitions were presented for Mrs. Ellis' legislative work, voted on, signed by the pastors and presiding officers and forwarded. This union knows how to unite business with pleasure. At their annual meeting, April 12, a musical and literary program was rendered and refreshments served in dainty fashion. Methinks there was dispatch in the election of officers and a readiness on the part of the workers to do the things required of them.

Pawcatuck union observed Neal Dow's birthday with an appropriate service. Many other unions united the Dow and Willard services and gave loyal tribute to both royal leaders.

New Haven county united in a grand memorial service at New Haven. The program was touchingly beautiful and the floral decorations so artistic as to be worthy of special mention.

Some soaps do but little harm. Some do much harm. There is one soap that does no harm. It won't shrink wool—won't harm fine laces—won't injure the skin. Make any test you will. There is absolutely no harmfulness in

MY MAMA USED I WISH MINE HAD

WOOL SOAP

IT SWIMS.

Milldale has held a parlor social one evening each month at the homes of different members. A good literary program has been provided and sometimes refreshments. These were enjoyable occasions, well attended and were the means of adding new names to the membership roll of the local union.

A weekly evening prayer-meeting is held and a good work done among the sick and needy.

EVELYN P. BURCH,
State Reporter, New London.

Pennsylvania.

FROM almost every home the stars and stripes are flying in token of love for country, and in the hearts of those who "wage our peaceful war," the colors are waving for work and zeal to save home and country from oppression, tryanny and cruelty caused by the demon rum. The white-ribbon host is marching loyally in line with every order to promote the cause we love. Our boys and girls are saluting the dear old flag, and proclaiming that it shall wave over every home and schoolhouse, but not over the saloon. We desire to record the many earnest, touching, tender words of sympathy mingled with the interesting account of the beautiful memorial services still being held for our departed leader. We can all unite in singing, "We are coming nearer," in thought, desire and purpose. Advance sounds all along the line in our state. We aim to keep an all-round activity in every department and be on the alert to go forward as the command comes to us. Our love and loyalty to Miss Willard will be repeated in our efforts to help and "hold up the hands" of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. The report of good work accomplished by Mrs. Hoffman reaches us from several counties. She sends us a résumé in a kindly letter.

I have been in fourteen counties; attended four county conventions (mid-year meetings), six annual county conventions; added more than 350 new members, one hundred at least were honorary. Collections have, in the majority of cases, covered the expense; in a goodly number exceeded the expenses. In Mercer county I held six meetings, and increase was nearly one hundred, more than two-thirds of that number in Allegheny county. I have only the kindest memories of my trip in Pennsylvania, and I shall be glad to visit the state again in September.

From the last letter of our energetic state president, Mrs. Chambers, we clip the following:

There is an effort being made to secure pledges for a million votes for prohibition. This is not the especial work of the National W. C. T. U., but as it is in sympathy with the movement we would refer the matter to the local unions, to take up if they wish.

I am pleased with the work of our departments, that practical part of our work.

Enameline
The Modern STOVE POLISH.
Produces a JET BLACK enamel gloss. Dustless, Odorless, Labor Saving. 5 and 10 cent boxes. Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

Mrs. Rhodes is making an especial effort to secure a place on the program for scientific temperance instruction at county institutes.

From Mrs. Rhodes, the zealous state superintendent, we have this encouraging report:

The scientific temperance instruction work seems to be faithfully carried on in Pennsylvania, notably in the western part of the state. The indorsed books are in almost all of the schools, and the study of temperance physiology has, to all appearances, fallen into its place in the school routine.

A proof of its effect has been shown in one town where the street boys, at a boys' parlor, when questioned, seemed to be perfectly familiar with the temperance lessons as taught from the text-books, and also with the evils of tobacco.

The National superintendent's coworkers' letter, etc., have been placed in the hands of every local superintendent, and should bring good results from the help it gives.

The temperance education law in Pennsylvania is an excellent one, and the object now is to enforce it.

The work of the prohibitionists in our state is booming. Chairman Chas. R. Jones is alive and alert, and he reports "enthusiasm for Dr. Swallow in the various counties in which conventions and conferences are being held. In all sections there is a feeling of confidence among the best citizens that Dr. Swallow will be the successful gubernatorial candidate." Rev. C. H. Mead, Volney B. Cushing and others are holding large and interested meetings.

Crawford county elected a new president and secretaries in October and the work has moved along briskly and harmoniously all the year. Our license court sits in February and for many years we have had only three licensed towns in the county, due largely to the work of the W. C. T. U. Last fall a new judge was elected, so there was a more vigorous effort than usual made by both whisky and temperance factions. Cambridge Springs, the home of the banner union of the county, having a membership of one hundred and thirty, with thirty honoraries, had seven applications for license. For years this has been a no-license town, so the union divided the town into districts, and remonstrated very thoroughly and went to license court with a delegation of one hundred and fifty citizens and members of the W. C. T. U. It is needless to say that the fruit of their labor was, all applicants were refused license, even to the new sanitarium, which is the largest and most elegant hotel between New York and Chicago, the Rider Hotel. Cochranton, the seat of the county headquarters, never did more careful, efficient work than she did this year. We had the largest remonstrances and literally shattered the petitions by the evidence produced against the signers. One of our hotel proprietors was so angry that he threatened to shut up his house and leave town, but he has not. We have a perfectly honest, fearless judge on our bench and one who does not cater to the liquor element and is not pledged to them. He has imposed the heaviest penalties upon those who sell liquor illegally, has laid down the law very rigidly to physicians, druggists and liquor dealers, which the temperance people intend to see enforced whenever necessary.

We have had Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, state president of Illinois, and Major Geo. H. Hilton, of California, as speakers in the county during the last year.

The semi-annual convention of Delaware county, held at Media, March 24, 1898, was a most interesting occasion. A large part of the exercises were in honor of our beloved Frances Willard, conducted by Mrs. Chambers, state president.

A call of the roll showed that there was a membership in twenty-four unions of sixty-nine members.

Resolutions were passed in regard to the loss of our leader, peace, the abolition of the liquor traffic, against the wearing of birds for ornament, and a letter of love and allegiance to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens.

Mrs. Chambers addressed the evening meeting which was well attended by an appreciative audience. Members of the Williamson school glee club rendered appropriate selections.

On March 15 seventeen young men were graduated by the Williamson school L. T. L. This was the third commencement, and makes forty-five graduates in all. Mrs. Chambers, the state president, presented the diplomas and gave an excellent address. Silver graduate badges were presented to the graduates.

On April 12 the L. T. L. united with the Christian Endeavor Society of the school in giving a welcome reception and meeting to the fifty-six new students who had entered the school that day. Of the forty-two boys graduated from school April 2, every one had signed the total abstinence pledge, and a number of them were members of the L. T. L.

Our energetic superintendent of work among foreigners and miners, Miss Dornblazer, reports hearty cooperation in her request for her department: "I wish to thank the dear sisters in the several counties who so generously sent barrels and boxes of garments to the miner's wives and children. We have wrought a good work."

Mrs. Mary Slaughter, an influential colored woman of Williamsport, has been superintendent of the mother's department of the colored union for a number of years. Three or more years ago it occurred to her to care for the colored women who were homeless and friendless, and recently we met with these sisters and had a blessed service in the Colored Woman's Home, Williamsport, the rent for a year, donations for house furnishings, provisions all provided, and there was great rejoicing. This city may well congratulate itself on this new charitable home, and the benevolent friends are promising a liberal support.

Good news comes to us from our faithful superintendent of soldiers and sailors department, Miss Louise Heiner:

Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, National superintendent soldiers and sailors, has been long planning a rest for soldiers and sailors in Philadelphia. She has been urging friends to help and has solicited enough money to pay nine months' rent, and has rented 1008 South Front street. Philadelphia county is ready to help, and under its superintendent, Mrs. E. P. Bosch, Oak Lane, Philadelphia, is pushing to the front, and solicits money, chairs, cots, beds hanging lamps, books, literature, anything and everything that will help to make the rest comfortable and keep the sailors out of the saloons and brothels placed so near the docks. The rest is near the International Steamship Company's docks, Washington avenue, and great good can be accomplished if we are only faithful to do the work. Dear superintendents, I have written to many of you, asking for fifty cents from each of your unions. We would like to have this amount from every union in the state. Send your money to your county treasurer—she will send it on to the state treasurer. Memorial Day will soon be here, and Memorial Day leaflets especially for the day are ready.

Thus I gladly "tell it out," and always leave off and lay over much that comes to me to report. We want to hear from the "wide wide world" and not take more than our share of a corner, but oh, we have so many good things to tell.

H. FRANCES JONES,
State Reporter, Philadelphia.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

While in New Orleans two weeks ago, I had the pleasure of meeting again Miss Clara Gregory Baer, teacher of physical culture in the Sophie Newcomb College, and one of Mrs. Leiter's associates in our own work. I was delighted to learn that in connection with her work as director of the physical education department at the Monteagle, Tenn., summer schools, Miss Baer will conduct a W. C. T. U. course of physical education, with special terms to white-ribboners. Miss Baer's ability is so well known as to need no comment, and it is greatly to be hoped that the W. C. T. U. course of physical education may be so well attended that other summer schools and Chautauqua's may follow Monteagle's example.

Mrs. Ellen K. Denney, National organizer, will spend the summer in Colorado, and is open to engagements in that state. She may be addressed at Colorado Springs. Mrs. Denney has been for so long a National worker that she needs no introduction. She does good, faithful work wherever she goes.

Mrs. Helen G. Rice, general secretary of our National L. T. L. Branch, will give part of her summer to schools of methods and institutes or to conventions. Mrs. Rice is not an expert in L. T. L. work alone; she is also a forceful speaker and is conversant with all lines of work. The Chautauqua, school of methods or convention which may secure her services will have reason to rejoice in the inspiration it will receive from an all-around woman. She may be addressed at 1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Law's recent trip through Canada in the interests of the Plebiscite was described as "a triumphal tour"; Mrs. Fields has been working in Missouri and Mrs. Harford in Kansas, ever since the National Convention, and each state is reluctant to send its worker into other fields. Mrs. Green and Miss Henderson are in Oregon, having done some work in Arizona en route. Mrs. Blair called at National Headquarters last week on her way to a series of engagements. Miss Kearney is filling dates in Mississippi until she shall go north for the summer. Mrs. Skelton is hard at work in California. Miss Carter and Mrs. Howe in Missouri, Mrs. Newton in Virginia, and Mrs. Conklin "all along the line." From all these organizers I have heard within the past two weeks, and I doubt not but those who have not written are doing equally good work. A systematic effort to increase membership as well as a desire to build up our work in every other report characterizes each one of our noble band of organizers. Theirs is no easy task, and they should have sympathy, help and encouragement wherever they go.

Above is appended the Honor Roll. Surely this ought to appear more frequently and to be much longer. May we not make the coming summer months a time of much seed sowing and of glorious harvesting? Use all opportunities sisters, to present our work. They are far more frequent than we dream if only we have the alert eye and the constant desire.

HONOR ROLL.

Mrs. L. E. Bailey, West New Brighton, N. Y. (5).
Mrs. Annie M. Wiley, Chelsea, Mass.
Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovell Minneapolis, Minn.
Mrs. Cornelia M. Scovel, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo. (2).
Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin (2).
Mr. C. J. Hull, (10).

TAPE WORMS
"A tape worm eighteen feet long at least came on the scene after my taking two CASCARETS. This I am sure has caused my bad health for the past three years. I am still taking Cascarets, the only cathartic worthy of notice by sensible people."
GEO. W. BOWLES, Baird, Mass.
CANDY CATHARTIC
Cascarets
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
REGULATE THE LIVER
Pleasant, Palatable, Potent, Taste Good, Do Good, Never Sicken, Weaken, or Gripe. 10c, 25c, 50c.
... CURE CONSTIPATION. ...
Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago, Montreal, New York. 313
NO-TO-BAC Sold and guaranteed by all druggists to CURE Tobacco Habit.

Treasurer's Corner.

Dues have been received since last report from Maine, Connecticut, West Virginia, Ohio, Massachusetts, Kentucky, District of Columbia, New Hampshire, Indiana, New York, Nebraska, New Jersey, Louisiana, Missouri, Mississippi, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Southern California, Delaware, Texas, Illinois, Michigan and Indian Territory. This is a goodly array of states that have not waited until the close of the year to pay dues. Several other states have been reported previously. It will be clearly seen that the states are more prompt in sending dues than they formerly were. During April over $300 was received from the $2 gift fund, and if each local that so cheerfully sent the $2 could know how much it has helped the National in meeting its obligations, they would be glad that they could contribute their mite toward a very considerable aggregate. Many other unions have made pledges which they will fulfill later on. For these we give thanks, but for the kind words and helpful spirit breathed in these precious letters we are more than thankful. Reports are coming in from many unions that are very encouraging as to our business plans. From Missouri, especially we hear most enthusiastic reports. Thousands of wrappers have been collected, and did every state do as well, thousands of dollars would be added to the National and state treasuries. Goodly sums have been sent in for Willard memorial fund and for the Hospital.

Mrs. Viola Neblett, of Greenville, S. C., left a bequest of $500 for the National a year ago. The treasurer has just received from the executor of the estate five $100 shares in a Building and Loan Association bearing seven per cent interest, in satisfaction of the bequest. We have just learned that we are beneficiaries in a bequest made by Elizabeth C. Pratt, of Manchester, N. Y., which is very cheering. We trust that notwithstanding our great sorrow in the loss of our leader, the confusion of the war, and other things that seem adverse, that we shall show ourselves workers that "needeth not be ashamed," at our annual meeting in St. Paul. The Lord truly is helping and prospering us, for this we give thanks and go on hoping and trusting.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—As soon as THE UNION SIGNAL reaches me I always turn to the Organizers' Corner to find where the co-workers are, and what they are doing. The thought so often comes to me that we are sowing seed. We organizers do not always see the results of our work, but surely the harvest we are looking for at our next National Convention will show that work has been done. God says, "No word shall return unto me void but it shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent," therefore, if God gives the words there will be a harvest.

When I came into the position of National Y organizer last fall, I laid down a few rules for myself, and since this is our own little home corner, and the world will not hear, I have decided to give them to the sisters.

1. I will read every word of THE UNION SIGNAL and try to profit by the suggestions from National officers and other workers.

2. I will try to see that "Glimpses of Fifty Years" and "A Great Mother" are placed in the libraries of book clubs, federated clubs, etc.

3. I will ask everywhere that "Nineteen Beautiful Years" be placed in the Sunday-school library.

4. I will urge each union to start a circulating library containing Miss Willard's books, and also one good work on heredity and one on sociology: also the purity books.

5. I will urge each union to start a scrap-book on Non-Alcoholic Medication.

6. I will call the attention of local unions to the W. C. T. U. course of reading.

7. I will endeavor to meet and reach with our cause at least one influential person in every town I visit. I will also make the acquaintance of the teachers and suggest the holding of a parents' congress with the teachers, because I believe this will awaken a great interest in the purity and anti-cigaret work. It will also lead mothers to see the importance of using the right of franchise where the school law allows.

8. I will try to arouse an interest among unions in the foreign population of their towns, and see that German, Swedish and other churches are always invited to join the union services.

9. I will endeavor to secure honorary members. (I recommend unions to hold a meeting for both active and honorary members occasionally. Give the men something to do. Put them on debates; have them secure copies of the state liquor and cigaret laws, and study and discuss these.)

10. I will be loyal; will not mention secrets; will not dwell on any slight misunderstandings, but will try to win many by showing the great and beautiful side of our work.

11. I will read the daily papers and the magazines, so that I may be able to converse intelligently with men and women on other topics besides temperance; no one judging the organization by me, shall say that it is "not broad enough" and that its women are bigoted.

12. I will endeavor to take good care of the body which my Heavenly Father has given to me, that I may be better able to "dare all things and achieve all things."

I was confined at home from December 1 until March, but am now working in Pennsylvania. I have since the National Convention delivered sixty addresses and held eighteen parlor meetings; have gained one hundred active and forty-eight honorary W's, and forty-five active and forty-three honorary Y's; have organized nine unions. I expect later to go to Colorado. I find that young women easily become interested, and the temperance committees are doing good work in many young people's church societies.

Yours lovingly and believingly,

RHENA E. MOSHER.

Northeast, Pa.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 139 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS.

Pres.—Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, 1610 Grace St.
Vice-pres.—Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 LaSalle Ave.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, 1691 Sheridan Road.
Rec. Sec.—Mrs. Watson Thatcher, 787 Walnut St.
Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

MEDICAL STAFF.

Regular—Sarah Hackett Stevenson, M. D., Pres.
Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

The following letter has been received from one of our vigilant white-ribbon sisters, asking, as many others do, about the use of alcohol in the National Temperance Hospital. For the benefit of all we will give the letter of inquiry and answer in THE UNION SIGNAL column in order to economize time and reach a much larger number than could well be reached by private correspondence.

"Mrs. Margaret Inglehart:

"DEAR SISTER:—I write for information which I am sure you will gladly give, as it is in the interest of the National Temperance Hospital. At the last meeting of our local union one of our members made the statement—not in an unfriendly spirit—that alcohol is used at the hospital. Just in what way she did not seem to know, but she had been told by a physician who had at some time visited the hospital to look into its workings, that alcohol was used. From what she said our women inferred that while alcohol was not administered directly, it was, perhaps, administered in combination with other things. Of course we are likely to meet this same statement in larger gatherings, and I write for information that I may know just how to meet it truthfully. So will you kindly tell me if alcohol is used and how? My heart is with the hospital and its work, therefore I make these inquiries. I wish I had means to help the work myself, but I can help a little perhaps by assisting in keeping up the good name of our institution. Yours,

"A. B. C."

In answer to our sister I will say I find the following pledge which physicians are requested to sign: "I therefore pledge myself in becoming a member of the medical staff of the National Temperance Hospital and Sanitarium Association, to refrain from the administration of alcohol, either internally, externally or as an active medicinal agent. I will not use wine, beer, whisky, ale, gin, brandy or any other form of distilled or fermented liquor in my hospital practice." Also by-law 23 reads thus: "In accepting a position on the staff or bringing patients to the hospital for treatment, physicians obligate themselves thereby to refrain from the use of alcohol in the institution."

Our physicians are men and women of sound moral principles, some of them having gained national reputation, and all perfectly reliable on the non-alcoholic treatment. We have a wide-awake "committee on alcohol" who report from month to month "no alcohol used in the Temperance Hospital." The institution is open at any time for investigation by any friends who wish to learn further of our methods. We are confident that the more you investigate our work the better you will like its operations. We use a lamp for certain medical purposes in which a small quantity of wood-alcohol is burned. We are informed that the article manufactured from wood is never used internally and is considered entirely unfit for external use by even those who believe in the medicinal value of alcohol. What an impetus would be given the temperance reform if enough lamps were used to burn all the contemptible stuff, instead of burning sixty thousand human beings yearly, and afflicting with unutterable woe the hosts of friends and kindred of this mighty army of slain. Dear sisters, let us resolve to work harder than ever to build up an institution which through self-denial and sacrifice is bravely "holding the fort" and steadily gaining the field for which our brave leader gave up her life. Yours for total abstinence,

MRS. MARGARET INGLEHART.

Announcement.

The state convention of North Carolina W. C. T. U. will be held in North Wilkesboro, June 11–15.

MARY E. CARTLAND,
High Point, N. C. State Pres.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

Died, April 28, 1898, at her home in Roscoe, N. Y., MRS. MARY F. DODGE, aged eighty-two years. Mrs. Dodge was the "mother" of the local union, and a faithful and untiring worker for its welfare up to the time of her death.

An Ounce of Prevention is worth several pounds of cure in medicine. Thoroughly sanitary conditions make disease impossible.

How to have thoroughly sanitary surroundings is told in a pamphlet by Kingzett, the eminent English chemist. Price 10 cents. Every household should contain this little help to comfortable living. It will be sent FREE to subscribers of this paper. Write

THE SANITAS CO. (Ltd.),
636 to 642 West 55th Street, New York City.
Disinfectant and Embrocation Manufacturers.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

This is what a prominent physician says: "I have given my own children the benefit of very careful study in the matter of absolute cleanliness in bottle feeding. I have studied the so-called easily-cleaned nursing bottles, and long ago came to the conclusion that a little Pearline would render ordinary nursing bottles the safest utensils of them all. I firmly believe that children properly fed and cleanly fed will avoid the majority of the difficulties which they encounter during the first two years of life. I believe that if every feeding bottle was washed with Pearline, many innocent lives would be saved." 546

DRINKING FOUNTAINS
FOR MAN AND BEAST
THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
84-90 BEEKMAN ST. NEW YORK — 311-313 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO
Catalogues mailed on request, and special prices given to all Charitable and Temperance Societies.

Copyright, 1893, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

MEMORIAL NUMBER
...OF...
The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,		$ .10
100 Copies,		7.50
50	"	4.00
25	"	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

$10 A DAY TO AGENTS
MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT WAR BOOK.
"Our Country in War." All about armies, navies, coast defences, Maine Disaster, Cuba, Our War with Spain and relations with Foreign Nations. Nearly 600 pages, written since the Maine Disaster. Magnificent colored illustrations. Agents making $10 to $30 per day. No experience necessary. Most liberal terms guaranteed. 20 days' credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 9 two cent stamps to pay postage.
EDUCATIONAL UNION, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

CANCER
I have made the treatment of cancer and other abnormal growths by medical interference a specialty for many years. The following and many other reliable persons testify to my success. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured six years ago. Hon. E. W. Jackson, Pres't Board of Education, Lima, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Ind. Father was cured nine years ago. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars,
KIDD CHEMICAL CO.,
2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

Our Library Table.

FIRESIDE READINGS FOR HAPPY HOMES. Written and selected by H. L. Hastings, editor of The Christian, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. Price 50 cts.

THE CREW OF THE DOLPHIN, by Hesba Stretton, author of "Jessica's First Prayer." Price 15 cents; ten copies for $1. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill.

THE PANACEA FOR POVERTY, by Madison C. Peters, D. D., author of "Wrongs to be Righted," etc. Price $1. The Bloomingdale Church Press, West 68th street, New York city

THE NEW TESTAMENT AND ITS WRITERS, by the Rev. J. A. McClymont. One of the series of the Guild Text Books. Price 40 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, Ill.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY CITY, by Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., author of "Our Country," and "The New Era." 16mo, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. The Baker & Taylor Co., Publishers, 5 and 7 East Sixteenth street, New York.

FOR MOTHER, by Joanna P. Moore. A little volume of talks to mothers on the rearing of children and the making and keeping of a happy home, from the standpoint of common sense and Christian character. Price 25 cts. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. H. E. Kramer, 132 Ash street, Akron, Ohio, whose booklet, "Entertainments," has given both pleasure and profit to many W. C. T. Unions, has issued another effort in the same line which is called AN EVENING WITH THE FLOWERS. The book is complete as to words, music, directions, etc., and is particularly appropriate for an entertainment at this season of the year. Price 25 cts. Send orders to the author, at the address given above.

MALCOM KIRK. A tale of moral heroism in overcoming the world, by Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," and other stories. The story of a consecrated manhood to Christ's ministry, and the struggles attendant upon devotion to duty, woven in with a graphic account of the origin of the present prohibitory law in Kansas, is told with a strength of purpose that lifts the reader into a high moral atmosphere and puts him in complete sympathy with the author.

The Church Press, Chicago, Ill.

The most interesting work that has come to the reviewing table this year is the bound volume of THE UNITED TEMPERANCE GAZETTE, containing the quarterly parts for 1897, sent out by the Ideal Publishing Union, Ltd., 33 Paternoster Row, London, E. C. Every possible phase of the progress of the temperance movement in Great Britain is considered by competent writers, and special interest is lent to the book by the accounts of the temperance demonstrations in connection with the Diamond Jubilee ceremonies. The profuse illustrations of persons and places identified with the temperance reform are exceedingly attractive.

It rests with you whether you continue the nerve-killing tobacco habit. NO-TO-BAC removes the desire for tobacco, without nervous distress, expels nicotine, purifies the blood, restores lost manhood, makes you strong in health, nerve and pocket-book.

STOP SMOKING!

1,500,000 boxes sold, 400,000 cases cured. Buy NO-TO-BAC from your own druggist, who will vouch for us. Take it with a will, patiently, persistently. One box, $1, usually cures; 3 boxes, $2.50, guaranteed to cure, or we refund money.

Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, New York.

The Home.

A Sunshiny Woman.

When we come to count over the qualities that endear our friends to us, says a recent writer, almost all of us think first of cheerfulnes. The sunshiny men or women, who bring a bright word or a glad smile with them, are always welcome as the flowers in May. Each heart knoweth its own bitterness, each soul has its own troubles and trials and vexations, and so we turn to the one who can lighten our sadness with the radiance of a cheerful spirit.

Sunshine of the soul is largely a matter of cultivation, for there are but few so fortunate as not to have had some grief. The selfish sit down and brood over their sorrows. They give themselves up to fits of despondency and moodiness, and are kind of a moral wet blanket on the pleasures of all with whom they come in contact. They tell you their sorrows, and bedew you with their tears until it seems that there must be a kind of luxury of woe in which they rejoice.

After all, the cheerful spirit is but an example of "that brave attitude toward life" of which Stevenson wrote. It is a courageous bearing of inevitable burdens, a determination not to fret and not to add to the sorrows of the world the grief of one's own heart.

A woman who had had many sorrows and heavy burdens to bear, but who was noted for her cheerful spirits, once said in explanation: "You know I have had no money. I have had nothing I could give but myself, and so I made the resolution that I would never sadden any one else with my troubles. I have laughed and told jokes when I could have wept. I have always smiled in the face of every misfortune. I have tried never to let any one go from my presence without a happy word or a bright thought to carry with them. And happiness makes happiness. I myself am happier than I would have been had I sat down and bemoaned my fate."

The gospel of happiness is one that every woman should lay to her heart. What it means to a man to come home at night to a cheerful wife, no one but he who has had to fight the hard battle of life knows. If he is prosperous, it is an added joy, but it is in misfortune that it shines like a star in the darkness. A complaining wife can kill the last bit of hope and courage in a sorely troubled heart, while a cheerful one gives new courage to begin the fight over again.

The mother who lets her children grow up to be moody and discontented, subject to blues and sulks, is failing in her first duty. She is handicapping them in the race of life. Cheerfulness is one of the prime requisites to success and happiness. The sunshiny man or woman has every one for a friend, for "this sad old earth must borrow its mirth, it has sorrow enough of its own."

Convention Calendar.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, Pasadena, May 31 and June 1, 2 and 3.

NORTH CAROLINA—North Wilkesboro, June 11–14.

WEST WASHINGTON—Centralia, June 24–16.

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing.

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READING FOR MAY—"The Dignity of Conferring Life," by Mrs. Mary E. Teats, of California, National W. C. T. U. purity evangelist. A reading especially helpful to mothers—and fathers as well—in that its keynote is "parentage a partnership with God." Ignorance of natural law has been the curse of the human race from the beginning, and Mrs. Teats shows from Bible history that the violation of God's law regarding the home has been disastrous to families and to nations. She truly says that knowledge of and compliance with the divine law of right generation lie at the foundation of all reforms.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR MAY. "Franchise," by Marie C. Brehm, National superintendent of that department. She explains the object and methods of the franchise department, tells why the W. C. T. U. declares for woman's ballot, why it adopted this department and what is being accomplished by it; answers Bible objections so-called; points out results in the states of Wyoming and Colorado, and tells local unions how to go to work to help secure the enfranchisement of the women of their states. The Reading will make a good circulating leaflet for franchise workers.

Of Importance to the Y's.

Mrs. Barnes has concluded to offer the remainder of the Y almanac for the surprisingly low sum of fifteen cents each. The pictures in these exquisite books are worth far more than that amount. Order early, for at the reduced price the balance will be promptly disposed of. Send fifteen cents to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Avenue, New York city.

Frances E. Willard's last address to the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention, held at Toronto, Canada. Price, 6d., by post 7d. May be had from Miss Agnes Slack, Hon. Secretary World's Christian Temperance Union, Ripley, Derby. Send 14 cents United States postage stamps.

The Memorial Number

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

THE
UNION SIGNAL
Official Organ of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, as second-class matter.

TERMS:

THE UNION SIGNAL
Is a weekly religious temperance paper of sixteen pages. Additional pages are frequently given without cost to the subscriber.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS
May commence at any time during the year.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE
Is $1 a year, payable strictly in advance. To pastors in the United States, Canada or Mexico, 50 cents a year, payable strictly in advance.

FOREIGN RATES
To all foreign countries included in the Universal Postal Union, the subscription price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1.52 a year, postpaid.

REMITTANCES
Should be sent by check, draft, express order or postoffice money order, payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Cash should be sent by registered letter. We cannot be responsible for loss if sent in any other way.

RECEIPTS
We do not send receipts for subscriptions, unless the request is accompanied with stamp. The change of date upon your address label will indicate within three weeks that the remittance was received.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS
When a change of address is ordered, both the old and new address must be given.

DISCONTINUANCES
Subscribers wishing THE UNION SIGNAL stopped at the expiration of their subscription must notify us to that effect; otherwise we shall consider it their wish to have it continued. All arrearages must be paid.

ALL QUESTIONS
concerning contributions or the policy of the paper should be addressed to the Managing Editor. All business matters referring to THE UNION SIGNAL should be addressed to the
Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
The Temple, Chicago...

PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD

In response to a large demand we have placed in stock the following pictures of...

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Picture on title page of Memorial number, large size . 40c

Large picture on title page . . . 40c

Union Signal, Feb. 24.

Cabinet size of each picture . . 25c

Large aquarelle tint, . . . 35c

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
THE TEMPLE...CHICAGO

Signal Notes.

ALL the carpet weaving in Persia is done by women.

THE American Bible Society during the year ending March 31, 1898, issued 695,953 volumes, principally Bibles, not including those issued in foreign lands.

THE general superintendent of the Norfolk & Western railroad has created quite a flurry among the employés by causing to be posted along the line a notice that "all employés using any kind of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be discharged immediately, and none shall be employed hereafter who use the same."

ONCE upon a time a Spanish armada started out to wipe Great Britain off the map, and now an offshoot of the Old Country is attending to the Dons without much apparent trouble. The whirligig of time may seem slow, but it brings about some pretty remarkable changes.—Bradford (Canada) Courier, May 3.

THE remains of Frances Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner," and his wife, Mary Tayloe Key, were exhumed in Mount Olivet cemetery at Frederick, Md., on May 18, and reinterred in a crypt in the foundation of the monument to the poet's memory which is being erected. The Key monument, the money to pay for which was raised by popular subscription, will be unveiled August 9.

THE Northfield, Mass., summer conferences begin June 10. Graduation day at Mount Hermon school is June 14, and at Northfield Seminary, June 15. Camp Northfield, for young men, will be opened June 30. On July 1 the World's Student Conference begins, and continues through July 10. The Young Women's Christian Association Conference is from July 13 to 22. The General Conference for Christian Workers, which is the oldest of the Northfield gatherings, opens July 29 and continues until August 18.

THE year closing March 1, 1898, in the missionary work of the American Sunday-school Union showed an increase of $12,089.68 in the receipts from all sources over those of the previous year. There were in the field 123 men employed, of whom 84 were at work during the whole twelve months, and 39 during a portion of the year; 1,522 new Sunday-schools were organized, with 58,138 teachers and scholars; 387 were reorganized. Aid was given for the first time to 1,836 existing schools, and 5,594 visits were made to schools previously reported, to encourage and stimulate them.

Have You Smoked too Much?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It will relieve the depression caused thereby, quiet the nerves and induce refreshing sleep.

North, South, East, West
—all are represented at the
New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Send for our illustrated Catalogue and learn the advantages to be obtained at the MUSICAL CENTER of the musical city of the New World.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
All particulars and Catalogue will be sent by FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

Important Announcement.

IT IS ALREADY KNOWN TO THE WHITE RIBBON CONSTITUENCY THAT AN AUTHENTIC

Memorial Volume...

OF THE LIFE OF OUR BELOVED PRESIDENT....

Frances E. Willard

HAS BEEN WRITTEN BY HER PRIVATE SECRETARY

...Miss Anna Gordon...

Miss Gordon has been assisted in this work by the ablest talent in ENGLAND and AMERICA, eminent men and women who desire to pay tribute to the greatest and grandest woman of the age. This volume, entitled, is now on the press and will be in the hands of the reading public before May 30. Please send orders for books to the firm of whom you purchased your prospectus and they will be promptly filled.

"The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"

OFFICIAL PUBLISHING HOUSE OF THE W.C.T.U.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

The Temple...Chicago.

"The quickening mother-heart of the world needs demonstration, not theories of child-culture."

Such demonstration is given in the pages of

A GREAT MOTHER

The biography of Madam WILLARD written by her daughter, Miss Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva B. Norton

No work of such value to mothers has appeared for years. It is both an incentive towards and an example of successful motherhood. White-ribbon mothers, especially, need to learn its open secret.

Handsomely Bound. Elegantly Illustrated.

PRICE $1.50.

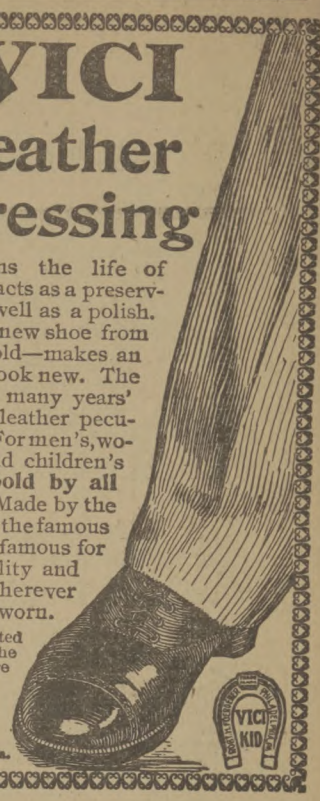
W. T. P. A. The Temple... CHICAGO

A NEW EDITION OF

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life

BY HANNAH WHITALL SMITH

Bound in cloth, artistically decorated in two colors.



PRICE, - - 30 CENTS.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.

VICI Leather Dressing

Lengthens the life of leather—acts as a preservative as well as a polish. Keeps a new shoe from looking old—makes an old shoe look new. The result of many years' study of leather peculiarities. For men's, women's, and children's shoes. Sold by all dealers. Made by the makers of the famous Vici Kid, famous for its durability and softness wherever shoes are worn.

An illustrated book about the wear and care of shoes mailed free.
Robert H. Foerderer,
Philadelphia, Pa.

EXCURSION TO CLEVELAND.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets from Chicago to Cleveland and return at a fare and one-third for the round trip on certificate plan, good going June 3, 4, 5 and 6, and good returning until June 13, inclusive, on occasion of the annual meeting of the Congregational Home Missionary Society in that city. This rate will be $11.35 for the round trip, which is somewhat lower than via other lines. Those desiring space in sleeping cars should make early application in order to secure the best accommodations.

Any further information cheerfully given by addressing J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

HOMESEEKERS' EXCURSIONS.

On the first and third Tuesdays in May and June, 1898, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway will sell round-trip excursion tickets (good for 21 days) to a great many points in South and North Dakota and other western and southwestern states, at practically one fare for the round trip. Take a trip west and see what an amount of good land can be purchased for very little money. Further information as to rates, routes, prices of farm lands, etc., may be obtained on application to any coupon ticket agent or by addressing F. A. Miller, Assistant General Passenger Agent, 95 Adams street, Chicago, Ill.

FIRST EXCURSION OF THE SEASON TO CLEVELAND

Via Nickel Plate Road, June 3 to 6 inclusive. $11.35 for the round trip on certificate plan. Tickets good returning until June 13 inclusive. Three through trains daily from Van Buren Street Passenger Station, Chicago. For further information address J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

JUST OUT—1898 EDITION

Of the Lake Shore's Summer Tourist Book. More interesting and attractive than ever. If you contemplate an Eastern trip it will be of especial interest. Sent free on application to C. K. Wilber, A. G. P. A., Chicago, or A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland.

"The Northwestern Limited," Twentieth Century Train, lighted throughout by electricity, with superbly appointed Vestibuled Compartment and Standard Sleeping Cars, Free Reclining Chair, Buffet-Library Cars, Dining Cars and Coaches, leaves Chicago daily at 6:30 p. m., via Chicago & Northwestern for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. City Ticket Office 212 Clark Street.

Excursion Tickets to the Omaha Exposition.

Via the North-Western Line will be on sale daily, beginning June 1, limits of tickets providing for longer or shorter sojourn, according to rate. This Exposition will be well worth seeing. For further information apply to agents Chicago & North-Western R'y.

CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Meeting will be held in Cleveland, O., June 7 to 9 inclusive, account of which Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets at $11.35 for the round trip on certificate plan. Dates of sale, June 3, 4, 5 and 6 inclusive. Tickets good returning until and including June 13. For further particulars address J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work.
J. W. FISKE, Mf'r.
39-41 Park Pl., N. Y

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 22. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, June 2, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
A Dearth of News—Victory for Equal Suffrage—Medical Temperance Convention—Will be Open on Sunday—Temperance—About Women—Abroad 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Pain—Hope—Love. By Kate Lunden 3
How the Brayton Churches Celebrated. By Mrs. Eva Jones 3
Mary Towne Burt. By Frances W. Graham 4
Frances Willard and the Lamplighter. Frances Bennett Callaway 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Annual Council of British Women's Temperance Association—1898 5
A New Feld of Helpfulness 5
Temperance Reform in the Old Country 5
Interesting Reminiscences 6
Alcohol-Flavored Food 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, 'Twixt Them Both. By Mary L. Wyatt 7
What Dora Did With Her Prize 7
True in Word 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Mrs. Leavitt vs. Lady Henry Somerset 8
Charges Specifically Considered 8
The United Kingdom Alliance and Lady Henry Somerset 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
Y's at Work—World's Y Fund 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
The B. W. T. A. National Convention—Tasmanian Notes 10, 11
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Texas—New Jersey—Delaware—New Mexico—South Dakota—Western Washington 11-13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Flower Mission—Fairs and Expositions 13
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 14
W. C. T. U. NEWS 14
Temple Receipts 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 15
PUBLISHER'S NOTES 15

RED-LETTER DAY.

FLOWER MISSION DAY—JUNE 9.
The Birthday of Jennie Casseday.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notes and Comments.

"WHAT would the great nations of the earth do," asks a liquor paper, "were it not for the revenue they derive from the liquor traffic?" "Give me a sober nation," said Gladstone, "and I will take care of the revenue." And surely America will not say "can't," when England says "can."

A WHISKY paper characterizes the Temple as "the great fortress of temperance—the Morro Castle of the foe." Our castle, however, it is understood, stands for freedom. It stands for a cause which is destined to be won not lost; a cause which is in harmony with Christian evolution and which has for its leader the Lord of Hosts Himself.

THE Christian Evangelist says that the ships our nation needs are War-ship, Fellow-ship, Friend-ship. They are not men-of-war but men-of-peace, and they constitute the best preparation for war when war is inevitable. These are our sentiments also, as is this, further enunciated by the same paper: "When these three ships shall become dominant among the nations of the earth the war drums will throb no longer and the battle flags will be furled."

AMERICA, "with all thy faults, I love thee still." This is the sentiment of General Grant's widowed daughter as evidenced by her formal rehabilitation as a "citizen" of the United States. In England, widows and unmarried women are citizens de facto, so far as local affairs are concerned, and by transferring her allegiance from the land of her adoption back to the land of her birth, Mrs. Sartoris relinguishes the privilege of being even a partial entity in the government.

MR. D. L. MOODY has issued a call to the people of the United States, asking for means to send religious books to the soldiers. His proposition has the sanction of the federal authorities, and Gen. O. O. Howard, aided by Major Whipple, the evangelist, and other Christian workers, are organizing the work in the different army camps. Mr. Moody says he will go to the front himself if hostilities continue, and meantime will devote his energies to raising funds for this distribution of literature.

NOTRE DAME, the Catholic university at South Bend, Ind., is among those colleges which emphatically declares against the "respectable" saloon as a promoter of temperance among students. It is through the influence of the faculty that the university is in prohibition territory, and we learn further that for thirteen years two daily newspapers of South Bend have had standing a paid advertisement signed by the president, Rev. A. Morrissey, giving notice that he will "prosecute to the fullest extent of the law, and regardless of cost, any liquor dealer or person who will give or sell liquor to the students, or in any way assist in procuring it for them." On the question of Christian temperance Princeton may with profit sit at the feet of Notre Dame.

WE deem the effort to bring Lady Henry Somerset into discredit to be of so much interest to white-ribboners that we have given up the entire eighth and ninth pages to the consideration of the charges made against her by Mrs. Leavitt, as published in The Voice of May 19. We have aimed in a fair and judicial way to cover the whole ground once for all. Space limit alone prevents our multiplying testimony to show that Mrs. Leavitt's conclusions are pushed to the greatest extreme, and that they can only be arrived at by dealing with detached statements. Her methods reminds us of the Methodist sister who was stoutly opposed to class meetings for women alone, for, she asserted, without fear of contradiction, "such meetings are contrary to the Bible, which says you must 'confess your sins before men,' and there aren't any men there to confess them before."

PATRIOTISM is of many kinds. It evolves from lower forms to higher—from the patriotism of the savage, prompted by natural pugnacity or desire for glory or revenge, to that which has for its basis the gospel conception of human brotherhood. The patriotism of the saloon is of the baser sort, a kind which fits the first century better than it does the end of the nineteenth, if we may judge from the reason given by a New York liquor seller for furnishing free drinks to Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors. "They need ammunition," he said, "to blow those Spaniards into kingdom come." That man evidently thinks that the object of the present war is slaughter; not the freedom of Cuba, but the humiliation of Spain. If there be any among the fighters themselves who hold to this idea, all patriotic citizens from the President down should labor to dispel it. It is greatly to be regretted that our soldiers and sailors are moving to the front to the watchword of "Remember the Maine!" instead of "A Free Cuba!" As Christian patriots we would fain believe that this cruel war is undertaken to secure the liberation of our oppressed neighbors, not to win military renown for ourselves. Let it be emphasized—if it be true—that we are carrying succor, not taking revenge; that we are remembering Cuba, while not forgetting the Maine.

TO the president of the American Anti-Saloon League, the Hon. Hiram Price, is due the thanks of the public generally, and of temperance people particularly, for his appeal to the President in behalf of the army and navy boys who are being furnished with free drinks by the saloonkeepers of New York. Mr. Price regards this action of the liquor sellers as a "sham show of generosity to popularize their miserable business." Be that as it may, it is proper that the attention of the commander-in-chief of our land and naval forces should be called to this very dangerous form of "patriotism," for, as Mr. Price reminds the President, it is a "well established fact that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage has much to do with the morale of an army, and that to this cause is attributable the loss of many battles for the right;" also that a word from him on this subject could do no harm and may do an immense amount of good. Mr. Price hopes much from this letter, because he knows Mr. McKinley's "sympathies to be right on the liquor question." From the practical results which have been so far produced by appeals to the President it appears that his sympathies in this direction coincide with those of his party in quality and in quantity, and we all know what republican party "sympathy for temperance" means! Mr. Price's communication has doubtless, like Mrs. Ellis's, been "referred to the war department."

Current Events.

A Dearth of War News.

Reports as to Possible or Probable Battles Lack Confirmation.

THE expected conflict between the naval forces of Spain and this country has so far failed to materialize. The movements of the Spanish armada continue to be a matter of conjecture, one report being that it is trapped in the harbor of Santiago, over which Admiral Schley stands guard. An immediate attack on Havana is announced, to be followed by the wholesale invasion of Cuba. On May 25, President McKinley issued a second call for volunteers, the number fixed at 75,000, term of service two years or less. This will bring the fighting force of the army up to 200,000.

Arrangements are now being made at San Francisco to send the second and third detachment of troops to aid Admiral Dewey at Manila without delay.

Admiral Sampson's fleet has returned to a point near Havana after six days' of scouting for hostile ships along the Cuban coast. Captain Clark has reached Key West with the battleship Oregon, and is rapidly getting into shape for active work. Each day finds both army and navy in better condition for a campaign and prepared to make short work of the question when active hostilities once begin.

NOTES.

THE chaplains of the regiments at Chickamauga Park have begun a crusade on the drinking places in and near that camp.

THE Rev. Thomas Sherman, son of Gen. William T. Sherman, who is a priest of the Catholic church, has been appointed chaplain of the fourth regiment of the Missouri volunteers.

VERY REV. JOHN A. ZAHM, the provincial of the congregation of the Holy Cross in the United States, has tendered to President McKinley the services of all the priests of whom he is at the head as chaplains for the war.

THE Senate passed a bill on May 25 forbidding the printing on United States flags of the names of any but state militia and Grand Army veteran organizations. The bill is intended to prevent the use of the flag for advertising purposes.

DR. D. T. LAINE, of Philadelphia, who has lived many years in Cuba, writes to Surgeon-General Terry, of the New York National Guard, about health precautions for our troops. Among other things he says, "Alcohol should be prohibited."

THE Wisconsin Library commission has arranged to send a traveling library to the Wisconsin troops in the South. Each company will be furnished with the latest periodicals and twenty good books. These are to be changed from company to company every two weeks.

ADMIRAL WILLIAM SAMPSON will receive $150,000, as his share of the prize money from the sale of the six principal ships and cargoes captured by American men-of-war since the beginning of war with Spain. The total value of the prizes is $1,500,000; fifty per cent of this sum will go to the government, twenty per cent of the remainder to the commander of the squadron that made the captures, and the remaining thirty per cent will be divided according to rank, among the officers and men of the ships.

Victory For Equal Suffrage.

THE appellate court, sitting at Ottawa, Ill., has held that the will of Elizabeth H. Church, who died at Freeport, March 10, 1895, leaving $8,000 to be expended in the interest of woman suffrage in the United States, was legal and valid. The case was taken on appeal from the circuit court of Stephenson county, the appellant being William Lloyd Garrison, Jr., of Boston, and the appellees Sarah C. Little, a niece, and Charles H. Little, a nephew of Mrs. Church. It was maintained that the will was invalid, in so far as it related to the bequest of $8,000, because it was intended for the purpose of changing existing statutes. The court held that "charitable use, where neither law nor public policy forbids, may be applied to almost anything to promote the well-doing and well-being of social man." The court also approvingly quoted the following definition of charity: "Whatever is given for love of God, or the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense—given from these motives and to these ends, free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private or selfish."

The court referred to the decision of the Massachusetts supreme court, in which it was held that moneys given for the cause which had for its end the abolition of slavery was just and valid. Any purpose was held to be charitable which does not conflict with the statutes. The order of the circuit court was therefore held to be erroneous, and an order was given that the $8,000 be given to William Lloyd Garrison to be spent in the cause of woman suffrage as he saw fit. Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCullough was attorney for Mr. Garrison.

Medical Temperance Convention.

THE coming convention of the American Medical Temperance Association at Prohibition Park (Westerleigh), Staten Island, on July 5 and 6 next, promises to surpass in interest and attendance any previous meeting of this body. Dr. T. D. Crothers, editor of The Journal of Inebriety, of Hartford, Conn., secretary of the organization, is assured of an excellent program in the papers already promised. Among the prominent American speakers will be Dr. Ira Van Gieson, superintendent New York Pathological Institute, and Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston. Several prominent European physicians of international reputation will prepare papers expressly for the occasion, including Dr. Sims Woodhead, of London, president of the British Medical Temperance Society and director of the Royal Laboratories; Dr. J. J. Ridge, secretary of the same society; Dr. Norman Kerr, of London, president of the British Society for the Study of Inebriety, and Dr. Sagrund, editor of La Alcohol, of Paris.

Will be Open on Sundays.

BY a vote of twenty-four to twelve the directors of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition have decided to keep open the gates of the exposition on Sundays from 1 P. M. to 10 P. M. The resolution passed was as follows:

Resolved, That the exposition grounds and buildings be kept open on Sundays from 1 P. M. to 10 P. M., and conducted in the same manner as on week days, except that the sale of liquors be not permitted; that concerts be given and that religious services be held in the auditorium on Sunday afternoons.

Temperance.

THE temperance committee of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church at Merchantville, N. J., has begun an agitation to substitute water for wine in the Lord's Supper.

THE date of the state convention of New York prohibitionists has been changed to June 29 and 30, in order not to conflict with the commencement exercises of many schools and colleges. The place of meeting is Syracuse.

PROF. GEORGE CHAMBERS, organist and soprano singer with the Silver Lake Quartette, whose talent had been devoted to the cause of prohibition for a quarter of a century, died on May 19, at his home in Akron, N. Y.

THE state convention of New Jersey prohibitionists will be held at Camden on June 14. Speakers of national reputation, among them Chairman Dickie and State Chairman Bundick, of Virginia, have been engaged. Mr. Bundick will campaign in the state for a week following the convention.

THE prohibition state convention of Pennsylvania, held at Harrisburg last week, was a most enthusiastic and successful one. One thousand delegates were in attendance, besides many interested spectators. Dr. Swallow was nominated for governor by acclamation and was tendered an ovation by the immense audience, his popularity in the state insuring him a very good prospect of election.

DR. GEORGE C. LORIMER, pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston, has sent out a letter to 3,000 clergymen of Massachusetts, suggesting a convention of clergymen, to be held at Worcester on June 8, with a view to arranging some concerted political action in opposition to the liquor power.

ST. PAUL'S Temperance Guild, New York, is arranging for a new five-story temperance settlement house in connection with St. Paul's parish. The St. Paul's Temperance Guild was established in 1873, and is one of the most powerful local temperance organizations in the country. People who try to establish saloons in this parish are desperately fought by the Paulist fathers in the courts and everywhere else.

THE Wesleyan Ladies' College, of Hamilton, Ontario, well-known as an institution of higher learning and the alma mater of three Canadian W. C. T. U. presidents, has been abandoned and the building leased as a hotel to R. M. Gilkinson by Rev. Alexander Burns, its owner. As the lessee has applied for a tavern license, Dr. Burns has been summoned to appear before the Hamilton Methodist conference and defend his position in the matter.

THE application for a license to sell liquors on the exposition grounds at Omaha, Neb., signed by the president and secretary of the corporation, has called forth a vigorous protest from the people of the state in the form of a printed remonstrance which is being widely circulated and signed. The protest reads, in part, as follows:

Persistence by the Trans-Mississippi corporation in this alcoholic liquor business, in opposition to the sentiments of a majority of Nebraska citizens, in direct departure from the policy that has marked the management of all great public gatherings in this state for the past twenty-five years, is an open affront to the law-abiding, industrious, temperance people of Nebraska and Trans-Mississippi states. Speaking on behalf of that class of citizens we consider such persistence an invitation from the management to keep away from the Trans-Mississippi exposition, and we feel compelled to act upon that invitation. We affirm that great public expositions have a higher purpose to serve than making dollars by questionable methods; that when they depart from the time honored customs of Nebraska and challenge the Christian and moral sentiment of the state by placing the retail liquor business upon grounds dedicated to the instruction and elevation of mankind, they tender an issue that must be met. Whatever variety of opinion there be with regard to the liquor business and what action should be taken toward it, there is one overwhelming opinion that it should not be planted in the midst of educational councils, Sunday-schools, Chautauqua Assemblies and places at which Christian families are expected to assemble.

About Women.

BEFORE her marriage, sixteen years ago, the wife of Admiral Sampson was a professor at Vassar and afterward at Wells college.

MISS MARY FRANCES NESBIT is the democratic nominee for superintendent of schools of Coles county, Ill. She was born in Coles county, in which her father was for many years a prominent teacher.

THE foreign fellowship for 1898-'99 offered by the Baltimore association for the promotion of university education for women has been awarded to Miss Florence Leftwich, of Baltimore, who is a graduate of Bryn Mawr.

MARY ELLEN SIGSBEE, a daughter of Captain Sigsbee, has received a scholarship in the Art Students' League of Washington, which entitles her to one year's tuition in the New York Art Students' League. She won the scholarship in life drawing.

MRS. BLACK, F. E. I. S., who presided with tact and ability over the women's section of the Scottish temperance convention at Dundee, lately, has been prominently before the Glasgow and West of Scotland public for a number of years as one of the pioneers in improving the system of cookery. She is a member of many associations and has been on the Glasgow school board for over seven years.

Abroad.

THE pallbearers at the funeral of Mr. Gladstone were the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Kimberly, the Earl of Rosebery, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Mr. A. J. Balfour and Sir William Vernon Harcourt.

Contributed.

Pain—Hope---Love.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

WHEN love divine in mercy gently presses
Our wayward hearts, some needed grace to gain,
We shrink affrighted from the hand that blesses
And in our blindness name the pressure Pain.

A distant gleam of light that fondly lingers
Above the night clouds on life's darkened slope,
A flickering torch, still held by angel fingers
To light our pathway home—we call it Hope.

Love is the throbbing of the Heart Eternal,
The answering pulse-beats of an earth-bound goal,
The tender wooing of a world supernal,
The spirit magnet of life's unknown pole.

Flemington, N. J.

How the Brayton Churches Celebrated.

BY MRS. EVA JONES.

BRAYTON was a town of about seven thousand inhabitants, in a very prosperous section of one of our northern states. It had four railroads, a number of fine manufacturing establishments, and was well built and growing rapidly. Altogether Brayton thought very well of itself, and its many good people thanked God that all things were so prosperous with them. There were eleven churches in Brayton, including three or four of foreign tongues, and a number of the houses of worship were large and beautiful. The Sunday-schools were large and flourishing, the Endeavor Societies in each church well attended and enterprising, and spiritual growth and influence were strongly marked in nearly all of them. The pastors were strong, fearless, earnest men, and had an immense influence for good upon all who came within their reach. The missionary spirit was active, and Brayton was famed for doing a little more always than the average of towns to support the various mission boards.

But there was another side of Brayton, one quite distinct from what I have described; not only distinct in character, but separate in location. The central business street of Brayton separated to a large extent the sheep from the goats. Brayton had twenty saloons; all of them were situated on the east side of Main street, and a large number of them on both sides of a short street running east from Main, and known on the city map as Ball street. It was known popularly to Braytonites as Bourbon thoroughfare, and Swill avenue. Just west of Main street, and generally within a block of it, on St. Paul street, were the greater number of the churches. The western and southern side, contiguous to the churches, was known as "our best residence streets," and it was the boast of Brayton that the saloons had never been permitted to locate on these "best" streets, nor on Main street, which they proudly considered quite a model of order and cleanliness.

But the Rev. Mr. Gray, pastor of one of the largest and most influential churches, and who was a newcomer among them, having undertaken his charge in April, was an observer, and by no means so satisfied with the condition of things as the average Braytonian. And at the next meeting of the Pastors' Alliance, a week following the Fourth of July, he said:

"We have frequently had the saloons up in this Alliance for condemnation, and I am sure that if it were left to us to settle as to their future existence, the saloon business in this town would come to a speedy end. We do not feel that we are responsible for this great evil, although I am not sure that we can say that we have exhausted all our power in opposing it. But on last Thursday, my anxiety to see and know what was the extent of the damage they were doing was so great, and I was so impressed by the opportunity for some influence to be exerted upon the large crowd who had turned themselves loose from toil and filled the town to keep the national holiday, that I spent not only the forenoon with the crowd, listening to the oration of Lawyer Brown and the rest of the rather meager exercises, but I followed the crowd up to see how they fared in the afternoon, and for about an hour sat at the corner of Ball and Seymour streets, a saloon on one side of me, saloons all about me for that matter, a bowery dance in progress opposite, and a crowd of young amusement-loving people drinking and dancing, dancing and drinking. A steady procession of young men and boys streamed into these saloons, especially the nearest one, so intoxicated that many of them were almost unable to walk; sometimes two fellows twining their arms about each other, the better to support the staggering steps of one or both, and a look of growing beastiality and insensibility stamping itself upon their faces. Oh, my brothers, I longed to coax and invite some of them away and give them some better thing to satisfy their demand for entertainment and 'fun.' And I thought of how little effort we, the churches, as a rule ever make to meet this need; or, to put it differently, how little we seem to appreciate this annual opportunity to reach and gain a helpful influence over those outlying young people, and the boys and girls of town who are not strictly within our church influences. Of course our young people of the Y. P. S. C. E., and of the Sabbath school, we do not suppose would be found in any considerable numbers so far out of the way as to be drawn into any of these miserable things, but there was little in the way of fun of any different character provided, and the pressure of temptation for many of even 'our own,' who have not had the best of home advantages all their lives, was great."

"I know it. The whole 'celebration,' taken for what it is really worth, is a thing for wise people to shun, I long ago concluded," said the Rev. Mr. Moffat. "Pretty much the whole affair is a scheme gotten up by certain town people, the saloon men largely assisting the enterprise, for the financial harvest they hope to reap from it directly and indirectly. It's simply disgusting as a celebration of our national independence. I have often thought it a questionable thing for the dignity of our churches that they fall in with the town procession of money-makers and serve dinners on that day, as some of them are sure to do, to help fill the church exchequer."

"But Brother Gray has a plan, an idea of some kind, I feel sure," said Elder Preston. "I hate the whole thing as at present conducted, and am so worried about the evil done that day in our midst, and yet have felt so helpless about it, that I have tried to fill my mind with something else, and shut out the sight of the wretched doings I could not help. Well I know that many a boy and young man on our 'glorious Fourth,' succumbs to a flood tide of temptation as he does not any other day in the year. Now if there is anything that we can do to help the conditions and reduce the temptations, I am anxious to hear about it. Is there anything we can do about it, Brother Gray, except to shut up the saloons, if that were possible?"

"We have some other resources," said Mr. Gray. "While the east side was 'celebrating,' after their manner, our churches were closed and unused all the day, offering no competition to the other side of town in taking care of the people. Now it is manifest that if we were to open our churches and seriously go to work to entertain the the crowds upon the Fourth, it must be from entirely other motives than the east side rummies are moved by. But are we not governed every day in the year by other motives, and ought we not to make a specialty of them on the Fourth, to meet the special need? The young people—and some older ones—want to have a jolly time, meet friends and enjoy their society, and have the richest and best 'fun' there is going. Now if the members of our churches, old and young, would unite in the effort, we could do a great deal. It seems preposterous that there should be such a craving demand upon the part of these country crowds that come into town on the Fourth for such an excessive amount of 'fun.' Why are they not satisfied to be quiet and take the day about like other days; what do they need so much 'fun' for? But to really 'put ourselves in their place' and be prepared to serve them, we must remember how isolated and shut away from anything that is entertaining and how hard-worked are these farmer people. Living in town is itself an entertainment that we have, and they have not, and the difference is keenly felt by the country girls and boys, but not sufficiently appreciated by those who have never lived in the loneliness of the country, and who imagine, perhaps, from an occasional visit there, when the change and novelty are for the time positively refreshing, that the advantages are with the country. And there is a sort of half defined social gap between the city and the country girls and boys, whose exuberant spirits when they do come to town and unbend for fun, after the lack of it for a time, seems crude, if not rude and uncalled for, to the satisfied town dweller. But let us be patient and make allowance for all this, for it rests upon just causes. And in the social better day to which we all look hopefully forward, the isolation of the country will be broken up; the town will realize and meet its responsibility to supply this lack of life's amusement and opportunities and sociability for all.

"This Fourth of July is past, sorrowfully past to both town and country, it may truthfully be said. But next year I wish we might begin a good while beforehand, and when the time comes, give all who come a good time. Let our Y. P. S. C. E. take pains to reach beforehand as many country young people with the outline of our plans as they can, and secure their coöperation. Make our church parlors the people's parlors for the day. Make the whole edifice beautiful and as useful as we can contrive to have it. Let us welcome every one to any of them, but those who meet with us, will feel most at home for the day by accepting the hospitalities of the the open church where they usually attend, and where a slight acquaintance may be further extended. Let us persuade those who serve the public with dinners as a special effort, to locate their dinner stands near the churches for the convenience of the crowd. Let the Y. P. S. C. E. make this a day of labor for the Master, the social committee to the fore and consisting of all the members.

"Then for a conventional program, we can easily eclipse the ordinary thing furnished, and with little labor to any one but a few who will direct. And moreover, we need not antagonize the usual patriotic program, the processions, parades, innocent games, orations and music, if one is proposed to be furnished. We can fall in with and help as far as we may be able all that is usual and right. Let us use our strongest influence to have the most and best of this sort of thing that we can. Then besides, for the rest of the day, the time that is usually unprovided for except by the 'baser sort,' let us have such a running list of entertainments that there shall constantly be a place of amusement, and entertainment going on, and doubtless it will be perfectly feasible to have various 'things' doing at once, after the manner of a lively summer assembly ground, where a choice of good things may constantly be made. Let the whole series of exercises for the entire day be advertised and published long beforehand, the admission nominal, if anything; no effort being made to make money, but a single effort to do good. Give the crowds a helpful and enjoyable time and so fill the day for our visitors that the temptations will be as small as possible to rum and ruin, and the opportunity of the church to win, interest and entertain the young people in a right way be utilized.

"For the details of the program, it is easy to imagine a fascinating list. While a certain number of the church would need to be on duty all the time at each church as hosts, yet for program purposes suppose two churches combined, and in the course of the afternoon gave a musical treat for one hour, a patriotic drama for another, and a children's entertainment for a third. Or a stereopticon show might be provided, a Demorest or other oratorical contest arranged, a chalk-talk of a popular nature, or an address upon any of the many interesting and valuable themes to which young folks will be glad to listen, if well presented. There is a wide range for pleasant and profitable sort of matter for programs.

"Besides all this, let us rent quarters or build a 'bower' if need be, where athletics of various sorts may be enjoyed. A regularly fitted up gymnasium at our disposal for the day is not beyond our reach. Have swings, skipping ropes, croquet games, some one in charge of each such provision for our guests, and good order thus secured. There are spacious grounds that belong to fair homes in this town, centrally located, that can be had for such uses for the day, 'for the Master's sake,' and tents, hammocks and many like things can be had for the use of the church's guests if needed. Fun? Enjoyment? The people who come and look in on us on the 'Fourth,' and get little of good or bad at the hands of the church element, have no idea how good a time they might have in place of the usual order of things, if we would only rouse ourselves from our ease and comfortable indifference, and make an effort in their behalf, and all for the Master."

And so it came about that the next July the Brayton celebration was attended by a crowd the like of which the town had never seen before. Complete preparations had been made and a grand program was carried out. The help of country people had been sought and their co-operation secured to so great an extent that the burden of it all as well as the pleasure was very largely shared with them. It was understood from the outset as a friendly effort on the part of the Christian element of town to give everyone a pure and clean as well as a bright and jolly celebration, and a chivalrous chord was touched almost everywhere. To be sure the dancing bower on Ball street was erected, and the saloons were wide open. But it was not "good form" to patronize them. The competing attractions on the west side of Main street were so enjoyable, and the atmosphere there was so cordial and inviting, that the greater number voted that it was the "best thing going." And besides all the rest, there was a strong contingent of the Y. P. S. C. E. boys who seemed to be everywhere at once, and were a committee on special advertising and inviting; so that anyone so far behind the procession as to not know and be attracted by the program on the west side before coming to town was sure to be met in friendly fashion by some of these boys and brought over there very soon. The pleasant, bright influences did the rest.

The liquor venders were enraged to find at the close of the day that their sales had not very much exceeded any ordinary day. They cursed and blamed the church for it; and certainly that was where the "blame" belonged. Brayton Christians said, "We didn't know that the thing could be done. We will celebrate in this town every year hereafter." And the pastors grew to preach a great deal from the text, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

Clinton, Mo.

Mary Towne Burt.

BY FRANCES W. GRAHAM.

NEW York State W. C. T. U. had scarcely recovered from the shock of Miss Willard's death, when, without warning—"as a thief in the night"—the death messenger came and took from us our dearly beloved state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt.

Her going away was so sudden that even she herself had no thought of it. On Friday, April 29, I received from her a letter, saying that the governor had signed the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in department stores, for which Mrs. Burt had worked so energetically and which she called "a great victory." Two hours after receiving this letter a message came by wire that she was dangerously ill, and her going was only a question of a short time. I immediately telegraphed Mr. Burt asking him to keep me informed. I passed a sleepless night, and the next morning the dreaded message came: "My wife passed away at 11:30 last night."

Oh! dear friends, who read these words, can you possibly realize what they meant to one, who for nearly seven years had worked in perfect harmony with the dear one, now gone from us forever?

On Tuesday, May 3, after a service held in her home, a public service was held in the Calvary M. E. church. The chancel had been profusely decorated with palms and growing plants by the white-ribboners of New York county. All that loving hearts could dictate was done under the direction of Mrs. E. Frances Lord, county president, and Mrs. Frances A. Westerfield, president of West Harlem union. Flowers were in abundance everywhere. [Mrs. Graham here gives a beautiful description in detail of the floral pieces with the names of donors. This we regretfully omit.—THE EDITORS.]

As the funeral cortège entered the church, all rose to their feet in reverence. Every member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union present wore pinned upon her breast a white carnation—the state flower.

The services were impressive in the extreme. Mrs. Burgess, of Ulster county, made the opening prayer; Mrs. Tenney, state treasurer of the W. C. T. U., read the Scripture lesson; Dr. Beiler spoke of the dual loss to the temperance work in the deaths of Frances Willard and Mary Towne Burt; Mrs. Ella Boole, vice-president of the state W. C. T. U., most eloquently and touchingly alluded to Mrs. Burt, "not as a leader fallen, but as one gone before;" Mrs. Frances Graham, corresponding secretary, sang "Sometime we'll understand," and Mrs. Lord, president of the New York county union, spoke lovingly of the departed leader. Mrs. Homer Nelson, president of the Dutchess county union, read the Crusade Psalm, and Mrs. Frances Barnes, world's secretary of the Young Women's Branch, followed with an address, speaking of her personal relations with Mrs. Burt. "Just two weeks ago at this hour," she said, "Mrs. Burt asked me to pray with her for the Temple. It was so sweet and simple and earnest, as she prayed for the work left unfinished by Frances Willard. Anna Gordon, as her ship sailed away Saturday morning last, said: 'Oh, she has got ahead of us all. She will see our dear Frances first.'" The Rev. C. H. Mead, of the National Temperance Society, spoke feelingly. The congregation sang the favorite hymn of Mrs. Burt, "Rock of ages, cleft for me," and Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, world's superintendent of evangelistic work, quoted the beautiful poem of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, "He giveth His beloved sleep," saying that Mrs. Burt had asked her for a copy of it just after the Buffalo convention.

MRS. MARY T. BURT.

The concluding prayer was made by Mrs. Morris, of Richmond county. An opportunity was given to all to view the face of the loved leader, and as the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union passed, they threw in their carnations until she lay buried in the flowers she loved.

At 9:15 that evening we started for Auburn, N. Y., where the burial was to be, and where again the loving ministrations of the W. C. T. U. made the rooms beautiful.

The remains were taken to the residence of Mrs. Burt's aunt, Mrs. Harriet E. Baker.

The beautiful burial service of the Episcopal church was conducted by Rev. Dr. John Brainard, the clergyman who had married Mr. and Mrs. Burt. The burial was in the family lot at Fort Hill.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt was born in Cincinnati, O., of English American parentage. Her father, Thomas Towne, was educated in England for the ministry. Her youth was spent in Auburn, N. Y., where she received rare educational advantages, and where, in 1865, she was married to Edward Burt, of one of the oldest families in the state. So deeply was she stirred by the Crusade that on March 24, 1874, she addressed a great audience in the Auburn Opera House on temperance. Following this she served as president of Auburn W. C. T. U. for two years, when her residence changed to Brooklyn. She was a delegate to the first National Convention, held in Cleveland, O., in 1874, and was one of the secretaries of that body, and at the next National Convention, held in Cincinnati, O., was elected assistant recording secretary. In Chicago, in 1877, she was elected corresponding secretary of the National, holding the office for three years, and during that term she opened the first headquarters of the National Union in the Bible House, New York city. In 1882 she was made president of the New York state union, and has been elected to this office every succeeding year. During her presidency the state union has increased from 5,000 to 22,000 members, and from 179 to 870 local unions, and in work, membership and organization stands at the head of the forty-four states of the Union. Mrs. Burt was officially present at every National Convention held since the first one, in November, 1874. She was a delegate from the state of New York to the World's Convention in London, England, in 1894, and to the World's Convention at Toronto, in 1897. She represented the state of New York at the Mothers' Congress held in Washington, D. C., in February, 1897. She was at the head of the legislative work for several years. For thirteen years she served the state without salary, giving to its work the best her life afforded freely and without price. She was identified with the state union since its inception, serving as recording secretary for seven years, then as corresponding secretary until called to fill the president's chair. As a presiding officer she was without an equal. As an executive officer, quick to see and prompt to act, she was invaluable to our work in the state. Other fields of usefulness opened before her, and tempting offers made to induce her to take up the work which, financially, would have meant much more to her; but she cast her lot with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and there she stood firmly.

Lockport, N. Y.

Frances Willard and the Lamplighter.

The Mission of a Flower.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

NO one ever spoke to the old lamplighter, and if they had he could not have heard them, for he was as deaf as one of his own lamp posts. A lonely old man, the only brightness and cheer in Tom's life were the village street lamps which he loved to set aglow in the dusk of evening.

Occasionally Tom had spells of drinking, whereupon some kind neighbor interested in his welfare would send him a letter of warning and advice, which Tom read meekly and never answered, being as dumb with his pen as in his speech.

It happened that Frances Willard was spending the winter in Tom's village, seeking quiet and rest, and she noticed the old lamplighter trudging past her cottage door, faithfully lighting the street lamps which were so few and far between and yet battled so bravely against the gloom of a stormy evening.

Frances Willard's thoughts were most earnestly engaged in her work at this time, with every mail bringing her letters from Iceland, Australia, Japan, and the farthest corners of the earth, but she did not forget to have mutton tallow tied up in the little maple tree outside her window to feed some hungry birds. Frances Willard never forgot anything that was lonesome or hungry, and she did not forget Tom, the lamplighter.

She did not think of sending him a lecture on temperance or any words of warning or advice; no, not even a tract. Tom was lighting lamps out in the darkness and night, and she was his sister, also at work lighting lamps in the darkness and storm of night, so she sent him an exquisite white rose. A lovely girl carried it to him, and you should have seen Tom's face, which for days afterward lighted up with a radiance like one of his own lamps whenever he met the girl who brought him this rose. At this warm touch of sympathy such a lamp had been lighted in his heart as will not go out through eternity!

Washington, D. C.

Correspondence.

The Annual Council of British Women's Temperance Association—1898.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our beloved Anna Gordon, the most cherished guest of our great B. W. T. A. annual gathering, has asked me to write to you an account of the council held this week in London. I count it a great joy to do the smallest service for the one who was so near and dear to our sainted Chieftain, but it is not an easy task by reason of the terrible blank and keen sense of loss that has pervaded the whole week.

The annual public meeting of the association was held on Monday evening, May 9, in Queen's Hall, the fine auditorium being filled in every part, and much interest being manifested in the proceedings. Lady Henry Somerset occupied the chair, and in an earnest and beautiful address reviewed the events of the past year from a temperance point of view, dwelling with deep feeling on the irreparable loss the white-ribbon army had sustained in the passing away of its great leader, Miss Frances Willard. Canon Hicks gave a fine, broad-minded speech, urging us to fresh endeavor along very practical lines; Rev. C. F. Aked's was a terrible indictment against women in their general attitude toward the temperance question, which indictment was answered in a fine, stirring address by Mrs. Bamford Slack.

The twenty-second annual council of the National B. W. T. A. was called to order on Tuesday morning, May 10, by its president, Lady Henry Somerset. Between seven hundred and eight hundred delegates were present, and a specially large meeting place had been secured for the opening session, in order that the public might take part with the delegates in the memorial service which was to be held at the noontide hour, and to listen to an address from Lady Henry. Long before the hour announced the streets leading to the hall were filled with women wearing the little badge of white, and armed with their bags bulky with tickets, agenda and what not, all wending their way to the same spot, and at ten o'clock, when the president rose, the hall was filled in every part—at least two thousand people being present.

The platform was a beautiful picture, but one on which many of us could hardly bear to rest our eyes. On a pedestal in the middle, under a soft electric light was the bust of Miss Willard, brought from Eastnor Castle, the duplicate of the one in Willard Hall. Stretched behind it was the white ribbon bearing the sacred words, "How beautiful it is to be with God," which, with the lovely white star-spangled banner, and other precious mementoes of the last sad weeks, had been brought over in her usual thoughtfulness, by Anna Gordon, who knew how much these small touches would mean to the comrades in England, who deeply loved their sainted leader. All around the platform was a mass of white flowers and white ribbon, while in front was the empty chair covered with a ribbon bearing the one word "Victory," and decorated with exquisite white lilies. The stars and stripes, to many of us so dear, were to be seen here and there among the white—the whole giving mute expression to the feeling in every heart, of love, and of grief for an irreparable loss.

Lady Henry Somerset's appearance, with Anna Gordon at her side, was the signal for a demonstration, all present rising and giving the "white salute." The secretary's report showed that more public meetings had been held in this than in any previous year; a great number of pledges have been taken, and "everywhere, save in Parliament, temperance work had been progressing." Nothing could have been more touching than the way in which our president, in her address, referred to the mistake she had made in advocating what she had considering a "quarantine," and not a license system, to check the spread of disease in the British Indian army, and her complete and dignified retraction of the same. It seemed to us that those who had been most bitter about it could not but know, deep down in their hearts, that Lady Henry Somerset had never swerved from that principle which all her life she had held—namely, "the white life for two." Also, she gave us a pronouncement, in answer to some accusations which have been industriously spread of late, viz., that she was for a dual platform and not straight on prohibition, challenging any one to point to such a word from her in print, or to say when and where she had ever spoken such a word. Altogether, though those of us who were loyal and true to our president felt very sad to think such an address should be necessary, it was very beautiful, and we realized anew what it meant to our association, and to the World's W. C. T. U., to have such a God-given leader.

The memorial services which followed I have no note of, nor could I take any. To many of us it was exquisitely painful, but at the same time all felt, when listening to the beautiful tributes which fell from the lips of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and Lady Henry, that they were many leagues nearer the heavenly city for having heard and known something of that Christ-like woman, Frances Willard.

Tuesday afternoon was given to the honorable treasurer's report, with the continuance of superintendent's reports. That on the Duxhurst Farm colony was given by its superintendent, Lady Henry Somerset, who spoke, among other things, of the visit to the colony of a member of the Home Office, who told her that it would be taken as a model for state homes in the future. At this announcement the council greatly rejoiced.

The successful Y meeting on Tuesday evening I shall keep back at present, as I am hoping to write of it and all our other special Y interests next week in a letter to my dear American Y sisters.

Out of 603 votes cast for president, 530 were given for Lady Henry Somerset, who, in a most beautiful speech, gave herself once more to the work for which she has done so much in the past, only stipulating that during this year she be not expected to travel long distances, or take great meetings, as physically she is not able, though at the same time she assured us that if ever any individual or Branch wanted her help in any smaller way, she would hold herself ready to respond gladly, as she felt toward each member as a personal friend. The other old officers were all returned. The president again nominated Mrs. Eva McLaren as her vice-president, which nomination was ratified amid great enthusiasm by the delegates, all present paying tribute to Mrs. McLaren's splendid chairmanship and just ruling in most trying circumstances. A cablegram of sympathy and love was ordered by a silent, standing vote, to be sent to our sorrowing comrades in America, their officers and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. The council adjourned after the singing of "God be with you till we meet again," all feeling that a special blessing of peace and harmony might be looked for during the new year of the National B. W. T. A., and that a common loss and sorrow had drawn closer in bonds of true comradeship all white-ribboners the world over.

Yours in our sacred cause,

AMY A. SWANKIE-CAMERON.

26 Queen's Mansions, Westminster, London, England, May 13, 1898.

A New Field of Helpfulness.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Some do good with money, some with personal work among the poor, others with only smiles and kind words. But there is still another way by which we can brighten other lives less favored than our own—by the giving away of old papers and magazines.

We all like to see our files of favorite periodicals neatly stored away on book-shelves and in closets. We pack them there with a vague thought of using them some day—perhaps when we break an arm, or become ill or are otherwise confined to the house. We think of them as pleasant pastime on a rainy day or when snowbound by wintry storms. But the truth is, that a magazine, once read and laid away, is laid away for all time, or until the semi-yearly housecleaning makes us desperate, and we resolve in a fit of rashness to get rid of the whole lot by means of a backyard bonfire. We would not deliberately burn up money in that reckless fashion, but we destroy that which, under some conditions, is more to be desired. A bundle of old magazines or illustrated papers will find a welcome anywhere. No one, however great the pride that sometimes goes with poverty, can refuse an armful of reading matter given in the right way. And to how many an impoverished family such a gift would come as a blessing.

Thousands of women with cultivated tastes find themselves unable to buy good reading matter even now when it is so astonishingly cheap. We do not dream of the intellectual hunger of some cramped and shut-in lives. To the woman on a remote farm whose leisure hours are few indeed, but who, as a girl, loved and read the best, would come like a gift from the skies a bundle of literature long since discarded by some other woman. The wives of frontier ministers too—not one but would hail gladly a package of old magazines in her isolated home. To her, as she reads with eager eyes, would come wondering thoughts of her who sent them—that other woman whose pencil marks appear here and there among the pages.

A bundle of well-read copies of a well-known magazine—one of the best—was sent one day by a certain woman at a cost of a few cents in postage and ten minutes of her time, to a small western farming community. Could you have seen the looks of happy wonder with which the poor, hard-working aunt opened the bundle, while her boys and girls crowded around her, no longer would piles of old magazines accumulate on your closet shelves. In that whole settlement only a few copies of the small local papers were taken besides one or two copies of a religious weekly. Back and forth among the neighboring farmhouses those magazines traveled, and when the women met for an occasional afternoon visit the things they had read became their topics of conversation. A new trend was given to their thought and speech simply through the agency of those periodicals in their midst. A grateful letter was written and signed by half a dozen women, thanking the donor and gently hinting, by the inclosure of numerous postage stamps, that more would be acceptable. The donor became a new kind of home missionary, and now, while she does not part with all her magazines, still she sends many here and there on missions of joy.

We who love good reading, let us imagine ourselves deprived almost entirely of food for the mind. There are isolated women who hunger and long for the very papers and magazines we allow the children to cut up, or store away on shelves to become dusty and yellow with age. We who have a plenty of such daily manna could in this way do much to make our sister women happier and better. Let us do it.

HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

South Los Angeles, Cal.

Temperance Reform in the Old Country.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The two questions in relation to temperance, that have been most prominently before the British public during the last few months have been Sunday closing and the serving of drink to children. With regard to the first, great efforts have been made to secure the passing of the Irish early Saturday night and Sunday closing bill. It had obtained the first place on the business of the House of Commons for Wednesday, last week, and hopes were high of getting it past the critical stage. But, alas, the government took possession of the day for the continuation of the debate on their local government bill for Ireland. Such is the irony of fate that a bill which would have been passed long ago by an Irish government, and which has been persistently defeated year after year by English opposition, has to give way to an Irish bill brought in by the government, and its prospects are destroyed for this session. If party politics were admissible, I should be tempted to say something about this Irish local government bill, undoubtedly a great and a beneficial measure for that unhappy country; but it is sad that it should be used to defeat a measure of such practical advantage as the Saturday night and Sunday closing bill would have been. As regards English Sunday closing, public opinion is progressing, and much is being done, but the end is still, I fear, a good way off.

A circumstance which may rather curiously affect Sunday closing is the quite recent introduction by "The Trade," of stone jars or bottles, holding eight quarts, or four quarts, or even less, provided with a tap, by which the liquor can be drawn off as wanted, thus keeping it fresh. These are delivered at customers' houses without extra charge. At the annual meeting of the local branch of the B. W. T. A. in this town, I exhibited one of these jars, borrowed for the purpose, to the slight horror, at first, of some of the good British women. I explained that I was grateful to "The Trade" for introducing this device, as it knocked on the head the most plausible argument against Sunday closing, namely, that it was not fair to the workingman to compel him to drink his beer "flat" on the Sunday. This objection is constantly brought up. Even two clergymen of this town refused to sign a memorial to Parliament on this ground. These newly-invented bottles entirely do away with the difficulty. The workingman can lay in his beer on a Saturday, and draw it as he wants it, as fresh as if it had just come from the public house. Seven different kinds of ale, beer and stout are thus supplied. These bottles will most certainly gain many votes for Sunday closing if the question ever comes to a poll.

With regard to the serving of children, the law here is, that to children under a certain age, intoxicating drinks may not be sold; but there is no limit to the age at which children may be sent to public houses by their parents. The result is, that parents, especially the drunken ones, send their little children many times during the evening for drink which they would be unable to get themselves. At the last session of the Royal Commission on the licensing laws, Mrs. Crawford, president of the Methodist Women's Total Abstinence Union, gave some striking evidence as to the serving of children. She said that some taverns had nearly two hundred children customers in one hour, and that she was credibly informed that seventy per cent of the parents sending children to another tavern were confirmed drunkards.

I have to-day had the pleasure of attending the first session of the annual council meetings of the B. W. T. A., the only session which is, this year, open to the public. There was a grand gathering in the Westminster chapel, of the officers and executive, between seven and eight hundred delegates and a large number of members and friends. Visitors were introduced to the meeting from the United States, Canada, Australia, South Africa, Honolulu, and other places, and were warmly welcomed. It would be out of my province to give any report of the proceedings, but Lady Henry Somerset, who presided, was enthusiastically greeted by all but a small minority. She gave a short but admirable address, in which she reviewed some of the events of the last year. She could not have taken a nobler stand than she did in speaking of her own personal position with regard to the association, and to her change of views on certain matters. The sympathy of the large audience was almost entirely with her, and it was clearly the feeling of the great majority that they would gladly follow her leadership again, more devotedly than ever. The session concluded with an in memoriam service for those who had left the earthly circle since last year, the foremost in the minds of all being the great leader who has gone on before.

EDWARD T. BENNETT.

Richmond, near London, Eng.
May 10, 1898.

Interesting Reminiscences.

EDITORS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—I inclose perhaps my last dollar to pay for THE UNION SIGNAL this year. THE UNION SIGNAL has come to me many years, and is No. 1 among my dozen of papers. It is the first to be read, and a feast it is. It gives me a chance to contrast these days with "those gone by."

I remember when New England rum scented every residence and even the pulpit. Its stench was in the room of the dead and it was present at nuptials. The farmer had it at his sheep-washings, in the hayfield and at raisings. I remember a little boy that in his teens became disgusted with rum drinking and fought a fight of many years against the evils of intemperance. I remember the mob of drunken rowdies (and other citizens) who made night hideous at his residence the eve after a Fourth of July revelry. I remember the first pledges that were signed, and that they meant temperate drinking only. I remember the pledge headed by the old Scotch farmer, promising to drink no rum except at sheep-washing. I remember, too, that the boys accused the old man of keeping a sheep in his barn and said that he was in the habit of washing that sheep every time he got rum dry. I remember the loss of caste and of character by the first radical advocates of total abstinence. I remember a barn that was raised by one of these, and the ridgepole was taken down the night after and set on end in the well. This campaign was against rum and its kindred. Hard cider was yet triumphant and was not molested till after the close of many rum shops.

At one of these meetings a tall, angular radical arose and said, "My friends, we are all rejoicing over the closing of the last of nine rum holes in this town, but we are still going down to perdition on cider barrels." Cider got a black eye just then and there. This prepared the way for the next temperance lecturer, who was a reformed cider drunkard. His cry was, "Cider is the devil's kindling wood." As this time spigots were temptingly sticking from cider barrels in nearly every cellar in town, jackknives were pretty freely used, and a two years' campaign did the work. All who had the good of society at heart struck deadly blows at the cider habit.

The next step was prohibition. It needed courage to proclaim this doctrine, and greater to break from the ranks of the party and deposit a consistent vote. It will be for the chronicler of the events of to-day to say, "I lived at a time when principle was abandoned for party, when the saloon held full sway, when not a single church as such dared to take decided sides with justice and humanity and vote down the rum power, when the triumph of the party was paramount to sobriety and good citizenship." That day is now here, and may God help all good citizens to realize that a vote for the party candidate who is not pledged for prohibition, is a vote for drunkenness and debauchery. Z. BREED.

North Keane, N. H.

Alcohol-Flavored Food.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The following facts are furnished by a prominent and esteemed member of the Congregational church in this city:

In her early married life, in the state of New York, a young friend whom she had known and loved since childhood—an only son—came from his home in a neighboring town to spend the day with her. He had been a victim of alcohol of the "spree" variety, but to the great joy of his friends had now for eight months triumphed over his demon master.

All went well until dinner, when for dessert the mistress of the boarding-house sent up the usual pie and a pudding flavored with brandy. Mrs. B. quietly moved back the latter from both their plates, saying to her friend, "You and I will take the pie," but the familiar odor had made its appeal; he alternately drew up and pushed back the plate and at last, nervously seizing it, eagerly devoured the poisoned food.

Full of apprehension, she returned with him to her own apartment, resorting to every possible expedient to divert and entertain him until the hour for his train, shuddering at the thought of sending him home, once more bound of Satan, but in vain; looking at his watch repeatedly, he finally said, "I must go to the station." "I will go with you," was her reply, and they started out together, passed the first hell-gate safely, but at the second he darted from her side and disappeared. In dismay she flew to her husband's office, telling him he must come and find the fugitive. The eager search was vain; but on the third day, on a pile of lumber, drenched with the pouring rain, robbed of watch and diamond studs, he was found and taken back to his home! Three months after, as the result of this exposure, he was borne to his grave. Mrs. B. was sent for in his last hours. With failing breath he tried to comfort the agonized mother, and to his friend said, "Don't be troubled that I took the brandy-sauce when with you. I am too weak to resist temptation; it is better for me to die now," and so he passed to "where the wicked cease from troubling." What a lesson for us!

A. C. BLAISDELL.

St. Cloud, Minn.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

We walk by faith, not by sight. The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.—2 Cor. 5:7; Isa. 40: 5.

MRS. SUSAN S. FESSENDEN, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., has written a most timely and able letter, in Our Message for May, on The Temple, as the only fitting memorial to Miss Willard. She says: "What shall we build in a memorial to her? We want it to be something that would please her. Miss Willard's great enthusiasm was for people, so her memorial should be among the people. No monument on the lofty peak of a mountain, away from the haunts of men, however poetic for a woman like Helen Hunt Jackson, would be appropriate for her. It must be where the masses can see it and become familiar with the association of it with their lover and friend. They must see it as they go to and from their daily toil as a help, an inspiration. It must therefore be in the city. I believe she would say, 'If you are going to build a memorial for me, let it be the Temple. I would be happier to have the child of my love, the W. C. T. U., own that Temple than to have any granite or marble mark my memory.' Now, if this is correct, we must own this Temple and name it the Willard Temple."

✠

Mrs. Anna M. Griffiths, Kingston, N. Y., writes: "It was stated at our last county convention, that the fifty-cent subscription cards are for the running expenses of the Temple, and not for the debt. If this is a mistake will you kindly correct it in THE UNION SIGNAL." As Temple Trustees we have nothing to do with the running expenses of the Temple, they are paid from the rentals. The only expenses the Temple Trustees have to meet since they stopped paying interest, is the expense attached to their office in the Temple, and this will be defrayed entirely this year from part of the profits from the sale of Miss Willard's picture. Every cent that comes to us otherwise will be set aside for the indebtedness. In this connection we desire to again impress it on the minds of white-ribboners that all money accruing from plans set in motion by the Temple Trustees must be sent to our treasurer, Mr. G. B. Shaw, at Chicago. This includes money for Tablets, Wheels, mite-boxes, subscription cards, Miss Willard's picture, etc. The fund started by the National officers, goes to Miss Dow.

✠

Miss C. D. Castle, of Hawaii, Honolulu, called at the Temple this week, and left a check for $100 to place the name of Mrs. Whitney, president of the W. C. T. U. of Hawaii, on a tablet in Willard Hall. This is not the first money this devoted white-ribbonner has given to the Temple, as it is the second hundred received from that far-away Pacific island. Another promoted white-ribboner has remembered the Temple in her will. We have received through Mrs. H. L. Caminade, treasurer of New Jersey, a bequest of $100 from Mrs. Jane Berdan McCall, who died last October. Her name is to be placed on the New Jersey memorial tablet. The Woman's Club of Denver, Col., sends a check for $100 in response to our appeal to make the Temple Miss Willard's monument. The Fortnightly Club of Helena, Mont., sends $5 for the same purpose.

✠

Mary Allen West, Illinois' beloved and promoted white-ribboner, is soon to have a tablet set apart to her memory in our Westminster. A $100 just received from the W. C. T. U. of Galesburg, Ill., makes this possible. Over the platform in Willard Hall are three small marble tablets; these were set apart after the death of the three noted Marys (Mary Allen West, Mary A. Woodbridge and Mary T. Lathrap) to their memory; friends were to raise $250 for each tablet; the desired sum has now been secured in the case of Miss West and Mrs. Lathrap, and the inscription will soon be placed on the tablets.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

'Twixt Them Both.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

JOSEPH GREER gave up his beer,
His wife gave up her wine,
So 'twixt them both they saved enough
To educate their nine.

For Joseph was a working man,
And Jane a busy wife,
But pledged to temp'rance principles
They led a useful life.

They trained their children in the right,
And moral lessons taught,
And with a faithful earnestness
Their education sought.

And so within a humble home,
Their children grew apace,
And then went forth to serve the world
In many an honored place.

If Joseph Greer had bought his beer,
And Jane had purchased wine,
They never could have saved enough
To educate their nine.

What Dora Did With Her Prize.

"TEN dollars, father! Just think of it!" and Dora Mansfield took the new, crisp ten-dollar note out of the envelope, and held it up for her father's inspection.

"I'm real proud of you, Dora. Somehow, I had an idea you would get the first prize, though I did not say anything about it to you."

The father was hoeing potatoes in the lot, and as he spoke he laid down his hoe, took off his wide-brimmed hat, and fanned himself with it, for the day was very hot.

"Does mother know it, child?"

"No, father; I saw you up here, and I came cross-lots to tell you. I will run back to the house now, and tell mother."

Mrs. Mansfield was taking the fresh butter out of the churn, and she looked up to see her daughter's round, smiling face looking through the kitchen window.

"I got it, mother—the prize, I mean," and again the ten-dollar note was brought out to view.

"Why, Dora Mansfield, I can hardly believe it. How glad I am! Does your father know it?"

"I just came from the potato lot. He is as happy as you are over it, mother."

"Well, child, you deserve it. Walking three miles every morning to school, and three miles home again every afternoon, and not missing a single day or being tardy during the whole year; and you don't make any fuss about it, either."

Dora ran upstairs to take off her white dress. It had been made out of good parts of two outgrown dresses, but, nevertheless, was neat and pretty. The other girls had new dresses, but Dora was very independent, and felt as happy in her combination dress as they did in their new ones. Her great regret had been that her father and mother could not go to hear her read her essay, and see and hear all the interesting things that are sure to come on the last day of school.

Young people are not apt to appreciate all the sacrifices parents make for them. But Dora was the exception to the general rule—she did appreciate her good father's and mother's endeavors for her. She had already planned how she would use that ten dollars.

When the family were all seated at the supper table, a younger brother said: "What are you going to buy with your ten dollars, Dora?"

"Nothing," replied the sister. "I'm going to give it to mother to go and make a visit at Aunt Ellen's."

"You shan't do any such thing!" exclaimed Mrs. Mansfield. "You're going to buy you a new winter cloak with that money."

"Mother," said Dora, in a gentle tone of voice, "you are going to see Aunt Ellen. I shall keep house, and you must have an outing and a rest."

"You can't make the butter, Dora, and there is a churning every other day."

But Dora carried her point. Mrs. Mansfield was on the road to her sister's the very next week. They had not seen each other for sixteen years, notwithstanding they were only two hundred miles apart, for the sum of ten dollars could not be spared from the family income to take such a journey, and Aunt Ellen had inflammatory rheumatism, and could not go to her sister. Dora knew what a joy it would be to both those sisters, who were all there were left of the family, to see each other again; and her mother, she knew, was sadly in need of change of air and rest. Dora's sister Nell, eight years old, entered into the spirit of the occasion; she was very efficient in helping with the work. And Judge Seeley's wife, who lived in the large house on the hill, said Dora's butter was as good as her mother's.

When Mrs. Mansfield came home she seemed so bright and told so many interesting incidents about her journey and what good times she and her sister had had, that the children were delighted to hear it all. A week after her return she said to Dora: "I didn't want to say anything about it, but before I went to Aunt Ellen's, I felt that I could not get on another day. My work seemed to drag, drag, drag; but now I feel like a new person, and I am so thankful and happy that I have a daughter who is very thoughtful of me and my happiness."—The Angelus.

True in Word.

GALEN was about four years old and as lively and full of mischief as any boy you can think of. In the summer time he used to wear the funniest little pair of brownie overalls. When he had these on he could play as hard as he liked without once having to think about spoiling his clothes.

His hat was always torn, because he used it for so many different things that it couldn't help but wear out.

His shoes lasted a much longer time. Can you guess the reason? He kept them on the closet shelf every day except Sunday, and trotted gaily about in his bare feet.

One thing he liked to do was to run away whenever he got a chance, and this kept his sister, Maud, busy finding the little truant and bringing him back. Sometimes he wouldn't come with her; then his big brother, Irving, would go to the rescue. Galen knew he had to mind then, because Irving was large enough to pick him right up and carry him home if he refused to walk.

By and by school began, and Maud and Irving were no longer at home to watch their little brother, so their father tried a different plan. He called Galen into his office one morning and pointed to a small rawhide which hung on the wall.

"Do you see that, Galen?" he asked.

"Tourse I do," said the little fellow, "I'm lookin' right at it."

"Well, do you know what it's for? It's to whip you with if you run away again. Can you remember that?"

"It's to wi'p me wiv if I run away," repeated Galen, seriously.

All went well for several days. Then his grandfather gave him a penny for reciting "'Twas the Night before Christmas" all through without a mistake.

"I'm goin' to buy a stick of candy," he said to himself as he hurried off down town.

Just as he got back he met his father.

"What are you up to, Galen?" he asked. "Making mud pies in the road as usual?"

Galen hesitated. Awful visions of the rawhide flashed through his mind, but he held up his candy bravely.

"I just went down to the 'tore a minute," he said, "just one little minute."

"Do you remember what happens to boys who run away?" said his father.

"Their faver w'ips 'em wiv a rawhide," said Galen, with tears in his eyes.

Galen bore his whipping like a man, then his father took him on his lap.

"Do you know what happens to boys who tell the truth, even when they know they'll get a whipping?" he asked. "Well, I'll tell you. Their father takes them for a long ride with him and lets them drive the horses. Now, run and get ready."

"I can always believe what my children tell me," said Galen's father after that; "they always speak the truth."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A great wave of patriotism has rolled over the country, and the red, white and blue of our beautiful flag are seen on every hand. Some men are willing to die for the country if need be. I think it is just as glorious to live for the best good of the country and to try to make it a safe and peaceful place.

What if all the soldiers should be called out some day to fight the enemy of the home, King Alcohol. How quickly he would be put down, wouldn't he? You and I are soldiers in the temperance army and we must be brave and obedient in our peaceful warfare. Have you counted the stars in the new flag? How many are there? Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—This is my first letter to the Cozy Corner. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and I liked to read the Children's page. I belong to the Band of Mercy.

WILLIE SUTHERLAND.

Saginaw, Mich.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am eight years old and would like to join the Cozy Corner. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and I like to read it. We have sixty-five saloons in our town and one brewery and no L. T. L.

Your nephew,

Mt. Carmel, Pa. ROGER SAMUEL.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I was reading the Cozy Corner in THE UNION SIGNAL and so I thought I would like to join it. I am a girl twelve years old. My mother belongs to the W. C. T. U. We have had nine medal contests. I have spoken twice and received the second and first prizes. Yours truly,

Perth Center, N. Y. BERTHA WERT.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl nine years old. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I read the Children's page every week. I have one brother and no sisters. I live at my grandpa's. I belong to the L. T. L. at Viola and I have paid all my dues and I am going to get a badge. Your niece,

FRANCES E. N. MURPHY.

Viola, Minn.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am glad to belong to the Cozy Corner. I belong to the L. T. L. Papa is a prohibitionist. My mamma is president of the W. C. T. U. I thank God that we have no saloons.

Yours very truly,

West Glens Falls. GUY CRANNEL.

Soft-Shelled Nuts.

21.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of eleven letters.
My 5, 11 is an article.
My 1, 3 and 8 is what we ride in.
My 6, 7 and 8 is a division in music.
My 1, 2, 5 and 11 is a family.
My 3, 11, 10 and 11 is not slow.
My 6, 7 and 9 is a stick.
My 1, 5 and 9 is an animal.
My 9, 10 and 11 is the largest weight.
My 8, 7 and 9 is a small quadruped.
My 11, 10 and 9 expresses negation.
My 10, 11 is to move.
My 11, 10 is not any.
My whole is the name of a woman well known and beloved. FRANK SAMUELS.

Mt. Carmel, Ill.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE PUBLISHED MAY 20.

20. Christopher Columbus.

Correct answers to No. 19 were sent by Eloise Meisenbach, Pearl, Ill.; Donald M. Miller, Johnstown, Pa., and Ethel C. Watts, New York city.

All communications for Children's Page should be sent to THE UNION SIGNAL office, The Temple, Chicago.

UNION SIGNAL
HAND WHITE RIBBON WORLD'S

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON. MRS. ISABELLA WEBB PARKS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.
Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

EDITOR BOOKS AND LEAFLETS—MRS. CLARA C. CHAPIN.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Pres.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treas. MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Sec'y.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, The Temple, Chicago.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.
MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, Newark, O.
MRS. ELIZA H. GAGE CUTTER, Joliet, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Asst. Recording Secretary—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

All money orders for THE UNION SIGNAL or other publications of the W. T. P. A. should be made payable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and not to the editors.

Please examine the label on your UNION SIGNAL and if past due kindly remit.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Mrs. Leavitt vs. Lady Henry Somerset.

THE UNION SIGNAL has not been ignorant of the charges which, for several months past, have been so industriously circulated concerning the acting president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It has not opened its columns to the subject; first, because no communication on the matter has been received; and second, because it has not believed that the reports would gain sufficient credence to injure either the World's union or its president. But a new light has been thrown upon the matter by the publication, under protest, in the New York Voice of May 19, of a letter from Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, in which the charges referred to are carefully enumerated and the points dwelt upon at length. We therefore break our silence, both to thank The Voice for it clear, fair-minded and brotherly editorial and also to set before our readers what we believe to be the spirit as well as the letter of this disputed question.

The charges of the three round-the-world missionaries who have taken up the opposition to Lady Henry Somerset have been summed up by Mrs. Leavitt in one, and that one, that Lady Henry "has not been, and is not now, true to the W. C. T. U. principles." Under this general indictment come sub-heads as follows:

"Although an abstainer personally, she has allowed wine to be served at her own table to her guests till January of this present year.

"She does not think it necessary for all persons to become abstainers.

"She does not wish all public houses (the exact equivalent of saloons in the United States) to be closed.

"She does not wish public houses closed during the entire day Sunday.

"She makes a proposition in regard to selling drinks to children that is far from being in unison with W. C. T. U. principles.

"She does not wish prohibition.

"She receives revenue from two or three beer-houses upon her own estates."

Voluminous "proof" for these assertions is quoted by Mrs. Leavitt, chiefly from Lady Henry Somerset's own words, given in her character as witness before the British Royal Commission on Liquor Licensing Laws, May 25, 1897, and the conclusion of the whole matter, as set forth in the letter to The Voice is that having felt it her duty to request Lady Henry to resign from her position as president of the World's W. C. T. U., with which request Lady Henry felt it equally her duty to refuse to comply, Mrs. Leavitt now states, "Lady Henry's decision left but one course to me, viz., to appeal to the membership, and to the temperance world at large. I trust my appeal will not be in vain, for I believe the membership is staunch for the truth."

In the light of all the supplementary facts it has been possible for us to obtain, we have carefully reviewed the situation as set forth by Mrs. Leavitt. We have read, not selected excerpts, but the entire text of Lady Henry's testimony before the Royal Commission, which covers forty-two columns of printed matter nearly as long as the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, and is printed in much finer type. Six hundred and forty-one questions were answered by Lady Henry, some of them at great length, from which number Mrs. Leavitt quotes twenty-two. We have read the judgment of Lady Henry's fellow-laborers in the temperance reform, Sir Wilfrid Lawson among the number, as to the value of her testimony. We have carefully reviewed her past record, as well as her most recent utterances, and, as the result of this thought and investigation, we can most cheerfully answer in the affirmative Mrs. Leavitt's question: "Would you have voted for Lady Henry Somerset as our president, had you known these things?"

Yes, had we known all "these things" in their relation to each other, and to certain other facts not touched upon in the charges, we should, and we believe the vast majority of white-ribboners the world over would have done what the executive committee at the last World's Convention did, viz., vote to place Lady Henry Somerset next to our own peerless leader, even though we had known of the sad event which would so soon make her the woman in all our vast organization who most needs our prayers and our tender, helpful sympathy.

Recent events have proved that in this hearty declaration of fealty to the acting president of the World's W. C. T. U., THE UNION SIGNAL is not speaking for itself alone, but is truly the mouthpiece of its great constituency. When Mrs. Leavitt, before requesting Lady Henry Somerset to resign her position, asked the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. to make such a request, their answer was a whole-hearted, unequivocal affirmation of belief in and loyalty toward their World's president. The executive committee of the Dominion W. C. T. U., in session May 6, passed, with an almost unanimous vote, a ringing resolution of indorsement and loyalty. The B. W. T. A., at its annual council just closed, re-elected Lady Henry Somerset to its presidency with an enthusiasm which has already been set forth in these columns. Thus three of the most powerful auxiliaries to the World's W. C. T. U. have stood by its president in the full knowledge of the charges that have been made against her. Are we to assume that the "standards" of these organizations have been simultaneously "lowered," or is it that other facts have been given consideration and allowed to have due weight—that they received light from unprejudiced sources? We doubt not that the vast majority of the other affiliated countries will take the same position as the three which have already spoken. If there should be found two or three countries of different mind, we are sure it will only be necessary to let in the light in order for them to see the mistaken attitude they have been led to assume.

The Charges Specifically Considered.

THE charges made by Mrs. Leavitt, see first column, fall under three distinct heads:

1. She selects passages from a given testimony, and considers them apart from the entire testimony; she separates sentences from their context and accepts them as proving certain things, without regard either to the context or to the light which might be thrown upon the matter by other sentences spoken at other times, both before and after the occasion under consideration.

2. She ignores the fact that social and family relations are very different in England from what they are in the United States, and that filial and maternal duties may sometimes blend inextricably with others seemingly contradictory.

3. She judges one people by the standards of another, and attempts to foist upon Great Britain America's ideas as to the best methods for obtaining the desired end of all temperance legislation—the prohibition of the liquor traffic. She assumes either that the conditions which largely obtain here must necessarily obtain there, or else she totally ignores conditions as in any way affecting the case at issue. In either case she has fallen into the utterly unscientific method of disregarding environment and present conditions as necessary factors in the working out of any permanent reform.

Let us now consider these three propositions. It is an axiom both in the theological and scientific world that no isolated fact or statement may be accepted as proof of any dogma or principle. We all know that it is the "Consensus of the Scriptures," not a text chosen here or there, which is recognized as the basis of faith. We all know what absurd and contradictory things the Bible itself may, under different handling, be made to prove. Ingersoll has given the Christian Church an illuminating example of the opposite method of treating the Scriptures, and by so doing has proved, not the Book, but his system, to be unscientific and ridiculous.

The method of interpretation which applies to the Bible applies equally to all literature, and to one's spoken as well as written words. Lady Henry Somerset said many other things before the Royal Commission than those quoted by Mrs. Leavitt. She bore unreserved testimony to the evils of strong drink. She showed most clearly that both the letter and spirit of their present excise law were being violated. She gave testimony to the fact of her own long established total abstinence principles and told, upon being questioned, what she was striving to do at Duxhurst for the redemption of inebriate women. She showed that the number of saloons regulated the demand for liquor, rather than the demand the number of saloons. She protested against safeguards being thrown about the homes of the well-to-do which were denied to the homes of the poor; she stated unhesitatingly that in saying she was not in "favor of prohibition by act of Parliament," she was considering conditions as they exist at present, not as they might come to exist in some future state of society. She most unequivocally declared herself in favor of "permissive prohibition," by which declaration she placed herself by the side of the foremost temperance reformers in Great Britain. It is only as one reads the quotations made by Mrs. Leavitt in connection with the entire testimony, that one can understand how garbled and unfair to the spirit and general import of Lady Henry's words are both quotations and deductions.

Mrs. Leavitt seems to have misinterpreted, not Lady Henry alone, but the entire nature and purpose of the Royal Commission. It is a purely judicial inquiry into the existing license law of Great Britain. It is not a place for oratorical pyrotechnics; not a place in which one is expected to unveil all one's views, but a place in which a witness must calmly and dispassionately answer the questions asked. This Lady Henry did with such judicial fairness as to prove herself endowed with that attribute usually denied to women, a legal mind. But Lady Henry Somerset has spoken on prohibition both before and since her testimony of one year ago. In her annual address for 1895 she says: "I repeat that any trade that can not stand the test of its relations to helpless infancy and hallowed childhood, only needs to be placed under the people's control and it will be exploded as if dynamite had exploded under it." "If the people are to control and rule, their politics are not to be mixed for men in the same place as their drinks. No greater curse can come to England than the political 'boss' behind the bar, and the voter to whom the beer-vat furnishes his inspiration."

In a letter addressed to Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and printed in the Alliance News of May 6, 1898, she answers at length the charges made against her by Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew, who are trying to do in England what Mrs. Leavitt is attempting in America, and says among other things, "I am, of course, in favor of prohibition by local option, and I venture to believe it is not needful for me to say so in this formal manner." "The preparation of the nation for the prohibition of the liquor traffic by the will of the people is a task in which I am heartily with you, and it will require all our best energy for some time to come."

Ought not her latest words to be considered final, and have we not abundantly verified our first proposition that, in taking sentences apart from their context and apart from other utterances upon the same subject, a grievous wrong has been done our gracious English sister, which it is the God-given duty of every true, loyal-hearted American to right?

With reference to the varying social conditions in England and America, it seems wholly unnecessary that we should speak. All who have looked into the subject know some of the conditions that accompany entailed property, and know that, under certain circumstances, easily supposable, Lady Henry Somerset could not be free to do as she otherwise would. Wine was not, as might be supposed from Mrs. Leavitt's letter, found constantly upon Lady Henry Somerset's table. It was, indeed, a most infrequent accompaniment. On certain state occasions, when her mother or her son were entertaining guests at Eastnor Castle, wine was offered to their guests. It was never served in any of her other homes; was never touched by herself, or offered to her own guests. On the occasion of the coming of age of her son, Mr. Somers Somerset, no wine or liquor of any kind was offered to the multitude who thronged the gates of Eastnor Castle and Reigate in attendance upon the festivities. Her son now having an establishment of his own, Lady Henry has publicly announced that her table at Eastnor Castle is to be hereafter free from wine, and the question is no longer a living issue. Some of those who are now most loudly denouncing Lady Henry Somerset for allowing wine upon her table, knew of the fact for years and held their peace.

Of the beer houses on the land owned by Lady Henry, all that needs to be said is, that she has brought test cases and finds herself powerless under English law to effect a change.

Concerning the other charges, that Lady Henry does not desire all saloons closed; that she is not opposed to open saloons on Sunday nor to drinking, per se; that she proposes legislation concerning children contrary to the principles of the W. C. T. U., very little need be said. In the first two instances, she is speaking as a student of social problems who recognizes, on the one hand, that the saloon will inhere in our social life until we shall have substituted something better, and on the other hand, that the class distinction which denies to the poor the rights, or wrongs even, it accords to the rich, may be as great a menace to society as the evil it would seek to remedy.

Drinking, per se, is a purely metaphysical consideration. Of course, if no evil came from drinking, there could be no harm in drink. That proposition would be accepted by the most radical temperance reformers everywhere. It is that metaphysical distinction alone which was in the minds of the questioner and Lady Henry, as is clearly proved by both question and answer. Page after page of this evidence is given up to showing the evils which follow drinking, and the efforts which are being put forth at Duxhurst to rescue women from its thralldom.

As to selling drinks to children, the testimony before the Royal Commission shows that in questions and answers previous to those quoted by Mrs. Leavitt, it was shown that children go to the public houses for liquor for their parents at a very early age. Lady Henry testified that they were seen doing so at five, six, seven, eight years of age, any time at which they could possibly carry a jug or walk. In this connection she also testified that children were supplied with sweets and oranges and other inducements to return to the public house, and that overmeasure was given to them so that they might drink out of the bottle and yet return the bottle to their parents with the full measure in it, and that they bought liquors for themselves as well as for their parents. Under their present law sixteen is the limit at which spirits may be served to children, and thirteen for beer, and there is no law against children being sent to the public house by their parents. Lady Henry proposed fifteen years for the limit for both consumption and purchase. This would lower the age for consumption of spirits on the premises one year, from sixteen to fifteen; but at the same time it would raise the time of beer drinking on the premises two years, from thirteen to fifteen, and would also prohibit the purchase of both beer and spirits by children before the age of fifteen, which certainly would be an immense gain over the present conditions. Lady Henry, no doubt, knew that fifteen was the utmost that could be hoped for if both buying and drinking were included.

This whole subject seems to us to reduce itself to two questions, the one of expediency, the other of Christian charity. 1. Are we, in the face of a foe so mighty, so determined, so relentless as is the liquor traffic, to spend our force in an attack upon one of our members who may have views differing from our own as to the best methods of accomplishing the end we all have in view? 2. Does such a course of conduct savor of the spirit of Him whose followers we claim to be when we apply the name Christian to our organization?

We believe that from the great mother-heart of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the World there will arise, in answer to both questions, an emphatic "no."

The United Kingdom Alliance and Lady Henry Somerset.

OUR assertion that Mrs. Leavitt has erred in trying to judge one nation by the standards of another, and in assuming that what is deemed the best method of work among one people is necessarily best for all, will be acknowledged by those who have made a study of the temperance reform in Great Britain. "Permissive prohibition," or prohibition by "direct veto," is the utmost goal set before the temperance reformers of England. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, president of the United Kingdom Alliance, writes to Lady Henry, in reply to her letter, written after her testimony had been given, and from which we have already quoted: "You continue consistently to occupy the position, which I have not only always understood you to take up, but which is, I believe, the position held by the majority of the United Kingdom Alliance."

But some of our readers may ask: "What is the United Kingdom Alliance, and upon what grounds do you claim for it the right to judge as to the orthodoxy or heterodoxy of views on the temperance question as it affects Great Britain?" In answer, we would say that the United Kingdom Alliance is the largest body of temperance workers in Great Britain, that its president is Sir Wilfrid Lawson, that it numbers and has numbered on its executive board such names as Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, Dr. Lees, Rev. Chas. F. Aked, Mr. James Whyte and many others as familiar in temperance circles across the sea as are the names of our well-known leaders here. Of this society, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens says: "No one will question the position of the United Kingdom Alliance on the question of prohibition. It is a straight out prohibition society. I was in England at the time Lady Henry's evidence before the Royal Commission was made public, and I heard great satisfaction expressed by members of the Alliance that she had spoken so strongly and so much in conformity with their ideas. The United Kingdom Alliance is a society which was after Neal Dow's own heart. Verily, if Lady Henry be a heretic, she is a heretic in a very "goodly companie."

Because the foremost temperance reformers in this country consider prohibition by local option inadequate to meet the needs of the situation, must we read out of our ranks those who have never yet had an opportunity of testing even local option? We reached the ideal of national prohibition through evolution, and no fair-minded person can deny that the principle and practice of local option have been important educational factors in what we consider our upward march. It is far ahead of any temperance legislation Great Britain has as yet secured, and seems to them the only path to the ultimate goal.

Lady Henry explicitly states in her testimony that she formed no judgment antagonistic to prohibition while in the United States and implies that the contrary is distinctly true, but she emphasizes the differing conditions in the two countries and states that she believes long education is necessary before entire prohibition can be secured in England. "Permissive prohibition," or prohibition by "direct veto," she considers a part of that education. It was exactly this that Lady Henry meant when she said that she was not in favor of "prohibition by act of Parliament."

She was not in favor of Parliament's issuing a law which, in the present state of the temperance reform in England, would, in her judgment, be only a dead letter.

On this point The Voice most wisely says: "The conditions in the two countries are so different, politically and constitutionally, that we have never felt competent to criticise the line of battle chosen by the Alliance, and the leaders of the Alliance have been equally chary in criticising the temperance hosts on this side. . . . The aims and spirit of the two branches of the temperance army are much the same, though fighting in two different countries, under two different forms of government, the methods of warfare are different."

Young Woman's Branch.

Y's at Work.

PENNSYLVANIA.

THIS being the first annual report of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Carlisle, an outline of its organization would properly preface the account of the year's work.

On the afternoon of October 13, 1897, Miss Nana Pratt entertained, at her home, about seventy-five of the young ladies of Carlisle. The house was brightened by great boughs of beautifully colored autumn leaves, and pictures of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset were hung in prominent places. As announced by cards of invitation, Miss Olafia Johansdottir, National president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Iceland, and the honored guest of the hostess, and Miss Ruth Shaffner, spoke of the work of the Y. W. C. T. U. and of general temperance work; and Mrs. George Edward Reed told of the possibilities for good the young women of Carlisle would have if they would take a stand for temperance. Miss Pratt invited the young ladies to seriously consider the forming of a union in Carlisle. She had pledge cards distributed among the guests, and requested all who cared to join the Y's to remain for an after meeting. Twenty of the young ladies remained, and the union was organized. Miss Shaffner was selected as chairman, and the election of officers was made by acclamation, with the following result: Miss Nana Pratt, president; Miss Mary G. Hilton, vice-president; Miss L. Jean Richards, recording secretary; Miss Adele Hocker, corresponding secretary; Miss Elizabeth Gardner, treasurer.

A committee to draw up a constitution was appointed, consisting of Misses Lydia Haddock, Edith Prince and Lucia Hargis.

Various business meetings were held later at the call of the executive committee, to adopt the constitution and formulate plans of work. It was decided that the meetings of the union should be held once a month, at the homes of the different members. These meetings have been followed by receptions, informal and by invitation, at which programs consisting of music, readings from the local Y's Bulletin, and addresses on temperance have been given. Miss Jennie Ericson, of Finland, dressed in her quaint native costume, and Miss Ruth Shaffner, at two different receptions, gave interesting accounts of the World's and National conventions, and at the last reception, held at the home of Miss Winnefred Woods, at which there were 106 guests, Hon. R. M. Henderson gave a very able talk on temperance.

Miss Nellie McIntyre was appointed and has acted as press superintendent, and has received much courtesy from the town papers in announcing meetings and giving accounts of the Y work.

A reception, under the auspices of the Y's, was given to the young women of the town at the W. C. T. U. Girls' Reading Room on New Year's afternoon and evening to increase interest in the reading room and to publish the plan of the Y's to be responsible for the attractiveness of the room on Saturday evenings. Miss Mary Hilton and Miss Winnefred Woods have had charge of the work for the room and the appointment of different Y members for Saturday evenings, and they report growing interest among the young women of the town for the privileges of the room.

The visit from Mrs. Frances J. Barnes in January was exceedingly helpful. She gave a very bright and inspiring talk at the reception tendered her at the Indian school in the afternoon, and spoke at the Second Presbyterian church at a public meeting in the evening. The Y's also assisted the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Carlisle in arranging for a memorial meeting for Miss Willard, held in the Methodist church, Sunday afternoon, February 20.

The union now numbers fifty-two members—forty-four young women and eight young men—and in closing the work of the seven months to enter upon the new year, it hopes to have even more consecration of the members for the cause of "God and Home and Every Land."

NANA PRATT, Pres.
ADELE HOCKER, Cor. Sec.

April 20, 1898.

VIRGINIA.

THE young women of Virginia nave been very fortunate this winter in having the services of Miss Lee Glencrea Cook for about six weeks. Miss Cook organized two college Y's and six city unions, besides visiting ten unions that were at work; much good was accomplished. She said she found that adding the White Shield and White Cross pledges to the total abstinence made the work of the Y. W. C. T. U. more attractive to the young people she met.

The March edition of the state paper was given to the young women and they made good use of this opportunity.

Some of the Y's in the state rendered valuable assistance to the state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in getting signatures to the petition; the bill was lost by six votes, but the women are determined to try again in two years.

The oldest Y in the state celebrated its eleventh birthday on March 8, sending out the following invitation with a little silk bag to the members and friends:

Richmond Y with greetings most hearty,
Invite you to attend their eleventh birthday party.
Please bring or send back the bags they have sent
With as many round pennies as years they have spent.
These years though not many have been full of deed,
So come now and bid them a loving "Godspeed."

The Charlottesville Y has sent out an invitation to an "apple social." Program:

Chorus by Y's. Paper, The Apple, its Uses and Abuses. Recitation. Paper, The Apple in Home and Commerce. Song by Y. Recitation, Pies that Pass in the Night. Apple Bee and social time.

I give these two items thinking perhaps they may give an idea to some other Y. The apple social taught a lesson that will prove helpful to all those present.

Yours for young womanhood,
(MRS.) J. TYLER JOBSON,
State Y Sec.

World's Y Fund.

AT the Buffalo convention when Mrs. Frances J. Barnes resigned as National Y secretary, Mrs. Boole, the newly-elected secretary, proposed that the Y's of the United States try to raise a purse for her to use in the work for the World's Y. W. C. T. U.

The state Y secretary of Virginia was appointed to write to the state secretaries asking if they would like to contribute to this fund.

Maryland, Iowa, Ohio, Colorado, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Kentucky, North Dakota, Vermont, New Hampshire, Alabama, Michigan, Wyoming, Delaware, Georgia, Rhode Island, Washington, D. C., and Virginia have contributed toward this fund, raising in all $49.55. It is not too late to send a contribution now. Mrs. Barnes writes that the money she has already received has been a great help with the printing, postage and stationery. Of course she has not received this whole amount, as the expense of having the resolutions engrossed and framed had to be taken out.

Dear young women, shall we let our efforts stop here? Can we not keep up this fund? To save confusion and mistakes, please send your contribution to me.

Yours for His service,
(MRS.) J. TYLER JOBSON,
18 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

World's W. C. T. U.

The B. W. T. A. National Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Lady Henry Somset was re-elected by an overwhelming majority. Agnes E. Slack, Hon. corresponding secretary, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Hon. recording secretary, Mrs. Gorham, treasurer. The election of Lady Henry brought on a scene of magnificent enthusiasm, and though she had so recently told us she felt she must, in the interests of harmony retire for a year, she could no longer take that position after all she saw and heard this morning, especially when a leading member of the "minority" came forward and moved "that the informal ballot be the formal ballot for the president." "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was promptly sung. Ater this I think we all began to feel the spirit of unrest was leaving the council, and the "atmosphere" became more truly what we have to feel it to be in white-ribbon meetings.

Lady Henry explained she could not actively work for the coming year, or address large public meetings. The council readily assented to this condition as she desired it.

An interesting discussion on the affiliation fee to the World's W. C. T. U. gave us a good opportunity for putting before our delegate the claims of our loved international organization, with the result that by a very large majority we decided to pay two cents a year per member instead of one cent.

Also we formed a World's W. C. T. U. missionary department, the object being that the superintendent should draw greater attention to her World's work, and I know Miss Bleby will do this. Resolutions in favor of the popular direct veto of the liquor traffic by the will of the people and for Sunday closing were unanimously passed. The bill now before Parliament with regard to habitual drunkards was discussed, and gratification expressed that the government is now dealing with the question.

Then of course we very whole-heartedly again proclaimed ourselves on the side of woman's suffrage. Strong resolutions were passed unanimously against every form of official or state regulation of immorality, whether embodied in the contagious diseases acts or in any other form.

A resolution was passed approving the more humane treatment of prisoners. We had good discussions on the subject of barmaids, the White Ribbon, educational purity work, sale of drink to children and a most animated one on the non-alcoholic wine department. I, for one, treated it more as a religious question, for in England the established church has very pronounced opinions on it. As a result of the discussion, we decided to include the subject (it refers wholly to the Lord's Supper) in a special lecture list. Most encouraging reports were given, showing how several of our Branches had successfully induced magistrates to warn holders of licenses not to supply children under the age of thirteen with intoxicating drinks.

I have only touched on some of the most important debates. The reports of superintendents were of course a prominent feature, and deservedly so. An invitation was received from the Scottish W. C. T. U. for the next World's Convention to be held in Glasgow, Scotland (only a few days since I received one from Calcutta, India), so now each part of the globe has invited us—Australia, Washington (U. S. A.), India, Scotland.

During all the meetings Miss Willard's empty chair was by the president, across it a broad white ribbon, with "Victory" in gold letters; on the seat a glorious bunch of Arum lilies, and over the back the stars and stripes—that vacant seat spoke to us all the time.

A cablegram has just come from the National, with loving congratulations on Lady Henry's election. I shall gladly pass around the message.

Our loved, capable vice-president, Mrs. Eva McLaren, presided the greater part of the time, as Lady Henry could only attend a few hours each day. I believe we are about to enter upon a most successful year's work. We felt the spirit of the last part of our council was most helpful and beautiful.

We reminded the council of the International Exhibition to be held in Paris in the autumn of next year, when the World's W. C. T. U. hopes every country will help to make the World's W. C. T. U. Pavilion a success.

I have just heard from Mrs. Stevens of the death of dear Mrs. Burt and our world's press superintendent, Miss Lodie Reed; and I feel hushed and still. They were loved, trusted leaders. God help us in all these losses. Truly the invisible world seems to be becoming very, very real to us white-ribboners.

This is an incomplete account unless I specially emphasize our great joy in having loyal, devoted Anna Gordon with us. She brought a very real touch of our lost leader with her. Then we welcomed gratefully and joyfully, Mrs. Ardill, of New South Wales, Australia; Mrs. Ware, Victoria; Mrs. and Miss Brown, South Australia; Mrs. Haig and Mrs. Solly, South Africa; Mrs. Waterhouse, Honolulu; Mrs. Lomsbury, Canada; Mrs.

Morey, Baltimore, U. S. A.; Miss Maunder, New Zealand.

Before this is in print I shall be in Paris, I speak at Versailles on June 9 before the leading French Temperance Society on the work of the World's W. C. T. U. Later on in the summer I go to other European countries.

With loving greeting, from your affectionate comrade,

AGNES E. SLACK.

Tasmanian Notes.

OUR sixth annual convention has come and gone. Well attended meetings, vigorous addresses, cordial welcomes, fine weather, and above all the sweet consciousness of our Divine Leader's presence with us have been ours to enjoy. We have received an impetus for future services and an inspiration to work more fervently and faithfully for "God and Home and Humanity."

By a happy combination of circumstances we have had our Australasian president with us and her cheery presence, her sweet womanliness and her large knowledge of W. C. T. U. methods have not only been a help to us, but an acquisition to our public meetings.

The convention was held in the temperance hall, Hobart, and deft hands had transformed the plain and somber platform into a "thing of beauty." Convention really began on the 20th, when a prayer and consecration meeting was held at four P. M. There was a large attendance of white-ribboners. Mrs. Blair, colonial president, occupied the chair. Mesdames Rooke and Braham, in short addresses, made touching allusion to the departure of our beloved Chieftain to the homeland, one dwelling on her whole-hearted consecration, the other on the spirit of love that animated her.

Business began on the morning of the 22d, and continued with only slight interruption for four days. During this time two special afternoon meetings were held, four public ones and the regular routine of receiving reports, and discussing methods of work.

The colonial president's address was received with acclamation. The secretary's concise report showed that steady work has been going on in spite of much to hinder and depress. Most of the reports from superintendents of departments were encouraging. Those that stand out most boldly as having increased in strength are L. T. L., the press and literature. Six new legions have been formed during the past year, and to Miss M. Lodge, the energetic superintendent, is due much of the success that has been evidenced. The press is much more liberal than in the past, and every newspaper in the colony reports W. C. T. U. meetings and all but one inserts items. Literature has had a wide circulation and has been freely disseminated. Purity, gospel, temperance and franchise literature have been sown broadcast and readers to white-ribbon and temperance papers are more numerous.

A very impressive memorial service, conducted by Mrs. Nicholls, was held on Tuesday afternoon. There was a large attendance, and the whole service was marked by the spirit of Christian hope. No emblems of death were evident, for we felt that such would have been contrary to the wishes of our beloved Miss Willard. Mrs. Nicholls gave an excellent résumé of Miss Wilard's life and work. Mrs. Blair, colonial president, spoke earnestly of the purpose of her life, and Mrs. Rooke (Burnie) gave a brief address on, "She being dead, yet speaketh," by her actions, words and death. Messrs. L. Lodge and and W. A. Weymouth, honorary members, made graceful allusions to Miss Willard's devoted services. Between the addresses several solos were rendered, one being "On heights of power," by Miss Kennedy.

In the evening a social welcome was given, when a large assemblage was gathered together. The public meeting following was presided over by Mayor Heddlestone. Welcomes were accorded by delegates representing the Women's Prayer Union, the C. E. Society of Tasmania, the Y. M. C. A., the I. O. R., the Y. W. C. A., the I. O. G. T., the Council of Churches, the S. A. and the Temperance Alliance. During the evening Mrs. Nicholls, on behalf of the members of the Tasmanian union, presented Mrs. Blair with a handsome gold watch and chain, as a token of love and esteem and of their appreciation of the great service she had rendered to the union during her term of office. Mrs. Blair, who was taken by surprise at this gift from her fellow-workers, feelingly replied. Through changes in her domestic affairs, she had found it impossible to continue to hold the position of president, and thanked them for the love and loyalty they had shown to her.

The following afternoon an L. T. L. demonstration (the first of its kind in Tasmania) was held. There was a large attendance of legioners representing Hobart, Bellerive, Richmond, Sorrell, and New Town, while greetings were received from country unions. Recitations, dialogues and action songs were happily rendered. On behalf of the legioners Master Sharp presented Mrs. Nicholls with a handsome bouquet, and Miss Gwennie Arnold one to Mrs. Blair. This was accompanied by a short address signed by four hundred legioners. This numerously signed letter was put up in the form of a roll and encased in a dark blue plush cover.

The prizes awarded by Miss M. Lodge for best essay on the life of Neal Dow, by legioner over twelve years of age fell to a Burnie member, and the one to legioner under that age to a Hobart competitor. At the close of this unique demonstration an hour was spent in short addresses to mothers. The speakers were Mesdames Nicholls, Fysh, Braham, Lodge, Overell and Scott, who emphasized the importance of good home training.

A fine temperance demonstration was held in the evening when vigorous addresses were given by Mrs. Nicholls and the Rev. Barber and W. Shaw.

On Thursday night a good franchise meeting was held, at which Mrs. Blair presided. Mrs. Nicholls gave an able address on how the franchise was won in South Australia. Her graphic description of the labors abundant, the difficulties met with, the much prayer and persistent individual and collective efforts, resulting in final victory, was listened to with great attention and elicited hearty applause. The Hon. A. I. Clarke, one of the earliest champions, stated that the community, which had in its government only one-third, or one-fourth of its citizenship was defective and could not be healthy and prosperous. Mrs. Rooke combated a few of the reasons assigned by the anti-suffragists for their position and moved "That the time has now arrived when the franchise should be extended to the women of Tasmania." Mr. McWilliams, M. N. A., seconded the resolution, and alluded to the fact that the bill enfranchising women had twice been passed by the house of assembly and each time by a good majority. He considered that if the women of Tasmania had worked half as hard for the franchise as the women of South Australia had done, it would have been theirs some time ago. The resolution was then carried and met with only one dissentient. A purity conference was held on Friday night, when the newly elected president, Mrs. Rooke, was introduced, and took the chair amid hearty applause. Mrs. Nicholls gave a concise address in which she related the methods of work adopted by the W. C. T. U. to impart instruction on purity and raise the present standard.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the unanimous election of Mrs. Rooke as president; Mrs. Blair was elected corresponding secretary, Mrs. Wilkins, recording secretary, and Mrs. Rowe, treasurer. Two new departments of work have been taken up, these being peace and arbitration and Y Branch. Before dispersing, Mrs. Nicholls on behalf of the delegates and members of convention, presented Miss Corbett, the retiring corresponding secretary, with a neat handbag and several volumes of books. Miss Corbett has during her term of office endeared herself to the members.

On Friday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Parker entertained the delegates and president, providing brakes in which they were driven to Brown's river, a beautiful coast village south of Hobart. Afternoon tea was provided, and after a pleasant time together the party were driven back to the city.

We now take up our work for the coming year, confident that He who has helped will help, and that He who has blessed us in the past will continue to do so in the future.

(MRS.) JESSIE S. ROOKE,
Colonial Correspondent.
Burnie, Emu Bay, Tasmania.

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Texas.

MRS. MARY E. KUHL, of Champaign, Ill., associate National superintendent of work among miners and associate state evangelist of Illinois, has been doing heroic work in our state during the months of February and March. Number of towns visited, 20; meetings held, 40; juvenile meetings, 2; unions organized, 4—Giddings, Elgin, Temple and Crawford; new members added by her efforts, 80; sick visited, 3; assisted at ninth district convention; visited the mines at Thurber; did much personal work and held informal conferences. She has been invited to return to our state next year, so pleased with her work are our people.

Iowa Park has raised twenty-five dollars for the Temple by giving a musical and literary entertainment.

Comanche has a most able column in one of the city papers edited by Mrs. Chancellor. Many new subscribers have been added by reason of it, and sentiment in favor of temperance and moral reform has been created to such an extent that many farmers have come in saying, "Here's a dollar for your paper; I like that W. C. T. U. column. Can't let such a good educator pass my family by."

Memorial services have been held for our beloved Miss Willard in almost every city and town in the state. These have not been confined to our unions, but literary clubs and churches as well have joined in eulogizing this incomparable woman. Day of prayer was observed in many localities.

Hamilton union publishes a weekly paper, The Truth. They gave a medal contest and "Milkmaid's convention" recently, netting creditable sums for their paper and the Temple. The bright wife of the county judge carried off the medal.

Greenville union has adopted the unique plan of choosing sides. Each member is marked upon attendance, duty, reading UNION SIGNAL and state paper and securing new members. Marks added up once a month. Side winning are entertained by the other side. This is one of the most flourishing unions in the state. Mrs. Judge (Senator) Sherrill, president.

Plano has the banner L. T. L. of Texas, and it is doubtful if there is a better one in existence. Its roll-call numbers one hundred. Mrs. Schimelpfenig, president of the ninth district, is president of the legion. She recently organized an L. T. L. in Commerce, of thirty-three members, and set the union women working on several new lines of our work.

From Mrs. L. M. Bissell, corresponding secretary of the Alamo union of San Antonio, I learn that they have planned for all their state pledges, though having no president and but few meetings; wear the white ribbon, held a parlor meeting in March, and a Willard memorial service of which the daily papers spoke most favorably. Collect and send to National Hospital the five cent assessment from each member, distribute the Temple cards sent by Mrs. Carse, and faithfully keep up state dues. This entitles them to honorable mention in my opinion. Mrs. Bissell, who is local press superintendent, will edit a W. C. T. U. column in a new publication soon to be issued.

I regret to record the loss by removal from our state of Mrs. Belle Flowers, our state superintendent of narcotics, to whom a farewell reception was given by the Helen M. Stoddard union, of Dallas, her home.

Mrs. Flowers took occasion to appeal to those in attendance to show their love for Miss Willard, and appreciation of her effort in behalf of the Temple by using every effort to help liquidate the debt. This resulted in a pledge of one hundred dollars, forty-one of which was paid before noon of next day. Her time was occupied up to her departure in the lecture field. I learn she is in the harness again in her old home at Shelbyville, Ind. Her address is 163 South West street.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Houston has been compelled to accept the resignation of Mrs. Fannie Reese Pugh as president, who leaves in a few days for her old home—Hearne. Mrs. Catharine D. Schureman was chosen as her successor.

Mrs. Nettie W. Robinson, press superintendent, Dennison, reports many W. C. T. U. items in the daily papers, and a noticeable decrease in saloon advertisements. A Willard memorial service was held, and a large collection taken for the Temple. Most of our pastors gave a part or all of one regular service to the memory of Miss Willard; have held a spelling school to increase the fund of the union. Most of the unions go up to convention this year with pledges to state president's salary redeemed.

(MRS.) ELISABETH S. TRACY,
State Reporter, Houston.

New Jersey.

"THIS is our trysting time," wrote our beloved state president, Mrs. Emma Bourne, some weeks ago, and so it has proven to be throughout all these spring days after our sad hearts caught the sweet refrain of the magnificent pæans of joy that have arisen as a rare incense heavenward since the passing on of our beautiful Chieftain to the glorious "heights."

Scarcely a local union of the 248 in the state but have held a memorial service for our peerless leader. Some have held two, one in a central church in the town where all denominations gathered and paid homage to the world's best loved woman, and again in the quiet of their own W. C. T. U. parlors, where hearts were opened to sister hearts in this one mutual sorrow and praise.

In the early spring the state executive, at New Brunswick, held a memorial service of our loved one, and all the county unions in their spring schools of methods are doing the same. One state superintendent writes: "Our women have been aroused as never before; unions that are never heard from through the press have had memorial meetings reported."

In a report of the Public School Principals Association, of Newark, it has been decided to recommend the organization of anti-cigaret leagues in all the schools of that city. A feather in the cap of Mrs. E. R. Krom, of Plainfield, state superintendent of tobacco and narcotics. Many local unions subscribe for ten or twenty copies of the Anti-Tobacco Gem for free distribution in the Sabbath schools of their respective towns.

Newfield, Gloucester county, claims to have the star Y of the state, their meetings being so well received as to be called for as popular entertainments, though held on a high Christian temperance plane.

Mrs. Kate Raphael, of Ocean Grove, state Y secretary, is taking her place among many gifted women as one of the able evening speakers. Our energetic superintendent of state and county fairs, Mrs. M. A. Campfield, has been ill. Our state lecturer for work among foreigners, Miss Kate Lunden, delights her audiences wherever she goes. Miss Lunden will make a tour of the unions of Salem county in June and July.

Christian citizenship meetings under the thorough direction of Laura E. Holmes, state superintendent of franchise and Christian citizenship, have been the means of awakening many male minds to the rights due women.

Its able superintendent of the press, Mrs. M. S. Wright, says the Camden union puts aside discouragements, climbs over obstacles and marches bravely on to duty; that there are blind eyes to be opened, and if Christians do not work against the saloon, to whom must we look for support?

The state superintendent of our newest department, peace and arbitration, Mrs. Thomas, of Vineland, is most helpful in her line of information, showing where peace leaflets and books may be procured.

Miss Lillian Page, state superintendent of literature, also gives very practical suggestions along her department of work.

Our charming young superintendent of physical education, Miss Maud Miller, is wonderfully interesting in her illustrations along the line of a better physical development for the race.

The Willard W. C. T. U., of Westfield, Union county, issued very attractive calendars for the year, mothers' meetings claiming much attention. A parlor meeting is held once a month at the residence of one of the members. Press superintendents all through the state are doing splendid work.

The Improved Order of Red Men, of Phillipsburg, through their chairman, Mr. Clark Cole, presented the local union and Y's with a beautiful organ. The president, Mrs. J. H. Griffeth, accepted the gift in an appropriate speech. Speech-making and a fine collation followed. The gentlemen were fascinated with the occasion, and at its close each was wearing a white ribbon, rejoicing that he was an honorary member of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of Plainfield, National superintendent of parlor meetings and president of Union county, is doing excellent work among the counties, making tours of all the unions in some, addressing special meetings in others. In New Jersey we consider that in no other way, perhaps, are so many new members gained and our workers so strengthened as through the well-conducted parlor meeting.

Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, National superintendent of soldiers and sailors and president of Burlington county, is also putting in good work in her department in these trying, unrestful war days, and has stirred up the whole state as to the frightful danger of the canteen system that will play havoc with the moral temperance training of much of the young manhood that goes forth to war, unless measures may be devised to prohibit same.

Among others, the Gloucester county school of methods adopted the following:

Resolved, That we emphasize the lesson conveyed by the cremation of the body of Frances E. Willard, trusting that one so widely known, may exert a corresponding influence in preparing public sentiment for this better, safer way, in her own words; "when the real self passes onward into the world unseen, let the earthly mantle be enfolded in flame and rendered powerless to affect the health of the living."

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Mrs. Charlton Edholm, Mrs. Helen L. Bullock and Mrs. Lucy Thurman, besides our own many bright women, are all in the state doing excellent work.

The executive committee of Union county, which will entertain the state convention at Elizabeth in October, is already making practical headway along the many little lines of detail so necessary for the interest and comfort of its expected guests.

In closing this report I wish to bear testimony to what I consider the very best method of increasing our membership, having seen it worked so charmingly in Salem, the banner county of the state. I herewith give the recipe, copied after the state's agricultural methods of producing the most perfect grains and largest yield of Indian corn. It is summed up in these three words: "Cultivate, cultivate, cultivate." This, Mrs. Patterson, the county president, has been doing all along. Not putting the most brilliant speakers on the prominent highland plains, but cultivating highland and lowland alike.

EMILY R. KIRBY,
State Reporter, Woodstown.

Delaware.

KNOWING that THE UNION SIGNAL has been crowded for space since the departure of our great leader, Delaware has thought best to defer any report until now.

Memorial services were held all over the state, in many instances before the official announcement was made in THE UNION SIGNAL.

The past year has been one of sadness to many of our white-ribbon women. Our state president, Miss Margaret Hilles, has been in poor health for several months and is now in a sanitarium in an adjoining state. Our superintendent of social purity, Mrs. L. C. Marks, was suddenly bereft of her husband last autumn, while the president of Sussex county, Mrs. Anna Fisher, is also mourning her life's companion. Mrs. E. Elma Pyle, state corresponding secretary, is acting state president.

The county conventions were held during the last week of April, and for the first time the state did all the work of the conventions, so it seems we are growing stronger under the chastenings.

In two of the counties medal contests formed the program of the evening. Mrs. Kate Smithers, president of Kent county, gave an account of the World's and National Conventions.

A Y was organized at Newport, May 7, with twelve active and three honorary members. The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction has visited most of the unions in the two upper counties and had the privilege of appearing in two of the county institutes of the public school teachers. The Sunday-school superintendent reports successful work in her line by having temperance day observed in many of the schools. Grace (M. E.) Sunday-school has a large anti-saloon league, organized. Hilles union has held two successful public meetings. Smyrna had a successful echo meeting after Mrs. Smithers returned from Buffalo and Toronto.

The Girls' Industrial School is not doing as great work as would be possible if the building were large enough to accommodate all who seek admittance, but the state appropriation was cut off last year and the managers are suffering from lack of funds and unable to go on to greater work.

The report of counties in the future will be sent through their respective secretaries to the press correspondent, and I hope in my next letter to give a complete report of the work done in our state.

MARGARET W. HOUSTON,
State Reporter, Georgetown.

New Mexico.

NEW MEXICO has not been behind her sister states in expressing her sense of loss in the removal of our valued and honored leader. Memorial services have been held at Las Vegas, Albuquerque, Gallup, and Santa Fé, all of which were an earnest expression of the great void so keenly felt. The reports all emphasize the large audiences, the hearty participation of the local clergy, and the heartfelt interest of the general community. Our territorial president, Rev. Mary J. Borden, preached a memorial sermon on February 29th which was interpreted into Spanish to a large audience.

On March 21 a citizenship rally was held at Albuquerque; at this public meeting a brief history of Neal Dow was given, the occasion proving very profitable. The Eddy union have erected and dedicated a public drinking fountain.

The L. T. L. work has been taken up at Magdalena with a promise of a union in the near future.

The Las Vegas union moves quietly but steadily on in its good work.

The Albuquerque local union, as well as the territorial executive committee have sent petitions to the president of Yale College protesting against the attitude assumed by the college authorities on the total abstinence question.

These notes must necessarily be brief, but they serve to show that New Mexico is alive to the importance of the great work of temperance reform, and has no intention of giving up the fight.

(MRS.) ALICE P. HADLEY,
Territorial Reporter, Albuquerque.

South Dakota.

MEMORIAL services have been held all over the state for our beloved but now promoted leader. The women all over the land feel intense satisfaction at the general desire to do her honor and the well deserved encomiums that have been accorded her. The April number of our state W. C. T. U. paper, the

It rests with you whether you continue the nerve-killing tobacco habit. NO-TO-BAC removes the desire for tobacco, without nervous distress, expels nicotine, purifies the blood, restores lost manhood, makes you strong in health, nerve and pocket-book. 1,500,000 boxes sold, 400,000 cases cured. Buy NO-TO-BAC from your own druggist, who will vouch for us. Take it with a will, patiently, persistently. One box, $1, usually cures; 3 boxes, $2.50, guaranteed to cure, or we refund money. Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, New York.
STOP SMOKING!

GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE "EAGLE BRAND"
THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS TESTIFY TO ITS SUPERIORITY.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE. NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. N.Y.

White Ribbon Journal, was a memorial number, with a picture of Miss Willard on the first page. The subject matter was almost entirely made up of accounts of memorial services held. Since then so many more reports have been received that the May number will be of much the same nature.

At Keystone, Rapid Gity, Spearfish, Sturgis, Deadwood and Hot Springs in the Black Hills memorial services were held, the collections for the Temple amounting to about $25.

At Sioux Falls nearly fifteen hundred people attended the union memorial services, the collection for the Temple amounting to $14.55. At Clark the collection amounted to $8.25; at Woonsocket, $8; Pierre, $9, and at Wakonda to $6.25. At Hudson $15 was raised for the Temple. Services were held at Salem, Wolsey, Aberdeen, Vermillion, Garretson, Highmore, Brookings, Wessington Springs and many others not yet reported.

The state president, Mrs. Ramsey, has just finished a successful trip through fourth district, and will commence a two weeks' visit to the unions in second district, known as the Black Hills, Sunday, her first date being Rapid City.

ALICE GOSSAGE,
State Reporter, Rapid City.

Western Washington.

WILL the dear sisters who sent me detailed accounts of memorial services held for our loved leader, pardon me if I heed the instructions given by THE UNION SIGNAL editor and compress these reports into as small a space as possible?

Shelton, Anacortes, Seattle, Centralia, Chehalis and Pe Ell have all reported such services, some being for Neal Dow as well. Beautiful decorations of flowers and drapery, large and sympathetic audiences, eloquent tributes from clergymen and those high in authority, as well as generous offerings to the Temple fund, attested to the large place which our beloved one held in the hearts of all. Everywhere the W. C. T. U. meets with—if possible—a more ready and cordial coöperation since this sorrow, which is all Christendom's sorrow, has come to it.

Fremont's superintendent of purity in literature and art has had four sermons preached on bad literature, has circulated petition to press and labored with individuals and Sunday-schools.

Seattle Central is doing Sunday-school work which will tell in the future, as all work for the children must. Mrs. Wood, who has this department in charge, read an excellent paper before the Seattle Sunday-school Superintendents' Union on "Temperance Teaching in the Sunday-school," and arrangements were begun for a grand temperance rally. This union also reports mothers' meetings, franchise work and active Temple work. "We are determined," they write, "to do our part toward saving the beautiful Temple—for dear Miss Willard's sake, if no other, and we will bend all our energies to that for the next two months."

Mrs. Freeman, of Seattle Lake union, is doing a noble work, placing the book "True Manhood" in the hands of boys and young men, many of whom have gone astray for lack of the clean knowledge this book gives—knowledge which their parents should have given them in childhood.

Hoquian has held three medal contests, Everett two, and Shelton two. The classes for these contests were all trained by our state president, Miss Page and her sister, Miss Emma Page. No one can compute the good that these contests have done. Rough and thoughtless boys have been transformed, public interest awakened, not only in the W. C. T. U. but in its principles, members have been gained and lessons taught which will tell for time and eternity. In each of these places, the Page sisters filled pulpits, addressed other public gatherings, organized child culture classes and gave the work of the Lord a fresh impetus.

Shelton is much encouraged. It has a building all its own, an increased membership, a fair balance in the treasury, and a secretary who is worth much more than her weight in gold. She spoke before a recent Sunday-school convention on "The Ideal Primary Teacher," in a very helpful manner.

Everett gave a "soap-bubble party," on a Saturday to all the young folks who helped in the late medal contests. This was to keep in touch with the children. Gingerbread and popcorn (in paper napkins) were served, lots of bubbles were blown, after which the pipes were broken off at the bowl, and the stems, decorated with white ribbon, were taken home as souvenirs. This with careful explanation as to the why, made a good object lesson against tobacco, and we "pass it on."

Mrs. Mattie N. Graves, the earnest and tireless president of Lewis county, sends a good report. She has been traveling in the county in the interest of the work, has reorganized two unions, Pe Ell and Winlock, and revived the work generally, so that Lewis county has now four live unions—Centralia and Chehalis being the other two—and two L. T. L's, with a third in near prospect.

Centralia has more members than ever before, and the departments of mothers' meetings, Temple and franchise are well worked. Has had three medal contests, with four more coming on. G. H. Worthen, a temperance evangelist from Alabama, has been stirring the hearts of the people wonderfully. Many who are high in our ranks join in praise of this brother helper, who has done considerable work in this state. Centralia's L. T. L. is prosperous. Winlock as well as Pe Ell will have an L. T. L. to mother.

Chehalis has secured the enforcement of the curfew ordinance, has petitioned against gambling and minors visiting saloons. Is preparing to entertain the county convention.

Mrs. Graves, who is the state organizer, recently held five meetings in Castle Rock, Cowlitz county. Three members were added to the union. She has also assisted in evangelistic meetings, in which several were brought to the Lord.

King county has just held its annual convention, which was an inspiring one. The full report of it has not come in, but the crowning feature was a "silver gray" contest, in which gray-haired matrons won hearts and laurels, reciting "for God, and Home and Native Land."

LAVEINE R. SHERWOOD,
State Reporter, Everett.

Official.

Flower Mission.

DEAR COMRADES:—I had such a pleasant visit to our dear Mary McDowell's mission school recently that I thought I would not be selfish, but write and tell you all about it. Miss McDowell invited me to come and bring some flowers for the children; and to encourage those who find it difficult to get flowers, I will tell how I obtained them. In my brother's sanitarium here at beautiful Lake Forest, are patients, children and grown up people, who are very much interested in the flower mission work. They gathered many wild flowers, such as violets, anemonies hepaticas, buttercups and trilliums to send to the mission children. Then one of our neighors, a very generous man who owns a beautiful greenhouse, donated a large box of beautiful roses. By the time the flowers were arranged I wondered if I would not have to order a dray to convey them to the depot, but the children with one accord said they would carry them for me.

I reached the mission at 11 A. M., and found Miss McDowell as to the "manor born" presiding with all due dignity over one of the most helpful missions in the city of Chicago. We often hear of consecrated foreign missionaries, but we do not have to go any farther from home than this university settlement to find a band of consecrated young women, filled with the Christ spirit, ready to enter any open door in service for the Master. Miss Wilson, who has been connected with this mission for the past three years, kindly accompanied me to the kindergarten school, three blocks away, where we found fifty children with their teachers out on the walk singing a patriotic song and pointing to the national flag suspended from a window above. After the song was sung the children marched upstairs again and formed in a circle which I entered and gave each a bunch of wild flowers for the teacher to pin on their dresses. It would have done your hearts good to have seen the bright smiles that flitted over their dear faces upon receiving the flowers. To some of the children all the flowers were "dandelions," those being the only blossoms with which they were familiar. The little tots then sang a "thank you" song. I do not know who received the most pleasure from the visit, the children or myself. I then followed the children to the day nursery in the room below and found them seated at the lunch table. When they spied me their little hands touched the flowers and grateful smiles of appreciation passed over their countenances.

I would like to speak of the deaf and dumb children, also the club for women, but space is limited. I presented Miss McDowell with a bunch of carnations with the following text attached by means of our emblem, the white ribbon: "The Lord giveth the word; the women that publish the tidings are a great host." To the children I gave the text with the words that our dear Saviour spoke while here upon earth: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."

Ours is the only organization which thus uses the Scripture texts, and I have a large supply constantly on hand, consisting of fifteen classifications which have been carefully selected and adapted for the following persons and objects: The Aged, Children, Unconverted, Sick, Discouraged, Bereaved, Afflicted, Poor, Drunkards, Travelers, Faith, Charity, Promises, Assurances and Legislators. In ordering please state the class you desire.

Last year the cards proved to be in great demand at this particular season, and I trust that it will be so this year. If you are in need of plain-edge white ribbon for attaching texts to bouquets, I can furnish it at reasonable rates. Having received a number of orders for responsive readings, I have ordered several hundred extra copies printed. I would advise the use of these at jail and hospital services June 9. It gives the history of our mission from its birth up to the present time. You can obtain these readings directly from me at Lake Forest, Ill.

I trust that you are planning to decorate the graves of our departed comrades as well as those of the soldiers on decoration day.

Wishing you all a Godspeed in our coming 9th of June celebration, I will bid you adieu for a time.

Lovingly yours for service,
ALICE L. SUDDUTH,
Nat. Supt.
Lake Forest, Ill., May 20.

Fairs and Expositions.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS AND WORKERS: — Shall we make the Fourth of July, 1898, a day for the rallying of the temperance forces?

Arrange for temperance celebrations and picnics. Invite Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Baptist Unions, Good Templars, etc., etc., to coöperate.

Secure the best speakers, have good music, L. T. L. drills, medal contests, and invite students to write essays on hygiene, offering a prize for the best essay. Have flags in abundance. Make it a day long to be remembered. Have our motto, "For God, home and humanity," in evidence always.

State superintendents, and also state presidents who have not appointed superintendents of fair work, will you do your part? Give out the best thoughts, take in the best money by serving the best lunches, make it the very best Fourth of July celebration in history.

HANNAH T. GUILD,
Nat. Supt.
902 W. Broadway, Sedalia, Mo.

THE Texas state convention just closed was the best of their entire existence. All the officers were unanimously elected. The press gave long accounts of the sessions, the audiences were large and very enthusiastic, as could not help being the case under the leadership of the enthusiastic president.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Not the Empire state alone, but the states of Delaware and Alabama also should be held in most loving, prayerful thought by our white-ribbon constituency the country over. It is true that in the two last named states, the president has not been taken away by death, but in each she has for months been suffering from a very serious illness, which necessitates an almost complete laying down of the responsibility of the work. I earnestly hope you will not fail to remember in your prayers the two dear women who are the sufferers, and the brave hosts who are standing in their lot and place to bear the burden until their leaders shall be able to be at the front again.

The white-ribboners of New Orleans have taken up a new line of activity since the United States troops have been such close neighbors. One of the most active workers writes: "Every Tuesday our W. C. T. U. ladies go out to the soldiers' camp and ask the boys to give us their mending. We have been twice, and each time have had plenty of articles of all descriptions to mend. They seemed very grateful for the attention." I am very sure that with this practical work our sisters did not neglect the opportunity given them for temperance teaching.

Our National department of work among soldiers will have full scope for activity in these trying days, and we are very sure that it will not neglect the sad opportunity afforded. Mrs. Thacher is already planning wisely and energetically, as is proven by the following extract from a letter from the president of the District of Columbia, Mrs. Platt: "Our department of work among soldiers and sailors and mariners will have a large meeting next Monday, and those attending are requested to bring articles for the boxes for the soldiers. Miss Chase is pushing the work vigorously, and the women and other friends are responding nobly. Mrs. Thacher and Miss Chase are in constant correspondence, and we are looking for Mrs. Thacher here soon." I earnestly hope that as many local unions as possible will take up this work, for our boys at the front will be exposed to many temptations from the awful curse of drink, and we should be prepared to do all in our power to offset this evil.

I want to heartily indorse the appeal for a temperance Fourth of July which is sent out by the superintendent of fairs and expositions, and appears in another column of THE UNION SIGNAL. I urged last year that this day be reclaimed and held for temperance and righteousness. It is not too early to begin preparations. Indeed, I am not sure that we ought not to have begun long ago. Wherever possible, have temperance picnics, or a celebration of some kind, for the day has long been used by the forces of evil, and we should do something to offset what they will certainly be on the alert to do.

My notes of this week are necessarily brief, owing to press of other work. Next week I hope to give some suggestions with reference to various matters which have been placed in my hands, and which I have been considering for months.

K. L. STEVENSON.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE.

Will send free Book of Particulars how to cure "Drunkenness or the Liquor Habit," with or without the knowledge of the patient. Address Dr. J. W. Haines, No. 439 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to the state reporter.]

THE annual report of the secretary of Southern California shows an increase of 113 active members, with a few more unions to hear from.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS is engaged to attend the county conventions in Maine for Mrs. Stevens, which will occupy her for a month or two.

FOUR new unions have been recently organized in Memphis, Tenn. Two by Miss Belle Kearney and two by Mrs. Ada M. Unruh, increasing the membership by 125 new followers.

JUNE 16 will be observed in New York state as memorial day for Mrs. Burt, and June 30 there will be held at Prohibition Park a memorial service, which will fitly honor Mrs. Burt.

THE Rev. Orville J. Nave, post chaplain of the United States army at Fort McPherson, Atlanta, Ga., offers his services in distributing literature and comfort bags to the soldiers. Mrs. Thacher says white-ribboners can make note of this and send to him if they wish.

THE department of soldiers and sailors of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. is asking for literature, comfort bags and delicacies for the soldiers stationed at Chickamauga Park. Three hundred comfort bags have already been received and a like proportion of other things, and one shipment has been made. This work will be continued while the war lasts.

MRS. MABEL L. CONKLIN, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been appointed fraternal delegate from the National W. C. T. U. to the International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association to be held in Basle, Switzerland. Mrs. Conklin sails June 16, and will return in time for a three days' purity institute at the Silver Lake, N. Y., Chautauqua, the last of July.

THE first week in May a state mothers' convention was held in Detroit, Mich., which was well attended. In reporting the convention the Detroit News says: "The feature of the afternoon was a paper by Dr. Mary Wood-Allen on 'The Importance of Mothers' Clubs to the Health and Morals of the Nation,' read for her by her daughter, Miss Wood-Allen, of Ann Arbor."

THURSDAY, June 30, will be Greater New York W. C. T. U. day at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, and a cordial invitation is extended to workers and friends all over the state to be present. The program will begin at 10 A. M., prominent speakers being present. At 3:30 a memorial service will be held for our state president. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, acting president of National W. C. T. U., has been invited to be present and is expected. Mrs. Emma Bourne, president of New Jersey, Miss Belle Kearney and other workers will take part. Lieutenant Peary will give an illustrated lecture on his Arctic expeditions in the evening. He starts for the North Pole the following day. July 1 to 4 will be the International Temperance Congress with reception to John G. Woolley and his wife, to be followed by Non-Alcoholic Medical Congress, July 5 to 7. Committee: Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Mrs. Sarah R. Morris, Miss Helen L. Rollins, Mrs. E. F. Pettingill, Mrs. C. H. Harris, Mrs. E. F. Lord.

Temple Receipts.

Montana—Bozeman: Mrs. Rich, $5; W. C. T. U., $69; Bowler: Mrs. Mary Bent, $4; Castle: W. C. T. U., $3.

New York—Stafford; Mrs. Charlotte Call, $5; Nashville: Ethel Turnbull, 75 cts.; Johnson's Creek: Mary E. F. Robson, $5; Middleport: Chancellor Allen, $2; New York: H. Teed, $5; Eldred: Miss R. C. Eldred, $5; Dickinson Center: Mrs. A. P. Gleason, $1; Poughkeepsie: Miss M. E. Wing, $3; Ransomville: Two friends, $8; Saratoga: Delia C. Davis and sister, $10; Meredith: Miss Susan E. Smith, $1.25; Frankfort: Miss Mary A. Gates, $5; Batavia: Hannah H. Leggett, 25 cts.; Westhampton: J. B. Bishop, $5; Cohoes: Mrs. Wm. Burton, $5; Buffalo: Mrs. E. P. Newcomb, $5; Mahone: Mrs. S. B. Webster, $5; Castile: Ladies at Kellogg Cottage, $15; Mrs. Harriet Castle Coleman and Caroline D. Castle, $10; Miss Frances E. Willard, $5; Newark Valley: Anna H. Reeves, 50 cents; Brooklyn: Sarah H. DeHanne, $5; Lowville: An aged friend, $100; Batavia: Miss Frances P. Rice, $5; Silver Creek: Mrs. E. J. Burgess, $5; New York city; Miss Mary Weston, $2; Rochester: Mrs. C. S. Cross, 80 cts.; Otego: Mrs. Berosus Cook, $5; Panama: Mrs. Laura R. Davis, $5; Oneida: A visitor to the Temple, 50 cts.; Poughkeepsie: From estate of Peter S. Bedell, $23; Collins Centre: Mrs. Aurilla Bartlett, 50 cts.; East Bloomfield: Mrs. Eliza S. Goodwin, $5; Manchester: Mrs. E. L. Howland, $50, and $5; North Nassau: Hattie B. Robinson, $3. The following W. C. T. U's, Schoharie county, $10, 25 cts., $2 and $1; Clyde, $6; Greece, $21.60; Dobbs Ferry, $39.01; Seneca county, Junius W. C. T. U., $6.83; Canton, $43.80; Wyoming county, $10, $5; New York city, Lathrap union, $15 and $10; Lyons Falls, $5 and $1; South New York, $5 and $1.10, Collinsville, $5; Waterloo, $2; Potsdam, $30; St. Lawrence county, $29.40; Canandaigua, $5; Manchester, $5; Albany, $1; Broad Albin, $15; Perth, $20; Glouversville, $6; Ogdensburg, $40; Cuba, $2.09; North Cohocton and Atlanta, 50 cts.; Angelica, $1; Medina, $1; Cortland, $5; Pleasant Valley, $3; Theresa, $1; Yonkers, $4; North Granville, $1; Malone, $5; Newburgh, $5; Wyandotte, $2.50; Livingston, $5; Henderson, $8; Gouverneur, $18.40; Morrisville, Junior, Christian End. of South Congregational church, $2; Yonkers, L. T. L., $1; Mount Vernon, $16.35.

New Mexico—Rowe: No name, $5; Catskill: W. C. T. U., $10.

Oklahoma—Pawnee: A Friend, $5.

Oregon—Portland: Mrs. M. Marshall, $5.

Rhode Island—Bristol: Mrs. Isabel Coggeshall, $1.75; Westerly: Mrs. O. U. Whitford, $5; Wickford: Mary and Ruth Hammond, $12; R. H. Hammond, $6; Auburn: John A. Scott, $1.

Tennessee—Memphis: Miss Mary Drainblood, $5; Maryville: W. C. T. U., $100.

Texas—Dublin: M. R. Caswell, $3.65; Beaumont: Mrs. J. A. S. Curtis, treasurer, $2 and $10.40; McKinney: Mrs. Harriet Wilson, $4; Mexia: Mrs. R. S. Sheeks, $5, and the following W. C. T. U's: Texarkana, $25; Norma Mow, $1.40; Aransas Pass, $5; Odessa, $5; Austin, 50 cents, Ennis, $12.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
Financial Secretary.

To Sept. 1, 1897.

This Is the Kind.

Illustration is 3-5ths Size Original Package.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Treas. says: "Rumford Baking Powder is used in my own house, and I know that the baking quality is fully equal to other high-grade powders which cost much more. The manufacturers, guarantee its purity and healthfulness, and that it will retain its strength unimpaired in any climate. I can therefore recommend it as a superior powder."

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

LAKE BREEZES

bring relief from the sweltering heat of the town or city. They raise your spirits and restore your energy. The greatest comfort and pleasure in lake travel is on one of the

LAKE MICHIGAN AND LAKE SUPERIOR TRANSPORTATION CO'S

ELEGANT STEAMSHIPS.

Sailings between Chicago and Mackinac Island four times every week, at extremely low rates.

The new steel steamship "Manitou" is a magnificent vessel, elegantly equipped with every comfort and convenience. Tri-weekly 'twixt Chicago, Charlevoix, Harbor Springs, Petoskey, Bay View, Mackinac Island, etc.

Write for interesting reading matter, sent free, or ask your nearest agent. Address Jos. Berolzheim, G. P. A.

LAKE MICH. AND LAKE SUPERIOR TRANS. CO.
Rush and N. Water St., Chicago.

A BEAUTIFUL MEMORIAL PIN

The W. C. T. U. of St. Louis offer you an entirely new design in a

MEMORIAL PIN OF MISS WILLARD

It is a perfect likeness of our beloved leader. A few months before her death Miss Willard gave her permission to us to use her picture on a pin and devote the proceeds to the benefit of the St. Louis W. C. T. U. This permission was granted especially on account of the hard trials and heavy expenses of the National Convention in St. Louis in 1896, which left us one thousand dollars in debt. A portion of the proceeds from the sale of these pins will be given to the Temperance Temple, the remainder to be used for general temperance work. State, County and Local Unions can make money by ordering these Pins in quantities.

Large, single pin - - - - -	$ .25
" per doz. - - - - -	2.00
" per 100 - - - - - -	10.00
Small, single pin - - - - -	.10
" per doz. - - - - -	1.00
" per 100 - - - - -	5.00

Address all orders to
MRS. ABBIE FRANKEL
4119 WESTMINSTER PL. ST. LOUIS, MO

Drinking Fountains

FOR

MAN and BEAST

Manufactured by

The J. L. Mott Iron Works

84-90 Beekman St., NEW YORK.

311-313 Wabash Av., CHICAGO

Catalogues mailed on request, and special prices given to all Charitable and Temperance Societies.

Copyright, 1896, by The J. L. Mott Iron Works.

More than ordinary care is exercised in accepting advertisements for The Union Signal.

Our Library Table.

PERILS AND POSSIBILITIES: A voice of warning and an appeal to the citizen and to the nation. By G. K. Owen. Price $1. Published by the Pacific Press, Oakland, Cal.

THE CHRISTIAN GENTLEMAN: A Series of addresses to Young Men, by Louis Albert Banks, D. D. Cloth, 12mo. Price, 75 cents. New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls Company.

COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTMENT, Ephesians to Philemon. By W. B. Godbey, author of "Victory," "Spiritual Gifts and Graces," etc. 350 pages, $1. Published by M. W. Knapp, Revivalist Office, Cincinnati, O.

LIGHTNING BOLTS FROM PENTECOSTAL SKIES: or Devices of the Devil Unmasked. By Martin Wells Knapp, author of "Christ Crowned Within," "Out of Egypt into Canaan," etc., and editor of The Revivalist, Revivalist Office, Cincinnati, O. $1.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE BIBLE, by Walter F. Adeney, M. A., professor of New Testament exegesis, history and criticism, New College, London. Author of "How to Read the Bible," etc. Price 50 cents. Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York city.

PAUL AND HIS FRIENDS: A Series of Revival Sermons, by Louis Albert Banks, D. D., pastor First M. E. church, Cleveland, O. Cloth, 12mo, 347 pp. Gilt top, cover design by George Wharton Edwards. Price $1.50. New York and London. Funk & Wagnalls Company.

HEROIC PERSONALITIES, by Louis Albert Banks, D. D. An interesting collection of personal sketches of the men and women who have been actively identified with the reforms of the present century; with illustrations. Price $1. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Students of Browning will find a feast of good things as well as an invaluable aid to a deeper understanding of the poet's masterpieces in the volume entitled, THE BEST OF BROWNING, by Rev. James Mudge, D. D. The book is cheap at the price named, $1.50. Eaton & Mains, 150 Fifth Ave., New York city.

Besides the article on the causes of the failure of the Spanish Armada, by Captain Mahan, the June CENTURY contains "Ten Months with the Cuban Insurgents," the experiences of a major in the Army under Garcia, and an article on "The Confederate Torpedo Service" by the electrician of the torpedo division in the confederate navy, who laid the mine which blew up the first gunboat ever destroyed by this means.

VICTOR SERENUS: A Story of the Pauline Era, by Henry Wood, author of "Studies in the Thought World," "The Political Economy of Natural Law," etc.

The scene is located in that very dramatic period of the world's history, the Pauline era, and through graphic character delineation deals with the thought, customs, and religious systems of that time. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50. A. C McClurg. & Co., Chicago.

For Nervous Exhaustion

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. C. ALTMAN, Nashville, Tenn., says: "I find it a most valuable agent in atonic dyspepsia and nervous exhaustion occurring in active brain workers."

Send in Your Answers.

DEAR UNIONS:—Send in your answers. Take a vote at the very next meeting. Answer the questions as asked, and by vote of those who subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. Do not send personal opinions. We are not asking for those just now. Read the rules and be governed strictly by them. Let us hear from you at once.

QUESTIONS FOR THE LOCAL UNIONS.

Will the presidents of the unions please note the rules governing the voting, and observe them to secure uniformity? Roll in the answers.

1. What per cent of the members of your union subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL?

2. What part of the paper is most interesting?

3. What part of the paper is most helpful and why?

4. What subject would you like to have exploited more largely in our columns than has been done heretofore?

5. What proportion of the subscribers would approve of returning to the former price, $1.50 per year, to secure the use of a better grade of paper, and other improvements?

RULES GOVERNING THE VOTE ON THE QUESTIONS.

(a) Only members subscribing for THE UNION SIGNAL should vote, but this may include those taking a paper together.

(b) Only such unions are asked to reply as can secure a majority vote of the subscribers on one or more of the questions.

(c) Questions upon which such majority vote can not be obtained are not to be mentioned in the reply to THE UNION SIGNAL.

(d) Each answer should be numbered the same as the question to which it refers is numbered.

Question 5 is not for publication, but for our own information.

Announce this plan at your first regular meeting after this is received, and if possible take the votes at the following meeting, or at as early a date as a good representation of the members can be secured.

If majority votes cannot be secured at one meeting try it at subsequent meetings.

The limit of time for receiving replies will be announced later.

Report as soon as possible after the union has voted. Sign the name of the union and the state. Write only on one side of the paper and address THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions secured by Miss Willard or offered by those who are especially interested in the effort being put forward by our National president to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow's address is Portland, Me. She is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, and the one who was his home-maker in all his later years, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it is by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE. "Our Calling," by Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, secretary of general rescue work for the National purity department. God never gave a command, she says, that He did not provide both the worker and the ammunition. He is never at a loss for workers. When He called Bezaleel to help Moses He "called him by name" and "filled him with His spirit." We have not as yet understood the privileges of our calling. A spirit-filled man or woman—do we grasp its significance? Christ walks in us! As a business man, strong in proportion to his financial backing, so the Christian worker may be as strong as his spiritual backing. Mrs. Lake points out the forms of service to which we are called, emphasizing the fact that we are called to suffer and to wait as well as to do.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JUNE. "Domestic Science," by Mrs. Marion A. McBride, superintendent of the branch of health and heredity department. The central thoughts given are: "Give us this day our daily bread," and "I am the Bread of Life." Domestic science, it is explained, pertains to the food we eat and the houses we live in, and we are told how to properly pursue this study as a part of W. C. T. U. work. The writer calls attention to the importance of the food question to our "boys" in the army and navy. She says: "To the American woman is given the care of a nation that its defenders shall be strong and well physically." Appended to the Reading are the "ten commandments" concerning health and hygiene, formulated by Miss Willard—commandments of which every white-ribboner should preserve a copy.

Of Importance to the Y's.

Mrs. Barnes has concluded to offer the remainder of the Y almanac for the surprisingly low sum of fifteen cents each. The pictures in these exquisite books are worth far more than that amount. Order early, for at the reduced price the balance will be promptly disposed of. Send fifteen cents to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Avenue, New York city.

Frances E. Willard's last address to the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention, held at Toronto, Canada. Price, 6d., by post 7d. May be had from Miss Agnes Slack, Hon. Secretary World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Ripley, Derby. Send 14 cts. United States postage stamps.

The Memorial Number.

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

Convention Calendar.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, Pasadena, May 31 and June 1, 2 and 3.

NORTH CAROLINA—North Wilkesboro, June 11–14.

WEST WASHINGTON—Centralia, June 16–24.

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing.

PIMPLES

"My wife had pimples on her face, but she has been taking CASCARETS and they have all disappeared. I had been troubled with constipation for some time, but after taking the first Cascaret I have had no trouble with this ailment. We cannot speak too highly of Cascarets." FRED WARTMAN, 5708 Germantown Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

CANDY CATHARTIC Cascarets TRADE MARK REGISTERED REGULATE THE LIVER

Pleasant, Palatable, Potent, Taste Good. Do Good, Never Sicken, Weaken, or Gripe, 10c, 25c, 50c.

... CURE CONSTIPATION. ...

Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago, Montreal, New York. 314

NO-TO-BAC Sold and guaranteed by all druggists to CURE Tobacco Habit.

MEMORIAL NUMBER

...OF...

The Union Signal.

PRICES.

Single Copy,	$ .10
100 Copies,	7.50
50 "	4.00
25 "	2.25

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, The Temple, CHICAGO.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

on the streets of our cities and towns. By so doing you furnish water not only to man but to horse and dog as well.

Illustrated Cat'log's furnished gratis upon application, and SPECIAL PRICES given to all branches of temperance work. J. W. FISKE, Mf'r. 39-41 Park Pl., N. Y

$10 A DAY TO AGENTS

MURAT HALSTEAD'S GREAT WAR BOOK. "Our Country in War." All about armies, navies, coast defences, Maine Disaster, Cuba, Our War with Spain and relations with Foreign Nations. Nearly 600 pages, written since the Maine Disaster. Magnificent colored illustrations. Agents making $10 to $30 per day. No experience necessary. Most liberal terms guaranteed. 20 days' credit, price low, freight paid. Handsome outfit free. Send 9 two cent stamps to pay postage. EDUCATIONAL UNION, 324 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

1898 High Grade BICYCLES

for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line. All brand new models. $75 'Oakwood' for $32.50 $60 'Arlington' " $24.50

No Money in Advance. Others at $15, $17 and $20 WRITE TODAY for SPECIAL OFFER. Juveniles $7.00 to $12.50

Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents & dealers profits Large Illus. Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. VanBuren Street, B. 50, Chicago, Ills.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

DIABETES FLOUR

Also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit, Cake and Pastry Flour. Unrivaled in America or Europe.

Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free. Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

AGENTS WANTED Men, Women, Boys or Girls, in every town and city for the sale of KIDD'S NON-ALCOHOLIC FLAVORING POWDERS, with whom liberal arrangements will be made. Address for particulars, KIDD CHEMICAL CO., 2214 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SLEEP-LESS nights no more. Send 10c. for sample. Guaranteed harmless. ZAPOTA REMEDY CO., Box 263, Milwaukee, Wis.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITERS WANTED to do copying at home. Law College, Lima, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

WAR WITH SPAIN!

A set of six magnificent souvenir battleship spoons that will live in history and be an heirloom to your grandchildren. They are practical, durable souvenirs that will hand down the glorious deeds of our heroes on the sea. They will last for all time. Entire set of six spoons put up in a lined box and mailed prepaid.

SIX BEAUTIFUL WARSHIPS.

Set No. 8.
Texas, Oregon, Iowa, Maine, Mass., Indiana.

Only 99cts.

Set No. 9.
New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Minneapolis, Baltimore, Brooklyn.

Only 99cts.

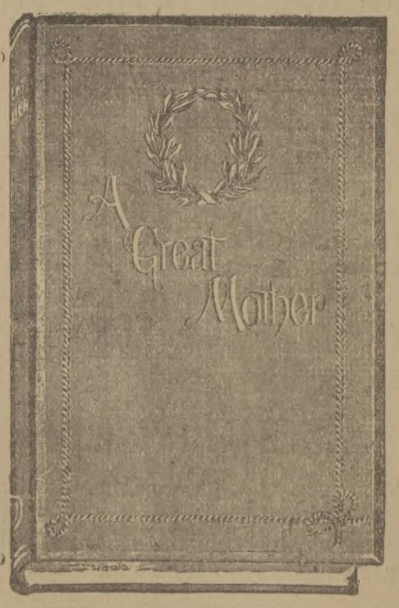
ONLY 99c FOR ALL SIX.

CUT SHOWS EXACT SIZE OF SPOONS.

"REMEMBER THE MAINE."

So certain are we that these wonderfully beautiful keepsakes of the Cuban war of freedom will surprise and delight you with their artistic elegance richness and positive value that we mail either set entirely on approval, subject to full examination and if they are not just as we represent them we will promptly refund your money.

They are After-Dinner Coffee size, finely coin silver plated with the entire bowl outside and inside plated with pure gold, each bowl containing a different raised or embossed battleship—perfectly engraved, exactly like cut, and an exact reproduction of the ship itself. These fascinating souvenirs could not be made more beautiful at any price. It is absolutely impossible for us to misrepresent them. They are equal in appearance to the very finest silverware made and will last a lifetime and delight the generations a hundred years hence. Either set, No. 8 or No. 9, as above, sent prepaid by mail on receipt of only 99 cents. These spoons are substantial, valuable souvenirs, and can be used every day on the table. (They are NOT CHEAP, TRASHY STUFF and we will refund your money if they are not strictly as represented. We refer to any commercial agency or express company or the proprietors of any Chicago newspaper. Leonard Mfg. Co., Dept. C-U 152 and 153 Michigan Ave., Chicago.



Signal Notes.

IN Norway a law has recently been passed which makes girls ineligible for matrimony until they obtain certificates of proficiency in knitting, baking and spinning.

IN Waldeck, a little German principality, a decree has been proclaimed that a license to marry will not be granted to any individual who has been in the habit of getting drunk; and if one who has been a drunkard applies for such a license, he must produce sufficient proof of reformation to warrant his receiving it.

EMORY MCCLINTOCK, a life insurance actuary, has made a very careful examination of the records of all policy-holders of his company, classifying them as abstainers and non-abstainers. The main results of his examination are summed up by him as follows: "Upon those who on entering stated that they abstained from alcoholic beverages the maximum expected loss was $5,455,669 and the actual loss was $4,251,050. Upon those who stated otherwise the maximum expected loss was $9,829,462, and the actual loss was $9,469,407. These abstainers show, therefore, a death loss of 78 per cent of the maximum, and the non-abstainers 96 per cent.

"The quickening mother-heart of the world needs demonstration, not theories of child-culture."

Such demonstration is given in the pages of

A GREAT MOTHER

The biography of Madam WILLARD written by her daughter, Miss Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva B. Norton

No work of such value to mothers has appeared for years. It is both an incentive towards and an example of successful motherhood. White-ribbon mothers, especially, need to learn its open secret.

Handsomely Bound. Elegantly Illustrated.

PRICE $1.50.

W. T. P. A. The Temple... CHICAGO

A NEW EDITION OF

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life

BY HANNAH WHITALL SMITH

Bound in cloth, artistically decorated in two colors.

PRICE, - - 30 CENTS.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, CHICAGO.....

Kernels.

MAN is in a constant state of subjection. In the summer the ice man owns him; in the winter the coal dealer.

"I FEEL so miserable!" "What's the matter?" "Mrs. Robinson told me a secret to-day, and I've forgotten what it was!"

"Do you speak German?" "Well, yes; but not to natives of the fatherland, as they evidently did not learn the same language as I did at college."

HOMESEEKERS' EXCURSIONS.

On the first and third Tuesdays in May and June, 1898, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway will sell round-trip excursion tickets (good for 21 days) to a great many points in South and North Dakota and other western and southwestern states, at practically one fare for the round trip. Take a trip west and see what an amount of good land can be purchased for very little money. Further information as to rates, routes, prices of farm lands, etc., may be obtained on application to any coupon ticket agent or by addressing F. A. Miller, Assistant General Passenger Agent, 95 Adams street, Chicago, Ill.

TEACHER—"Willie, if your father gave you ten cents, and then took away four and gave them to your brother, what would that make?" Willie—"Trouble."

CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Meeting will be held in Cleveland, O., June 7 to 9 inclusive, account of which Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets at $11.35 for the round trip on certificate plan. Dates of sale, June 3, 4, 5 and 6 inclusive. Tickets good returning until and including June 13. For further particulars address J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

PALMER—"Did you say you couldn't arrest the flight of time?" Johnson—"No one can." Balmer—"Well, this morning, when I was coming down town, I stopped a minute."

EXCURSION TO CLEVELAND.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets from Chicago to Cleveland and return at a fare and one-third for the round trip on certificate plan, good going June 3, 4, 5 and 6, and good returning until June 13, inclusive, on occasion of the annual meeting of the Congregational Home Missionary Society in that city. This rate will be $11.35 for the round trip, which is somewhat lower than via other lines. Those desiring space in sleeping cars should make early application in order to secure the best accommodations.

Any further information cheerfully given by addressing J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

LANDLADY—"The price of this room is thirty marks. Will that suit you?" Student—"Perfectly." Landlady—"Then you can't have it. A man who meekly accepts such an exorbitant price obviously does not intend to pay his bill."

FIRST EXCURSION OF THE SEASON TO CLEVELAND

Via Nickel Plate Road, June 3 to 6 inclusive. $11.35 for the round trip on certificate plan. Tickets good returning until June 13 inclusive. Three through trains daily from Van Buren Street Passenger Station, Chicago. For further information address J. Y. CALAHAN, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Telephone Main 3389.

FLICK: "Call him a musician! Why, he doesn't know the difference between a nocturne and a symphony." Flack: "You don't mean it!" And they hurry to get away from one another. Each is terribly afraid that the other will ask: "By the way, what is the difference?"

The Great Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., June 1 to October 31, will be the event of the season. The Chicago & Northwestern is the direct route with three daily express trains from Chicago, superbly equipped. City Ticket Office 212 Clark St.

HE passed his plate. "Oh, Teddy?" said I,
"How many times have you had 'more pie'?"
He thought an instant, then gravely spoke:
"I'm sure I can't tell. My pieclometer's broke."

JUST OUT—1898 EDITION

Of the Lake Shore's Summer Tourist Book. More interesting and attractive than ever. If you contemplate an Eastern trip it will be of especial interest. Sent free on application to C. K. Wilber, A. G. P. A., Chicago, or A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WHITE RIBBON

WORLD'S

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXIV.—No. 23. Issued Weekly. CHICAGO, June 9, 1898. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Contents of This Number.

NOTES AND COMMENTS 1
CURRENT EVENTS:
Spanish Fleet Blockaded—Evangelistic Work in the Army—Temperance—About Women—At Home 2
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, The Hands of the World. By Julia H. Thayer . 3
The Extravagance of Mr. Israel Plummer. By Harriet Francene Crocker 3
Lady Henry Somerset's Annual Address Before the National British Women's Temperance Association . . . 4
Our Own Reconcentrados. By Clara Marshall 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Temperance Work of a Missionary 5
Let Our Army be Protected from Strong Drink 5
Soldiers at Chickamauga Park 6
LOCAL UNION: 6
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Four Bedtimes 7
Listening for Conscience 7
From the Boys and Girls 7
Our Cozy Corner 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Patriotism and the Liquor Traffic 8
No Alcohol for Soudan Soldiers 8
"A Saloon Church" 8
Miss Willard In Her Church Home 9
Dr. Gabriel on the Use of Wine 9
Moslem Arrogance 9
Lady Henry Somerset's Annual Address 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH:
The British Y's at Reigate—The Young People on the Move—A Message from the Department of Health and Heredity 10
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Canada 11
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Southern California—Louisiana—Iowa—New Hampshire 11-13
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
W. C. T. U. NEWS 13
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL 14
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS 14
WHERE OUR SPEAKERS ARE 14

RED-LETTER DAY.

INDEPENDENCE DAY—JULY 4.

The Birthday of Mary H. Hunt.

Notes and Comments.

A MESSAGE received on Saturday from Miss Elizabeth Gordon states that a cable from Miss Anna Gordon announces that she sails for America June 7. We shall be glad to welcome her back to "native land."

AN article upon Mr. Gladstone from the pen of Lady Henry Somerset will have deep and peculiar interest for American white-ribboners at this time. Such an article we can promise to UNION SIGNAL readers for our issue of June 23. In our next issue, June 16, we publish Lady Henry's memorial address on Miss Willard, delivered at Westminster Chapel, London, May 10.

THE editors are quite as unhappy over the poor picture of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, which appeared in our last issue as any of her other friends can be. It is one more proof that it is useless to send us anything in the line of cuts except zinc etchings or wood cuts. We are sure it will be much more satisfactory to the friends to have no picture at all than to see an indistinguishable blotch purporting to be one whom they love. In this case we thought we had good authority for believing the picture would "come out all right," but having discovered the fallibility of those who "know," we promise not to experiment further with half-tones, preferring the certainty of nothing to the uncertainty of something.

REFERRING to "temperance waves" which seem to occur about every sixteen years, the current number of the Journal of Inebriety, says that another great wave is in sight and coming in with more rapidity and intensity than any former movements. "This is the temperance reform of educational institutions." Even among medical men, it is pointed out, "the use of alcohol as a remedy is rapidly declining, and the danger of alcohol as a medicine is asserted and defended by facts and authorities which are rapidly increasing. Each temperance wave, whether social, religious, scientific or political, brings the subject into greater prominence, throws clearer light on the problems, serves to eliminate the errors and is evolutionary in the highest meaning of that term." This valuable and encouraging testimony is from the standpoint not of hot-headed "fanaticism," but of cool, calculating science.

THE largest state Prohibition convention ever held in Illinois, and it is said the largest state Prohibition convention ever held in the country, assembled last week at Peoria. Between twelve and thirteen hundred delegates were present. The meetings were held in a large tabernacle, which seats between four and five thousand people, and which was crowded at nearly all the meetings. John G. Woolley made the address on Wednesday night, June 1, and outdid even his matchless self in logic and eloquence. White-ribboners were present in goodly numbers, and their hearts were made to rejoice at the strong woman suffrage plank which holds second place of honor in the terse but comprehensive platform. Oliver W. Stewart and Alonzo E. Wilson were made chairman and secretary of the state central committee for the coming year and everything points to a most energetic, enthusiastic and successful campaign.

WE would remind our readers once again of the memorial to Miss Willard urged by the National officers, in which every individual white-ribboner is to have a part, viz., the doubling of the W. C. T. U. membership by the next National Convention. Now that the minds and hearts of the people have, by reason of Miss Willard's death, been drawn with keener interest and sympathy toward the work to which her life was consecrated, it should be an easy matter for each woman to secure her quota of one. As a tribute to the beloved leader, whose vacant chair in our assemblies brings such a realization of our loss, this numeric strengthening of our organization will speak louder than words, and prove our devotion to the cause more effectively than tears. In what better way can W. C. T. U. women—from the National officers to the humblest member of the rank and file—manifest their love for their departed leader than by helping to carry out the plan she herself suggested for extending the borders of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union!

THE war is doing not a little to bolster up the arguments of the anti-cigaret crusaders. The cigaret habit is responsible for a large proportion of "rejections" in the army and navy. Many a would-be soldier boy is sent home as unfit for regular service because of his use of those poisonous little compounds, appropriately called by the doctors "coffin tacks." We do not like to mention the bicycle alongside of the deadly cigaret, but while recognizing the wheel as a friend and emancipator of man and of woman, it cannot be denied that there is an abuse as well as a right use of it. And when a disappointed volunteer comes marching home in these days to take his place among the physically defective, the question among his friends and acquaintances usually is, "Which is it, cigaret heart or bicycle chest?" In this connection another question naturally suggests itself to the "female mind"—a question which, of course, is too "emotional" and unreasonable to merit serious consideration—these men who are physically unable to go to the front to defend their country in time of need, ought they to be allowed to vote?

THE people of this country are, in these eventful summer days, presenting a new and unique object lesson for the wonder and admiration of the world. A few weeks ago there sprang from farm and factory, from business mart and social club, 125,000 American citizens in quick response to the Nation's call to arms. To-day, in the metropolis of the western plains the great Trans-Mississippi Exposition is eloquently proclaiming peace and good-will. Last Wednesday, while United States ships were bombarding foreign ports, and for the first time in the history of this nation speeding over the ocean with hostile intent, while soldiers were being transported to eastern and western coasts on missions offensive and defensive, civilians at Omaha were listening to words of congratulation from the President to the citizens of the West for the splendid victories of peace which have made the once "Great American Desert" to blossom as the rose. "What a people!" exclaimed one of the French Commissioners, "you celebrate peace in one part of the country, and fight battles in another!" One feature of the Exposition forcibly emphasizes this strange, yet not inappropriate, commingling of peace and war. The vacant tract of land upon which the regulars and state troops were to have encamped during the fair will, in its silence and desertion, speak with wondrous power and pathos to the thousands who will take in, with more or less understanding of their deeper meaning, the lessons of the great Exposition.

Current Events.

Spanish Fleet Blockaded.

Cevera's Ships Trapped in the Harbor of Santiago de Cuba.

THE report that the Spanish Armanda was bottled up in Santiago harbor, has proved correct. On May 31 Commodore Schley engaged in a skirmish with the enemy in order to develop the strength of the fortifications. Later news is that the collier Merrimac was sent into the mined channel, with a volunteer crew, and was sunk by a torpedo, thus effectually blocking the passage to the sea. Eight prisoners were captured by the Spanish; number of victims unknown.

Four thousand troops are now on the sea en route to Santiago, and thousands more will be hurried after them. A combined land and naval attack is contemplated, both at Santiago and Puerto Rico, and if successful will, practically, end the war.

NOTES.

GOVERNOR PINGREE, of Michigan, who is a wealthy shoe manufacturer, has announced his intention of seeing that all the Michigan troops are properly shod at his expense.

THE prize money which will go to the blue jackets of Rear Admiral Dewey's squadron as a result of the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the Bay of Manila is estimated at $800 in gold for each man.

SENOR CASTELAR, the noted Spanish republican, is to be prosecuted for publishing an article attacking the Queen Regent, calling her a foreigner, and comparing her conduct to that of Marie Antoinette during the French revolution.

MRS. L. Z. LEITER, of Washington, has purchased the Chickamauga Park Hotel, will fit it up with all the appliances of a permanent hospital that will accommodate over one hundred men, and will present it, complete, to the government.

MRS. JULIA DENT GRANT has been chosen president of the Women's National War Relief Association. The Association has received a check for $500 from the Colonial Dames of New York, to be used in the purchase of dainties and other food for the sick and wounded that shall be on the hospital ship Relief.

THE following significant statement is from The San Diegan Sun, of California:

Battery D is meeting with very poor success in enlisting men. So far, sixty-one applications have been received, but only six applicants passed the physical examination, the principal cause of failure being heart trouble, caused by the cigaret habit. For this reason the officers believe they will make better progress in the country districts where the young men are not addicted to the habit.

ON June 2 a bill was introduced in the Senate authorizing the secretary of war to appoint two matrons to each regiment of volunteers to serve during the war with Spain. Their duty is prescribed as follows: To mend, darn, wash the clothing and see to the sanitary condition of the men of their respective commands. The bill provides that the matrons must be between the age of thirty-five and fifty-five and of good, moral character.

Evangelistic Work in the Army.

ENCOURAGING reports come to us of the hearty response of officers and men to the work of the Army Christian Commission of the Young Men's Christian Associations, in behalf of our soldiers. With the call of the President for 75,000 additional men, making 280,000 who will soon be in the field, the magnitude of this work is greatly increased. At Chickamauga the camp covers a space of seven miles in length and the plan is to locate a tent with each brigade of three regiments.

Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, a member of the Y. M. C. A. Army Christian Commission, has consented to take charge of the evangelistic work in all United States camps. General Howard, another member of the Y. M. C. A. Army Commission, has been holding evangelistic services at Tampa and Mobile and is now at Chickamauga. Major D. W. Whittle, the evangelist, also a member of the Commission, who was on General Howard's staff during the war, is with him. Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., of Brooklyn, has been spending three weeks in this work at Tampa, and the soldiers flock in large numbers to hear him. Mr. Moody expects to send other good men as this movement calls for them, and personally to engage in it as his other appointments permit. The army chaplains will have the use of the tents at all times and the secretaries in charge coöperate with them in their work.

The Y. M. C. A. Army Commission has consented to become the distributing center for religious and other literature for the soldiers, and it is being forwarded to their tents by other societies. All the state committees of the Young Men's Christian Associations are coöperating with the international committee in this work for soldiers.

TAMPA.—Four large, well located rooms have been secured in the town as headquarters for the work there. These rooms are thronged with soldiers day and evening. In the infantry camp a temporary canvas-covered tabernacle has been built, seating over 1,200. A portion of this is partitioned off for the reading-room, correspondence room, etc. The evangelistic services have an attendance of from 500 to 3,000 soldiers. In the calvary camp a large tent has been erected with comfortable seats. At the first meeting over 1,500 attended. The soldiers are very eager for literature and especially for Testaments. At one meeting 1,500 were given to those who applied for them. Many conversions are reported.

CHICAMAUGA.—At Camp Thomas there are nearly 40,000 soldiers, and the number will likely be largely increased. A large tent will be placed with each brigade of three regiments with a secretary in charge.

WASHINGTON.—At Camp Alger the tents were located last week as rapidly as the brigades were formed. It will probably be a large camp.

ALABAMA.—In the National Camp at Mobile the work has been very successful. The attendance on the religious meetings is large, and the soldiers seem much interested. The tents are crowded and men stand in line waiting their chance to get to the correspondence tables.

NEW YORK.—At Camp Black five tents have been erected, and a very large one at Camp Townsend, and three tents have been sent south with New York troops. Nearly 4,000 men have made daily use of these tents. At Peekskill from 300 to 350 have attended the daily services, with many requests for prayers at each meeting.

NEW JERSEY.—Three large tents provided with floors have been opened in the camp at Sea Girt and made very comfortable. The work is in good hands and has been successfully prosecuted.

PENNSYLVANIA. — More than 2,000 letters have been written daily. The games are used to their fullest capacity. Gospel meetings are held each evening, with an average attendance of 500 men, and more than 200 have accepted Christ. Meetings are also held in company mess tents, with the consent of the officers.

CONNECTICUT.—The tent at Camp Haven is greatly appreciated by the men. In one week over 4,000 letters were mailed at the tent, 3,000 being written on association paper; 250 good books were put in circulation.

MAINE.—Two tents have been maintained at Camp Powers, one with piano and games, for recreation and meetings, the other as a reading and correspondence room. Both tents have been overcrowded. The success of the work has been very marked, and has called forth the thanks of officers and men.

VIRGINIA.—At Camp Lee headquarters have been established. Reading matter, correspondence tables and amusements are afforded the soldiers. Successful evangelistic services are being conducted every night, with good results. The Richmond association has thrown open its large building, and within a few days 700 soldiers availed themselves of its privileges.

MARYLAND.—Five hundred letters are written daily, and the meetings are thronged. The tent is too small to accommodate those who flock to it.

ILLINOIS.—The work at Camp Tanner has been very successful, and the meetings were largely attended. Two hundred men requested prayer at them.

NEBRASKA.—The Nebraska troops before leaving the state were furnished with knapsack Bibles and other useful articles.

WISCONSIN.—At the state camp headquarters have been opened, and pleasant facilities have been provided for the use of the soldiers, good reading matter, correspondence tables, etc. The state committee will follow the soldiers into the field.

Temperance.

GOVERNOR BLACK, of New York, in response to petitions on the subject, has issued an order that no person shall deal in or sell intoxicating liquor in the state camp.

A PETITION, signed by the prominent church and temperance people of Albion, Mich., has been sent Governor Pingree and President McKinley, protesting against the sale and use of liquor in the state camp.

MAJOR-GENERAL GRAHAM, of Camp Alger, near Washington, has issued the following order:

The unauthorized introduction into camp or the sale within its limits of alcoholic beverages or other intoxicating liquors or drugs of any kind whatsoever is strictly prohibited.

The provost marshal will make frequent inspections of the different trading establishments to insure the enforcement of this order.

THE former election law in Minnesota required that all delegates to nominating conventions should be voters. A change has been made, and the state prohibition committee expresses the hope that a goodly number of ladies will be among the delegates elected by the county conventions to the state convention, which is to take place at St. Paul, July 26 and 27.

About Women.

MRS. MARY I. BARNES, of Moline, and Mrs. Mary E. Metzger, of Moline, are the candidates of Illinois prohibitionists for trustees of the state university.

CAROLINE CROFT, formerly Caroline Abigail Brewer, of Boston, has left $100,000 to Henry K. Oliver and John Collins Warren, physicians of that city, for investigations to find some way of curing cancer, consumption and other diseases now regarded as incurable.

MISS HELEN GOULD not only demonstrated her patriotism by sending a check for $100,000 to the government, but she has distributed 50,000 copies of our national hymn, "America," among school children, each copy engraved with the picture of the author of the song, Dr. Samuel F. Smith.

MRS. ROBLEY D. EVANS, the wife of "Fighting Bob," probably has a larger personal interest in the fortunes of the navy than any other individual in the United States. Her husband commands the battleship, Iowa; her brother, Capt. H. C. Taylor, commands the Indiana; her son, Mr. Frank T. Evans, is a cadet upon the Massachusetts, and her son-in-law, Lieut. C. C. Marsh, is flag secretary to Admiral Sampson, on the New York; her two daughters, Mrs. Marsh and Miss Virginia Evans, and her niece, Miss Hattie Taylor, have volunteered for trained nurses, and are now taking a course of instruction at the hospital at Hampton.

At Home.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has appointed Oscar S. Straus, of New York, as minister to Turkey, to succeed President James B. Angell, of the University of Michigan, who will return to his educational duties in the autumn.

ON the afternoon of June 1, President McKinley pressed the electric button that started the main shaft in Machinery Hall, and Nebraska's great Trans-Mississippi Exposition was formally opened. All the bands played "America" and the great audience went wild with enthusiasm.

THE first summer school to be established in the West, free of tuition and coöperative as to housekeeping, is to be held at Geneva lake, Wis. The school will be the occasion of the first annual congress of the World's Unity League, and is promoted by Charles Carrol Bonney, of Chicago, president of the World's Parliament of Religion at the World's Fair, and Miss Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, of Evanston.

Contributed.

The Hands of the World.

BY JULIA H. THAYER.

THE hands of the world—can't you see them to-day?
The useless, white hands, kept so shapely and fair;
The hands of God's worker, one lifted to pray,
And one reaching down for the burdens of care;
The hardened, brown hands, so deformed and unsightly,
Yet beautiful still with the pathos of toil;
The great hands of power, used wrongly or rightly;
The hands stained with sinning from which you recoil;
The cultured, deft hands that are busy adorning
The unfinished temples of learning and art;
The hands in dark places that grope for the morning,
And the poor, stricken hands that appeal to the heart;
All these, if they'd clasp one another to-day,
Could reach 'round the world in a wonderful way.

No one would be lonely, no lot wholly dreary,
The thrill of our love would magnetically give
A strength to the faint and a joy to the weary,
A lightness of being and courage to live.
Then come, clasp these hands—oh, how selfish to tarry
When all the world needs you this moment so much!
Rise strong with the will and the purpose to carry
The help of your presence, the warmth of your touch.
They want yours, the hands that drop low in their weakness,
Those heavy with burdens or empty with loss;
They pray you to point with the spirit of meekness
To Love's Burden-bearer who died on the cross.
We all so much need one another to-day
To girdle the globe with our hands in this way.

Morgan Park, Ill.

The Extravagance of Mr. Israel Plummer.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

"UPON my soul!" said Israel Plummer to himself, "if that ain't Jonas Dodge settin' on his horse-block a-cryin'! What in the world—"

He urged old Fan to a faster walk and presently drew up before the horse-block. Jonas Dodge, with his big red bandana to his eyes, sat weeping—a lonely, pathetic image of despondent grief. He looked up as Mr. Plummer stopped his horse.

"Afternoon, Jonas," said Israel, "might I venture to inquire what's the matter? Is Mis' Dodge any worse to-day?"

Jonas burst out sobbing afresh. "She's dead," he said, brokenly, behind his handkerchief. "She left us at half-past one this afternoon.

